11 Square Meters

On September 22, 2014

Complete your personality, by investing more time in the work of creating your own reality.

Moscow is savagely bombed. The hitlerians start their offensive against the capital. However, Eisenstein continues his work on the movie. All over, reigns the chaos of disorganization, the normal course of the studio's life is not yet retaken for a long, long time. The auditorium is also becoming a shooting stage. The studios are small, chambers of the house of culture are not made for shooting. Eisenstein does not have a separate dwelling, he stands on 11 square meters. Many times, his financial situation is completely catastrophic "rates retention are all over, and hell knows what comes out".

From where so much force in this artist, who lives in such conditions, to work - and the working conditions are even more terrible - pursuing obstinately his ideas, carrying with an inhuman patience, until perfection every detail, the smallest detail of his vision, dealing with everything, absolutely everything, insisting even for obtaining the proper thickness of the layer of grout from the ecclesiastical objects that barely are to be gilded? *

Leadership: Does your creation reveals its meaning and veracity only if it is viewed from the perspective of a constraining life experience?

Perhaps, the leadership, following describable laws by values occurring on unpredictable points in time, is a component of a broader pattern of change, in which you experience what you are under high stress. Always, the dominant on which it is placed the interaction with your surroundings, with what matters in the moment of establishing a new relationship with a reality that goes beyond you, piercing the limiting veil of concreteness, stains and trains after her the whole field of individual feelings.

And only these feelings, enveloping you sometimes with a subtle veil of sadness and concern, help you – or, impede you - to face a world, where maybe you would not like to live any minute, but that seems to wait you around the corner. All these are not the result of what you are, but are the residual result of your prevalent thoughts and actions, which allows you to focus on the important things in your life, while giving you the chance to develop your career into an uncertain environment.

For your creation to discover the meaning and veracity, it must sometimes seen from the perspective of a constraining life experiences, so from the perspective of a hard to reach target, after analyzing the reality, in which you find yourself from all points of view, pros and cons. Only by investing more time in the work of creating an objective reality, meant to express your conscience, but not the despairs or discontents, you will be able to replenish your personality.

As I mentioned in an older article: "The personality has as a recipient that individual endowed with the ability to devote himself entirely to his passion and the things in what he believes, even if the circumstances are not exactly favorable."

Leadership: Are you ready to experience a new dimension of your formation, in terms of the transition from the status of "seeker-developer" to the status of "warrior-survivor" ?

Perhaps, all these representations of the self, linked with the hidden value of the man, forms together, or could form a general model, disoriented from the pathway viewpoint for the professional evolution. Here, the leadership acquires a new feature to detect the real nature of the man, the one of "safety transfer" by which it is made the transition from the status of *"seeker - developer"*to the status of "warrior-survivor".

Safety is a concern and a continuous responsibility that is incumbent on the man, who engages by himself in an continuous process of development, in conditions of uncertainty. A dynamic process, focused on building a value system that can generate, especially in the long term, some profitability, a certain resistance with the value of test, a state of mind, which includes maintaining a firm attitude towards what you demand of you, of your life, of your hobby and the future.

To experience a new dimension of your training as an artist means to experience the experience of an adventure born of stoicism with which you stand in front of all the hardship and vision that you can identify in a more vivid and skillful demand for the ability to play a reality which replaces the reality that you have to endure.

11 Square Meters aims that form of man existence, became the prisoner of his own creation and future projection, but which, reflecting and introspecting himself a long while, can understand other angles of approaching a potentially problematic situation.

The joy of victory, materialized in a new series of professional success, it is often based exactly on the awareness, attitude toward yourself, self-revelation, valid by opposition to what is happening around.

3 Leadership Lessons From Antoine Bourdelle

On March 20, 2008

Never blame an error to justify your attitude. Never be ashamed of anything you do or think.

Antoine Bourdelle was one of the most expressive and powerful realist monumental sculptors of the first part of the 20th century. He admired the French Nobel Prize-winning writer Anatole France from a very young age. That's why he made the portrait of the great bronze writer. The long figure expresses a great vivacity and at the same time an impressive inner balance.

At one point, Anatole France said of Bourdelle: "I know of only one defect, that of conceiving works beyond measure, and this is a noble 'defect'."

And Bourdelle's response was: "Seeing my mistakes, that is where my strength lies. The path of truth is made up of recognized mistakes."

I think it is useful to dwell on this point of view and consider whether it can be sustained today in the field of leadership.

Leadership: Do you take into consideration the fact that the power of any performer lies in knowing how to recognize the "errors" in which the ideas of his creation are reflected, whenever he tries to prove to himself that he can conceive works beyond his power?

I believe that you can only contribute substantially to the development of your leadership if you are able to acknowledge your mistakes and bear the consequences. That is the strength of any elite performer. The path of truth – which Bourdelle said was made up of recognized mistakes – actually points to the optimal, but very difficult, and demanding path that connects your traits, qualities, and talents to true performance.

This path that you must take to complete your mastery, showing a positive orientation towards the good use and skill of your own strengths and abilities, is similar to the consumption of large amounts of chocolate. Just as chocolate can be harmful to health if the amount consumed exceeds the normal that the body can withstand, so your path to performance will not be excellent if it does not contribute substantially to the formation of your own personality, meaning if you do not start thinking, to act and produce more and better results.

If you are not inclined to take certain risks, if you do not try to outdo yourself, to enter a new field and to achieve a certain progressiveness of Creation, then you will never find that you are capable of doing what you thought was impossible.

How do you contribute to the development of your Creation? Do you have the sincerity and courage to admit your mistakes and bear the consequences? Have you chosen the path you need to take to complete your mastery? Does this path have the peculiarity of being "excellent"?

Leadership: Are you able to outdo yourself and enter new ground that does not guarantee 100% achievement of a high level of excellence?

I am sure that excellence in leadership is based on a rigorous selection of errors that affect the operations adjacent to the creative act (whose sole purpose is to reveal your artistic aspirations, but also your highest traits). A performer should identify those error-correcting techniques that can produce constructive results for the consolidation of knowledge, with the involvement of other perspectives of art development, so that any achievement of it can be considered a masterpiece of creation.

The words of the great Romanian writer Nicolae Iorga support the truth transmitted by me. He said: "Laugh, not at the mistakes you made, but at the mistakes you never made, even though you had the opportunity to make them."

A man without consciousness of his own mistakes will never be able to penetrate the hidden corners of excellence, he will never be able to create that connection between investment and profit, that is, between effort and the benefits of effort. Being aware of your own errors and mistakes is a way to highlight the most characteristic aspects of your own "leadership art" that you bring to life. Excellence is based on a rigorous selection of errors and mistakes in order to obtain a deeper and more comprehensive expression of your own individuality, of your inner world.

In order to live up to your own expectations, you must first reward your own efforts. How? By acknowledging your mistakes, that is, defining your weaknesses.

Whenever you make a mistake, whenever you detect an error or a defect in the mechanism of your own operation, fill in a check for yourself to pay a fine for it. A fine for every mistake. The check can be worth 5 RON, 10 RON or 25 RON. The effect will be amazing. Because this check validates your own contribution to increasing personal value. This check is a testament to your perseverance, your power to dedicate yourself to personal progress.

If you do not reward yourself for the "production" of mistakes, it means that you have not taken any steps forward, that you have not evolved at all in the handling of your own abilities.

Leadership is an indicator of the strength with which the performer acts on the discovery of errors prior to substantializing, to the fulfillment of creation, a process from which he learns to strengthen his self-confidence and work.

I have identified 3 Leadership Lessons From Antoine Bourdelle in this article:

1. The results obtained differ in their experimental errors . Never lose yourself while handling errors.

2. In order to rule out systematic errors as much as possible, you should always carefully consider the method of measuring the value that accompanies the result of your creation.

3. Never blame an error to justify your attitude. Never be ashamed of anything you do or think.

93% Of The Total Of A Temporary Space

On November 12, 2014

Explore your limits and horizons, contributing to the creation of particular cases of applying your own model of interpreting an unanimously accepted truth.

All this immensity that spun in front of my very eyes, unadulterated by any feeling of pressure, in a variety of subtle ways that opposed that temporary space called generality, under sign of the experimental and unconventional. It was a sort of particular visualization of a dimension supportable by the way in which it was handled, from beyond the physical, beyond the understanding of the essence of existence, from beyond the mind of its creator, viewed through the lens of an information super structural model.

In my case, wanting to delve deeper into the "Force Space of Alpha", under the glowing power of the 5-cornered Astral of the Kabbalistic Microcosm, I had to deepen the exploratory function of thinking of a new communication interface with the philosophy set out in the Pendulum to Foucault:

"So, my greatest difficulty was to find an order in these seven measures, one that is appropriate, plentiful, different and that would keep the sense of intelligence and memory unaltered. This high and comparable arrangement fulfills not only the role of preserving what has been entrusted to me from things, words and arts, but also gives me true wisdom."

The limits and horizons of science, well impregnated in the unaltered memory of the great creators of worlds, these artists isolated in the vastness of the universe that surrounds us, can provoke in the associative mind, faithful to the Magical Eyes of Oberon, a game of the endless analogies through the interweaving of the imaginary plane with the real one. The great splendor of science, contained within the perimeter of the convention between the symbol and the particular visualization of an enlarged image through the process of comparison, has a permanent openness to the most subtle form of the holiness of "Newton's Chest".

Leadership: Can you register remarkable progresses on the world from the height of mysterious contemplation, in trying to study and express the need to adapt to a style of thinking transferred outside the relative loop?

If I wanted to record remarkable progress in the art of seeing the world from above, easy and unconditioned by any outside influence, if I wanted to make out the seemingly impossible formula of demanding perfection in an unreal reality – because it was new, then I had to resort to converse reasoning, from the general to the particular. It was an attempt of studying and expressing the need of adapting to a style of thinking transferred outside the loop of the relative, a style accepted as an inevitable partner in establishing truths applied in researching for a new horizon.

Unnatural, I felt caught in the mechanism of projection of an ideal of superiority that only existed in opposition with the logic of thoughts and irrational ideas, addressed in a rational way, as if I had to take action against an intelligence that went beyond the normal standard of reasonableness in giving a meaning, authentic or not. The "relative" is a permanent tension of the presupposition of changing the world, from a point of view that resurrects another world, and the loop of the relative is the return to the primordial meaning found at the crossroads between "the need to visualize the abstract" and "the need to transcend the visible".

I was confused, subtly tied to a complicated reasoning. In a way, I found myself in the role of that character created by Pat Rushin that tried to unravel an impossible formula, unable to pass 93%, for all that he accumulated by expanding knowledge would self-destruct. It became something else, as a last act of a duel waged for several months by the two adversaries: the heavenly battle between the archangel Michael and the fire dragon. Matter is transformed by the destruction of old interpretations, reviving the compressed world in the austerity of the Alpha sign.

Leadership: Are you able to create a world that is congruent with your interpretation, even if it could be a wrong world, in the attempt to receive a new perspective on the criterion of orientation towards the higher powers of the manifestation of Creation?

The practice of exploring the unknown, widely opening the gate towards the heights of science that can define man as a representative of the new world, in which thinking associated with fantasy takes a leap over what is allowed, imposes a relativity in assessing knowledge by expanding truth values from two, to three values: truth, false and probable.

What can interfere with leadership, in an attempt to receive a new perspective over the orientation criteria towards "superior powers", expanded beyond the borders of the usual and the admissible, is precisely the reasoning through which science can exist in a space without limits, a space in which imagination makes everything possible. A kind of reasoning through which you go from accepting certain generally available principles to the creation of particular cases of applying your own model of scientific interpretation, using the information you have for assessing the truth or the false in the continuous development of the relationship between world, reality, existence and perfection.

A sort of overlap between everything and nothing, in the same way a computer program is verified and validated by reality before being implemented on a large scale in different institutions. Only with one amendment: that of not confusing the mind with a logic that has a myriad of opposites, pushing you towards excessive ambiguity, difficult to decipher.

The superior power of the manifestation of Creation is found in the interpretation you give to an ideal, pure, geometrical world, even if this interpretation may be wrong or misunderstood.

Daniel Castro, the American layer specializing in economic disputes was very right: "When we make a judgement it means that we will create the mental model of an expected universe. In fact, we create a world congruent with our interpretation, even if it could be a wrong world." In other words, the tendency of redefining previous ideas and ideals can be a passing from a smaller world into an immeasurable universe that is fulfilled by the thick and complex chain of assimilated consciences.

To create a world congruent with your interpretation, even if it could be a wrong world, means to distance yourself from concrete reality, but also from the only possibility of acceding to a superior standard of thinking. The exclusively personal interpretation, basing yourself solely on it, can lead to a utopian world, without any connection to the concrete of today, but that defines and encourages the possible of tomorrow.

The exploration function of creation has as its primary source of inspiration its own model of interpreting the unanimous truth accepted by the rest of the world, specifying that the same truth can at any time take another turn towards the concrete of the perceivable reality only by the minds that know to transcend the visible.

93% Of The Total Of A Temporary Space signifies the conducting of transitioning to an advanced stage of evolution – close to the absolute, by creating particular cases of applying your own model of interpreting the reality you know, or rather what is called "unanimously accepted truth".

Leadership is possible by reinterpreting this complex world, basing itself on the phrase: "power is renewed through intellectual orientation and analytical skill that facilitates the development of all possible options of the future."

The mental model based on self-reasoning, must be consistent with a present horizon (narrowed, fearful, with thousands of questions with variable answers). But at the same time, it must resonate with an essentially mobile horizon, one that includes the depths (in interpretation) from beyond the scope of vision.

A Beautiful Stone Is Just A Beautiful Stone

On September 03, 2014

Place your achievements in a framework that highlights value, strengthening the foundation where the construction of their meaning is based.

A dialogue from the book "Endless Night" by Agatha Christe is relevant to the integration perspectives of leadership in personal projects.

- I build houses only for certain people, when I want to, said Santonix.

- You mean, for rich people? Concluded Michael Rogers.

- They have to be rich because otherwise they won't be able to pay for their houses. But I don't care about the money. My clients have to be rich, so I can build expensive houses. But the house is not enough. There has to be a background. It is equally important. It's like a ruby or an emerald..

A beautiful stone is just a beautiful stone. It doesn't lead anywhere. It doesn't mean anything, it doesn't have shape, nor meaning until it's placed in a holder. And the holder must have a jewel that rises up to its standards. I take the picture as it is, I detach it from its frame, where it exists with full rights. It has no meaning until it the house, which will proudly rise like a jewel in its holder, will exist.

Is the development of your leadership at the crossroads between the influence expansion tendency and the honor to represent yourself in a value promotion context?

Are your values generated by ignoring the differences between the rich and the poor? Are you in a position to benefit from the differences between them? Are your values chosen and determined by the significance of the construction that you manage? Does the background that you use to place a bid fit in the price of the consumption value you attribute to yourself? What is the reason to force the terms and the outcome of a negotiation that does not lead to the expected results?

Your commitment in achieving the aspirations of becoming a leader, deeply exploring the win-win possibilities within the campaign "I can help more", becomes in certainty condition a point of influence expansion that mustn't come against the honesty and integrity principles. But at the same time, taking into consideration what is better for the people with whom you make arrangements, we can talk about a kind of expansion of your own conscience, established on various virtues that perseveringly respect the rules of leadership.

And one of these rules envisages the enactment of a procedure similar to "share understanding" having the meaning of an acknowledgement of the duty to be a spiritual entrepreneur that acts in favor of a certain result, in order to give leadership long-lasting consistency. This result doesn't necessarily have only a strong emotional touch, but also in terms of what it suggests, it has to relate to the equation:"A beautiful stone means nothing until it's placed in a holder."

In the simplest words, this conclusion can be interpreted in the following way. It's wiser to accept a certain compromise or to reflect over the impact of your own foundation of values, than to resort to some monopoly practices that don't conform with the honor of being a person with a great heart, with the honor of serving a professional project that produces positive effects, with the honor of being a leader for whom success doesn't mean only profit, but also style, composition and background, with the honor of representing yourself in a profitable equity context, promoting the value that you bring in this world.

Equity is a beautiful and solid construction that can be negotiated with the same full rights both by the rich and the poor by a decision that will please both sides.

The advantage of cultivating leadership, permanently updated by creating some new attitude alternatives towards what you appreciate as being valuable, is seen at the level of understanding what you point out, by comparison with a solid result. And the result is given by the positive influence that strengthens the relationship between yourself and your supporters.

The foundation where the construction of their results is placed ensures the integration of the psychosocial response to an offer that can not be refused, fulfills the conditions of a favorable general framework in a reality that existed in a certain time. Thus, the prospects for development must follow an ascending trend in agreement with what is to be expected from a foreseeable future. Today's leadership, that needs to correspond to the general interest, has a significant ponder towards that of the future leadership.

Values such as leveling the difference between people and the means to achieve them are always represented by promoting the "preciousness" of a jewelry or by the quality of interpreting the perceptual framework of the person.

A Beautiful Stone Is Only A Beautiful Stone points out the value of what you gives, with the intention of generating a new income flux as part of efforts to expand personal value. But in such a way that you detach from that thinking that doesn't allow you to notice the connection between causes and effects, between meaning and appearance.

What value do your leading achievements have? How well do you manage the foundation where the construction of their meaning is based?

A Beginning Of Endless Times

On January 27, 2021

Try to ensure a tenacious and visionary freedom, a freedom that adapts to the times, without losing any of the vitality of the moments of reflection on the inner life.

I listen to a song entitled "In 100 years", and I listen to it with great pleasure and enthusiasm, with the feeling of the simple man who carries his years with so much nobility and serenity. I listen to it whenever I feel that no one is listening to me, knowing that if I had been listened to with more sincerity and openness, I might have been better understood as a man of endless times. For no one understands how deceptive and disappointing the feeling you give to past years, but present and untiring only to the rhythm of music, can be.

And as I listen to it fondly, and as I flutter through the room to its dynamic rhythm, a chorus comes to my attention, in a space of versatile, poetic, pure emotion: "Outside the gates of Heaven, oh, there lives a unicorn". What does this verse mean other than that, probably, behind everything you have experienced with a lot of feeling is someone hidden in anonymity, someone hard to find, hard to access in a reality that changes from one point to another, in a space of inaccessible transcendence.

All the images and sounds in this song intertwine in a universal geometry of emotion, all the years I have lived in a hurry, wishing with all my heart that they would not come to pass so quickly, I still stop in place, in an appearance of separation from the rest of the world, just as a musical note rests in the pause between rhythm and voice. And if I feel different, a little nostalgic, but also very energetic, it's because the past years have made me different, even if the difference between me then and now is as small as the distance from one musical note to another.

Leadership: Are you ready to accept yourself in the struggle with time that tells its existence with a lot of sincerity and in an equally captivating way in the break between two musical notes?

A song is a passage of years through unforgettable moments, you gather them all in the mind of the artist and turn them into a bouquet of roses that amazes with an incomparable power of vivid colors, full of emotion. Obviously, I am not trying to turn the relationship with myself into a philosophy of emotion towards the artistic or musical field, but rather I am trying to create an approach to a theme that penetrates the lyrics of my world. They announce much silence for a too subtle presence that lives its years by remembrance, sometimes by forgetfulness, but especially by the soothing rest of the soul.

This is what we are talking about here, about the music of life lived on the rhythm of a self-discovery. Because nothing is more important than to accept yourself in a loop of time that keeps repeating itself, indicating the connection between "Memo" and "Domini", between Andante and Allegro, between Do and Si. And the pause between the musical notes that accompanies my past and present, being a superior form of awareness of the emotions and thoughts that know how to tell a story, extends to each agreement between the feeling of identity and self-perception.

Certain moments of life still follow me among these notes, few traces remain of them, these being proportional to the sleep of the objective mind.

Maybe I need to go back to who I was, full of determination, hard work, energetic, to understand that the years are not numbered, but are exactly like the disease, they spread from a distance, everywhere. You can feel them all around, in books, in promenades, and in music, but you can't find any relief in them, just a fruitful aspiration for something else. To something much higher, more harmonious, to something that is generated precisely by the act of creation and perseverance in creation.

And if I were to live 100 years, then my emotions will announce another 100 years of remembrance and reliving the fleeting moments of joy in life. After all, they are the measure of changes and transformations regarding "before" and "after", and if I could have been someone other than who I was, then I wish I had been a verse from a hit of the 90s, composed entirely of Modern Talking: "We'll take the chance, we will again."

Leadership: Did you urge the "Present-You" to pay more attention to moments of reflection on the inner life, reminding him that you are willing to identify the perspectives of interpreting a reality lived by playing the same "music"?

A reassessment of the limits of time that I allow myself in order to understand the knowledge of the original being, or rather the need of the embodied being to re-enter into dialogue with the One who created it, puts me in agreement with the inspired point of view of Marcus Aurelius:

"Think that in a short time you will naught but no-one of nowhere, that there will be none of the things you see now, neither the people living now. Because everything is by its nature made to transform, to change its state and to disappear so that other things can come after."

I am of the same thinking, but I go even further. Out of the desire to maintain and develop direct contact between myself, the past, and the present, being in this way stimulated by intellectual abilities, especially the analytical spirit and fine discernment that the study of philosophy develops and maintains, I will make a round trip to that part of the corner of a world full of human mysteries.

A world full of clever, suggestive, invigorating words, which is relived through a dream that intoxicates you and makes you say: "I am capable of more – I want more".

I will always try to be in a place of encounter with myself and with the other, in order to feel and learn that what is unexpected in me, then, can only be found within the present me. And what I find wonderful about me, the present me, harmonizes with a part of the expression of a reaction to the feeling of freedom that the song "In 100 years" gives you.

Yes, I am free, because I found myself in a space dedicated exclusively to joy. I was, am and will be the sum of thoughts expressed through sounds...

A creator is a presence that carries its years with dignity, it is the measure of changes and transformations regarding "before" and "after", just like the life between two books that deal with the same subjects without being influenced in one way or another.

A Beginning Of Endless Times is characterized by an incessant transition from one state to another, from one stage to another of life, to the rhythm of a fabulous music that often only you yourself can hear.

A perfect creator can be perceived as a chord between two musical notes that is added to a melody, to highlight its outline, to adorn its melodic line. He can reflect the life of one man at different times, with different moods: he will make different value judgments about the same music. Or, as someone rightly said on the internet:

"Maybe it would be interesting to listen to even two or more parallel performances of the same piece of music, this would reveal the personal imprint of the performer; it would show us how different we are in understanding the same music and at the same time how beautiful we are in our uniqueness."

A Bird Whose Powder Down Is Lost At A Distance

On October 06, 2013

Short-circuit the entity that defines man, in order to bring to light its hidden tendencies.

His whole look shows a completely calm character, not apathetic, but composed. A man whose attitude doesn't reflex his inner reality, the lack of contraries, or any discrepant note in the harmony of the elements that define him. The murderer, known as Buffalo Bill, no longer feels the torment of the things he had committed, which made him become a monster of persuasion, and of invasion into the inner sphere of the beings that surround him, he does not feel the pain, the fear or the waste, the only symptom he feels is the inability to develop a new personality ideal, an untouchable one.

Only a multiplication of the mobilizing force in well-determined circumstances, produced by some pulleys with an unacceptable moral weight, could have disturbed this compact thinking system. Only the unshaken temptations of the senses that generate adrenaline could have determined the nervous sensibility, a force you have to fight against. Only the intermolecular clashes from the constituents of the rough material out of which it is made, according to a fixed chemical equation, he could have brought to light his hidden tendencies.

He would have thought he's living in harmony with himself, never living his values, without asking for anything from anyone, working as he pleases, and that in this world, nobody and nothing can alter his course. But something trembles in him, maybe an unnoticed thought dissimulated behind skepticism. From his voice something strange tears away, an unsettling feeling. The moral pulley systems trigger the alarm.

Leadership: Do you use your predisposition to judge others in a constructive way, depending on how they form a conviction built up in a very high degree of certainty about overcoming a worrying reality?

The suspicious mind reaches a moment of desperation, by getting the coordinates of a circle whose diameter varies according to the intensity of the thoughts and intentions. Its voice has a powerful tremble, like a somewhat electrified body. As if in the most delicate parts that define its superiority, in the most solicited components of its functional system, a mysterious rejection force with very high values would have been created. Fear suddenly envelops him. Something disturbs the smile on his face, the tone of his voice precipitates, it is the very high certainty that he was already being looked at by the FBI, and he can no longer overcome this troubling reality.

Just now, when the elementary creations of man make their presence felt by taking maximum values when the psychical pressure regulator station breaks down, barely when the delicate particles of his breath transmit the most powerful fear, barely now the instinctive sensors of agent Clarice Starling detect the evil, the hidden part in himself. She feels that he's uncomfortable, that his personality is hindered. He hides the truth as well as he can. Yes, he is the murderer, he is Buffalo Bill ! The circuit of a lamp is interrupted and another one powers itself with energy.

The identity of this calm character,but brilliant, is unmasked. For a brief moment, the eagle becomes a speechless turtle dove. The powder down of a bird with no colors is lost at a distance and you shouldn't waste your energy to gather it. It falls by himself when there's a maximum tension of the support cable, when there's a confrontation with your own Ego because of a failed attempt to free yourself from the burdensome past. From the truth that it contains hidden behind a fake identity, some fabulously crafted masks.

Leadership: Does the way in which you deal with what happens in your life have the consequence of finding a way of measuring the intensity of the moment that has prompted you to make a decision about the likelihood of an image that dissolves during its examination?

Take a circular look at the inner universe of the man next to you. Surely you are an artist if you can perceive or produce the succession of useful emotions and thoughts for growing his own functionality. The main supportive field that he uses to change his Ego, subjected to a constraint that he cannot resist otherwise, is given by the image he wants before you, but which is not necessarily the correct representation of a consciousness that has lucidly assumed its destiny.

An image you make about someone during their examination is an exceptional snapshot that excites your admiration or anxiety, perfectly capturing an emotion, a thought, a situation of the quest for discovering a reality you have never experienced before. This image highlights the result of an advanced search generated by the desire to find "something else" than what you know about a person struggling with a certain type of addiction, considering themselves as being something other than they claim to be.

But this image is shattered immediately if it does not have a transparent area that allows you to visualize the level of inner vibration: self-reconciliation, hope, subduing, or despair, regret, resignation, etc. The image of man is felt in the form of a specific sensation (of joy or anxiety) that results in a less desirable truth.

Leadership: Does the way in which you sketch the profile of certain people have as a consequence your state from the moment immediately following a comparison of what you think you know and what you omit to take into consideration?

Often, leadership "matches" end with the victory of one of the sides, rarely with a tie, when the best player scores a few extra points. We are talking about this particular situation when you want to figure out a few of the defining traits of man and by identifying yourself with them, to understand their way of functioning without internalizing one quality or the other.

But more new problems appear when you try to open the locked door of the mind of man, whose key is research, the use of the perceptions, ideas, intuition and applied knowledge assembly. Each of these has to be able to withstand a new set of well-determined "qualification" requirements in the extended race towards influence, towards exerting and maintaining permanent control.

But as on the market there are a series of products destined to meet one and the same use, thus eliminating the chance to create a precise pattern of the non-consumers, so does coming up with a strategy to penetrate in the deepest and most comprising sphere of man, subject to transformation, subject to the implacable force of his own Ego, eliminate the chance to create a correct and tight report that accepts the parameters for an examination.

Often the comparison between what you know about someone and what you omit to take into consideration has as a starting point the merger between two types of personalities. One enriched by a carefully worked and even overvalued image (but acting only on the basis of pure consciousness), and one characterized by a distorted self-image, marked by a sense of shaky and persistent instability (acting based on momentary impulses).

A man you DO NOT know is a man you think you know from the height of self-appreciation manifested in moderation, or from the height of an image that is supposed to be important and positive.

Sometimes in leadership you have to act according to the principle "batteries lose their ignition power at low temperatures." Only by creating a perfect break that affects more protection factors inside man, causing emotions, fears and anxiety only from his part, thus, touching his mobilizing force in strictly determined conditions, using as much as possible guides that take him out of his comfort zone, only so will you be able to shape a new perspective of his own Ego.

Seldom, in extreme situations the safest way that leaders retort to in order to bring to light the dark and true side of man is to distort compact thought system thereof. A deeper distortion of the functional structures of man creates a secondary reaction that, in turn, detaches the true and fake of personality.

This distortion has to move the inner energy, to create a deficit in thinking, to shake all perceptions and senses, putting the nerves under more pressure. And man, subject to subtle and self-restrained bombings, more at an emotional level, will reveal in the end his true identity – if it's not guided by a stable and honest self.

The problem in this case is connected to the option for a "leap" over the apparent truth, but it only applies, works and is effective if the man has a bit of conscience able to intervene in any circumstances.

Forming a belief is accomplished by the meaning you have chosen to fit a life experience that starts with the intensity of the emotion someone conveys to you in a particular circumstance and ends with the act of will that gives birth to a personality different from an authentic one.

A Bird Whose Powder Down Is Lost At A Distance points out that tendency of losing self-control in a man with a double personality. It brings to our attention that ability to discover the truth behind the mask that covers, sometimes almost perfectly the character, the thoughts, the intentions and the actions of a person.

The mask, a deceitful appearance, can be destroyed if you know how to discover and to act upon everything that man hides more or less intentionally in himself.

A Black Square Within The Dazzling White

On April 01, 2008

The vision you form about science is the progress you make by joining your own potential, next to the intention of amplifying the image that meets you coming "from the front".

On November 30, 1841, the Philadelphia Public Ledger first announced that French police were using Niepce and Daguerre's invention to identify criminals. When a person makes a scientific invention (the newspaper writes) they do not yet know all the possible implications of its use. Daguerre's magical invention, which consists of painting with the help of the sun's rays, was used by the Paris police in the fight against crime. In France, when a criminal or a suspect is arrested, the police immediately make a daguerreotype and draw up a file of the portraits thus obtained. The people of the underworld, in order to prevent this process, sometimes make horrible grimaces in order to deform their face...

Sherlock Holmes was not endowed by his creator with high scientific knowledge. But unfortunately, Connan Doyle did not even "allow" him to use those of his time. Here, for example, is photography, which today occupies a leading place in forensic research. The first photograph, taken by Nicephore Nieppe around 1829, depicting a still life, was closer to an impressionist drawing than to what we call photography today. However, this glass plate heralded not only future radiographs, cinematography, photographs of invisible stars, cosmic particles, but also future photographs of fingerprints, without which investigators would be left with Sherlock Holmes' magnifying glass.

Leadership: Is exposing your knowledge in the face of an eventual discovery recommended because of the vision of your little image to change the way you do things, by following a "double bond" trajectory?

There is only one truth to be learned from this: everything you invent is the result of a vision that improves the ability to manage any resources you have at hand to make an important discovery in a field. This is the image of sensitivity that embraces the needs of the scientist along a vision that is all the deeper as it is drawn from the results of your work. He tries to penetrate everything with the eyes of an inventor, he tries to enliven and lead everything in the matter, ensuring the trajectory of a "double link": between theory and research, between discovery and capitalization.

A Black Square Within The Dazzling Whitecan be considered as a representation of truth around the vision you create for a single purpose: to contribute to the achievement of a discovery that will be extended many years ahead. The square represents your vision, while the dazzling white is given by the leadership that you know, that you practice and that you represent. These two elements go hand in hand, harmonizing permanently until the ultimate result which is called "performance". You can enrich the perspectives of the scientific field, you can increase your power of influence, if "the square and the white" are maintained at as high level of quality as possible.

Just as the intelligence and our ability of judging and remembering things, raise us above the other animals, similarly "the square and the dazzling white" (I say the dazzling because the science of leadership is like a milestone for the way you interact, communicate and bring value in approaching a scientific field), if these two elements are conceived from the start with the thought of the true people's expectations If they are well-implemented, and responsibly maintained, then they will lift us above our own limits.

Leadership: How do you respond to a broader vision-building context that accelerates the expansion of your consciousness into an area of power to accept the condition of a discoverer who has reached the truth after centuries of error?

The image that comes to you "from the front" is actually an illustration of the idea of thinking outside the box, highlighting that part of the findings that will definitely remain an extension of the area of personal value growth. Immediately, this image is situated between concrete and abstract, between real and ideal, between sensible and intelligible, being at the same time the result of the interaction between the objective data of reality and the creative involvement of an intermediate subjectivity during large-scale events.

Many times, however, you will have to accept the condition of a discoverer who has entered the truth after centuries of error. I say this because it is difficult to acquire the science necessary to identify a colossal discovery, and it is possible that you are the one who begins the "excavation" action and someone else will continue it in your stead (many years after you are gone). It is important to have what it takes to be called a discoverer: you must have the courage and determination to venture into the unknown, without really knowing what you will find.

1. Are you so caught up in your leadership that you no longer see the importance of "dazzling square and white"?

2. How do you contribute to the realization and consolidation of the relationship between these two elements? Do you perceive the whole picture, the big picture of the really important things before you relate to the practices and accents of your leadership? How can you use these two elements to provide your followers with a safe climate in which to grow and train?

3. Can you use these two elements to outdo yourself, enter new ground, and achieve great transformation?

On the way you answer these questions depends your success as a leader. Therefore, express your vision, so that to induce people acting into its spirit.

Leadership is the vision that tells a brilliant discovery from the perspective of a brave traveler embarked on a great adventure whose finality will be preserved in the memory of the world for eternity.

A Black Square Within The Dazzling White reflects the gift of vision that you must demonstrate during a journey in which the chances of success are hard to estimate. But the vision must remain yours, of the one who started the journey, otherwise there is a risk that, after a while, you will not find yourself in that part of the journey that ends. Learn to travel for the sake of traveling. But the great adventure is to get moving and, in the end, to make an amazing discovery.

A Black Thought Against Your Own Ego

The way you relate to your own values and beliefs reveals your true leadership capacity.

Yesterday I found on Google an important news about the Fukushima nuclear power plant accident, caused by the earthquake followed by tsunami on March 11.

On May 20, so less than three months after the disaster, president of the company Tokyo Electric Power (TEPCO), Masataka Shimizu, announced that he will resign and will appoint a successor. His decision came after TEPCO announced a net loss amounted to 11 billion euros for the fiscal year ended at March 31, which is a negative record in a Japanese company.

Can you give a positive diagnosis to leadership by adequately investigating your emotional and psychical reality?

What fundaments the reasoning to stop yourself from moving forward, within the limitations of your own identity is the perspective of not being able to make inspired decisions, because you feel morally threatened. More and more frequently we notice the art of renouncing, of losing self-protection, where the beauty of the obligation to guarantee an efficiency performance no longer has a substantial meaning and importance, but a meaning contrary to evolution, which urges us towards moderation and prudence in what you transmit as feeling.

The diagnosis of leadership is given by adequately investigating a certain emotional and psychical reality with a responsible accentuated structure, developed on the background of building identity, in an idealistic space out of which the formula "I'm tempted to carry on, but I don't know if I'll succeed" is no longer possible.

In this case, the process of thought maturity and that of emancipating the will to manifest yourself in agreement with your deepest feelings indicate us a permanent shift in the development interests. The interest for the meaning of what has been settled by unfortunate circumstances, gives places to the interest for the "zoom" function of constant effects, in the sense that value is underappreciated when it meets the ridiculous of various aspects that you come across.

Leadership, as a result of the manifestation of human spirit, in its full strength to reveal itself in every situation depends upon the existence of the identity construction and the conscience crises that, in the analysis of successes and failures, don't come to underlining discontinuities between the two areas of safety, released by the constraints of honesty: the area of extending potential and the area of extending influence.

Leadership: How do you train for the battles that will take place in your inner universe?

Leadership is not a paradise that can be found by following certain maps with clues about steps to be followed. Even if you have navigation tools that can lead you towards your choice (a direction to be useful for you and to match with your ambition and potential) is still one thing you cannot leave it to anyone and sometimes you will come hard to accept it: your inner structure. In particular, your inner strength and consistency, which is reflected in every aspect of your life, in the past, present and your future.

Your personal key to success remains rather in yourself. You can make from leadership your long-dreamed place only if you build it with your own hands, and only if - I repeat - if you train for the battles that will take place in your inner universe. Just as a painter is known by the quality of his works, by the way he renders the reality, by the way he manages to capture the model's personality and through the technique of color – so you will be able to impose your value through a strong character and well-oriented, and by the ways you relate to your beliefs. Your inner potential will raise you on the scale of values, or will get you down in case of failure.

Just as gentleness always accompanies true goodness - so your beliefs and values always accompany your steps towards a brighter future, or rather, darker. The way you respond to your own feelings, values and beliefs reveals your true leadership capacity. People will see what kind of person you are depending on the decisions you make in difficult situations and depending on your way of action. If you consider yourself weak or unsuitable for the position of leadership, then you will quickly give your place to another.

A Black Thought Against Your Own Ego is that thought that keeps you in suspense when you are in trouble. It is the thought to worry in the hour of the great confrontations with yourself, your values and beliefs. It is that harmful thoughts that torments you and causes you to abandon your ideals and aspirations, in spite of the admirable efforts to cope with courage. It is that thought which pours over your soul an immense sadness and the feeling of a painful end. It is the thought that makes you be ashamed of yourself and that makes you sink in the quagmire of guilt. It is the thought that pushes you to the terrible phase of resignation.

There is much to assimilate in leadership. You have to start from learning how to assume certain risks, how to confront failures and disagreements of others, until having trust in your instincts and do not ever deviate from the tasks you must accomplish with a highly professional and conscientiousness.

Begin to reflect on how you will act when you will be in trouble. This is the biggest step to the true knowledge of the leader in you.

A Blind Man's Tear

On September 19, 2010

Evaluate well your qualities and your limits, without allowing any deviation from yourself.

One of General Mustafa Yakibu's soldiers, who was left behind, discovered doctor Kendricks. He loaded his gun and turned it toward her with a single thought. A lot of possibilities of getting out of this situation passed through the woman's mind – going off was the first one, but she realized she had no time left. She remained unmoved, unable to react.

Lieutenant Waters immediately immobilized the soldier with a single blow of knife, thus saving the doctor from a certain death. Then, he gave the order to advance towards the Alpha area. But an inner voice stubbornly insisted into the woman's head. Driven by a boundless fear, the doctor asked Waters to do something to prevent the other soldiers of General Mustafa to reach the St. Michael mission. But the lieutenant had to be tought and cruel. A return from the primary goal could jeopardize his mission. So he completely ignored the women's desire and gave order to the other members of his commando team to go further.

Leadership: Is your attempt to give meaning to experience lived through an incursion in the secret of a regret that helps you learn not to detest yourself for what you did wrong?

A commando leader sees the consequences of his actions further and with more clearly than others. When he has to fulfill an important mission, he must leave his worries aside and be prepared for any situation, react without hesitation and sentimentalism whenever it's needed, be colder than he really is, make any sacrifice, go right to target, without remorse and with no shame, always thinking to the consequences.

Do you allow any deviation from yourself? Lieutenant Waters, from the movie "Tears of the Sun (2003)", remained blind to the imperative request of doctor Kendricks and impassive to the fate of those of St. Michael mission. We can easily understand his attitude. He had to permanently look after setting the direction which his team was supposed to follow, imposing his will, in order to make sure the "package"will arrive safely at destination.

In leadership, you must strengthen your will to resist the temptation to reward yourself for your efforts in making an act of unlawful interference in a process of ascension. This ascension can alternate with your decay from your rights as a person dependent on a certain responsibility.

He had to be relentless in fulfilling his mission, forbidding the slightest deviation to himself or other members of his team. All his actions had to be subordinated to accomplishing the mission. He was not allowed to be uncertain and full of all sorts of doubts, lest he would fail. If he failed to obtain the promised results and fulfill the mission he was engaged to, his career would be over.

You can't be sure that the sun will shine tomorrow in military leadership. Lieutenant Waters couldn't afford to pay a tear for all those human lives in St. Michael mission which were in danger and for which he couldn't do anything, or rather he didn't want to do anything, being forced by circumstances and the requirements of his mission.

Are you the kind of leader who says "No" when feelings order him to say "Yes"?

But deep remorse seized him when he saw from the helicopter that all those people from the mission were killed by General Mustafa Yakubu's soldiers, which maybe he could top of getting there, but with the risk of other lives he was taking care of. At that time, his inner world, with all its contradictions, changed. Only then he realized that is not easy at all to be the kind of person who says "no", he trully realized what means to be a leader, to be forced to take uncomfortable decisions and not be able to save the world.

Where does your good soul "live" in difficult times? The most terrible ordeal for a leader with a big heart is to bury any trace of compassion.

As I said in the article "A sun on the way to west", Lieutenant Waters couldn't put out all trace of compassion inside him. But he returned and saved the locals he abandoned on the field, taking revenge for all those who died in the mission, because despite appearances of hard hearted man, he also had feelings.

The leader is the man who knows to make himself understood in a context given by the external circumstances and the conditions of validity of his identity in a general exploration of compassion, solidarity and frustration caused by the inability to prevent a tragedy.

Conclusion: Military leaders must execute orders of their superiors, despite personal feelings and beliefs. In military structures, the order is executed and not discussed about, otherwise you are harshly punished for any initiative for any initiative which deviates from fulfilling the order received. But tears on a blind man's face - of those who act blindly and without humanitarian feelings, are late and leave deep scars in their souls.

Evaluate well your qualities and your limits, without allowing any deviation from yourself.

A Breach In The Impenetrable Wall Of Man

On March 17, 2013

Give a certain note to your personality without abandoning that analytical thoroughness of the "Man" within you.

I was haunted by existential thoughts that I didn't know how or where I got them. By those unspoken thoughts hidden in the mystery of whispers thrown at night, until one of them, uneasily, slips from the hourglass of an invisible clock, then disappears into nothingness. Nothing like that ever happened to me before. I wasn't able to understand anything back then.

Thus, I reached purely scientific explanations, the cause of a variable dose of subjectivity, but which did not say anything about the existence of any phenomenon of retreating unacceptable feelings or about the nature of any social phenomenon.

What explanation could I have given for this spontaneous fact, this absolute symbolic union that was still fragile with another extraordinary and revelatory experience that urged me to be what I was? I felt as if I had to conceive a genuine poetry of the dreams of an obscure, subduing and meditative existence, whose essence, living as a silent witness in the center of a finite universe, could only be comprehended and understood through faith in a fantastic "superior truth".

Leadership: Can you live on the edge of consciousness by embracing inner restlessness as a catalyst for evolution, so that you transform doubt into new insights into your potential to transform apparent nonsense into sources of inspiration?

Everything in me expressed a deep anxiety, like an alarm signal. O torrent of lights and shadows unceasing to ricochet into the "meaningful", in all that represented me as a human, enriching me with new echoes, new nuances, new meanings of a susceptible life of unprecedented evolution, and new perspectives about consciousness – that in my "awakening" state I didn't accept as being real.

As if I was standing in the vicinity of a transmission line that risked to collapse, and this uncontrolled collapse tended to produce other effects than those initially expected. It was something periodic. Bizarrely enough I was entering a slippery stand-by, some kind of waiting before everything happened, an indefinite waiting for something that I didn't know when it would be over. When you dream you happen to support reality through a fiction that works based on the logic of non-sense.

Leadership: Can you assume your isolation in a common destiny in the form of an ascension to perfection that knows only the limit of recognizing a superior truth?

There had to have been something, isolation, the surreal feeling similar to that in a medieval Dutch castle haunted by geists, compared to the way in which I perceived what was happening to me. The events around me, the passing of time and my evolution. And maybe something deeper, a kind of tear, a breach in the apparently impenetrable wall of my Ego.

I was closer to the truth than I would have guessed at the beginning. I was nervous because of this imprévisible with many faces, this slight malady of the unusual, hard to diagnose, hard to treat in advanced stages, this cyclic tension that consumed me, profoundly disrupting my existence. In fact, the situation we were experiencing could be perceived as an ascension to a perfection that began with isolation in an aseptic territory of sterile imagination, and continued with a small trick of the Ego, a programming of the consciousness of looking only through the filter of an "awakening from a very living dream". I still wonder how my mind could create such a strange story.

Chained in the middle of my inner struggles, unable to easily express them, I would discover something new about myself every time. This happened gradually, as one of those tempting thoughts that winked at me only in a trance, would randomly escape me.

This is how I managed to overcome a decisive transition period of life, whose sound wave still twitters intensely in me.

Leadership is the act of forging an authentic identity, guided by the intention to make sense of turmoil, freeing yourself from the mental limits imposed by conventional perception of society.

I should have never abandoned that analytic thoroughness of the "Man" within me, with his lights and shadows. I should have tried to shape the thoughts that hit me, like a blacksmith that molds the wrought iron into the fire, to give them a certain superior meaning, so that they helped me face myself, bring to light and make the most out of the unknown in me.

The only truth that deeply frightened me, the essential principle of life that set me free from a mental prison, from an imaginary cage that always burned with the same power, the only sun accessible only to the tall minds, was the following: the attitude and intent of asking questions and looking for answers to everything that hindered me largely influenced the fund of perception of reality called human society.

Leadership: Is there really a "left" and "right" in everything that defines you, attributed to a vulnerability that does not favor action based on multiple temporary plans?

Are you going through a decisive transition in your life? Does everything in you express a deep anxiety? Are you under the impression that you're going through an indefinite waiting for something that you don't know when it will be over? Are you struck by a feeling of surreal? What meaning can you give to the thoughts that come across your mind ceaselessly? Are you feeling chained in the middle of some struggles that you can't easily express?

There where there is no sign, no clue, no distinctive mark or even an effect of your own manifestations, there where you simply can't focus your interest on your own knowledge and understanding, there is where you can't register any progress, any wholeness of the "painting" that gives a certain note to your personality – in the luxuriant existence of events.

This denotes the fact that there is no true "left" or "right" in everything that defines you, but more likely something you can call stand-by, an indefinite waiting for something that you don't know when it will be over. The left and right symbolize two alternative ways of reaching a certain level of awareness of reality, but they cannot be concretized into a single value called the "event flow index" that demands a permanent focus on direct action.

Knowing yourself better means cultivating your ability to be a deep observer, avoiding harsh judgment of unfamiliar experiences that might inhibit your growth as a leader.

Be consistent with the exceptional faculty of being a profound observer of the reality that initiates you into knowing yourself without throwing unmerciful lights onto every unseen aspect in your existence that could exert an unfavorable domination. Only this way you will be able to break down every wall that stands in the way of your snake-like path towards the completion of your potential.

You will be able to give the final sword strikes in the dawn of what represents you, that indispensable form of life experiences, poor in its contents, rough, that determines certain discomfort, adverse reactions, and completely bogus inclinations.

Could your careful examination point out the existence of a complex decision-making structure, well-settled in the framework of your own existence? Or do you find yourself in a permanent tension between what matters and what matters only apparently?

All the feelings, the situations and experiences you are going through, enlightening or dark, push you into being what you are, guiding you constantly either towards the anxiety that eats you, that makes you always crawl around the same uselessness feeling. Or the contrary, towards the friendliness of "being" that maximizes all the resources and performances of your functioning system.

The experience of living through the heat of the heart that gives life to the written word takes place on two temporary planes: a game of imagination from which no one can escape (penetrating with a whole host of trembling and confused feelings), and a result of the reality from which must emerge your ability to discern the meaning of a new facet of the Ego.

A Breach In The Impenetrable Wall Of Man allows access to a reality created from an imagination that, through just a handful of words, manages to transform a story into a more or less logically formalized language of life.

No matter how impenetrable the armor that we create throughout our life, we should expect anytime a breach in this apparently impenetrable wall. The breach or breaches occur because of ourselves, because we don't take into consideration the "minimum resistance points", that is the weak points that we all have, but we don't all admit their existence.

A deep self-knowledge, a self-analysis of the Ego that makes us be what we are, as well as a prospective evaluation of the causes and effects, will make us able to obstruct these breaches in due time, becoming invincible in the future.

A Cat Crosses On The Edge Of The Ice

On August 06, 2016

Program a test of self-assessment, testing your attitude towards what you can't yet control on an intuitive level.

The two search. Let's see... Let's see... Suddenly: "That's it ! " On the edge of the ice... a cat is crossing. At the edge, the ice is thin... The ice breaks... under the cat."

As it is uttered, the proposal seems beyond stupid. Again, both of them suddenly remember they're expected somewhere. And so, the days go by. The story becomes a nightmare. Eisenstein cannot sleep for nights on end, burning in dire hallucinatory insomnias: all around, wooden axes stick into wood and cats stumble on ice. And then the axes break the ice and the cats stick into the wood...

Enraged, Eisenstein reaches out to the bookshelf, thinking of distracting his thoughts. He stumbles upon the Russian collection of anecdotes and the most popular of stories.

He reads and suddenly: "My God ! How could I have forgotten this story that I have always been so fond of?" He jumps out of bed, goes straight to the phone, calls Pavlenko and shouts excitedly: "I found it ! The soldiers sit around the fire. And one of them tells the story with the fox and the hare. The story about how the hare snuck between two birch trees and how the fox, who was running after him, got stuck between the trees."

The two then discuss this at length. The idea take shape, gets completed, details change, until it remains permanently in the script. "If we would have more time to work on it, for a month let's say, we would find a more complete solution for this film. But there is no time." *

Leadership: Can you find a supportive argument in favor of extending inspiration, between twists and renovations of perspective over assessing your own motivations?

In the exhausting harshness of creative work, in the burdensome condition of the artist who has not yet mastered his talent, faced with a vision too brief to clot, triggering and giving scale to the crisis of inspiration, a bubble type phenomenon takes place. The more air you put into a balloon, the more its stability decreases. The motivation of a director is not to fill the film stock with as much effect as possible, but to strike a balance between story and reality, between fiction and truth, between challenge and aspiration.

Stability in terms of conditioning motivation by talent, culture and competence, is merely an illusion. How is motivation assessed? According to the level of value that the director attributes to the theme and to the creative act. And the motivation to increase the visibility and importance of the creation occurs when the director tries to convey an idea, alluding to his intervention in the plane of reality, or to the complex character of his personality, of his work. Stability is not achieved without fulfilling that condition of localizing your own value in the matrix of the transitive period – from renunciation to hope, from expectation to action, from science to art.

Stability is an excess of the controlled element, quite difficult to accept, being in fact the element of a self-assessment or of a psychological test, which helps you discover your true attitude towards what you cannot yet control at an intuitive or scientific level.

Now, is your attitude to lack of inspiration is a predisposition of a professional weakness, or it is a reaction of revolt before a higher power that you not yet realize you possess?

As you advance towards a higher stage of integrating knowledge into a work of creation, the harder it is to support yourself in the experience of not living up to your own expectations.

One of the great tests of leadership, which determines the value of personality, aims at the power of reacting in various contexts of the type "lack of inspiration", when you don't succeed in centering yourself in that state in which you feel that nothing can stop you.

Only those who became representative in a certain field lead by the exhortation: "I am unstoppable", because they benefit from an increased efficiency of the resources of inspiration, being excellent administrators of unexpected innovation elements.

Such power, comprising the necessity of achieving the victory over a genuine creation, through a reduction of the complexity and differences that make it up, is an affirmation required by the very structure of hierarchies of your essentiality – from the requirement of allowing yourself to make mistakes, to the demand of giving up what you simply don't know because of a fear of the unknown.

Always in leadership, where ideas take shape, complete, change in details until they are finalized into an authentic creation, matters the motivation inscribed in the dimension of a limitation of using knowledge that acts inversely with the determination of carrying out the process of innovation to the end. Motivation must be supported through a constant use of as diverse as possible resources.

The knowledge that a creator proves is part of the idea he expresses by appealing to the visual experience with the help of augmented reality, so that the end result rises above his expectations.

A Cat Crosses On The Edge Of The Ice is the critical point from where an idea is induced that doesn't manage to materialize in creation, which constitutes a self-experience conducted between the manifestation of a professional weakness and the reaction of revolt in the face of a higher power you are yet unaware you possess.

A Challenging Journey In The Inner World Of A Mechanical Being (II)

Connect yourself to the reference milestone of your authenticity, reforming the effort to understand the incomprehensible meanings of existence applied in the context of new renewal tendencies.

Without knowing it, Hobbs transforms in something that shouldn't be, into an unknown obtained by a multitude of possible combinations, with no suitable one, that the heart and feelings accept only temporary, similar to a test. Will he last or not? The inner voices whistle and buzz, waging a war against that thirst to pick everything, to leave nothing behind. Thoughts get crowded, shove themselves hungrily, making their way towards true freedom, towards the great attraction, stimulating adrenaline. Extreme audacity, craziness, momentarily exaltation, over-valorization of sweet-evanescent pleasure.

The diamonds are right under his eyes, their brilliance is the eternity of a dream come true, he just has to gather them in one place and make them disappear from the bank's vault. The echo of integrity won't answer to him, because it's not alive anymore. Further, Hobbs gives in to the instinct which pants through his fingers. Make it disappear, make everything disappear ! the trumpeter voice of his Ego, his deepest criminal will be heard, he will realize how lethal the situation is.

A thief is not a true artist unless he shows his talent to think beyond the limits imposed by the requirements of the present moment. Tormented by the recurring conflicts fueled by exaggerated pride, but altogether taken over by a pleasant sensation, by a fantastic stimulus with the intensity of that maximum energy state, with the unlimited euphoria fueled by his shattered physic, Hobbs throws himself with more persistently in the heat of the decisive moment of destiny.

This way the world beyond maps, the world of hidden treasures, the other world that only Hauff or Kafka could have described so vividly and at the same time eerie, overcomes in its essence the layer of reality and of its acceptability.

The authenticity of an artist lies in the acquisition of the ability to think above what he feels at a turning point, experiencing the experience of a work of art depending on what is dictated to him by the destiny of an adventure of interiority.

During physical effort, unsuspected for an old man like Hobbs, heat production increases for a short period of time at a muscular level, all energies are harmonized, the body blossoms, becomes more active. And if compensatory reactions wouldn't intervene in order to bring back to normal those vital functions, given by feelings of deep hatred, anger and rebellion, surely such sudden blood pressure pulsations would have put his life in danger.

No voice rises higher, no breath can be perceived as being stronger and all triggering energies are quickly depleted when the spiritual mechanism is unplugged from the maximum alert level. Yet, by dualizing his characteristic reason and feeling, Hobbs keeps being quite receptive to the pressure exerted by reality, by those dominant influences: "to be" and "not to be".

Only this way the unknown land his steps on first becomes his country. Only thus, robbery becomes simpler than ever, turning itself in a true victory – of an able doer, who will forever remain unknown.

Leadership: Do you check your ability to look beyond the significance of a revelatory and enlivening reward, responding to the requests of your representative probity fund?

Hobbs does not check his ability to look beyond the significance of a revelatory and enlivening reward, beyond the madness of a courage that heals any wound, but rather a single impulse of cold thinking: to admit no deviation from the thirst of justice left active in his consciousness and soul.

The stimulus that processes thoughts and emotions is present in your reality as long as you focus on existential attempts. This stimulus weighs as much as a rock that never moves even in the most terrible storm, gaining control over some important dimensions in your life, but especially over the dimension of the personality you're willing to show to the world.

There is also the possibility that, like a fervent seeker of some new meanings to get through life, you will end up being a simple collector of exciting experiences, but hollow inside, unable to recognize yourself and to look beyond the walls of your own lost mind.

This syndrome of "a tunnel which expands forever" forms through the thin cloud of prejudice, a self-suspension until the verdict is reached. In leadership it's called self-marginalization. The verdict is a resounding affirmation of your commitment towards the authority of your power to be a moral being for a long time. Which means making permanent changes, do something you haven't done before, even in times of storm.

To recognize in yourself a winner who knows how to impose his victory is to see beyond the revenge of his own "justice" that gives meaning to life.

The verdict itself, clarifying your compatibility state with the format of the life that adds an additional functionality to the inner development option, is nothing else than an "emission" of the style to make updates to one's of description. Or better said, of the style to make one's imperfections a real measure o joys or disappointments that you live.

One of the most important resources of leadership which allows a certain distance and a certain power from the "referential milestone" of authenticity is the ability to look beyond meaning. Beyond the meaning given to your engagement in a strange existential chess game with black and white fields, where your most important pieces are replaced by the echo of integrity – this whole that has included inside you an endless chain of valor successions, but also conscience dramas.

Meaning is a proof of your attempt to stop from whatever hinders you from experiencing inner peace, and in order to change the meaning you must invert "minus" and "plus". That means to redefine your whole reality, especially the relationship with yourself. Authenticity means to accumulate random experiences, revealing in countless occasions the preferences for their particularities.

Leadership doesn't appear here as an adaptation process to those conscious states and moods for action – altered by the most important events that can yet have a positive finality if you don't become their prisoner. Let's not forget rocks, the more they reach towards the sky, the more they move and the easier they collapse.

A leadership looking at the meaning of life is the destiny of a meeting with the impulse to fight all your mistakes in a world that does not ask of you a certificate of the ability of being better.

A Challenging Journey In The Inner World Of A Mechanical Being highlights the path towards those unknown existential landmarks, which man negotiates with himself, cut out for the mind and soul's own shape which can control his actions.

The Romanian writer, Adrian Schiop, advised at a certain point: "Escape confusion and set some valor and event-related landmarks". You prove in vain to be a mostly practical and imaginative spirit, if in the negotiation process with yourself you don't keep into account the limit of feelings awakened by certain experiences, as well as the limit of your resistance to bear adjustments throughout your personal development. These limits could be correlated with maintaining a balance between creating a new profile and distributing adaptation resources for everything that happens to you.

A Challenging Journey In The Inner World Of A Mechanical Being (I)

Identify the particular configuration of a man imprisoned in his own thoughts so that his perception about his real identity doesn't distort them.

Two eyes sparkle impatiently, while the noble feeling of responsibility for one's own being is unleashed with a powerful force. In Mister Hobbs everything echoes empty. The electron pair of the covalent connection which gravitates around his stability and steadiness is divided between the two nuclei: the reason, which triggers within him the specific mechanics of a full self-knowledge and the feelings which coexist, without being touched.

Because yes, Mister Hobbs has entered the great hall, so well secured, where the diamonds were. He takes a mechanical look at the jewels around. Without even thinking too much, following the spirit of revenge, without being taken over by the fascination of treasure hunters, he listens to his call, his long awaited purpose.

Behind everything that motivates him, keeping him prisoner of a blind selfishness, in a cage of individual decadency, of temporary dementia, all his fleeting thoughts are crowded in the impatience to receive their reward. Only them, the overloaded and overstimulated thoughts, only them set the difference between "what" and "how", between standing and moving, between returning to the past and relating to the present that seizes its own past.

Less fascinated by the extravaganza of these lights and sparkles, but especially by the sensation of being totally victorious, Hobbs was left only with taking, with hatred, each and every diamond. The hand that he mechanically pushes forward grabs with determination each diamond, from the smallest to the biggest, as if they didn't belong to him, but to that secret constancy of being, that strong and bold force that raises against his clean conscience.

Leadership: Do you let yourself driven in the direction of a call initiated in the depth of an existence subordinated to reason or feelings, by the fact that you can not control your reactions and responses to life's challenges?

Does everything that motivates you, keep you prisoner in a blind selfishness, in a cage of individual decadency? Can you assert yourself in front of that mystifying force that rises against your clean conscience?

The significance of leadership expands across the strict area of profession, repositioning itself in the strict area of the individual's pattern "attrition", in the sphere of his real identity. Ultimately, it imposes itself to be interpreted through an analysis of the invisible side of personality which manifests itself through an unforeseen behavior.

The importance of the leader's evolution, from the varied aspects when he shows his personality model, namely his character, finds its most significant expression in every detail, in certain behaviors, or in mental or emotional affections.

When the noble feeling of responsibility, which you entrust your whole being to, is unleashed with such a huge force, that focused thinking perishes instantly, even though it is necessary for the personality to form and operate at the highest standards. You have the feeling that your mind turns into stone, and it actually runs crazy, slipping on a slippery slope – of hypocrisy, of double life, of multiple personalities, of dementia – finally leading to self-destruction.

In which case, leadership becomes completely immovable and asphyxiated, it slows its developments, it can't generate positive stimuli, it can't give man a well-defined shape that would allow him to exert his power appropriately.

Leadership: Does the knowledge of your existence accumulate on the fears and hopes emerged in the thought-forming phase from the period of a maturity constrained to completely change the mental landscape you have projected along a far too idealistic vision?

Being on the losing side means to move towards a destination in which the needs of a troubled existence intertwine with the belief based only on the assessment of a single part of an ensemble of principle and values that distinguish man's greatness from the demented wandering of the animal trained by that part of human society that is alienated from God.

Mr. Hobbs only knew the most bitter of suffering after his wife's death, which led him to seek vengeance. Until this ill-fated event occurred, life lay before him as a quiet story of love. It was a total shock. The man who experiences at a mental and emotional level the waves of negative energy, those extreme periodic or discontinuous movements which trigger a true crisis in his own life, sheds away his science, philosophy, from the glittering gown of well-directed thinking, of clean conscience and gentle, mature feeling.

Balzac didn't say in vain that:"Many people have taken as energy the trust given by illusions." Especially the illusion of being able to do whatever you want, without having to be in sync with the people around, excessively influencing their disapproval towards your way of being. The illusion that you can mechanically rise on top of everything that connects you to the Man within, with an amazing cunning, even with the price of falling into nothingness.

Leadership: Can the highest goals of your science gain a strong shape in the equation of a profound transformation of life that brings with it a denial of the purpose of being?

Leadership means to influence other using the power of examples. But, for example, can a leader enslaved by the feelings coming from an adrenaline excess, entangled in the feeling of complete victory, avidly grip everything that seems valuable no matter the consequences?

Mr. Hobbs has used all his abilities, much beyond his expectations and everyone around him, to rob a bank in as ingenious a way as possible. He did not deny the purpose he suddenly knew he had to fulfill; he felt no remorse. But he was no longer the same man as before, he became a reaction force against the phenomenon called "corruption or injustice". It is only in a cruel moment of life that man reveals his genius and character.

The ultimate goal of his science was not to rob a bank, but to prove to himself that he is indispensable for the collapse of a rigorous system that coordinates people's lives.

Decorating his personality with the glowing colors of ignorance and his unquenchable wish, he unknowingly transforms into something that shouldn't be. Into an unknown obtained by a multitude of possible combinations, with no suitable one, that the heart and feelings accept only temporary, similar to a test. How long will he last to this change that people will obviously easily notice and disapprove of?

But more important than this is his ulterior reaction. Will the leader be courageous enough to stand his delirium?

When the echo of integrity won't answer to him anymore, when the trumpeter voice of his Ego, of his deepest criminal will be heard, he will realize how fatal the situation in which he placed himself, in the great unity of reality, will the highest goals of his science strongly stand out? Will they be able to shine in such a vibrant color that all people will understand him and nurture themselves with the food of accomplishment?

Leadership is based on the achievement of a maturity that brings with it consistency in the practice of prudence towards the gifts of life and the effort to cultivate a sense of calm before a possible overturning of the situation.

A Challenging Journey In The Inner World Of A Mechanical Being marks that wonderful occasion to plunge in the essence of the leader's being and to discover his little known potential. At the same time it makes the object of suspicion and fascination towards everything that he truly is when he deviates from the norms and normal, in relation with what is strange and unusual about him.

If you want to understand better the human side of leadership, identify the particular configuration of a man taken prisoner by his own thoughts so that your perception over his real identity will not distort.

A Change Of Forgiveness

On June 14, 2015

Experience leadership "in secret", providing access to a new version of the depth of reality observable from the posture of a judge accepting the covenant with the virtue of forgiveness.

- Take even the last piece of gold I have left, muttered Danglars while handing his wallet. Take it and let me live here, in this cave. I no longer demand freedom, I ask only to live. Mercy !

- So, you suffer? Asked the man who only his shadow could be seen. Before this shadow, all bandits bowed.

- Yes, I suffer, I suffer terribly.

- And yet, there are people who've suffered more than you.

- I do not believe it.

- But it is true ! Those who've died of starvation.

- Do you even repent? asked the solemn and somber voice, which made Danglars feel the hair on his head rise.

It was understandable, the banker was no longer a man, but a living corpse. His tired eyes tried to decipher things and saw a man with a cape, lost in the shadow of a stone pillar.

- Why should I repent? asked Danglars.

- For the evil that you've committed, said the same voice.

- Yes, I repent, I repent ! cried the wretched.

- Then I forgive you ! Said the man, getting rid of his cape and stepping into the light.

- The Count of Monte Cristo ! cried Danglars paler from horror than he was a moment before because of hunger and misery.

- You are mistaken. I am not the Count of Monte Cristo.

- Then who are you?

- I am the one you sold, preyed, dishonored. And am the one whose fiancée you've tricked, humiliated her and used her for your purposes. I am the one you stepped over to climb to wealth. I am the one whose father you've starved, the one who is now condemning you to die of hunger. And yet, the one who forgives you, because he himself needs to be forgiven.

Leadership: Do you only know your limit of integrity by experiencing the freedom of giving life to a Shadow?

Choosing a new possibility to play a role as a judge requires new situations, often unpredictable and difficulty to manage, such as those concerning the status of interiority which is of interest also as a transferable aspect. In other words, what is it in you that can have a binding character for what an individual who understands his deeds does, feels or thinks, one who can only see himself in his universe?

Openness to an experience of truth, available only through an unexpected and percutaneous intervention, causing a powerful awareness of the uncertain past of the individual, is a measure of depth, extent and variability of imagination and insight. And also of the need of experiencing a sort of leadership "in secret", which crosses any impossible, any deviation from the norm, the eternal wall – the sin, ensuring a separation of good and evil.

Felt only through effects, this leadership emerges as a sort of beneficent power that is opposed to everything that is evil, a sort of combination between unknown and danger, contributing to the formation of a new consciousness.

Integrity is the prime attribute of consciousness to do a certain act in the name of truth, even if it involves forcing the reality of entering into a complicated deductive pattern, understood as a "structural resistance mechanism" in front of any obstacles to the attainment of proposed goals. Sometimes, this de-doubling is perpetuated in individuals as an illusion of a rigid separation between the behaviors assumed in the public and private spheres.

Leadership: Do you ask for forgiveness from punishment without feeling the presence of God, so without testing your natural curiosity of finding out the final outcome even if you were given this chance?

"The shadow" is the creation of the man of genius, who has the skills to provide original features to the art of being simultaneously a strategist, judge, vigilante and revealer, in the virtue of the science of having access to hidden truths, sometimes materialized in a sort of negative capacity. But that are retouched through an intelligence whose nutriments are the very criteria of orientation, achievements, limits and rules in relation to others.

Someone said that any fulfillment in the world immediately gives rise to an insufficiency: what appears in time as a wretched passion, in the end it must fail. That makes leadership an instrument of diagnosing consciousness and assessing weaknesses, the very touching of the sensitive chord of man established through confession and repentance.

Precisely therein lies the magic of leadership that is often in the heart of everything that exists and changes in the world: many people discover their identity and more easily accept the status of "inferior" through a confession – sometimes obtained only through a conviction, an acquittal or execution of punishment. Through a fall in the abyss of suffering.

In all aspects of life, you will be required to restitute, to the extent of the loss suffered by the other person, especially if you fail to respect the terms and limits of your own enrichment accorded to the norms of consciousness to discern between truth and falsehood.

A Change Of Forgiveness is given to any man who distanced himself from everything that is just and fair, but who has the courage to denounce himself, opting for a confession.

The leader always knows his limit: that the freedom of changing himself into a "shadow" and manifesting his hidden powers is never his cause, that it always depends on something else, uplifting, divine, spiritual. Even he needs to be forgiven by something higher than him.

That is why this freedom, through its most representative results, can never achieve an "amazing" leap in the form of a permanently secured situation. Because, in turn, the truly powerful leader is not only subordinate to his mental creation and his extraordinary capabilities. But to a destiny.

A Check For Your Change

Consider the pace of your evolution without reducing the costs for your formation.

A great leader was preparing an aggressive military campaign for the conquest of a foreign territory. After having consulted with his best commanders in regards to choosing the best attack strategy, they agreed that the best solution was to start a sea strike. The next day, the great leader talked to his soldiers:

- If we want to win this war, we have to attack by sea. But first, we must learn to navigate, because we don't have enough experience in handling boats.

Leadership: Do you show a permanent concern to ensure your evolution a finality that is in favor of the "horizontal" coordination of a decision taken by analyzing the general state?

Only experience can support the functioning pace of a quality leadership. Experience is a necessary part in your evolution towards a statute in accordance with the level of your expectations. And that is why it is necessary to critically value the aspects related to your character and how much you are willing to give, so that your evolution process to fix any deficiencies and anything that goes wrong.

Are you permanently preoccupied in assuring your evolution a result favoring your leadership? Do you live among such people that try to hold you responsible for some circumstances in which you didn't use wisely your potential as a leader?

Your professional evolution is like a check that you receive by mail every week, which partially regulates your financial status, but doesn't guarantee your success. This check confirms the fact that you have paid for a certain amount of time the obligations pertaining to you. At the same time, the check represents the value of what you are able to build before paying the price of a colossal victory.

First of all, leadership must be understood, supported and then valued. For it to evolve, you must know how to use to their best those "value check", that the level of your performance puts at your disposal in order to adjust your pace of development. The checks are meant to bring a modest (but significant) contribution to acquiring traits, qualities and knowledge assimilated over time in order to help you get through any situation threatening your reputation or deterring you from fulfilling some goals – so to speak, in the situations that need a change of plans.

Leadership is a form of manifestation of the law of causality and expresses the process of self-determination of phenomena that are difficult to predict, being in fact the result of evolutionary trends outlined with a certain firmness.

Ensuring that your evolution has a purpose that is in favor of "horizontal" coordination of a decision taken through the analysis of the general situation, means pursuing a strictly individual satisfaction paid without personal loss for the benefit of others. What do I mean when I say "horizontal" coordination? I am referring to the need to impose rules or measures for everyone, which can facilitate group cohesion. These rules or measures must also justify action to ensure a climate of order, maintain people's development potential and promote examples of good practice.

The way you organize your resources determines your performance. What is war if not a long confrontation between two or more rival sides? Each of them wants to win the confrontation by overcoming its adversary in efficiency, ingenuity, in weaponry and occupying the desired territory. During battles, each camp has successes or failures. Even if one of them lost a battle, it can still win the war, depending on the strategy it applies in the meantime.

No matter how effective the strategy the army applies, it will never be able to start a war and a battle if it's not ready to win or to support the consequences in case it will lose. In a war, the best prepared army wins, you rarely get a "rematch", especially when there are no rules or when they are not observed.

A leader will have to justify his investment in maneuvering innovative techniques, approaches and practices, as a kind of corollary of the law of causality which cannot be a simple result deduced from the facts of experience, because he himself is the author of this experience.

Preparation is more than necessary. You must be sure that people are well trained and that they have understood what you expect of them, and it is mandatory that you have the material resources and financial means to support them during the entire war. Simply put, if you don't know how to organize the resources you need (such as time, the material basis, the human basis etc.), you will not be able to undertake efficient actions in view of preventing an eventual failure.

Consider your pace of evolution without reducing the costs for your formation. If you know how to organize the resources you need to the contribution of your formation as a leader, ensuring in a timely fashion a preparation to give your abilities time to develop, your success will be guaranteed.

Do you give your full interest in your formation? Does your evolution reflect the most profound and comprehensive understanding of your own potential as a leader?

Leadership is the opportunity to get to know yourself through the exercise of looking at yourself from the perspective of other people, so that what favors your evolution is given by their motivation for efficiency.

A Check For Your Change is the one-time payment you make to cover any future losses, and you can only pay with the experience of handling events in your favor. It represents that minimum help by which you can truly progress. It is a help of a great value and which you give to yourself by your formation and development. In order for you t get enough experience in handling leadership you must navigate through the formation options and different types of approaches that you adopt and are meant to evaluate your degree of efficiency.

Conclusion: The components, just like experience, are obtained in time. Sometimes, you are stimulated to develop as a leader, but most of the times, you must invest in yourself in order to learn and to improve. Sometimes, you get various rewards, even material, sometimes your merits are given too little, too late.

When you will be acknowledged as being the best, you can consider having received the most consistent check – the true reward for your tenacity and assiduity.

A Classic Of The Red Rose

Aspire for something well defined, then make the right adjustments to offer it as an image of an exceptional artistic destination that will never cease to fascinate.

I could never have imagined that a sprawling rose could flood such abundance on the semantic field of creation upon me, regardless of the support or the form of expression of information, introducing into the space of this confession the visual density of the details that turn a scene of ordinary life into the finding of an innovative comparison.

Interesting how a symbolic expression of special boundlessness, extracted from the earth element and annexed to the fulfillment of a beautiful dream, followed by a mystical revival in the spiritual field, can meet an artistic conception such as: "the fascination of purity in an endless universe".

Each beauty gains admiration and appreciation around the revelation of a consistent, lively writing, barely gathered from a space of artistic verisimilar. If the garden would not have given me the opportunity of stopping an instant in an unforgettable moment, crossing a profound sense of belonging to a wider comparison frame with a word-image, I would probably have risked forming ideas and preconceptions about what can balance a confusing situation such as when you do not know what the world means in a perspective of the aesthetics available in a series of vivid finishes and colors.

In art, you need to take into consideration the "beautiful" factor from the perspective of your best example, an example of a high intelligence of nature that also represents a symbol of the eternal splendor of life.

At the same time, the rose can be held accountable for accepting a new vision of interpreting and building an art filled with mystery in an unnamed season for which an artist would guarantee the basic premise of the depth of a substantive approach in the virtual field born from the form-background opposition. The contemplation of this entirely optical material costs only a minimum of openness in front of an abundance of emotions undermined by the prolongation of an increasingly fragile world.

For the first time I have traveled the distance from admiration to regret, from the essence of a superior inner order to the forgotten beauty of life that refuses any restriction and labeling, any conceptual or linguistic fixation, any artificial framing in a*mondo vivente*. The meaning I was looking for in an unshakable way to an art open to interpretation, by evacuating classical aesthetic criteria, came from an erect bush that blooms from late spring to late autumn. Again, I say: Sensational !

Leadership: Can you frame your everyday experience in a virtuous exercise that is free to process a delicate, emotionally complex theme?

A work of art is always finished by the addition of lines and points ordered by the entire semantics of a symbolic universe, the addition of poeticism being analyzed from various perspectives of visual expression.

Of course, if I take into account the opinions of other beautiful admirers with a gentle note, imagining the creator of a higher form of image culture, all I know about this living entity in her own right, I would probably be tempted to appreciate a work of art in terms of colors, pendulating between shades of yellow, red, white, purple or even multicolored.

But I always prefer red, because it imitates blood from a color bleed that passes through infinity, the great universal movement, as in an early manuscript fragment associated with a title built of two independent formulations: "A thousand shades of passion" and "The Magic Illustration of a Sunset". I also know how to use the other colors, in proportion to achieving a more complete picture of the evolution of a science considered unprecedented.

The virtuosity, specific to a master of words, imposes a certain tendency towards the perfection of the pure concept of the effervescence of the daily, from a living source of inspiration, to offer it as an image of a story destination. While the dominant share of an image-symbol is the relationship between expressivity and inner development (the act of self-giving).

I'm probably asking for a deeper depth effect from myself, dominated by optical conversions between fillings and visual voids, on the conceptual character of representing a world with different aesthetic qualities. An artist of finesse, beyond the ability to make a penetration of a universe dominated by the natural of surviving through knowledge, usually chooses the sets of essential representations made up of color mixes to integrate a certain interpretation into a well-made and meaningful handwriting.

So, what helps me feel cherished, pursuing a profound philosophical idea as spatial expanse with reference to a process of reflection on a symbolic reality, is precisely the pride of recognizing that I have found a pattern of comparison between my life and a suave universe, delicate and full of charm.

Leadership: Can you argue for the imperative of balanced efforts to create an artistic vision, in order to capitalize on it from various sustainable perspectives of the diversity of content areas?

It would be said that the imperative of my efforts to create an artistic vision, in order to exploit it from various sustainable perspectives of the diversity of content areas, is more than a visual sign or a formal appearance, a gift made by Venus to the Earth, a concept of the Creator of the Beautiful, to whom I mentally ascribe the attributes of an unlimited space.

Things created by God are understood by the infinite curiosity of the multiple expressions of emotions that can occur at some encounters, whether romantic or long-closed and handcuffed somewhere in the body of a symbol of perfection, purity and grace.

The rose supports the eye in measuring the depth of the scene of a world with too few noises, made of an aperture of depth in man and in art. As a combinatorial mechanism designed to lead from simple to complex, to the building of more complicated idols from simple sensations, the rose relates very well to operations such as attention, understanding, discernment, consideration of feelings, reconciliation between two or more traditions, justification of aesthetic preferences for the landscape, the appreciation of the wealth of symbols, the acquisition of a new identity, etc.

Using all the means of art at the point of understanding the generating mechanism of expressiveness and metamorphosis of the words traversed by the vibration of some color spots, I saw a new conception: "Remind yourself of the beauty that surrounds you". I had to associate it with the leadership that I would define as a product of the art of experience the meanings of a world that does not have its own reality, but a reality conceived as an endless providential order by a great maker of revealing images and metaphors.

The aesthetic excellence of a visionary-artistic language derives from the expressiveness of articulating an idea whose value is generally recognized, but whose meaning is understood by few.

A Classic Of The Red Rose is the work of a master of his art, one drawn, one painted, carved or photographed, who can always find a correspondent in a spontaneous writing style that absorbs you, is part of a magical tale capable of attracting not because it is so rare, but because it is so delicate, so emotionally complex.

A Close-Up Of A Background Full Of Feeling

Be prepared to give a new meaning to the way you feel, based on an experience that produces lasting changes in the relationship between what contains you and what rejects you.

I'm on my way back home, even though I am still far from the place that always gives me warmth. Fortunately, the rain stopped in time, otherwise I would have been drenched when I got home, which would have foreshadowed an uncomfortable emotional state, a kind of turmoil in the labyrinths of a mind that often doubts the body, finding no impression anywhere.

This is also a meteorological normality, which I would like to ignore as much as possible. It's like I belong to no-one, in the middle of nowhere, but the important thing is that I always have myself in the middle of my thoughts. To be able to merge with myself, to forget the expectations of others, so that the actuation system of my physical body, in motion, acquires the amplitude of a dynamic pulsating system at the origin of a gnoseological optimism. How sublime my feelings are suggested in order to express a personal point of view !

Or in every step I take, somewhat hurried, pressed, strong, one feels that human trait that allows itself to harmonize with nature and everything around it. But, more than that, one feels that distinction of the man who knows how to be worthy and who imposes his respect through that attitude of creative openness capable of expressing new perspectives of observation on life.

Leadership: Can you render what is inside you through the prism of what is happening outside you, considering an action that makes you want to more intensely experience a moment that no longer passes?

These remarks are enough to make myself understood. You can still feel the wind blowing from the west, it's getting colder and colder, and my footsteps leave no trace on the wet streets. I don't think any step is anything higher than the wind you feel penetrating your bones, making you tremble a little, but you sure forget about it as soon as you get somewhere warm.

Behold. I arrived home. Even though the rain offered me new perspectives to look at and understand street art, where peace and darkness constitute a kind of spontaneous realism, of treating the social theme through a colder chromatic, at the same time it provided me with a deep lesson: a state that is temporary may last longer than one that is permanent.

The state that crosses you when you are alone with yourself depends on how you understand your own person in relation to an action that makes you want to more intensely experience the moment when time freezes.

Yes, I believe that there is a kind of depth hidden in my being, which only comes to light around the thoughts I forge for myself through an effective focus on the feelings that led me to where I am.

I am perhaps a man who knew how to detach from the tangle and variety of his current concerns, directly and simply, a feature of hidden depth: the sincerity of being myself, the sincerity of saying exactly what I feel even in the most discreet moments.

Leadership is the sincerity to see myself as I am and to accept myself with all that I mean, remaining the same, in every moment when no one is watching me.

A Close-Up Of A Background Full Of Feeling highlights the understanding that man offers himself when he is alone, without self-suspending himself in a fast-flowing present, but putting all his capacity for reflection in support of the need to better know oneself.

In this way, it is good not to forget the words of the writer Adela Toplean: "There will always be a struggle between what contains you (with your inner drift and all) and what rejects you (the horizon of others' world)."

A Complicated Game

On February 14, 2009

Expand your boundaries of influence, by adopting a firm position against your decision to impose your character.

The road to a successful career can be extremely slippery. In one of the most famous books about chess "Principles and Tactics", Anton Berger specifies in the first chapter three important rules in chess: "Carefully, carefully, carefully ! "

The more you advance in your career, be convinced that you will confront a lot of hard situations and you will come across a lot of obstacles that would keep you far from the goal you proposed, far from your dreams. Many envious people or who want to advance in the job you follow, will try to detain you from making a step forward. In this kind of moments you have to take a decision: you take a step forward carefully or you resign.

Leadership: Is the character that decides the result of all your forces consistent with assuming a persona that does not allow compromises?

Margaret Thatcher, the prime minister of Great Britain among 1979-1990, knew better than anyone how to act so she would not be kept in chess by other aspirants at the comfortable premier chair. Like the chess game, Margaret Thatcher was very reasonable and extremely careful at the actions she was ready to do, and once a decision was made she never changed her mind. She said herself: "You can change your mind, if you want. The lady would not."

Maybe you also wish a high leading job and to increase you power of influence. But I warn you that you will not be the only one who wants this thing. With certain there will be other people willing to succeed in professional ascension.

In order to win in front of your opponents, you would have to learn to play hard, but with caution like Margaret Thatcher. Calculate well the moves you want to make, and then act firmly. Remember that, just like a chess game, once you made the moves you cannot change them, and a bad move could mean the end of the game by checkmate. So take control over the game before your opponents do.

The Ego can be your way out of the self-imposed inertia state only if there is a chance of victory over a very large force, the result of which makes you think that something greater than you watches over you, guides you and protects you.

Do you have the ability to understand and to use leadership as a tool of ensuring the success? Is it your capacity of keeping yourself firmly on position, the "distinguishing mark" of your power of influence? What is the "piece" with the greatest potential that you use in order to control your opponents? Can you create some strong points that could not be easily attacked by the opponents? Do you differentiate yourself from them by the strong focus given to the undertakings that you initiate?

Expand your boundaries of influence, by adopting a firm position against your decision to impose your character.

Can you differentiate between the Common Leader and the Elite Leader, without the need to know in detail the processes of achieving the planned objectives?

Leadership, as a whole, is based on a sum of principles, practices, beliefs and strategies, whose relations and interference with man and the circumstances associated with him generates, in a final stage, that inner impetus and that type of value that the leader needs to impose to others. But, first of all, to himself.

It is therefore necessary to create a dichotomy between the common-leader and the elite-leader that the individual can turn into eventually. The most striking difference between the two types is given by the game they each compete to, despite pressures, distractions, intimidation attempts and conspiracies of any kind. Of the two types, only the elite-leader revives in him that strange magic that gathers the most powerful energies and spiritual tools useful to transformation, beneficial to a safe operation and an upstream development.

Taking the example of Margaret Thatcher, we know all too well how the elite-leader tries to play in the dark inferno of turnabouts and great changes, sometimes concentrated in a single moment. He tries to play rightfully, i.e. legally, without violating the rights and freedoms of other opponents to try to acquire the title of master, but maintaining his strong position, featuring the audacity that leads to opportunity, realizing the value of any action.

Thorough understanding of the processes to achieve planned objectives can only be achieved only through a personal introduction in the setting of a "live performance" that contributes to overcoming the risk state in which is found a whole that carries a reality different from that of the parts that compose it.

The position of a title holder in leadership is obtained when you decide to fight for a cause beyond yourself and focus on what makes you go further into an impossible direction.

But how does the elite-leader perceives this game? If, for example, we raised this problem to the common-leader, we would certainly hit his weakness, his ignorance to manage multiple foreign territories, the indifference with which he addresses a series of strategic factors specific to every position and the ignorance to act at that moment according to a plan that requires new ideas.

In all ages, the common-leader from the base of society has ignored these means to test his value. Although, paradoxically, he was the main actor on the stage of world history, continuously playing his role, unaware of his mismatch to the lead, only motivated by the desire to be at the forefront.

Therefore, it seems that victory is the almost exclusively product of well-formed personalities in the struggle for supremacy, personalities that would not have been able to speak up without the support of a complicated game, on a superior level, which is the tendency to accumulate positional or material advantages, further developed to forms with decisive character.

The obligation you undertake as a leader should never be interpreted as a clause of change when crossing a difficult road, but rather as a voluntary risk clause to identify and develop high-favored areas that keep you in shape.

A Complicated Game becomes a spectacle worthy of the great personalities of history when two representatives of "strong character" and "an ego that does not compromise" extend beyond measure. But it is worth it for you to be part of it, because you learn how to find your motivation in a framework that does not allow for favors, but rather only for the manifestation of pride.

I think that the words of the writer of Romanian origin, Irina Binder, best expresses the attitude of a leader caught in a risky game: "If ever I will keep my head down, it will be just to admire my shoes."

A Crucible In Which Fate Throws Man

Try to reach that maturity in which you fully appreciate what you have, even if what you have corresponds to the requirements of high spirituality, not the requirements of your own logic.

Life began to be hard for Marius. It hadn't been enough for him to eat his clothes and watch. He was now feeding on what is called fried patience. It's a terrible thing, which means days without bread, nights without sleep, evening hours without candles, hearth without fire, whole weeks without work, hopeless future, clothes torn at the elbows, an old hat that girls laugh at, the door on which you find her locked up because you did not pay the rent, the impudence of the porter and the bartender, the mockery of the neighbors, all kinds of humiliation, suppressed dignity, acceptance of any kind of work, disgust, bitterness, discouragement. Marius learned to swallow them all and found that they were often the only things you ate.

At that moment, when the man needs pride, because he needs love, he felt ridiculed, because he was badly dressed, and funny, because he was poor. At the age when youth filled his heart with royal pride, he often looked down at his torn boots and knew the unjust offenses and the humiliating shame of misery. Wonderful and great trial, from which the weak come out vile, and the strong sublime. A crucible in which fate throws man whenever he wants to have a brat or a demigod !

Because in small battles a lot of great deeds are committed. There are powers, stubborn and unknown, who fight in the shadows, step by step, with the indelible onslaught of needs and filth. The noble and mysterious victory, which no eye sees, which no fame rewards, and no fanfare greets. Life, misery, loneliness, abandonment, poverty are battlefields that have their heroes, unknown heroes, sometimes bigger than famous heroes.

*In this way strong and powerful natures are born. Misery, almost always a stepmother, is sometimes a true mother, poverty gives birth to the power of the soul and the mind; despair is the nurse of pride; misfortune is good milk for the generous.

Leadership: Can you turn the content of a high teaching about life into a deep rooting in spirituality that gives you special value and uniqueness through the limits you can bear?

Anyone can adopt, at will, a change that he sees in the world, with the only condition that he does not unjustly claim the victory of a tendency of sensitivity in another way of manifestation of the concrete of life.

This is the sensitivity of a sad life: suppressed dignity, the hopeless future, the humiliating shame of misery, and this is why it is necessary for man to develop an adequate manifestation of emotional feelings, so that the sensitivity of his character is not reduced to trials and struggles without any support, without success, without use.

Your battlefield must be filled quickly with moods that know no breaks, with the harmony between what you say, what you think and what you do, so that his pride does not suffer, or if he suffers, he suffers without it leaving traces in one direction or another. And if man's life is hard because of want, it is because the whole battlefield on which he stands is crushed by the soul's unwillingness to unite with faith and to move on to perfection, to salvation, to new horizons and new accomplishments.

Here is the content of a high teaching about life: analyze your shortcomings in terms of the success you hope to achieve, so that you rise above what you think you are, above what affects you, above what holds you captive.

And sensitivity is sometimes treated through the attitude of seeing especially the empty side of the glass, the unfavorable sides of a situation, in the perspective of a constant resemblance to a seed that suffers and dies in the ground, but from which a new plant emerges.

The small struggles you face with life are the only persistent characteristics of your character, highlighting your endurance to recognize the reality in which you must strive to distinguish things, to reveal the meanings of a world in a terrible transformation.

Sensitivity, false spirituality, is the pride of being yourself in a situation that requires you to be someone else. Always remember the infinite power of the soul that can leave behind disappointments and failures, towards finding those things that you lack and that, precisely because you lack them, give you the impetus to immerse them in existence, not in thought.

Maybe you see life as a canvas, full of bold colors, or as an endless journey, or as a potential danger, a difficult process you go through and you do not know what awaits you. Is it because you immerse yourself too much in a thought that has become accustomed to including in the perception of reality everything that serves your idealized prejudices, dogmas and images?

True spirituality is closely linked to the pride of feeling strong in any circumstance that pulls you below your limits of enduring life.

The emotions that create blockages or limits in everything you want to happen to you, that you express with difficulty in relationships with other people, are the same emotions that keep you captive in past life experiences. Even if they are considered unwanted or socially unacceptable, even if they constantly try and follow you in life, always remember that a butterfly that does not open its wings and does not fly has no purpose in the world.

A Crucible In Which Fate Throws Man is measured by the intensity of their own emotions and feelings, to which you must pay special attention if you want to adapt to the challenges and vicissitudes of life. All challenges and vicissitudes are melted into a crucible of will that you must use to harden your character, because the fate of a strong man to measure by the intensity of the emotions and feelings he faces every day.

A Deep Trace In The Artist's Life

Artistic leadership involves the ability to combine the various elements of the environment, life with facts, and movement with time, creating a holistic cinematic experience.

That moment, by which he allowed himself to be intoxicated at the time, left a deep mark on the artist's life ("the floating bridge... revealed to me for the first time the charm of this attraction that has never left me since"). It's almost like a collective rhythmic dance, which unites in a unique symphony the movement of dozens of people... And in this painting, the main thing is the rhythm, the calculation of space, of time weighed down to the second. Streams of people in ebb and flow, sometimes integrating into the clockwork of the giant collective effort, sometimes breaking away, in order to then, in another cycle of the process, rigorously established, reintegrate into the general movement.

The strict division of time and space, the alternation of the movements of the different tributaries of the mass; nature and people merged into one whole. Hell yes! - isn't this the basis of the fusion of different objects of the environment with people, of life with facts, of movement with time? And in the film, as a whole, and in the joining of its fragments (of montage sequences), and in that specific engineering of space and time that puts in front of the lens extremely complex mise-en-scenes of mass episodes or the gestures of the characters, combining the singular action with the action general, combining the action with the calculated time, the intensity of the action with the reserved space, the gesture with the word, combining the idea with the sensory image, the ideational conclusion with the emotional shock. Therefore, the first school where Eisenstein learned the art of editing was the officers' school.

Merging people with nature and integrating individual actions into a collective flow is the essence of a well-orchestrated kingship capable of creating an impactful cinematic image.

"Systems of narrative extension are in the reference plane of the film, they actually represent the turning points of the story. Sometimes a central sequence appears in the viewer's visual field and several parallel sequences located symmetrically to the one mentioned, but with increasingly subtle emotional intensities. They have the role of amplifying and shading the main message. Secondary sequences are surrounded by thematic nuances. For this reason, the interpretation of the film consists in determining the number of scenes and the fraction of inter-relationships with which the two narrative systems are intertwined, that is, the emotional distance between the two main narrative threads is determined, so as to create an optimal tension.

As a result, the difference between the two narrative perspectives is equal to the number of sequences amplified by their visual and aural impact, determined by the contrast and rhythm of the montage. Complex narratives can be built through this montage method, but the difference between the two narrative threads must not be too great to maintain that coherence of the overall narrative. So, the general structure of the film must be conceived in advance with a less precise technique (for example, by writing the script), a fact that denotes a meticulous planning of the entire creative process.

Creative leadership manifests itself in the ability to make every gesture and every movement an integral part of the overall narrative, combining individual complexity with collective intensity.

Here we consider Eisenstein's inter-differential comparator for calibrating film sequences in the socio-historical context, very important for a faithful reconstruction of the era. For the very precise realization of the montage, Eisenstein used an editing rig based on the scheme proposed by his experience in engineering and art many years before. This approach allowed him to create a 'unique symphony' of movement, where rhythm, calculation of space and time were weighed down to the second.

The ebb and flow of images integrates, sometimes in the clockwork of the collective effort, sometimes breaking away from the general rhythm, so that then, in another cycle of the narrative process, rigorously established, it reintegrates into the general movement of the film. This specific engineering of space and time puts before the lens highly complex mise-en-scenes, combining singular action with general action, gesture with word, idea with sensory image, and ideational conclusion with emotional shock.

The bottom line is that Eisenstein's cinematic technique represents a unique synthesis between scientific rigor and artistic sensibility, creating a complex and deeply emotional visual language."

The essence of artistic leadership consists in merging different elements - people, nature, time and space - in a single rhythmic movement, like a complex mechanism of visual and emotional orchestration that conveys a unitary and captivating story.

A deep mark in the artist's life is left in his conception of cinematic rhythm and harmony, because the experience left a deep mark on him, the situation revealing to him a new perspective on the fusion of visual and emotional elements. I say this because this influence is clearly reflected in his directorial style, in that he rigorously weaves together every element of the scenes as soon as he perceives their potential to create a coherent and engaging narrative.

A Delightful Gaze In Artistic Plan

The gaze from which the vast horizons of art are transparent must be fixed straight ahead, and only afterwards on yourself.

I feel that if I look at the sea long enough, I will begin to understand art more and more. This impression is left to me by the waves of the horizon, alternating with a calm that opens a wide field of memory. And, yes. The sea often speaks to me, knowing that only an artist can measure a masterpiece with his eyes before recognizing it as "a territory difficult to penetrate".

And if I felt terribly urged to contemplate the vastness of the sea, with its smaller or larger waves, on the immeasurable scale of time, perhaps I would be able to understand the intimate essence of nature. Or the fertile spring from which I feed my thoughts, thanks to the absolute freedom to understand a language of tempting depths, seems enchanted, shaken, moved by the maturity of a work of nature, as quiet as it is stormy, whose blessing passes as a perfect reflex of the whole.

So, let us look at the sea with nobility, but not before we understand its waves, the surface part, and its shells, but especially the deep part of a whole that does not reveal its identity to anyone (as it is in its absolute, at the base representation of infinity in the finite). And if I keep looking at it, trying more imaginatively to probe its depths, it is because I myself am governed by an absolute necessity: to build an art as a whole, both in its real and ideal hypostasis.

Leadership: Can you start the artistic mechanism of self-affirmation in the plane of a unique creation, so that the message you highlight includes the ideal hypostasis of a vast expanse that encompasses the space between the foreground and the horizon?

Perhaps we are more interested in what the gaze involves in expressing the thoughts and feelings that the artist experiences. Therefore, it is not necessary to distinguish in the foreground of a painting the luminous torch of the artist's personality, but rather we must notice that expression of his momentary feelings, as a reaction to what he saw with admiration.

Let's say that an artist preaches ideality trying to imitate what has already been created, but he does so by concretely intuiting the context of a whole movement, in an Enlightenment manner, as the addition of spirit that dwells in the essential and internal identity of all things. Just as the romantic hero who knows the price of the umbrella only when he loses it, so the artist begins to imitate the model of nature and its effects only when he is no longer conditioned by the actuality of permanent emotional experience in the triumph of the spirit manifested in the artistic message.

To put it simply. To build art means to determine in the fictional or real universe the position of a work of nature seen as a simple reflection of my identity, as a direct self-affirmation. And if my thoughts had been conditioned by something different from my own depth, then the sea would have been an individual entity that does not have an illusory reality, but a tangible reality: the infinite assertion of self.

On this line of self-affirmation in art, through a movement of the gaze from far to near, I think that the point of view of the German philosopher F.W.J. Schelling has also taken root:

"How many were there that were not touched by the noble impression produced by a beautiful architecture, without being tempted to explore the foundations of the harmony that delighted them ! How many have not been rooted in a poem or a valuable dramatic work and have not been moved by it, enchanted, shaken, without ever trying to understand by what means the artist manages to control the feeling, to purify their soul, to stir up their deep intimacy – without thinking of changing this totally passive pleasure, and thus devoid of nobility, into the far superior delight produced by active contemplation and the reconstruction of the work of art with the intellect and the gaze that carefully steps towards somewhere far away, just to bring closer something surprising ! "

The expression of self-affirmation in art comes as a confirmation of the delight caused by the feeling of a complete fusion with nature, when what inspires you to creation is that "something" that makes you feel as if you were living in a painting.

A Delightful Gaze In Artistic Plan that makes me feel different, much more fulfilled, as in a painting whose subject is a spread full of the unpredictable, of unique feelings and experiences, is given precisely by the natural and irresistible power of the arbitrary. Everything I see from afar or up close is an expression of my thinking, a synchronous modulation of my own existence, a transformation of my being.

A Different Form Of Leadership

On February 20, 2020

Immerse yourself in the experience of evaluating yourself in accordance with the fulfillment of the Creator condition, so as to express the empirical accuracy of a hyperbola: "I am more vast than the universe".

Freddie Mercury has found a way to move inward, to build, to be filled with truths: by magic. This mystical and uplifting construction, in the kingdom of perfection where nothing is left to chance, this source of projection of the invisible into reality, is the place where the sacred condition of the genius Creator is received.

We are therefore in front of an artist for whom faith and magic become a puzzle of perspectives, a whole movement through the very symbolic resolution that can be processed by the most alive, energizing, high frequency music, which expresses the good and the beautiful. He would often say, "It's a kind of magic", as if he planned who knows what type of meeting with an almighty god who wants to be the absolute criterion of revolutionary art, channeling in the direction of elaborating the concept of "an identity captured in images".

This concept seems to be perceived as a stand-alone category in favor of an independent Ego, who controls everything.

I think magic is the artistic discourse of an Ego who tirelessly aspires to a certainty of the order of visual consistency, generating a new understanding of the dimension of an artistic personality exposed to strong light in an obscure room. We must also take into account the effect of the evolution of the hazard accompanied by a code called "There can be only one", as a parameter of a spiritual idea that is constantly updated.

Leadership: Can you formulate in terms of the "High" saying the meaning of an artistic image that transmits a strong emotion, to reveal the spiritualization of an experience of alterity?

Basically, Freddie Mercury authorizes and traverses all the works of magic, witchcraft and enchantment, offers all his breath, all the emotions of his disappearance in the projection of a reality of the miracle of being Himself divine.

Such an exceptional handler of the High saying seems to tell the truth about a terrible secret through the eyes of a well-oriented artistic conscience in discerning objects, conferring another power, forming a smashing whole with his own mirror image in photography, in painting, in words, in the physical aspect, in the magic crystal color game, all included in a very vast astral-etheric plane.

The image of "everything that cannot be touched", leaves to understanding the dynamic sound of his music. The magic it's a challenging the doors of time, waiting for the miracle to be rediscovered among the things of a beautifully poetized world, or among the sounds of penetrating and rhythmic music, in the setting of a theater scene that frequently changes its mood. The art of his performance is not ephemeral, like many others, because the art of refined sounds can be added, amplified by electronic means, so an art defined by a symbolic core of sensitive dreaming: "My imagination is a divine sound".

The artificial part of the artist's world is made so as to correspond to the need to unite the subject with the object, the phenomenon with the name, consciousness and reality, in a scientific cubism that imposes on the image of the divine nature certain abstract lines of force, handled with dexterity: strong sensations, freedom, power, incendiary atmosphere. Isn't it incredible?

Through this new perspective, the artist must be presented as an essentially supernatural being, as a Messiah forced to build the "Third Temple of artistic experiences" in which the Ego goes out, but not for all, because it remains a bright and attractive light in the dark. The High saying takes place here through a metaphysical thrill: "My fundamental way of being through a third party of the order of the scenic creation, is the fundamental way of the universe to exist eternally".

Leadership: Is what you think of yourself the world of new knowledge, as it relates to an artist who says "Here's what I think" in a setting where art reacts in response to an Alter-Ego?

What we know about a world in the service of art, like a complex concept that can only be defined within a scenic magic, is not the world itself as it is in its relation to reality. Rather, it is the result of its attainment with the subjective composition of a universal archetype of the free spirit, with its dynamic energy, ubiquitous in manifesting the wishes and visions of "mimesis". In a sense, his feelings and moods are in direct relation to the ability to turn ideas into facts.

Whoever tries to enter the magician's stage play, in his mind so entangled, probably feeling it as a diamond that cuts your breath, shining through a multitude of reflections, shadows, positions, mirror effects, will automatically integrate in this excerpt from John Fowles' novel:

"He exhibited traits akin to a wild, really wild animal, always on the lookout, which the slightest attempt to tame it had it on the run. He had created a small territory around himself, surrounded by traps and invisible barriers, within which he advanced or withdrew; he behaved and evolved at will. But I felt that beyond this defense system there is also a region without any restrictions, where, one day, everything will be allowed to me..."

The reality of the artist designated by the mystical word lasthgurassir(you do not know what is around), proven only by the resemblance to a conception of hyperbolic transcendence, understood as absolute otherness, is so complex that it can only be known through the relation of "white to black". The magic itself, and so promising in all, can be defined in an art without borders, in front of an "I myself" conceived by personality transfer, through a connection with the Divine Universe at another level, up to the status of Alter-Ego.

The Alter-Ego of an artist is that silent, insignificant image of the power that gives freedom, by which its unique values are neither hidden, nor presented as having the status of pages of recommendations in which anyone can add their opinion.

A Different Form Of Leadership is obtained by integrating the creative act into a mystical image, specific to a painting painted in a surrealist style, in whose foreground one distinguishes that "I myself" idealized by a remarkable persistence at the level of hyperbole: "I am more vast than the universe."

A Director Is Obliged To Defend The Culture

On January 04, 2017

Studying and understanding previous contributions to the heritage of art prepares us to express the "new word" of life.

At the same time, the work for the film "Ivan" continues. In these monstrous days of the war, director Sergei Eisenstein takes into account the armed struggle against fascism, being forced to defend culture. He is pained by every new barbarity: the destruction of the incomparable medieval frescoes in Pskov and Novgorod, the palaces and artesian fountains of the 18th century in Leningrad, the cathedrals near Moscow, the hydroelectric plant on the Dnieper... He is terribly hurt by the sacrifice of human lives that are lost facing the German plague.

But at the same time, he thinks from the beginning about the days after the war, about the tomorrow of culture and art that he too is called to ensure by making every sacrifice to hasten its arrival and being ready armed to the teeth with the experience of the past for that the torches in our hands, in the hands of those who are waiting for the light, be clean and ready for that moment when our art will have to express the new word of life.

However, he considers his main task to be the defense and preservation of culture. In the same August he finishes his study of El Greco, writes an English version of the study of Griffith and the history of montage in the various arts and also prepares an overview of the foreground idea throughout the history of the arts.

Leadership: How can you take the essence of your soul and give it to the world through a masterpiece, despite the shift of images from "beautiful" to "ugly" and the decrease in importance of creative work?

The worldwide effect of the destruction of art is the clear shift of some images from the stage of "beautiful" to the stage of "ugly", a fact that decreases the importance of creative work. Only the screenings preserve (and will preserve in the immediate future) a good part of the creations, and the photo reproduction of the images for the next generations, or the books that reproduce the truth of the times, so that the occasional beneficiaries of art assimilate more of the aspects of the old and new world.

The technical systems for making films, recording, processing, storing, transmitting and playing images in clear, due to the complexity of the technology and the particularly large volume of information storage, evolved somewhat more slowly during Eisenstein's time than today. Nevertheless, the evolution achieved and the trends observed established very clearly the way of image processing in order to train the next generation of artists, taking over the traditional directorial responsibilities. For this reason, we must understand the pain of a director: not being able to include in one shot all the images that will make history, even after the reality will be grim.

Leadership: How does your work reflect your deep commitment to culture, and how can you integrate that commitment into your own work so that it conveys an authentic and powerful message?

During these "monstrous" days of the war, Eisenstein considered essential not only the armed struggle, but also the defense of the cultural treasure, which the war tended to destroy. A filmmaker's work always focuses on saving and preserving heritage elements - medieval frescoes, palaces, cathedrals, even technical infrastructure such as hydroelectric plants. This reflects his deep commitment to "culture and art" and a desire to ensure that the "torches" of knowledge and inspiration are kept clean to light the days after conflict.

This commitment is visible not only in his immediate actions, but also in his long-term work, preparing studies on significant figures such as El Greco and Griffith, or on significant techniques in art, such as the history of montage. Thus, Eisenstein not only protects the existing cultural heritage, but also contributes to the continuous development of the artistic discourse.

Therefore, this "new word of life" could be interpreted as a desire to bring a new and deeper perspective on the human condition, through art. During the war, Eisenstein felt the need to protect the culture and express the truth about the horrors he witnessed. At the same time, he placed his hopes in the possibility that, after the war, art and culture could express a better, fairer, more just and humane world.

In this sense, the "new word of life" could symbolize a change in the way people relate to art and culture, and how they can contribute to the moral and spiritual reconstruction of society after the war. Art should become a powerful tool for promoting peace, justice and progress, thus reflecting the values and aspirations of a new era.

To become a true artist you have to integrate in your creation significant techniques in art, such as the history of montage, to express the "new word of life" despite the realities of the times.

No one knows what goes on in the soul of a director, except for those artists who have faced the problems of creative work during times of crisis. An artist must maintain his creativity and follow his vision even in difficult moments, ignoring the surrounding obstacles.

A Doctoral Thesis Does Not Shine Like A Star In The Sky

On February 18, 2023

Rise yourself to the height of a priceless masterpiece, in a way analogous to the stars that light up and shine only in the heavens.

Too many PhDs, and too many ignorant people. The more degrees and certifications you collect, the more you move away from the path of Big Science, just like the law of physics dictates: when you push a system, it moves away from you. On the basis of this consideration, I can conclude that the effort put into the realization of a doctoral thesis, the content of which is not intuited and well captured based on experimental facts, is not equivalent to a system that interacts material-energetic with its external environment.

In fact, a doctoral thesis should be a version of a "major invention", a kind of perpetuum mobile capable of providing science with continuous regeneration, a communication about an extraordinary discovery that leads to the construction of a new perspective of thought and action. It must be the crowning of an experience that confirms, through facts, that professional training was and is a continuous concern.

But in most cases, people "take inspiration" far too much from other specialist works, instead of using their own mind, in totality, to create something formidable from their own experience. Things are completely different in the case of an amazing discovery that can take a place of honor among the great creations of humanity, translated into a series of testimonies brought in support of one's own experience, or by resorting to an interpretation of one's own vision on a certain theme.

The tension of simultaneity between creation and the creative Self, caused by the meaning of a different organization of ideas, modifies the syntax of things, the me-thing relationship and the name-thing relationship. Or the doctoral thesis must not become a linguistic turn, a rupture of the simultaneity between language and knowledge, an insufficient or inadequate supply of information, but rather it must constitute an abstention from any taking over of the ideas of others, because in any creation of great future only the Original matters.

Leadership: Are you trying to increase your capacity for realistic self-evaluation of your own person, through an unbiased reflection on a knowledge experience that does not achieve the result you thought?

As a rule, the individual who follows only the abstract general is enlivened by the tendency of orientation towards other ways of thinking, different from his own, his attention being concentrated around a result that most often avoids the action of the laws of Creation. Remember these laws:

Being a perfect creator requires an effort hard to endure, like a terrible cold that eats your bones, enters your organs through every particle of skin left free and consumes all your energy. It is a hardship that only those with real spiritual potential can transform into strength, a long road that only marathon runners who do not finish their race at the finish line travel.

The idea of an extension from a primordial singularity to the plurality of a being that belonged to you in an indefinite time, can be merged in the imprint of an act of creation that does not only belong to the material plane, but to the spiritual one.

He who seeks to learn the secrets of science, he who wants to gaze upon the wide and limitless horizon that a single grain of sand opens, he who wants to turn lead into gold, he who seeks a passage to eternal life, he will undoubtedly must live the story of a Robinson Crusoe, withdrawn as far from the world as possible.

When you are alone with your mind, all the universal energy is focused at the point where you enter the state of mind where you feel yourself shining. When you retreat away from the world, only then do you enter the story of a unique discovery, because you choose to turn to yourself, to listen to yourself, to know yourself, to discover your true essence, and thus you begin to see better what the voice of intuition tells you. Someone said it well:

"When you retreat into your own shell, you will find the peace necessary to discover the answers that are beneficial to you. On the other hand, however, the blows of fate can quite easily cause you to retreat into your own shell, cutting off your creative momentum. Therefore, you must be strong and endure the time that God gives you so that you can chisel yourself with talent and perseverance."

And how many have read "The Philosopher's Stone" written by Marguerite Yourcenar? How many have heard the voice of the alchemist crying in the wilderness? How many have read "The Island of Doctor Moreau", how many have lived the secluded life of the researcher and scientist who almost equaled God? And how many understood the brilliant mind of the engineer "Robur the Conqueror" who, alone with his spatial calculations, overcame the domination of nature and became its master thanks to his ancient invention?

The story of each of them is, in fact, the story of a solitary but evolved being, from another time, from another place, from another passage of the book: "Have you never dreamed of another world?" All of these are one and the same being, endowed with real greatness, but captured in different poses. It is not for nothing that the theory of immortality (living in a time parallel to destiny) claims that any evolved being comes only from another evolved being that gave birth to it in another time and another place.

Leadership: Can you find a way to a higher perception of an inner reality springing from your belonging to a divine world, through a celestial ascension that cannot be counterbalanced by another power?

The one who has mastered the secrets of the Great Science does not need any diploma or any certificate to prove ahora y siempre that he belongs to the divine totality, an entity that claims true facts often transposed into the supernatural. Talent and perseverance are the only keys that open the chest of great treasures in the constellation of glory. And they can only be found by experiencing the version of a story so many centuries old.

Nearly a millennium and a half ago, a Robinson Crusoe retreated deep into solitude, diligently studying medicine, chemistry, and astronomy. All the doctors in every part of the world have heard of Avicenna (Abū 'Alī al-Husayn) even today, but no one hears of them over time, just as no building is preserved from previous eras. Rarely is there a person who can take responsibility for the entire divine plan.

The one from distant times remains immortal, as an emblem of the divine grace given by God himself, and most of the descendants are only transients – some shine for a moment, then disappear forever. For millions of years, the brightest stars have remained in their place, in the same formula, and even if from time to time a shooting star appears, shining through the sky for a moment, it does not stand next to the Morning Star nor is it an extension of the last axis of the Great Chariot.

If only one man could be found who would rise to the heights of heaven and eternity, and for him this world would be saved. Well, such a man, determined to fulfill the will of God, will express his belonging to the divine spirituality through a light emission from within, like the stars.

Caught in the movement of the times, the spiritual man trusts in the movement of the spirit of the world, in that posterity for which authenticity is not lost, realizing the truth that Ernest Renan said:

"If you want to be of any use in this world, you must sacrifice yourself, that is, give up the fleeting joys of the world in order to give great works to mankind."

A Doctoral Thesis Does Not Shine Like A Star In The Sky, but the birth of a gigantic star from a neighboring galaxy, facilitating the access to the discovery of a new world, can be the truly important subject that would value a doctoral thesis. Only the magnitude of such a subject could underline the importance of a doctoral thesis.

All that is spiritual is contained in star energy. And the sun, the place where the forces of the universe unite, transporting subtle energy from one place to another, governs the soul of the world. But no one seeks to shine like a star when they write their doctoral thesis, through a complete devotion to the spiritual side. Even the idea of a big bang can be easily merged into the imprint of an act of creation.

When you put your mind to work you must function as a result of the convergence of subtle energy. Therefore, seek to express yourself in the way the sun warms the planet, to take its heat as a soul rebirth, and as it is a place of unity, containing many energy frequencies that combine, from here you can control your reality. Don't forget that a bright light source can be found within you right now, according to a surprising discovery.

And what I have just now written with my hand, and which animates a pure heart, this truth you will not find in any doctoral work. I hope it's like a beacon in the night, somewhere in the sky...

A Dull Leadership

On February 20, 2011

Avoid getting lost in the illusion of a reality which doesn't meet the expectations of others.

I reached a stunning conclusion based on facts. Namely that, today, anyone knows leadership. Anyone can be invited to a conference to express their views, their own vision and philosophy concerning leadership. You don't need to have a sound knowledge of leadership in order to support a presentation, but a drop of last minute inspiration and the fortune to be invited to a conference.

The room was shrouded in cold silence, that uncomplaining silence that the spectators seized by disappointment and the feeling that they were misled. They surely told to themselves that "there's nothing more to ask of him", because the speaker delivering the lecture, considered to be an expert in leadership, was constantly juggling with words, ideas and interpretations, trying with a lot of afflatus and enthusiasm to point some elements concerning the impact of leadership on modern society – just as a football player juggles with the ball, then passes it on.

I find admirable the speaker's effort to expose his views. But the meaning he attributed to leadership was not at all one coated with strong values, it didn't hide surprising things, it didn't meet the public's requirements and expectations. He failed to give his presentation that special outline of a well-done work, which only professionals manage to convey. It's no wonder that the public's impression was that of a barren wilderness.

Leadership: Does the undertakings of giving people your view of things make it easier to assimilate defined impact indicators in line with their potential to exploit your potential to the fullest?

It was a matter of consistency: what remains fixed in people's minds and what didn't.

If he were really an expert, then the speaker would have amazed the audience with innovation and the consistency of his ideas, just as a painter stuns eyes through expressiveness and plasticity. And, as a painter manages to charge his creation with deep feelings and meanings, the speaker of the lecture should have charged his presentation with so much "spell", as to arouse in the public a boundless thirst for knowledge, wakening their feelings and mood.

The lack of perspective, consistency and continuity in ideas were some of the things that inconvenienced those present in the hall. The night seemed to wrap around them. A feeling of discontinuance reigned everywhere, the vast silence in every corner of the room kept the appearance that the speaker is carefully listened to. He passed from one idea to another, without making any connections between them, without keeping a certain flow of the discourse, without giving anyone the opportunity to better focus on a certain idea. Because when you say a thousand unrelated things, without a logical connection between them, people just listen, but they don't understand you.

Impact indicators that trigger a series of expectations for others are measured through the characterization you make to your transformation produced during your own driving experience.

Indicators such as: Energy invested in a form of gain or popularity. Income and its ability to ensure adequate satisfaction of all individual needs. Your volume of obligations with positive social impact. The risk assumed for freedom of expression. Self-satisfaction in a living context where the rules of an art or artistic stream dominate. The strong feeling of optimism that you give yourself at the risk of your own banalization.

Leadership: Do you allow yourself to focus on sharing a particular perceptual experience that is not always relevant in the context of an evolution law that changes the world view or a particular field of activity?

A simple Google search confirmed my suspicion. Well, the speaker of that presentation really had a long experience in employment – the ace up his sleeve. The problem was that he didn't have an important position in leadership, he didn't publish throughout his career a single article concerning leadership, he didn't have even a book written about leadership. Nothing tangible that could confirm his experience or expertise in leadership.

No wonder that his presentation was a total failure, summarized in some fantastic ideas, as, I quote: "For me, leadership means to be happy, to be with my family, to watch the news on TV in order to be informed, and to help my work fellows" – ideas correlated in the strangest possible way with leadership.

Let's be honest and admit. You don't have to own any related experience or leadership knowledge in order to say such "extraordinary" things. It's no wonder that more and more individuals get to teach, to issue numerous judgments and provide many opinions about leadership. It is worse that they always fail to write anything about what they know.

True experts express their leadership in the form of laws or principles.

A thing must be very well understood. The mere fact that someone has a long experience doesn't mean that he has leadership skills and knowledge. That's a clear thing.

A true professional has hundreds of articles and dozens of books written on the subject. How does he succeed? Well, he has solid knowledge. You have the possibility to get an idea about what he knows and whether it's worth-while going to one of his lectures by simply accessing his personal blog. If you don't like the themes that he deals there, you're not going to like his presentations either, rest assured.

And if you don't form an idea of what he knows, if the man didn't write a blog, articles, books, etc, will you adventure yourself to pull out of your pocket tens or even hundreds of euros to listen to him at a conference? Someone passed a good remark on the Web: "A bunch of experts spring up like mushrooms after the rain..." Take note of it.

Your value, as a leader, issues from the power of your influence which, in turn, follows from the principles that you've acquired over time. And these principles, in turn, reflect the level of your leadership. The more you know about leadership, the more it's likely to make a more energetic and inspiring presentation. On the other hand, the less knowledge you have, the more your presentation will be dull, lacking that spark able to ignite the flame of enthusiasm in people's hearts.

Leadership is the value given to one's own person in the presentation that you make on the correct reflection of reality that has endowed you with special skills.

A Dull Leadership designs that no quality-oriented approach, too little creative or poorly developed, that some leaders focus on in their attempts to relate to people's expectations and needs. It designates the ineffectiveness of their set of knowledge, which constitutes the essence of their leadership.

People judge you by what you are and what you know, by the way you express your points of view concerning the way you understand and approach leadership. You must reflect more on your point of view regarding the quality of your leadership before you advertise it. And avoid getting lost in the illusion of a reality that doesn't meet the expectations of others.

A Far Away That Can Become Closer

On April 18, 2016

Learn to distinguish between what you are given to take part in and what you receive, in order to obtain a different perspective on your journey and evolution.

I would toy with the idea of slipping into an unexpected part of my superior dimension, to permanently find myself in the healthy dynamism of a journey whose object was my very passion for leadership. It was as if I had to meet some lost parts of myself, shapes taken up by the truths of dangerous ideas, in the heart of a reality that surpasses any expectation through the force that orders the infinite movement of the world.

It was only a faith that surpassed inner experience, not daring to challenge it in any way, accompanying the anticipation of a "far away" that looked quite convincing, from the part of a proof that I existed through the integrating presence of a troubled consciousness in constant search for answers which are now being confessed. Eternity suddenly became but a moment, and I had changed into a meaning of it, remained the same until the establishment of the hazard.

But before developing the symptoms associated with a new beginning of the world, I had to carry with me, inexorably, the inferno of a dead end, glimpsed through the clarifying lens of a knowing intellect, different from any other production of perceptions of reality in constant change. Which I considered needful following life experiences, in which the good quantitively surpassed the evil.

Leadership: Do you contribute to the evaluation of your own functionality from the point of view of thinking that actually gets involved in the event of revealing a new sense of existentiality, of discovering the world of a protagonist facing the consequences of a rapprochement of the marks of an unchangeable identity?

Leadership was like a desert with very few oases, but endlessly long, in which it had lost the hope of finding a point in the high plane of a reason that was believed to be almighty. At all times I was surrounded by a mysterious process called a tangle, a picture of a path that progressively expanded towards the course of a spin around the concept of "literary work".

Minutus Lausus Manilianus, member of the Senate of Rome, encouraged Flavius Vespasian, after he was crowned emperor in a period of political instability (civil war) and economic crisis:

- You were chosen by the gods, Flavius, and without a doubt, you will be a good emperor. Remember that father who wished for his son to learn to play the flute and sent him to the less talented teacher. When everyone was surprised by his choice, he said: "This way, he will learn how not to play". You have acted the same, you have followed from a distance so many emperors deprived of endowments, that you now know surely what you must not do.

When the literary work completely absorbs the expression of thought that strives to reveal everything a priori, maintaining its symbolic transparency, openness to otherness, then we are talking about the authentic competence to project yourself on the plane of a metaphysical reality. A new sense of existentialism becomes the reason to value yourself and the opportunity to reconcile yourself with the protagonist's position to face the consequences of a near-accentuated rapprochement of an inalienable identity.

Leadership: Do you accompany the convincing anticipation of a "far away", from the part of a proof that you exist through the integrating presence of a consciousness in constant search for answers?

In order for the resulting force of your becoming to not be null, you must become a designer of events in whose center are the details of a previous experience. To distinguish between what you have experienced and what you are experiencing in the present, finding satisfaction in determining what you must know, what skills you must learn in order to make clear your purpose in the world, is a process of qualitative development, of adding new knowledge to old.

For your becoming to correspond to the image of leadership, depending on the anticipation represented by any projection of yourself into the future, being someone other than you were initially, you must discover yourself from a different perspective of dealing with self-experience, in a broader context. It must be controlled akin to a dangerous idea that must not circulate in the world, but one that must still be shown in order to prove its disarming in the face of fatality.

Imagine a city that has suffered great loses, such as Rome, burned to the ground by Nero, people starved by fighting for every house, for every piece of bread, and the fire and terror continues to spread.

This experience, mixing in a general brawl of denials and dreams, battles and helplessness, from the part of a world hurt by so many attempts and disappointments, can provide you with a variety of context of the teachings from what you do not like, from what does not help you and has no place in your story.

Leadership: What is the detail that defines the uniqueness of your relationship between what you feel you couldn't control and what is happening to you at this very moment?

Learn to distinguish between what is given for you to take part in and what you receive, in order to obtain a different perspective of your own reality, of your own journey and development. The previous experience can facilitate your placing in a sort of mirror of reality that surpasses any expectations through the force that orders the infinite movement of the world. To receive means to take over only the teachings of those chapters covered in the story of the world, necessary for your development.

It's not just about not remaining the slave of a solitary interiority, unable to strengthen your beliefs, or put them into practice. But rather the refusal of seeing yourself as a mere accident of a Carpe Diem that has no sort of availability over the intention of improving the "whole" of a great destiny.

Only the superficial man wants to reach a form of absolute that will give a deeper meaning to life, without entrusting the aspirations of that version of the self that shows itself quite interested to understand, to use the world and live in it, through that maneuver of highlighting that detail that colors the course of his development.

What is the detail that defines the uniqueness of your relationship between what you feel you couldn't control and what is happening to you at this very moment?

In the case of emperor Flavius Vespasian, that detail was the way in which he related to events, even when they were ambiguous, being accompanied by the convincing anticipation of a "far away" that became closer, beneficial to the revelation of a new facet of reality in which he was about to occupy the central place.

Leadership, as an expression of literary creation, is the central place you occupy within a reality different from anything you know about yourself, which becomes unpredictable as you become the protagonist of a true story started long ago by someone else.

A Far Away That Can Become Closer is what you expect to happen to you, decided by the Ego that overloads your mind with a myriad of questions whose answer, for many of them, is revealed only by maturity and life experience.

A First Link In A Chain

Master the art of transforming diversity into unity, to better balance your entire creation.

"The Mexican" made a lot of buzz in its time. The entirety of Moscow's theater world talked about the young director's debut play. Its novelty even more apparent today. Eisenstein attacked the very foundations of theater aesthetics in this way. The play supported two emotional and simultaneous shocks, but clearly differentiated: it participated emotionally and directly to the action and, at the same time, the emotion was conveyed to the other characters on the stage which in turn were participants to the same action.

*Through its ubiquity, the play was destroying the organic unity of a theatrical performance and at the same time, foreshadowed a cinematic manner. The audience was witness to a sort of early form of montage. The director later remarked that the very act of bringing action to the stage was an element of cinema, unlike the specifically theatrical element which represents the reaction to an event. Therefore, "The Mexican", in Eisenstein's creation, is a first link in a chain.

Leadership: Does your science have a ZOOM of the access perspectives to a new type of professional experience which puts in the foreground the recourse to the organic unit of a phenomenon of "participation in the same action"?

One who is pervaded by a certain truth and understands it in all its clarity, can at any time distance themselves from the area of general conclusions of science offered by the novelty in a field. But especially of the science that doesn't have a "zoom" of the access perspectives to a new type of professional experience, to a new level of understanding, to a new instrument of control over the promotion of certain variants of constructing a creation, through the combinations result from the destruction of the organic unity of a whole complex of concepts, ideas and principles.

And this truth, taken more as a dialogue partner who thoroughly knows its subject, aims not only at the way in which the creator interacts in a single scenario of using his science, but rather the way in which he treats the durable causes of the conflicts between the different approaches and directions of progress.

Zoom is a trade-off between the need to bring out a deep sensitivity and the need to convey the emotion felt in the face of an exceptional fact played out in a short time. It allows access to a type of professional experience that emphasizes the recourse to the organic unit of a phenomenon of "participation in the same action", by the fact that the subject, the frame, the decoration, each gesture of the characters and their filming mode, become one with the chain of events that the director puts on stage.

Leadership: Can your creative project start without an assessment of science, only by reducing the dose of conformity in the process of extending the tendencies to highlight the experience of forming the "New Man" consciousness?

An attempt to instill scientific creation with a shred of something that defines you, introducing new connecting pieces where a certain advantage needs to be created, attacking the foundations of the old structures of production and conception of models of good practice can lead to rejection from others. But it can also mean a major advantage for finding new means of multiplying forms of knowledge and using them in an environment where differences of mentality do not lead to tensions.

The appeal to the ideal of creation is the support on which leadership is built upon, not only as a domain of pure thought, but one of thinking permanently applied in practice and continually reinforced by the results obtained in innovative ways. The New Man is the creation of a reconstruction of events that paradoxically increase in intensity with the development of consciousness of a transcendent reality, which implies a certain symbolism in the way of perceiving reality.

No leader-creator strictly complies to the tradition rigors imposed by society or the scientific environment, or by a regime that preaches "the new man". Therefore, the project of creation may proceed without an initial assessment of science and without assessing conformity to canons. But the presentation should have a positive impact on others.

The main leadership approach characteristic of the directorial vision has as a main objective the bringing on the stage of the propulsive action derived from the reality of the ordinary people put in extraordinary situations, with the effect of adapting their reaction to the events that change the face of the world.

A First Link In A Chain emphasizes that first step towards a unity in diversity, which by respecting the basic principles, clothes leadership in an attractive form of presentation, with a positive impact on others, making it worthy of being appreciated.

A First Wave That Gradually Withdraws

On March 30, 2014

Extend the available fund of your being, without settling with mastering a narrow corner of the nature of that which is infallible.

The time had come for the absurd to settle with mastering a narrow corner of the nature of that which is infallible, increasing the income of your causative thoughts imaginarily spawned, which did not spring from the void, but rather from the instructive impulses that live gave me. A randomly found message in a bottle, floating on the waters of destiny had transformed abnormally into an indefinitely extended hesitation when facing a crossroads.

For the operation of such a self-agreement, alone in the struggle with suffering or happiness, sometimes in lies and other times in truth, alone between these two resistant coils that represented mutual inductance, it was important that their report, called yield, always remained unified. The ineffable is what I was trying to represent on the background of a reality that crumbled every time I tried to access a new dominant line of the possible future seen from the perspective of understanding life.

An authentic leader satisfies his native need to make judgments about misunderstood phenomena in order to decipher life's ongoing messages.

Not that there was anything wrong with me, gradually contributing to the formation of a dense core of concentrated energy around a palette of expressive and vibrant hues. Not because I had penetrated into the friendly space of ideas worthy of being widespread, in which access was limited.

But because, same as a creature that extracts energetic and deep accent from its own being, I could finally properly maintain the intimate and creative alliance between spirit and matter. The ardor resulting from the responding reaction to a stimulus of high intensity, the ardor for the novelty that was to offer me food for thought.

Causally, the priority to arbitrate what was happening to me, reconfiguring combinations of state, judgments, thoughts, sounds and vibrations that were in harmony or disharmony within the nature of my own being, was but a first wave that gradually withdrew.

I had to satisfy my native need of emitting judgements on account of misunderstood phenomena, as to understand what life continuously conveyed to me.

Leadership: What qualities dispute their preeminence over the course of your development in order to obtain the victory of rediscovering yourself in a context of exposing fragments of thought generated by a reality that exists only as an assumption?

The fringes of thoughts generated by a reality that exists only as a supposition helps you better understand what is happening inside and out, helps you see things from a new perspective, and discover ideas in unpredictable places, even if you are not completely verisimilar in what you express and in what you transmit.

It's possible that the representation of your actual reality (time will show it to you) in the direction of the resultant of a system of forces that act upon your point of reference – introspection – claiming those parts of you that make it possible to understand life, to be the bearers of a meaning attributed to experience, which can motivate your convictions and openness to the new.

The quality of highlighting the existence of a certain reality, even if it is trying to force unanimously accepted borders, is like the reflection of a lesson of life: it can help you clarify a confusing situation.

Effective leadership requires the ability to arbitrate one's own experiences, extracting from one's own being the deep lessons that shape future decisions.

Leadership develops through self-understanding, by acknowledging that reality that helps you flaunt the amalgam of properties seized by life experience, with age, from the struggle with suffering or happiness (whose report must remain unified). Complacency, critical thinking, joy or sorrow, patience of abandonment, understanding, temper, habit, curiosity and so on and so forth.

Therefore, preeminence to arbitrate what happens to you, reconfiguring the combinations of states, judgments and thoughts found in harmony or disharmony within the nature of your own being, is a trait as present as the Ego. And as important as oxygen to the body, same as truth is to the system of thought.

Leadership: Can your IP be suspended through successive Pings at a distance close to the subjective manner of understanding an action or a situation?

Leadership connects only to that IP of man that life, no matter how difficulty or tumultuous, fails to suspend through successive Pings that overwhelm self-consciousness. In this case, the IP is the singular view that you form towards a reality that causes you to discover it with great enthusiasm in the context of trying to understand new aspects of life through the focus of thoughts on the inner universe and from the perspective of your experiences.

Therefore, I conclude that the solid background in leadership can only be provided by the search you experience throughout your existence, materializing itself as rediscovering yourself, by analyzing the states you face on a daily basis. This is harder than pulling gold out of the ground. It is harder than imposing yourself through an internal command. And for this you need to satisfy that native need of emitting judgments on account of misunderstood phenomena, so that you may understand what life continuously tells you.

But the lucid spirit of the man that starts off in the search of a meaning that can only be conquered by the redundancy of certain thoughts, schemes of the imaginary, of more or less mature roles or of vis-à-vis clichés of the type "Who You Are and Who You Choose to Be", is much to stretched out to be able to find place in a single stage of life.

For as in art, aesthetic attitude arises from the ability to create and perceive the beautiful, so too is your approach to accede to a higher level of evolution born from the different and always differing attention that you give to life.

Settling for mastering a narrow corner of the nature of the infallible means to relate your involvement in life to small standards, at times absurd, called normality and natural order of things.

The successive pings that overwhelm your self-awareness are given by attempts to understand yourself in the whole of your life experienced by identifying the thoughts that lead you to the emotion that animates you, which flows over a part of the world that surrounds you.

An Incipient Wave That Gradually Withdraws is the sign of a tendency of internalization conforming to aspects of life that require attention in the present and solicits a new perspective. It emphasizes the necessity of a thorough analysis of the entire background of leadership, without focusing on unimportant elements thereof.

Determining "who you are" and "who you want to be" is as essential in leadership as finding ways of valuing self-potential by extending the beautiful and the truth within you.

A Frozen Heart Scattered In Nothingness

On September 26, 2010

A leader has confidence in other people when he is well enough reflected in them.

Many years ago Mercedes fell in love with an angel. She could not deceive. She knew well the elegant man, with so gentle gestures, creative, energetic, pugnacious, he stood now, after more than 16 years, in front of her. He was an honest man, hardworking, daring, who faced many challenges, troubles and difficulties that may come to have all those riches and all that influence in society.

But Edmond Dantes, aka The Count of Monte Cristo could not remove from his mind the deep thought of revenge, could not break from him the part that deserted him and only listened to his negative side of soul. He could not change that attitude of refusal to any feeling for her. He was uncertain and afraid of losing everything he had; hatred, he did not want to retreat from a won battle, unwilling to self-destruct.

To avoid an embarrassing question, to avoid giving an answer that only the future will give him, Edmond asked Mercedes not to try any method of reconciliation:

- If you ever loved me… don't take my hate. It's all I have.

With the great sense that only have the people touched by a deep sorrow of the heart, with all possible delicacy and elegance, Mercedes, feeling her heart breaking the chest still tried to persuade Edmond to forgive her and to revive their former love:

- I don't know what dark plan lies in you Edmond. I don't know why we were forced to live one without other in all these 16 years. But God has given us a new beginning. . . Don't hit the hand He offered you. . . God is in all. Even in a kiss…

Leadership: Do you trust people only when you see in them "the flicker" that you would like them to find in you?

A new meaning you give to life is a great bet of trust that does not shake at just any task that seems to be difficult – such as making yourself indispensable and irreplaceable in the case of friendship and love.

Love has no end because love was born in that part of us that never dies. I think, this is the message of the movie "The Count of Monte Cristo" directed by Kevin Reynolds in 2002. Mercedes has softened Edmond Dante's soul full of disappointments, replaced his hate with love. She was saving him in a time when he considered himself lost forever, unable to escape from the trap of his humble past, from the trap of his soul became cold due to life's hardships.

A cold heart has been replaced by a warm one. All his feelings of frustration, struggle, disappointment, loneliness, were scattered from all his being forever. The love he carried for Mercedes drove away all his sufferings. His life took a new meaning, long days and nights of waiting have finally ended.

He found again in Mercedes his own youth, own values, all the longings, desires and pleasures, so he forgave her. He saw in her what he lacked in his entire life, he saw in her a person able to take life over again, his own accomplishment, his own being and essence. He was confident that she will ensure that coveted inner peace of any human being.

Leadership: Can the reforming of your own beliefs be done by the convergence of completely disparate events, starting from the spiritual specificity of a world that refuses to take great steps to guide your course of life?

To understand the real dimension of a revelation that can change your whole world, remember this: "An extinguished smile can be lit again when an incandescent one is positioned next to it."

God is good and always rewards the righteous who forgive and believe in love. The Count replaced hatred with love; he knew in his heart that he wants Mercedes like no longer was desired a woman by a man. Once he forgave her that feeling of emptiness and pain that penetrated deep into his soul is gone. The person, who was most dear, which dwelt in his past, issued him by the huge burden of his soul.

When the heat of leader's life is about to be quenched, he must find new motives or reasons to rekindle it, as Count did. When the heat of his life is extinguished, or is about to be quenched, it is necessary to find new other targets.

The great steps to guide your course of life can be conceived when you can interpolate between the lesson someone has to learn and the person in question, otherwise you risk taking the negative karma of that person and you get to suffer in their stead.

The convergence of completely disparate events creates a huge expectation that culminates with a strong emotion from which you must extract the "existential essence."

Conclusion: Trust, this gem rare to found is so fragile that it can disappear at any moment, especially when you, as a leader or as a simple man, were betrayed by your best friends who became the most large enemies.

In these circumstances was born, easy to understand, the revenge against all - more or less guilty or even innocent. Personal discernment is very important in these situations. Looking carefully you will notice that in some of them you have not seen in time qualities that you would like to find in you, like the ability to forgive and take everything from the beginning, at which point your frozen heart will dissipate into nothingness.

Let us never forget that "the anger in the righteous people were born on Tuesday and dies on Monday; for smarts it lasts one day (night being a good adviser) for smatterer's reigns for months and for a lifetime at crazies."

A Fund Of Greatness For Your Evolution

On April 17, 2009

Evaluate in retrospect your leadership observing the feelings of others towards you and the way they perceive you.

For Bill Parrish, CEO of Parrish Communications, there was only one world: this world. Until the moment when fate brought him out a man whose soul was taken by the Prince of Darkness, who wanted at all costs to take a trip on earth.

Everything has changed in Bill when he met Joe Black. They sat facing each other like two warriors with guns hidden, like two adversaries who hide their thoughts, in order to expose them only when they will start to attack. Bill did not know what Joe wants from him, but he felt that this had a great power.

A glance, anxious and uncertain in the direction of Joe, and waiting for what it will follow, a look which says a lot about how it was working Bill's mind at that time. For the first time, the great Bill Parrish felt a fear of something unknown, an uncertainty for himself, for his life that flowed from the thought that Death, in the person of Joe Black, it will permanently separate him from this world.

Bill felt Joe's superiority because he did not know what he thinks and seeks, and by what means can get what he wants from him. He could openly look at him, but he could not intuit his intentions. He did not know anything about Joe, or about what he could talk with him. He could not glimpse any bridge between them.

Leadership: Can you form a balanced image of self-esteem, based on the manifestations of qualities you need to demonstrate as a recognition of your superiority over others?

Have you seen the movie "Meet Joe Black (1998)"? Bill asks Joe: "Why me? Why did you choose exactly me? "

And Death replied that he could not find, as an instructor, a man more suitable than him. Bill's character traits fit His needs perfectly. He chose Bill for what he was, for the qualities of his mind, heart and his temperament, for his power to "move" things. He was a man who never saw things in black, but only in rose color, a man who had the courage to face the future. Above all, he was a man whose kindness and wisdom could not be challenged.

To determine what you purposely need to define properly your image that others have about you, you need to look objectively your good and weak parts. Bill stood up to the expectations of Joe's due to his special qualities. The way he has been approached, the way he interacted with Joe, ensuring that constructive dose of confidence in his leadership and guide potential, all this helped Bill to define clearly his own identity.

Your qualities and aptitudes are accompany you wherever, as a discrete witness to what happens in your life, to all your feelings as a key witness, which shows you if you have an open door to your personal development, an open door to a good communication and collaboration with other people.

To demonstrate your qualities as an acknowledgment of your superiority over others means to individualize your inner part, as in a wonderful panorama, so that it is not touched by the boundaries of prejudices you have about others, and others about yourself. Prejudices such as "it's awful that the plan has changed" or "things never work out".

Or to create and develop a good relationship and as closer to other people, first you have to strive to do something extraordinary, to have some achievements that would amaze all people, that would emphasize your qualities and aptitudes. People need to appreciate your virtue and wisdom, to admire you for what you feel and think, to appreciate you as a person knowing the meaning of the value at all levels.

Self-esteem is like a book: you have reached the middle of reading it and you realize that you do not like it, and the loss is greater if you abandon it than it is if you reach the last page. In the end, you can at least have the satisfaction of writing a well-documented review, but still get a single star for it.

A Fund Of Greatness For Your Evolution is the guarantee of your achievements. You can smooth over most of the imperfections, and you can create an image to inspire respect and admiration, to convey to others a sense of confidence in your potential, unless you will permanently invest in yourself, in your personal and professional development. To become a unique and valuable person you must gather resources that are constantly feeding your potential, and to use them in order to maximize your chances of being chosen as a potential partner or as a role model for others.

The way you align to the claims of others determines your self-image. The meeting with Joe, it was an opportunity for Bill to evaluate his skills and qualities in a convincing manner. The bridge through which you can win people by your side, by that you can overcome any misunderstandings and any conflicts, the bridge by that you can achieve effective communication with others, which reflects your vision and objectives, derives from your potential to be consistent both with yourself, to be congruent with your own values and beliefs - and with others, to live up to their claims, and to be congruent with their values and beliefs.

You must feel that you have leadership and guide potential and guide that people want for them. Just as some companies should improve their current strategy, and then to seek to develop a better strategy - even so, you first need to improve your personal qualities and aptitudes, and only then to try to develop relationships with other people.

Conclusion: It is said that before leaving this world, before your eyes are floating your entire life, with good and bad, with the achievements and failures, when you find out effectively everything about you. At crucial moments (not only before death), you make up the balance of your life and most of the time you find out what others think of you.

You can evaluate retrospectively the leadership, observing the feelings of others to you in crucial moments of your life, feelings resulting from how you were perceived and evaluated.

A Gesture Of Love In A Digital World

Emotional leadership consists of the ability to build "fragile bridges across chasms", recognizing that each connection created can fill the gaps between people and bring understanding where there is insecurity.

In his palm, the phone seemed to pulse with the promise of unseen connections, a fragile bridge across the gulf of silence that sometimes gaped between them. The boy's eyes, two deep lakes of hope and uncertainty, reflected in the still dark screen, as if seeking confirmation that his choice would be understood in the depth of his intent.

The box, while not bearing the seal of the latest innovation, was wrapped in layers of unspoken thoughts and whispered dreams. Every microscopic scratch on the case was a silent testament to his efforts, the hours spent calculating, saving, forgoing small pleasures to give her this piece of technology that, in his mind, was so much more than the sum of its parts.

When he held it out, his gesture was like the offering of a beating heart—vulnerable, full of emotion and quivering hope. His fingers, slightly trembling, seemed to convey a coded message through the touch of the cold metal: "I offer you not just a device, but a part of me, of my time, of my dreams."

The authenticity of a truly emotional gesture is represented by the power to give not just a result, but also a part of oneself - time, effort and dreams - so that those around you feel the personal value of the contribution and are inspired to respond with the same dedication .

In that moment of charged silence, the air between them vibrated with the intensity of unspoken emotions. It was as if the entire universe was holding its breath, waiting for her reaction, each second expanding into an eternity of possibilities.

Her smile, when it finally bloomed, was like the sunrise after a stormy night—bright, warm, and full of the promise of a new day. In her eyes, two galaxies of gratitude and affection, reflected not the make or model of the phone, but the image of the boy who had put so much thought and feeling into this gift.

When she took it in her hands, her gesture was like embracing a priceless treasure. Her fingers caressed the smooth surface with a tenderness that spoke of understanding the sacrifice behind the gift. In that touch was read a silent vow to cherish not the object itself, but the love that inspired it.

Every decision involves a piece of his identity, recognizing that your every gesture can be a bridge to mutual understanding, but also an extension of his unspoken thoughts.

The words of thanks, when they came, were like raindrops in a desert of doubt, nurturing and making the trust in their relationship blossom. Each syllable was charged with a gratitude that went beyond the material value of the gift, touching the invisible strings of their emotional connection.

In that moment, the phone became more than just a communication device. It was a symbol of their devotion, a time capsule that encapsulated their moments together and the promise of what was to come. It was tangible proof that in the digital age, genuine gestures of affection still have the power to transcend material limitations, connecting souls in a melody of love that resonates beyond technical specifications or the latest trends.

The unseen connection between two people can be created through small gestures, such as a subtle smile or a light handshake, as a coded message of wanting to connect and share a part of yourself.

A gesture of love in a digital world is reflected in every online action, considering the importance of small gestures beyond the lack of physical contact. Looking at human interaction in this way, along the lines of a goodnight message that shows concern for the other, the idea that even the smallest digital gestures have a profound impact becomes valid.

A Good Headhunter

On March 17, 2009

Identify the essence of the psychological realm of the one that evaluates you, by remaining in that space where your abilities are interrelated.

A football club recently organized a selection for the children born between the years 1996-2000. The children were tested by the principal coach, who also was a representative of the Romanian Football Federation. As a principal coach, the trainer put the kids to more difficult tests: slalom with the football ball through the stakes, juggling, dribbling and passing, shots on goal from distance, and finally the team game. Depending on the abilities and talent of each one, the coach decided who can enter or not the football club.

Many children presenting to a preliminary selection are getting excited, like before any examination, and therefore, they can commit some mistakes. On this account, it is so necessary that the coach to use his flair and intuition in order to see what lies behind appearances, to realize the hidden potential of each child.

Moreover, he must know how to place the best players in the positions that suit them best. For example, some children may be better in defense than in attack, others to be better midfielders than full-backs. A good coach will find out which are the abilities of each child, and depending on it will place them in the appropriate positions on the field. The team's success depends largely on the selection that he made among the children, and of their disposal in the team.

Leadership: Are you prepared to experience a profound encounter with yourself from the perspective of an abstract and objective spirit?

By showing off your qualities on the field in front of the coach is like being in front of an invisible being – you have to see what no one else is able to see in him, you have to perceive the unknown, namely to identify the essence of your own psychological realm, the way he judges the things, remaining in that space where your skills are interrelated. You must have the power to manifest the power of your own spirit and to dispel all his doubts about your performance and talent. You have to support your ideals of excellence and to understand his way of thinking, what the most miss to do.

A meeting with yourself is a clear demonstration of the will power and focusing of attention over those aspects of development that lead interactivity to a different level: to have the freedom to express yourself through talent, through the interest in competition, through physical and value indicators, through the reflex of orientation when running and especially through others.

When it comes to a preliminary selection, your performance is very important, but not less important is the way you are directing your focus and energy. You must add a huge meaning to your game without losing sight of the ideal player whom the coach carries in his heart. You can be extremely talented, but if you do not fit in his patterns, then you are lost from the start. He can transform himself into an invisible being for you, ans this means to show off your qualities in vain.

In other words, you have to do in such a way that the coach to be "visible", namely to have him always in your field of vision - and on your turn to be always in his attention. Keep your adequate attitude; do not ever lose hope about those situations where you are most afraid of yourself - when you feel he turns away from you.

After all, all comes down to the coach's ability to discern on you and on your ability to discern on him.

Leadership: How skillful do you prove yourself to be in counting on yourself in an area in which access is restricted?

When it comes to a preliminary selection, the stake is always given on the one who proves more skillfully in handling the ball – accordingly of the qualities that make the players so special, as well as their commitment and perseverance.

For selecting the kids, the coach has to fulfill an essential condition: he must necessarily have practical experience in the field, namely having been a football player in the past. Only a coach, who has solid professional knowledge and sporting abilities, can properly assess the skills and the level of training of the candidates - if they match or not with those required for the respective job in the team. Under no circumstances, the selector of a football team cannot have the profession of a doctor, engineer, architect, economist or physicist.

The responsibility for success or failure of an organization is falling also on the recruiter, who is required to select and train the best people in order to achieve a better result. The process of identification and recruitment of the staff is not very simple, and not everyone is able to do it well. Therefore, the recruiters who have no prior training in the field they are working, which have not gained a sufficient professional experience, will be devoid of the flair in choosing the best candidates.

An area in which access is restricted suggests the undertaking of a position of control that eliminates a priori judgment and confrontation, allowing for the application of standards of "fairness", "common-sense", and "rationality in a context of the type: "The right man in the right place."

Many times I said, and I repeat, a recruiter has to observe which are the abilities that a candidate possesses in order to meet the requirements of the job that he has to fill, what specifically makes him suitable for that job, and this cannot be achieved by studying the CV and the letter of intent, but by checking the personal and professional skills of the person.

When you hire a person, you have to start burrow deeper, to put good questions, to ask for clarification when necessary and to find solutions. Furthermore, like in football, you have to pass the candidate through several practical steps and depending on the way he copes, to place him in the most suitable position.

Leadership is a form of response to the accumulation of experience in exercising the control required by the demonstration of skills sustained through the art of rising in the eyes of others.

A Grain Of Sand In The Endless Desert Of The Worlds

On October 19, 2012

Intervene in the evolution of other people without distorting your perspectives of qualification in the grand final of the transformation process.

He was sometimes submitting his rationality towards his heartbeat, other times towards the rhythm of his breathing. The extent of the events hired him in a continuous and an unhindered internal rebellion, which occurred due to deepening the conflict, determined by the hostility of the "parallel worlds". He was heading his existence under the influence of some discriminatory entities, of some hidden enemies, and of some processes of blurring the reality and his self-confidence. Works and projections outlined under the sphere of influence of some harsh laws. Strange and confusing.

Llewelyn Moss, from "No Country for Old Men (2007)" had to make a compromise with himself, to find that map with the strong spiritual load, to which he should always report for the rest of his life. However, the tragic absurdity of living after some patterns imposed by the events of hopelessness that he felt in all its cruelty, and the need to look forward the ruthless destiny, did not go well with the hope in his future.

As a man who serves a sentence for which the law does not provide a limit, and which length is not determined once with the pronouncement of the decision, Llewelyn Moss began to feel the need for a place to retreat, to rest. A prison. With very dense bars. He was tempted to indulge himself in the state of spiritual chaos caused both by his own person, and especially by the limits imposed by the worlds that surrounded him, insupportable, like a fence of barbed wire.

Leadership: Do you know how to grasp the value of self-retrieval within a search that returns exact results as long as you do not proceed towards the exit from the limits of causality?

Llewelyn Moss was alien to the science of bringing an opportune light to life. To adapt to a world of which he will be able to serve himself at leisure, in which to judge, after equity, people and their actions. And, to serve himself of it, like a game in which everyone wins. For all that was once his life was deleted, and something else, rather burdensome, inextricably, suddenly acquired a particular vibration.

There was a thread that bound him by the destiny of the "parallel worlds" despite all the attempts of imposing towards them, or at least of deciphering their sense. First, it was the world of the ones that separated him of the dreams. Then, the world of the ones that forced him to take part in their game, caught like a fish in a sealed net, the world of the assassins. There was also the world of the people that were not involving in the course of events, of the observers. And that world guided by intellect, as opposed to another propelled by instincts. As well as a world of the dumb, with its own laws, with a well-established dimension, and which for him passed unnoticed. Worlds that evolved in parallel.

Firmly, a dose of lucidity dictated the refusal to take part in a game in which everyone were cheating - by the degradation of the weak ones will, and by the minimization of that reality which gave a positive sense to life. As if he would be in the middle of a phantasmagoria, and what he was seeing from the universe was simply the effect of the nightmare from the heavy sleep that was his life. A barren land of suffering.

Llewelyn Moss went towards decay. He passed by the side of losers, of helplessness, due the inability to dominate the hazard. He reached the critical point of profound transformation. His world could fit in a grain of sand, of the endless desert of some strange worlds. Worlds, which, directly or indirectly, voluntarily or involuntarily, interpenetrated like in order to locate and completely remove it from any of them. He was not the first victim of this absurd and burdensome parallelism. There have been others, too.

And all of them, ended up the same.

Leadership: Do you consider creating a new image of yourself as being dependent on a thought that presents itself through representations, without words, capable of leading to a change in self-perception?

The most important lessons that you learn as a leader are shared to you from both sides, with double impact: of the consciousness that you want to keep clean, and the mark that you leave in the consciousness of the ones, with whom you interact at any time. A conscience that can defend you, to which you relate you whole life, and the one that you pass on to others, which can accuse you, by unplugging you from the recognition of your status as a man of great character.

The conscience is the thread that binds you, or gets you away of the "parallel worlds" parts of that reality with whom you identify yourself in the attempt to adhere to excellence. While a departure from the rules and regulations that the pure conscience creates, is equivalent to oblivion, with the growing tendency of cutting the roots of your own values and beliefs. It is the resort of your own regression, which comes in contradiction with the terms and conditions imposed by leadership, and which is manifested by indifference, by burying those things that can lead you in the right direction.

Leadership is a manifestation of the human condition in the context of difficult to cross existence, where only a single thing triumphs: the beauty of the human spirit in the face of everything standing against it.

The condition of man, seen through the fire of life's trials, is a subclass of causality that engages both the psyche and free will, from which results the interdependency between the suppression of autonomy and the intensification of the process of creating a new reality.

To get away from the leadership's code that is subordinated to conscience, it is like leading your existence under the influence of some discriminatory entities belonging to some hidden enemies. Thus, you put in motion the mechanism of triggering some processes of blurring the reality and self-confidence. And, as a consequence, leadership loses its charm, its magical attraction; like an ordinary house, which keeps diminishing up to zero, until disappearance.

Leadership: Do you develop yourself a consequence of causality that has a world of contrasts and stringencies, based upon which all events are justified by an intrinsic motivation?

Do you impose certain limits to those around you? Are you hitting yourself by their refusal of taking part in your "game"? Do you minimize that reality, which gives a positive meaning to their lives?

What really matters, in terms of leadership and of the basic features that complete it, is to see to what extent the essential approach of your thinking retrieves another authority to verify the correctness towards the major principles that govern your elements of authenticity.

An authority which would audit your own performance in terms of your values and of the role that links you to the others around you.

In the process of transforming yourself from a disappointing condition to one of control, as a major factor for achieving excellence, requires some finishing of the benchmarks that make up your character, giving a deeper meaning to your life and your personality. It is required a continuity at the level of consciousness, therefore, in the moral order of its values and norms.

Is your leadership transforming the reality of other people in a barren land of suffering? Can you find a land of reconciliation between you and them? Is your existence heading towards decay?

Self-perception can be a call to responsibility and ethical action based on assuming a life situation that has the potential to overturn your beliefs later and to strengthen your values of forgiveness, oblivion, generosity, induction, compassion, self-esteem, positive intent, doing good, accepting of others.

A Grain Of Sand In The Endless Desert Of The Worlds suggests that something insignificant, that individual element of the human arsenal subjected to a perishable reality, which can no longer evolve, and to turn into a long-distance runner.

Just as "beauty keeps of geometry and only the feeling gives you the possibility to notice its most delicate forms" so leadership keeps of your perceptions towards other people. And only the reality that you live close to them gives you the possibility to appreciate the finest pieces of resistance of the mechanism that sets it in motion, ensuring its proper functioning.

Intervene in the evolution of other people without distorting your perspectives of qualification in the grand final of your transformation process- towards the evolution of consciousness that keeps you constantly in alert to any deviation from the rules and the most important benchmarks of the leadership's architecture, towards finding the necessary balance to move forward on the road to perfection.

Conclusion: Without abdicating from the moral, deontology and... your own conscience ... a leader must find the appropriate solutions to annihilate the legal effects created by the situations when one is against all and all are against one. Self-analysis just as the collective analysis involves, and even requires the existence of some communication from both sides.

The lack of communication, as well as the unilateral analysis, the withdrawal in your own world, constrained or not by events, environment, relationships, changes, means nothing but reaching that "ligne de démarcation" between normal and pathological, which most of the times is equivalent with the collapse.

A Great Ideal Dedicated To The Human Being

On April 15, 2012

Facilitate people's access to your leadership, by planting in their consciousness the interest for your true ideals, virtues and qualities.

In the movie "Lionheart (1990)" of which I have discussed in the preceding article, the main character, Lyon Gaultier deserts from the Foreign Legion and reaches the United States. He finds his brother between life and death and his wife with no money to take care of her child. For helping her, he gets involved in illegal fights.

However, after him are sent two tremendous officers, deprived of any intrinsic philosophy - some perfect executors, inanimate of any conviction, of any form of kindness and empathy - two tough characters, created like by a technological creator without any trace of feeling. Wherever was Lyon, and they two made their appearance, angrier, impelled by a fiercer will to catch and to bring him back to the legion.

In the end of the movie, Lyon manages to win a hard fight against Attila. Exhausted, staggering on his feet, tottering, being convinced that soon he will feel the punishment, of which is having part all the deserters, regards for a moment his "shadows", and then he left himself completely in their hands. His tells good bye to his brother's wife and her daughter, his only left relatives, for whom he made all these sacrifices. Then, he is gotten into the car, flanked between the two officers.

Nevertheless, something is happening. Something unexpected. Suddenly, after a few hundred meters, the machine stops. The two officers turn their head to Lyon with pride. For the first time on their face was imprinted the sense of understanding, powered by a touch of admiration - like a fugitive spirit, altruistic, would have slipped in their being and would be lost in the labyrinth of their existence, making them generous - triggering in them, like some electrical currents, all the emotions, values, and feelings that a human being is capable of experiencing.

- You are free, Lyon. Go back to your family. Good luck !

Leadership: Is the picture of what you really are taking shape when you are exposed to the condition of seeing the world in relation to what makes you feel free?

In what unexpected situation is the moment in which you are revealed the value of a causal being, about which you believed for your entire life that it does not define you? Probably in that situation where you manage to escape from a harsh context such as insisting on the impossible or total isolation of the world in the midst of an artificial and succinctly built pseudo-universe built.

I was impressed of the philosophical load of the following statement, belonging to the writer Stefan Zweig: "The man must be disposed to attribute to his will a power that it is exercised on the spiritual, having repercussions through it in the material world."

The will of a man to surpass himself, strengthened by expanding his own horizons, his own skills and values, it is constantly accompanied by a wave of changes that can direct his steps to a better use of his own strengths, and his own inner powers. Healing him through this way of any hostile and extreme events, of any defects, of any harmful human crumb content, of any malignant mood.

Your effectiveness in leadership resides precisely in this valorization of the strengths, of inner emotional and mental "waste's" removal, through the discovery and sharing of values , from redirecting your own feelings, your own world of thoughts, to that reality where the understanding becomes possible and accepted unanimously by the people around, and that creates certain moral obligations of both parties.

What makes you feel free is the opportunity to experience the grandeur of the unexpected in response to activating the need to change the meaning of an existence from which nothingness has bit deeply.

Trying to gather people around you, without determining their transformation by strengthening your relationship with them, by perfecting and practicing your own virtues - is like trying to build a tower that is continuously collapsing. You will be back again and again from where you have started, you will fall in the zeal of the brick maker, by trying to arrange again and again, like some puzzle pieces, with a renewed and yet such a exhausting enthusiasm, the basic bricks of the leadership - without which your progress will not be possible.

Are you falling in the zeal of the brick maker?

The ability to relate emotionally and morally to other people is always limited by your effort to discover the hidden face of suffering, despondency and impotence experienced by an injustice or error of judgment.

Leadership: Can you acquire a correct and complete understanding of the dimension of life by assuming responsibility for the outcome of a transformation experience induced by what you cannot control?

As a leader, you have a duty to constantly keep your noble character, to terminate any ideals, values and beliefs, which give you stability in the relationships with others. Therefore, you need to endow your leadership with the attribute to reject any content item with defective character, and to maintain constantly your spiritual and moral balance.

What exactly led the two officers, so cold in feeling and in deeds, to change their mind in the end and to abandon the cruel mission to bring Lyon back to the legion? Have they regained, suddenly, the humanity, not being influenced by any factor? Have they calmed their spiteful nature, by sipping a miraculous healing drink, endowed with the property to clean their whole being, and to make them better, forcing them to find the most appropriate way of relating to the others around?

So that to manage to shape the material from which is made the human being, like as a skilled craftsman shapes the clay as a veritable creator, to embellish his features, to modify his feelings - giving them a totally different characteristic, you must first plant in his consciousness the interest for your true ideals, virtues and qualities.

To accept a result that you cannot control is a virtue that consists in the power to endure the hardships and the inconveniences of life. Making a transformation in spite of this result is the measure of the value that you bring to the world.

A Great Ideal Dedicated To The Human Being indicates yours and your leadership's guidance on what it is really important both for you and for the others around - that understand you, adopt your beliefs and accept your past, supporting you at present and encouraging in future.

The leadership involves changes in the human thinking and behavior, both concerning the leader - by the proper investigation of his own Ego, through self-reflection and assessment, and of the people whom he leads, and to which he must have a beneficial influence.

Blessed is the leadership that has incorporated this great ideal dedicated to the human being.

A Healthy Eye Never Forgets Its Vision

Don't try to see what seems out of reach when doubts cloud your perspective.

There are things in my eyes that dare not confess anything to me, but I would like to ask them to reveal themselves to me. I say this because I lost my keys to the house. Although I have found keys before, including car keys, I never thought I would lose them in the park while running. According to the saying "You only lose in life what you have to lose", I thought about a wholeness of my personality without getting attached to the ephemeral things that, although they seem essential at a given moment, are only simple steps on the path of my personal evolution.

Then, curious fact, I experienced the pose in which man, free in his actions, lives an adventure in accordance with destiny as a searcher of lost things, like a detective trying to unravel the mystery of a disappearance. It is that privileged posture of the man who lives in the horizon of the search and in the care of thinking of the loss as "preserving" rather than "forgetting". Thus I came to ask myself how I can keep alive the memory of a lost thing without forgetting it. Just thinking about him? Writing about it? Telling a story that details a life lesson? That is not enough. Perhaps I should attribute to this event that moved my spirit in the direction of introspection an eventful character, a kind of epiphany, so that it is not lost in the nothingness of oblivion.

This is how I came to the scenario of the confrontation between loss and oblivion, this is how I came to understand that the basis of an obligation, a compromise clause contained in a conflict with myself, is to use my experience and knowledge accumulated from this incident, to be able to guide my practical reason in the process of understanding a new stage of evolution and maturation. And, reaching another level of relating to myself, by extending the idea of losing an object that at first glance seems trivial, I discovered a starting point for an unexpected and enriching adventure

Leadership: Have you ever realized that by losing something of value of your own volition, you found yourself in the same place, facing the inevitability of fate?

My mistake was that I expected to find the keys in the same place two hours later. So I wasted the rest of my time trying, stupidly and pointlessly, to find what was by no means visible. After that there was a strange silence, a mental discomfort, an intermezzo between nothing and words, as if I had reached an end point, as if I had to react in a different way: to get angry or maybe to i am shocked It was the sign of an internal struggle, as if I had to choose a different reaction to the given situation.

Then, something in me matured. Suddenly, I realized that I had the ability to act like a scandalized man, like a schoolboy ready for money, or like an adult who does not devalue himself over any trifle. I'm trying to understand things that I haven't paid enough attention to before.

In the novel "The Ring of Polycrates" by Friedrich Schiller, the ruler of Ancient Greece named Polycrates purposely loses a ring of great value by throwing it into the sea to avoid an old saying that the lucky ones will suffer in the a great loss ensued. He believed that by losing something of value of his own free will, he could cheat fate. However, when the ring is returned to him, found in the belly of a fish, Polycrates realizes that he cannot control his destiny and that the loss and re-finding of the ring are symbols of the cyclical nature of fortune and the inevitability of fate.

Through the loss and subsequent recovery of his ring, Polycrates is forced to confront the idea that life and destiny cannot be controlled by mere symbolic gestures. The ring, as a material object, becomes the catalyst for deep introspection and recognition of the limits of one's own control over life.

Leadership: Can you achieve a revelation that makes you understand that your self and existence are deeply influenced by a visual representation that illustrates the relationship between cause and effect?

I also believe that if I thought like the famous leader, then only one thing would make me more mature: to realize that all the things I own are transient and that true wisdom and maturity come from the ability to accept change and uncertainty as part of integral to existence. Only this acceptance can free me from the illusion of absolute control, allowing me to live more fully, appreciate the present moment, and value authentic experiences more than material possessions.

As noted, I recognized myself as a protagonist in the act of losing that thing that opened the door to my house for years. And this incident, useful in a certain way especially because it does not represent a major loss, can be thought of as an initiative, an opportunity to get to know me better, even if I am not paying attention to the details. How many people don't go through daily events without knowing how to see their stories, just as they don't know how to tell about them or transform them into something meaningful.

This time, from a trivial accident, I learned that balance and inner harmony do not come from having, but from being; not from accumulating, but from understanding and appreciating the beauty and fragility of life. The object thought and felt is important, not its possession, not its form of existence.

Leadership: Have you ever experienced moments when emotion and reason were heightened by the mental representation of feelings inspired by an event that profoundly changed the way you perceive a visual image?

The object ceased to be a medium of utility becoming a symbol of personal transformation, putting me in the position of a seeker of the hidden meanings of life. So, the object is reborn in the place where its forgetting has settled, simultaneously with an effort to awaken the memory. There must be a relation of intelligibility between the receiver and the received object for the image of loss to invest the object with meaning.

At that moment I could not declare myself the center and master of my things, because that would require full awareness. And not only that, but the fact that I've lost something means that I don't have total control over it. I somewhat resemble a character in John Fowles' novel The Collector who at one point said:

I always had the idea in my head that I would understand . The idea itself did not concern me, but I happened to see an advertisement just as I was about to I turn the page: "Far from what I thought was essential , I found a release from constraints . "

This release from constraints can be seen as an opening to new possibilities, freeing me from the daily routine or responsibilities that seemed to limit my life experience. At the same time, the new perspective opened my eyes to a world where everyday objects and events are not just what they seem to be on the surface, but carry stories, lessons and symbols waiting to be deciphered. Through this change in role, from a mere observer of life to an interpreter of its symbols, I will begin to live with a greater awareness of the infinite depths and possibilities that each moment of life offers.

I still ask myself the question: "How can I keep a thing, lost, without forgetting it?"

Turning it into a story, into a symbol, into a life lesson, into a bridge between me and myself.

Leadership can be seen as an opening to new possibilities of understanding life experiences, by releasing the constraints imposed by material attachments.

A healthy eye does not forget its hindsight when exploring new perspectives, just as an actor cannot forget his role when performing a new scene throughout the performance. And if I want to return to a place where I lost something, constantly viewing it as a marker of a lesson learned, perhaps I should first recognize the value of the experience I went through and embrace the transformation on who brought it to me before I tried to find it.

A Huge Step To Narrow Horizons

On March 18, 2009

Start looking for the truth about yourself whenever you lose your "coordinates".

Yesterday, I received on my e-mail "the joke of the day" from a friend:

A sparrow was flying high-speed at ground level. A BMW comes before it... The sparrow flies at full speed towards the BMW, hits the car and falls completely dizzy. The driver stops, takes her from the ground to his home, puts it in a cage and puts some water and bread for it...

The sparrow wakes up at one point and looks confused around it: it sees the water, the bread...

– Oh, my God ! I killed the man with the BMW !

Leadership: Do you have the strength to recognize the weight of the reality you see yourself witnessing, without striving for an improved model of your own person?

For your leadership to get a high score, you should focus on how to approach your self-knowledge and on a more realistic perspective. I think that your priority should be to improve your performance in regard to those issues that you ignore, overlook or don't notice.

The threshold of entry into your true self is neither underestimation nor to consider yourself the author of the action taken, but the strength to recognize the weight of reality. You just have to be more discriminating with the help you render toward other people. In fact, your actions recognize the existence of the Higher Self and its importance in fulfilling a certain purpose, even if you raise reality on a certain level, or in its entirety, even if you rise above the ambition to assert yourself.

In any case, you have to control your underestimation, so that the truth does not gain too much weight, and at the same time maintain your inner strength to succeed even further in life.

You will be able to ensure the basic elements of your leadership – such as clarity, balance and efficiency, only if you maintain your ability to reason at an optimum and constant level, if you manage to include in your own thinking ingredients, such as coherence and objectivity, which help you achieve your goals and, especially, if you don't disconnect yourself from reality.

Leadership: Can you integrate into an image that gradually changes into another image as the reality around you grows and evolves faster than your understanding?

Just as developing a business requires a combination of vision in terms of customers and competitors, good business systems and a proper culture, so your personal development requires a combination of reality and truth, meaning to be aware of yourself and the surrounding world. You will never be able to develop your potential if your ideals aren't found in your values or if your expectations are too high – and you will become unable to control them. In other words, your value will rise only if you always remain convinced of your qualities and if you will never move away from your real self.

Be analytical about yourself before relating yourself to others. Start looking for the truth about yourself whenever you lose your "coordinates". Rethink your orientation and possibilities to manifest, and then connect yourself to other people. The best leader is the one who knows how to notice that fine line that separates him from his real self, who knows how to distinguish that range of tones that retains the finest details of the original version of reality.

The threshold for entering into your real self is your guarantee for performance. In order to give an impetus to your leadership, you mustn't stop to that threshold where vulnerabilities interfere in your development.

Overestimation is an image that gradually changes to another image, especially when what you see in you in certain circumstances can culminate in the appearance of a hard border, called: "It's only in your head ! "

A Huge Step To Narrow Horizons emphasizes that stage in your personal progress that, instead of maturing your thinking and leadership, it throws you two steps back.

Do you focus your efforts and vision in wrong directions? Are the clear perspective and the right attitude to reality the distinctive elements of your leadership? Do you manage to distinguish the really important issues in your life, your leadership, when a change takes place? How do you react when there is a "change of scenery"? Do you always accept a way of thinking in accordance with who you really are?

Conclusion: Leadership is based on an objective reality, and the leader must be well anchored into reality. By analyzing the past and involving himself into the present, he will be able to throw a glance into the future, drawing aside the curtain of time. For the future depends a lot on the past and the present. A true leader can't create illusions for himself or sell illusions to others, so it is useless to create utopian visions for himself, because they will not propel him, but on the contrary, after making a step forward, he will make two or more steps back.

A Just Punishment For Carson Wells

Exercise your power to be the master of your own life, without getting anchored to a reality that does not correspond to the balanced vision over what you are.

In the movie "No country for old men (2007)" we surprise Carson Wells into a hypostasis of a man satisfied of himself. This fugitive spirit, always in search of treasures, young, brave, quick, optimistic to the bone, vaccinated against all forms of unhappiness or sadness, this bright ivory maintained only by his resistant nature, lives in the naive faith that everything takes place into his advantage; that time, things, people, everything is working in his favor.

Stimulated by a higher energy, Wells seems to be protected by a force that could shatter, sometimes brutally, any opponent. Self-control was the essential manifestation of his nature. Through the place he occupied among other people, as well as by the fact that he was more rarely around danger, we would say that for him there was only one good, the one to act as his own Ego dictated, with the appearance of a warm and bright sun settled over a world without fog.

Authentic leadership is tested when the will capitulates in the face of bleak circumstances, resulting in an unintended transformation of personality.

But his place in the world becomes more and more sombre as time passes. Everything it is questionable, a true capitulation of the will, a spontaneous rusting from the inside, une conversion de la personnalité. For because of his excessive zeal, in the try to recuperate a bag full of money, arise another kind of man, a kind of imperfect competition that was in ill odour on the world's stage. All the elements which compose the present of Wells also reflect on those around him, especially on his enemies.

This sphere of the will and ability enlightened by optimism upwards, into immeasurable, enlarged towards impossible, projected against the background of the personality's deformation that partly merges with the idealism, goes against the cruel reality. In every case, its outline is covered by incomplete forms of renewal and recovery of his own qualities. Does the way that Wells choose is so empty, that to finally bury any good and useful landmark?

Leadership: Do you accept to become the image of a new version of the impetus towards the immeasurable, experiencing the effect of the hazard by exemplifying a self-satisfaction that is illusory?

The foolish does not realize that there are more important things in the world, such as life. His life. And when he feels the danger, it is already too late. His courage is not a visible and a virile one anymore, but is transformed into a swallow, which floating lugubriously takes its final flight, unable to raise any wings of hope. A sour and free defect of his confidence, fatally hit by the obscure presence of a ghost, his fearful rival, the ruthless assassin, el desperado - Anton Chigurh.

However, his hypertrophied pride does not accept defeat. Like a Hermes fixed on the thought to rob the temple of Apollo from Delphi, fearless of his anger, Wells forces his luck turning on the muddy realm of Chigurh, in order to steal the bag of money under his nose. And exactly because of this impetus, just as slippery as ice, he is caught off guard. Realizing in the last moment that the enemy is stronger, appeals to conciliation.

Leadership: How is the doubt of what life offers to you reflected on the truth behind the experiences that individualize you as the vulnerability of a subjectivity assumed all the way?

An obstacle, an injustice? All that now lies in Wells, whatever it could make him satisfied, no longer gushes with the speed of the bullet as aforetime. An absurd and an undeserved shake, a crumbled life, as if it was sand. Only now, when he is caught in the deadly claws of the eagle, the love for life pours and spreads fully through his blood.

Unfortunately, he can no longer change anything. A slow peace, a capitulation calmly supported le malaise d'un vain désir. It is tightening even more the terrible trap of destiny, then closes suddenly. The only truth behind the experiences that individualizes this latter optimist, as the vulnerability of a subjectivity assumed all the way, is that he must accept suffering, precisely in order to transcend it.

And always suffering accepts death more easily. The judgment was carried out justly, a deserved defeat. For the man who does not value enough his life, and the true values that it brings into his path, is not given to fly above, to conquer the highest peaks. The destiny does not grant him than only rarely some subsidies, most often charging him with the maximum interest rate.

Leadership: Are you ambitious to embrace the immeasurable incidence of being caught in the gear of an intrigue that keeps you in suspense until the moment you realize it's too late to return to what you were?

Does your place in the world become more and more sombre as time passes? Is everything within you under question? Is the path that you choose so empty that to finally bury any good and useful landmark? Are you trying to impose yourself on the muddy ground of an unhealthy obsession?

As a force of attraction between the positive and negative charges, the two magnetic poles "to be" and "not to be" are the dependent points on the dimension of your personality. Approaching, they intersect or overlap depending on the role that you assume in everyday life, and depending on the personality reported to the surrounding reality.

And the way you look and plan your future - not only in terms of the expectations, but also of the actions, more or less acknowledged, whose resultant is your becoming determines the decisions that you take and the way you behave in each situation.

A visionary understands that not only the objective assessment of the destination matters, but also the active struggle to shape the desired future.

Because you - the man, who can judge and assess things on their true value – you do not have only the duty to ask yourself and determine, objectively, what exactly it reserves your destination towards which you tend, the concern for balance and responsibility, but also the possibility of wishing a certain future, and therefore the duty to fight for it.

The duty to fight for change, for a new cause, or to be more than you are, is the one that circumscribes the horizon of the lucidity and causality, where the possible and real are updated over your whole life, forged with patience, hope and respect.

This is the essence underlying leadership, and at the same time that issues one of the FISH principles: "Choose your attitude - take responsibility for how you respond to what life throws at you" Once you are aware that your choice involves all those around you, ask yourself:

How do your choices help you to be the person you want to be? How do reflect all elements of your character over those around you?

Leadership: Do you fight for the values of the quality of being an outsider of an unlimited personality, without being influenced by the degree of reception of experiences that are amplified by your lack of corrective reaction to yourself?

A good leadership can have a positive impact, primarily, over your own personality. A form to get actively involved in your change for the better, a form of firm riposte, a form of fighting for what is right to be, for the appropriate values of the quality of being a Man. Leadership, this tool of forming another type of personality, helps you "awake" before plunging forward towards mediocrity.

Carson Wells had the impression that life was becoming better as pushing the "piston" of the present towards a future limited only at his horizon, having the belief that holds on all the control.

Nevertheless, this way of thinking, this superficial layer of illusion, erupting like a volcano, always repeatedly, actually took him to nowhere, causing despair and confusion. Claustration into a private sphere, one of the individual interests.

His values were degradable, calculated, cultivated and cared only by the simply adding of the option "On / Off" creating even more doubts about his life. A character who perceives life, the world, everything through his own defects.

May you be too "on the wave of change", but to get involved in the wrong script? Are you anchoring, as to a submerged log, to a reality that does not relate to your true beliefs?

Being an outsider of an unlimited personality means breaking away from what you know you've experienced without noticing and opening yourself up to just one approach to life based on three qualities: protecting self-esteem, restraint in what regards the exaggeration of personal importance and the ability to oppose any vanity.

A Just Punishment For Carson Wells expresses a reality: the more you move away of the specific human qualities, the triggering element towards excellence fails to appear, even if your will is enough strong. And that horizon of rediscovery is more and more limited on the extent of repelling the values, favoring the appearance and development of the leadership.

Just as the human body, with all its bio-morpho-psychological is the common denominator of all the sporting activities, even so the increased quality of life is the common denominator for fixing more stronger those qualities necessary for the leadership.

Exercise your power to be the master of your own life, without getting anchored to a reality that does not correspond to the balanced vision over what you are.

A Kind Of Magic (II)

On August 10, 2015

Make the decision of manifesting your skills at the level of genius, by triggering the artistic phenomenon that amazes by integrating the imaginary into consciousness.

Imminently, I see myself forced to admit a certain degree of autonomy of intellect in every puncturing of the walls between two worlds covered by striking contrasts, overturning of ideas, accumulations of images, at the limit of the human and the divine, collected in the same verse "One shaft of light that shows the way / No mortal man can win this day". A verse that seems to cry out: "But, what is it I've done?"

Now begins the indefinite, where only an adventurer of dimensionless space, in an operation of neutralizing identity, can venture in. An unclear verdict is given in the first instance of the consumer of laws undetectable by the methods of empirical science, the tailor that sews with a fearless curiosity on the solid canvas of unreality and transfiguration of a new model of a trophy of uniqueness, acting "the bell that rings inside his mind" which heralds change.

Disturbing, I feel as if I have achieved an unreal perfection, unable to tell myself anything – especially, unable to understand the causes of certain tasks of delivering the imaginary in development. Like one of Jules Verne's heroes who doesn't seek a foothold in history and neither among other people, I automatically evade any rational skill. Existing in the world as if I didn't exist. "A kind of magic."

But in all this automatic perfection – to which sooner rather than later, that reason urges me to, which struggles to know a madness, a different cause in its own right, a story out of the ordinary, anchored in a transcendent reality – there can be only one instance of a model. "There can be only one."

Leadership: Do you double your efforts of turning into a force that can meet the "TRUE" condition of approaching a false identity, so that you can make from the imaginary the power of your revelations?

The decision to exhibit your skill at the level of genius, by triggering the artistic phenomenon that amazes by integrating the imaginary into consciousness, is a premiere, an action consciously chosen from a random number of possibilities with the purpose of reaching a spectacular result. The imaginary is an autonomous and superior reality through the challenges addressed to a certain type of thinking, a structure of symbolic representation accumulating various elements and its own dynamics, a structure of "story vs. answer" alternating between a fictional story and images of a subjective, but fascinating world.

This decision honors leadership that seeks to establish an innovative correspondence between the means of representing a concept and the followed result through its application. Or, rather, between the level of intelligence you show through uniqueness and the results you want to obtain by automatically avoiding any reasoning upheld as valid.

Magic is the cultivation of the feeling of belonging to this world misunderstood by many, but spectacular through the novelty of the field, through the creative tools chosen by an insightful author, through the diversity of the decorative elements, through the diversity of the effects that seem to be miracles.

A force that responds to the "TRUE" condition of false identity is given by the very ability to know and exceed the limits of your vision, taking over control of the situation where there are no alternative options, as when you know who is looking at you without turning your head.

Translated simply, this means to exist as if you wouldn't exist, and still, to achieve a major change in the course of the world. The perfect art of externalizing your desire staying under the sign of an unreal perfection, stirs even stronger the sensation of inattendu of which the most evolved spirits are haunted by, which involves not only a certain degree of autonomy of intellect, but also a certain degree of ambiguity.

To double your efforts of turning into a force that can meet the "true" condition of approaching a false identity, implies reaching an unreal perfection, integrated into a fictional-scientific step, but without injuring anyone and without challenging reality. The authority that the magician proves can be seen in the situation where he must find the right time to take all kinds of actions, so as not to remain uncovered or to exceed a desire of the type "All my secrets will be woven around a simple stage illusion".

Any situation where you have to follow the rules imposed by someone else and you have to take into account the constraints of reality ends in failure, like when you look at a 3D photograph without special glasses that focus on the central image. In the field of art and creativity, magic consists in doing the exact opposite of what is logical, of what other people feel, experience and think of, the opposite of what is naturally believed.

Leadership: What role are you willing to assume in an area where not many people excel, by referring to a process of creating images, objects and phenomena that are not perceived by the ordinary mind and eye?

And if you manage to truly understand the causes of certain delivery tasks of the imaginary in development, so basically to not only wear out the imaginative process, but rather use it in forming the competence of scientific knowledge, only then can we truly speak about "magic". It is one thing to have imagination, and a completely different thing to transform imagination into a field of values or into a battlefield.

To get closer to this way of being, not seeking a foothold among others, but only in the process of development and differentiation of science, denotes a certain inclination towards magic, towards the extremes of a rigid interpretation of the relationships between creator and creation, between what you know and what cannot be measured. Therefore, leadership should become rather an umbrella of self-assessment than a command structure, which has a hole in it – with an auto-off function. Be careful how far you let your imagination soar !

This ability of relating to a single valence of clarity and originality is due to the process of anchoring to a different frequency of understanding, to a different system of processing knowledge that establishes the correspondence between science and genius.

Leadership, which is built by taking on the ordinate of the point of functioning a variable of the type "you are not most people", automatically brings a bonus point, a plus of remuneration in your own attitude towards reality, according to the indicator of perfection.

The role that the magician assumes in a direction of limitless challenges is that of a science consumer who knows how to make the connection between art, scientific experiment and mystical experience, through the quality of amplifying his "spell power" with another version of reality.

A Kind Of Magic aims at passing to another level of self-representation, in relation to an unreal perfection, but with scientific expectations. It is also a verdict pronounced in the virtue of those ideals, prejudices or myths that particularize you under the aspect of relating to the beneficial truths of imagination.

Do not stop knowing yourself and under the sign of what I would call "the exile in a story". How would this sound in the perspective of science? Imagine...

A Kind Of Magic (III)

On August 12, 2015

Try to become the substance of contrast of an individuality full of subtleties, so as to keep the values of the vibratory frequency of the flux of unsuspected energies high.

The unassailable foundation of my authority of doing great things, This flame that burns inside of me, in the game deliberated with fantasy able to procure unusual visions, during experiences of learning and reinvention, solicits the recognition of certain forms of manifestation of the phenomenon called "Exile." It's a kind of magic to know how to survive an unexpected experience, unleashed as if from a real dream, to be able to embrace the supernatural, to serve it as if you were listening to the orders of a hidden God - Deus absconditus.

What no one is determined to accomplish by every event of the world that generates meanings about God, in the midst of what appears to be chaos, is transformed into an exercise of flexibility, adaptation and sagacity by providing refuge in the face of the unknown and the inexplicable which characterizes an attractive, powerful, pressing, memorable identity.

Secretly, in the deepest silence equivalent to a detachment from everything material, everything that excessively burdens the brain with thoughts ran strikingly fast, I myself existing only in an interminable spinning of the flux of creation, as if that of a carousel, I feel I'm birthing within me a last youth. One thirsty for a new and tender freedom.

Silently, a new world begins to dawn: I build it next to the other one, putting it together from isolated elements to obtain a whole, as an artist who arranges the colored parts of the image by interposing a multitude of notions carriers of associations.

Leadership: Are you capable of creating a credible identity around a culture of fantasy, to bring to light the process of transforming reality into a conception of occult science?

Of course, everything revolves around science, the solid base generator of power signals, not without excluding the eventuality of penetrating into an invariable magnetic field, from which I could perceive only the surface effects and the sensations of vacuity. And yet, something else offered itself as a hypothesis of scientific research after reading the percussive verses: "The waiting seems eternity / The day will dawn of sanity."

An artist such as Freddie Mercury, this inflorescence of the sin of being brilliant, manages to convey magically strange and splendid visions that arise, one after another, gathered in the way the sculptor finds in nature ready-made stones or pieces of wood with human faces, and only has to carve a little to further increase the likeness. "It's a kind of magic."

Up to what point will I be able to fully support myself under the effect of an expression denoting a fear full of fascination, to immerse myself in the hypnotic darkness of an always active spell? The occult science of an artist full of mystery, full of energy, charismatic and always on the alert, makes a good team with the application of the most demanding knowledge, hardly accessible, in a practice whose foundation is a permanent search for the presence of God in a frame of constraints of the type: "No one can stop me" or "No one can be just like me anyway".

Always the rebellious genius, the substance of contrast of an individuality full of subtleties, needs a mask in order to express himself freely, by unexpected forces propagated through energetic current in order to find themselves in a stable equilibrium. But not just any energy, but one worthy of honor, an energy springing from the virtue of a synergistic work between reality and appearance, between spirit and world, between rational and irrational. You must be a Freddie Mercury, "One dream, one soul, one prize", in order to keep the values of the vibratory frequency of that flux of unsuspected energies high.

Leadership: Can you obtain the whole of creation by seeking the recognition of certain forms of manifestation of the phenomenon called "Exile"?

Deciding to express yourself freely through the act of creation and identifying with it, meaning to open the prison of a reality limitedly understood, depends on the usefulness of the capacities you appreciate as being your most prized good: playing singular visions, following here the revolutionary implications they have for finding a new identity.

Special thanks are due to the identity which, by accentuating the relationship between science and the unsuspected forces of which only the genius is able to prove by detachment from all that is material, supports leadership through the fact that the individual becomes the product of an interpretative vision that can lead to new and unexpected configurations in promoted concepts.

Leadership can be judged through the way in which man sees things when he starts conceiving them. To exist in an endless spinning of the flux of creation, towards experiencing remarkable knowledge, a process clarified through the intuition of a self-dimension that surpasses that of existence and consciousness, is also the result of a correct interpretation and application of the law: "A whole is obtained by putting together the isolated elements."

Exile is the form of exclusivist practices, one of the tests of fantasy, virtues, courage and speed of mental reaction, which grinds the way you express yourself uniquely by creating a different reality from other people.

Creation is a whole in which you yourself need to integrate in to evolve in the same direction as the flux of elements that need to be harnessed. It succeeds in imposing an interpretation of those phenomena that are still mysterious, stirring excitement and admiration, today when the trend of having a perfect understanding of the notion of "original product" keeps being reinvented and presents importance through the fact that it enters the composition of an attitude of loneliness.

Trying to obtain a whole of creation, by seeking the recognition of certain forms of manifestation of the phenomenon called "Exile", is a fundamental requirement of the activity of producing something new (new possible definitions of scientific concepts).

And this requirement, in the equation of brilliance, is expressed on the basis of the reason that in art there needs to be an integral manifestation of the possibilities of establishing a connection between reality and appearance, between spirit and world, between rational and irrational. Do you have the ability to rethink the contrast between them in the framework of new defensive concepts?

The magic that accompanies a unique experience of leadership concerns the skill of grinding a way to express yourself freely and constructively, in a unique dream moment in which everything seems so real.

A Kind Of Magic suggests that atmosphere of loneliness, specific to brilliance, which brings new elements of meaning to creation whose endless composition is revealed by indirect sight, by playing imaginary visions that impose the clarification of new concepts. The purpose of this special creation is functional only through your dedication in the service of the idea of "magic."

A Kind Of Magic (I)

Find new ways of capturing the authentic sense of superiority, by the power of modeling a vaster inner world.

None of my artistic views, drawn from the celestial heights of space and time, opposed to a deeper existential meaning, could be shared through a direct message. But through magic, under the power of electrical discharges, unpredictable phenomena, impossible to stop, without knowing that I was dependent on their real effect. No mortal could win his greatness through such a way of manifesting a form of knowledge.

Willy-nilly, I arrived at the crossroads of the mind, different in every moment of revelation, which I feared was time to overcome it. When my whole being abandoned itself to its own demon or genius, following a mysterious law of existence, subjected to time, which commanded me to either destroy myself, or to surpass myself. "The bell that rings inside your mind . Is challenging the doors of time."

It was up to me, the mission of doing something about my acceptance of uniting my powers with the resonance of those currents of energy that entered the structure of a new reality of being. A reality closely related with the frequencies of transmission of a certain amount of information often held in several places, simultaneously, but especially in the act of self-manifestation, in relation to a higher court of illumination. Until when will I be able to cross those finish lines to which science currently has no response? "It's a kind of magic."

Leadership: What role are you willing to take on a life you express in different ways, experiencing a personal style of creating a show that strives too hard to be "cool"?

Dried clay becomes more solid when it is burned in a fire. Same with magic, heated to the high temperatures of inspiration and inventiveness, provides alternative energy through a uniform magnetic field. That its flux of successive transformations and its forms of intensity, passing through maximum and minimum values of the forces that produce special effects, strengthens the conception of the art of convincing.

When you use a special power, by transposing an unreal parameter into a real one, or vice versa, it mustn't be visible, but it must be able to amaze, to inspire and retain its audience by creating a state of mind. Your role in a show that strives to be too "cool", risking some disappointment in case of the slightest mistake, is one of reference in the credible achievement of a character with endless interpretive valences. Because in leadership it matters more how a personality develops in a unique, non-competitive environment of the inevitable, a framework of appearances, of permanently changing realities necessary for "open and without a curtain" emotional manifestations.

Only inventor Nikola Tesla could generate high voltage, causing sparks and scattering light without injuring or causing burns. Writer Christopher Priest spoke of him as a magician: "He had always needed a spectacular stage effect. On the one hand, he had to point out the trick of the New Transferred Man and, on the other hand, to mask the way it works."

Magic, in which "I'm hearing secret harmonies" through sounds, projections and color, is an intelligence form of expressing states, emotions, thoughts, and the art of being the means of transposing beauty into matter, which sparks interest. I wonder what German writer Thomas Mann would've had to say about magic?

Leadership: Can your superiority be an unparalleled experience in using a memorable experience as a simulator of situations with mystical characteristics that helps you weigh a multitude of cause-and-effect relationships?

Certainly, the study of a notorious scientific construction under a moral rapport, without taking into account that it is in contradiction with the very fact of considering it the work of genius, magic, too full of mystifications that resemble sorcery, with strange directions towards the hazard, represents a reckless violation of divine law. But still, it always delights us with visual and auditory beauties. Isn't that right, Freddie?

Always, in leadership, the issue will be the situation in which the act of creation and the experiences you suggest, which guide others towards a new construction of reality, become elements of your frame of reference, of an experience that always gains a different meaning.

A cause-and-effect relationship, through the use of magic as a launching pad in the mystery of higher knowledge, is measured by how you manage to cope with the most unforeseen situations. Such a relationship "tries to highlight a trick, masking the way it works", puts considerable value on facilitating instant images as a means of defining a coherent, differentiated identity, and defending it in the face of any attack of the nature of inhibition.

Magic, a burdensome stone of a test of science shaped with the support and consistent encouragement received from the innovative spirit, is possible to be done through the effects of interpreting the inner world – in such a way in which experiences can gain a visual, fantastical and believable sense all at the same time. In a narrow sense, someone said, magic means an effort to control or force natural or supernatural forces to act on the order of man.

Leadership is the reality that people perceive as true, without imagining for a moment what chaos is hidden behind the "glow" of the performance that the director plans.

A Kind Of Magic has as a foothold the ability of man to align to a more profound existential meaning, which offers other view on art, which cannot be shared through a direct message. But rather by applying knowledge to the highest scientific level, with the essential attribute of a new way of receiving the inner and outer world.

A Leader With Authority

The way you create the change determines how far will reach those who will follow you.

If you saw the movie "The Mask of Zorro (1998)", you certainly remember Alejandro. The restless young man who wanted to revenge his brother whatever it takes. He would have not succeeded in achieving his purpose if he hadn't met Don Diego de la Vega (Zorro).

Zorro appeared in Alejandro's life exactly in the right moment and shaped him; taught him how to fight and how to behave in society, how to obtain envy fame and how to be loved by people. Finally, Alejandro replaced Don Diego de la Vega and becomes the people's hero, the new Zorro.

Leadership: Can your attitude towards yourself, your duty to the world, and your patience with a stranger determine the future of the performance of a new way of thinking?

Have you found a person you train in your image and likeness to develop the whole composition of its becoming in a stylish, severe, scientific and spiritual form as a theme of philosophy that treats the "reconciliation of antagonisms"?

I don't think I'm wrong when I say that no one succeeds all by himself to face serious challenges. Once you have a leading job, without a doubt you will have to pass the knowledge and experience accumulated over the years to another person who needs it, so that he, in turn could fulfill his goals and reach a higher level. Your role is to bring this person to the point where he can take your place when you will not be able anymore to "function" at a maximum capacity.

In a word, you will have to become a master who can train the appropriate person and point her in a constructive direction. To bring him to the point when he can replace you and to continue your work. Having the power to make another person better than you, more creative in a domain, more skillful in playing his role as a leader, it's what confers you value and transforms you in a great mentor. You also have the duty to recognize his worth, so he can feel important and to work better.

Leadership by example is a change of attitude toward yourself in the face of steadiness and patience towards someone with narrower views, from which the performance of an original way of thinking has faded.

Leadership: What do you feel and learn from people can become a defining experience for judgment and understanding of explorations of the extremes of human credulity?

Do you cultivate in people that special sense that allows them to complete their potential? Or do you show your perfection in transmitting a certain credulity that appeals to people's tendency to be led and exploited?

Be mindful of how you lead, credulity has a limit called rebellion. Alejandro was almost always on the verge of resisting the decisions of Don Diego from Vega.

Just as a master in the art of chess prepares his checkmate with a special skill since the beginning of the game, so do you, in the relationship with people you have to focus right from the beginning in observing their peculiarities. And according to their "package "of talent and the quality of their skills, to cultivate in them that special sense that would allow them to improve their potential.

A sense of duty to something above them, to the paths that only the truly virtuous pass, prepared to win the confrontation between a life full of dangers and the full blessing of power.

Leadership: Do you analyze the path you follow from the hypostasis of the person you have become at a point where you are closing your doors to what you dreamed of reaching?

Having authority means to impose, to make yourself heard, to control the situation. You establish the rules and take all the decisions, from you leave everything. But this doesn't mean that you have to abuse. You permanently have to search ways of inspiring trust to the person you wish to follow you and to help him increase his talent.

Keep in mind that when a crisis appears he has to be the right man who can deal the situation, who can find good solutions for you, that's why it's imperative necessary to encourage him to develop the skills he needs so he can solve any situation in any conditions.

Your leadership potential is reflected in the ability to seek at any cost a reconciliation between the point of support of moral satisfaction and those alternations of painful moments in which the aspiration of equity, justice, elegance, fair play, collaboration will begin to express themselves Profoundly in social change, being sometimes facilitated by the "defeated" position.

Someone said: "What sometimes seems hard suddenly becomes easy if you have beside you, a person to guide you and who gives all the interest to make you the best." This is what you should do: to help your apprentice to develop his potential so that things seem much easier to accomplish. Help him become more competent so that he can face with success his new responsibility.

Leadership is the sense of debt you earn when you start to invest from those resources you never knew you had, in terms of the general context of the cause you serve to straighten a path you see as being with no return.

A Leader With Authority is guided by the formula: the way you create the change determines how far will reach those who will follow you.

A Leap Into A New Quality Of Sound Structure In Film

On January 12, 2011

The artist does not perceive the soundtrack as an illustration of the image, but as an integral element of it, synchronized with a specific action.

In Berlin, the director Eisenstein collaborates with Edmund Meisel to develop the music that he is composing especially for the film "Potemkin". His collaboration with the composer is particularly important, because in that year, before the appearance of the sound film, with the musical score for "Potemkin", Eisenstein lays the first steps of the future sound cinema. That is why he always notes with such bitterness how strange it is that he, precisely he, was, due to extraordinary circumstances, the last to meet the sound film, making it for the first time only in 1938.

The music for the film "Potemkin" is clearly different from what was practiced at that time. Although brief, the collaboration with the composer is carried out in the same way as it is today to create a soundtrack. Eisenstein persuades Meisel to abandon the purely illustrative function of music and instead emphasize certain "effects". They especially break out in the "car music" in the final sequence of the encounter between the cruiser and the squadron. The director categorically asks the composer to abandon the usual melody, relying instead on the rhythmic beat of the percussion, and demands that at this point the music follows, like the film, a leap into a new quality of sound structure. Thus, the image organically merges with the sound, and instead of a silent film with musical illustration, a sound film actually appears.

Leadership: Can your creation be considered more than an accompaniment, but a form of expression that evokes a deep-rooted energy in the images?

In modern sound cinematography, the collaboration between the director and the composer works like an integrated control system, where the music is no longer just a passive sensor that captures the emotions of the film. The musical score becomes a central unit that analyzes and adjusts the artistic parameters, abandoning the purely illustrative function. Sound effects are programmed to accentuate key moments, such as in the car sequence, where rhythmic percussion replaces the traditional melody. Transitions between visuals and sound structure must blend organically, avoiding conventional musical illustration. The synchronization between visual and sound elements becomes absolutely essential, aiming for a new quality of the cinematographic system, in which sound and image operate as a unitary whole, not as two separate components.

In Berlin, the collaboration between Eisenstein and Edmund Meisel for the film "Potemkin" was similar to an experiment in acoustic engineering, where music becomes an essential element of the film's structure. Instead of a purely illustrative score, Eisenstein asks the composer to accentuate the rhythmic vibrations and eliminate the usual melodic tones, a process by which the sound becomes almost palpable in the tense sequences. This method of manipulating sound, like emphasizing the desired frequencies in the acoustic design, creates a "car music" in the squadron encounter sequence, where the percussion takes a dominant role.

Through an unconventional approach, Eisenstein aims to organically merge image with sound, creating not just a musical background, but a new sound structure that transforms the entire visual experience. Thus, the percussive rhythms of film music become the foundation of modern sound cinema, where sound intensifies the image, giving it a deep sensory quality that transcends the illustrative function.

To be truly a leader in cinematography means to transform the tension between illustrative function and expressive potential into an organic fusion that reveals new dimensions of artistic perception.

A leap into a new quality of sound structure in film involves a perfect synchronization between image and sound, a deep interaction between the two elements and an innovative use of sound as a narrative and emotional tool.

Here are some key aspects of this new sound quality, as manifested in the "Potemkin" screenplay and the sound films that followed:

- Accurate synchronization: Sound is no longer just a musical illustration of the image, but an integral element of it. Each sound is synchronized with a specific action on the screen, creating a sense of unity and coherence.

- Amplification of emotions: Sound is used to intensify the emotions conveyed by images. For example, dramatic music can emphasize the tension of a scene, and ambient sounds can create a specific atmosphere.

A Living Echo Aiding Clarice

Automatically adjust your operation parameters, by constantly focusing on the qualities necessary for the condition of being a leader.

For a moment darkness distorts reality. Everything proper to Clarice Starling as a person on the well-established map of the force that generates impulses and positive energies sinks into the chaos of fatality. That spiritual thankfulness state enriched by then with vitality echoes, with subtle nuances that pushed her further away from the edges of feelings able to throw her into the deepest abysses, destabilizes itself for the first time.

It produces this way some sort of somber repositioning between two irregular oscillations which compromise Clarice's operation parameters. One of maximum harmful tension, which can be only temporarily quenched, distributed in space according to the relation "time-uncertainty" and which enlarges itself. And the other one of maximum reverse phase, which amplified somehow the feeling of trust, exerting a moderate control over the psyche, allowing certain balance and mobility. The simultaneous action of the two oscillations produce an interior effervescence which generates a change of the senses.

And suddenly it can be heard. The frightened voice of Catherine Martin, sent as a negative reaction effect, triggering a mixture of horror and uncertainty. And this expression of her soul, who hasn't totally lost its validity, who contains a lot of sensitivity and fierceness altogether, chases away Clarice's doubts. So she's alive. Catherine is alive !

Where are you Catherine? Where is your voice coming from? The darkness seems to wane when she hears the trembling voice, but the fearful feeling of death is rising. How to act when Buffalo Bill is somewhere around, waiting to grab her like a hungry wolf?

Leadership: Are you able to maximize your impact on the facts following an overwhelming incident, working under the umbrella of an imperative such as: "It is not enough to see man, you have to live through him" ?

Now all senses are fully activated. Clarice is in the situation of a mother who has found her child, but cannot stand by him. As a living echo, the words of Mister Madeleine, from Victor Hugo's work, come to her mine. He tested the relentless will of poor Fantine at the time of death: "As long as you will be like this, I won't allow you to see the girl. It's not enough to see her, you must also live for her."

And these words, truly powered by an upsurge of faith, for which every human being who hears them would plunge towards new experiences, but that only she can stoically live, resound as a stimulator of inner energy, eliminating to a certain extent confusion and the feeling of defeat.

A volcanic eruption coming from the depths of her being when all her unknowns burn and chain themselves as nebulas, they shatter the whole perimeter of disdain and consolidate the entire structure of trust: "Catherine, I will get you out of here ! "

In this tense moment two beings united by the emotions they send to each other from afar. Now Clarice is one with Catherine. Two souls with a lot of affection share the same thoughts and defining features, staying together no matter what.

Leadership: How do you relate to the predominant faculty of the deepest emotions through a motivation that sparks a certain wonder about how you feel in a situation that cannot change overnight?

In leadership, as reference point for setting qualitative connections, it is fundamental to have sensitivity, the dominant faculty of the deepest most direct emotions when "darkness" correlated through the incapacity to reduce the symptoms of moral decay, of loosing value, takes over your entire functional area. Lacking a real perspective of overcoming your own level of ambition may lead to a poor outcome in changing a situation that marks you, no matter how much you try to detach yourself.

Clarice's amazement is not so much that she has found Catherine alive, but that she does not know how to change both their lives when they return home with the feeling that anything can happen in a crazy world. The subtle tendency to permanently notice the human experiences, feelings, emotions and human around, to understand their strength, to confront your own feelings and emotions with them can reduce the noise that comes between you and leadership, supplementing the level of knowledge, vitality and trust.

They manage an ebullient escape, even spectacular, from the murderer's house, Buffalo Bill. The coming out from the "abyss of darkness" involves a reevaluation of your position towards yourself and towards the others who enter your influence range, but also a quick answer to the questions: who am I, what do I want and what stops me from acting.

This exit, this wonder-solution that ensures unrestrained mobility and an exceptional functionality, should somehow be measured based on the "reference indicators" that direct your motivation (character, intellect and values) and based on the objectives one has set. And it must be regulated so that it answers to the self-imposed performance parameters.

Leadership: Are you able to fight the key moment of a major event that gives you the chance to gain professional experience as a solution to the foundation of being recognized as being dependent on a reality that sabotages the construction of any meaning of life?

Clarice has shown a number of unique qualities: the courage to face an unimaginable evil, the courage to assert herself as a free man despite the presence of negativity of existence, affection for another woman besides her, the ability to control herself when confined, the ability to put herself in another person's shoes, the innovation to combine two identities into one. These qualities have enriched her professional experience.

Perhaps in the same situation, someone else would have entered a major shock, so serious that he would have sabotaged the construction of any sense of life. Because when you are surrounded by the worst nightmare, when the murderer is near you and you do not see him, and escape is almost impossible, reality becomes a trembling "fata morgana" that catches you in her invisible, deadly thread, and doesn't allow you to recover from your depression.

Undoubtedly we will find a set of common points through which the two subsystems are alike, the same two integrated in the system of your personality, which could positively influence reaching one's goals. An active subsystem, limited only by the great wall of trust, effective in the activity of monitoring and surveillance of the steps that must be followed for achieving a better coordination and maintenance of thoughts and emotions (the most priceless resources) in borderline situations.

And a passive subsystem that enhances to a certain extent confusion and the feeling of defeat, deactivating the senses until the following "command impulse", which initiates actions, which dictate that you must make it up in order to rise above yourself. Your expectations, performance, the strong image you have built and embedded in your mind. And that is a constant reminder you should dare to act in accordance with your own conscience.

So, if leadership has as a first reference point, for an approach within the limits accepted by senses and judgments, the image you have made about yourself (which shouldn't compromise your operation parameters), it means that, aside from taking leader responsibilities in borderline situations, you also have the task to watch and to take all necessary measures in order to protect the side that ensures the control of thoughts, emotions and actions.

Leadership is the effect of the feeling that your actions are validated by those around you, provided that when you encounter a new situation and do not know how to act, you do not become a prisoner of fears that harm your spiritual fulfillment.

The leader's greatest desire is to imprint his own perspective on events on how they can be changed. And his greatest accomplishment is to join the excitement of the people around him.

A Living Echo Aiding Clarice points out the reactivity of that inner system which allows the repositioning of the reference points that limit the initial purpose, as well as removing that noise generated by internal or external negative influences. In other words, to come back to your initial answers to the questions: who am I, what do I want, and moreover, what stops me from acting.

A Living Guarantee

On November 05, 2010

Demonstrate your indispensable role to people, enlivening them with the conviction that you are a model of virtues that crosses distances.

The young man decided to go in search of his treasure. However, for that, he had to cross the desert to reach Al-Fayoun oasis and meet the alchemist, the only one who knew the secret of the Great Work, and who could help him find his treasure.

A huge caravan was preparing to cross Sahara. Nearly two hundred people were waiting to leave.

- I am the leader of the caravan, said a man with long beard and dark eyes. I own the power of life and death over every person I carry. Because desert is a capricious woman and sometimes drives people mad... There are many kinds of people and different gods lying in everybody's heart. Even so, my only God is Allah, and I swear I will do anything possible to conquer the desert once and for all. Now, I want each of you to swear by the God he believes in, deep in his soul, that he will obey me in all circumstances. In the desert, disobedience means death.

A low murmur crossed the crowd. They were all slowly swearing in front of their God... A sound of a bugle was heard, and everyone prepared for departure. The caravan hit the road. *

Leadership: Can you lower people's dependence of those uncertainties attracting the impossibility to maintain yourself in a position of authority, by appealing a default type constraint such as "check your perceptions about what îs going on" ?

Leadership takes root because of a certain pliability degree of alternatives for managing risk situations, by turning very fast the reality that people cannot totally understand or entirely rule.

In this case, the leader is accompanied not only by a sense of authenticity, but especially by the obligation to identify and capitalize any alternative meant to regulate freedom of conscience and decision. Especially the freedom of action to the extent that he has the receptivity to support it from others.

In other words, the leader must reduce people's dependence of those uncertainties attracting the impossibility to maintain himself in a position of authority.

Sometimes, we will benefit from the possibility of personalized experiences, developed alternatively, even tortuously by life, which inhibits the potential for action. It is a kind of joining to a higher coordination entity, manifesting itself as an "all or nothing" phenomenon, where the degree of involvement in setting objectives and facilitate decisions become essential, especially in the context of prolonged tensions.

Thus, for example, we can take into account the knowledge of what may become the starting point for a new phase in life, with its strengths and weaknesses, in the new direction of development set by the superior entity, like a shield against the expansion of perception regarding the parties' equality, with the various features of the transition to a new beginning from the set of possibilities to choose a partner-leader.

Leadership: Do you effectively use your power to decide to extend your intervention in shaping the destiny of other people so that it outlines what is most fulfilling inside and outside of you?

The superior ones only want honor. When everything goes smoothly, you go your way, thinking that those who accompany you are honored to have you as their leader. Nevertheless, if everything goes wrong, when you wake up going astray, when you no longer have solutions to the problems you are facing, mainly because you have not performed your duties with precision, and you have broken your promises, when you wake up hopelessly caught in "the chains of wandering", then you must pay the huge price: all those who have followed you are now leaving you.

And at that moment, you lose your honor and dignity, you lose any bit of credibility, any trust you still had in you. Your world begins to crumble very slowly...

Once, someone said: "Honor is a jewel, and the tiniest defect lowers its price." Nothing brings you more closely to people than your own honor. The honor people grant you is a proof of their trust in you.

If you do not live up to their expectations, in such a way that would wake up their enthusiasm and trust in you, and make them not doubt of your decisions, becoming the man they want to be their leader, you are about to lose your sense of self-esteem and consciousness of your quality as a man of good parts. A true leader measures his value by the valuation of people around him.

Honor requires warranties: Do you train your ability to connect with other people by their full submission to the increased pressure of a mission from which they can determine where your representative virtues fit?

Everything was clear, and people, strongly influenced by the words of the caravan's leader, knew exactly how things would happen. They knew exactly what to do and when. They were aware that they had to comply with all their leader's requirements and obey him, always considering his decisions right. It was a reality they all had to accept, a reality they could not deny, distort or denigrate. Their duty was to listen to him with respect, but also with fear, responsibility and obedience.

In his turn, the leader of the caravan, being the only one who knew the way to the oasis, was considered essential: he had to feed tens, hundreds of people, families and children; he was responsible for their safety. Nevertheless, he felt the sincere conviction that he would help each of them to reach the oasis, and for that, he had to pay with total submission. Furthermore, people had the total guarantee that, when he decides, he does it only for their sake and for the success of the trip.

As a leader, you must have the situation under control, even when you fall asleep. You guarantee the success for people as you do it for yourself, fully aware of your destiny and their. Therefore, do not allow them to deny your value. Think well whenever you take a mission, a responsibility, because you can easily lose your honor. And with it, you will inevitably lose your power of influence.

Your representative virtues, embodying an individual nuance of respect and recognition that supports a noble cause, can fit into the criteria for defining the experience that people around you experience. Recognition of virtues does little to simplify your mission: each person must be placed within a safe area of interaction with your skills, with what you experience in every moment and with what is beyond your own appearance.

Leadership is a model of virtues that crosses distances even more, making the call to unity more resounding in the soul of men.

Conclusion: The leader, chosen according to some unanimously recognized virtues and aptitudes, guarantees success for people as he does it for himself. He is a living guarantee that things will take the right track in order to achieve the common goals.

Just as a coach must know the effort limit of his players, consequently, what and how much to ask from them - so do you, as to develop your level of leadership, must first know your limits, and to train your ability to connect to the other people, by clarifying your vision and strategies for achieving goals. At the same time, you must assimilate and follow with holiness those rules and norms that would foster your relations with them, and to know how much to ask from them, so that you arrive with them safely at the finish line.

Demonstrate your indispensable role to people, enlivening them with the conviction that you are a model of virtues that crosses distances.

A Lost Lamb In The Depths Of Darkness (II)

On September 14, 2013

Open up to the authenticity of experience, stimulating the capacity of placing yourself above what you do not know.

Nobody could say what's going on inside her, but she's terrified. She is shaking, she's trembling, and she stumbles. She is in that stage of uncertainty that doesn't allow the conscience to create self-control, but makes it experience unknown emotions, based on the terrible desperation, trying her more and more.

"What am I doing here alone?" It's the only whisper she lets out in the middle of an impenetrable darkness. Where someone carefully and suspiciously observes her, like a victim of circumstances, helpless, drowned in the darkness of silence like a lost lamb in the night hours, in the waste.

Her thoughts insistently repeat, pleading for explanations and answers: "Who are you, the one looking at me with your clenched teeth? What are you thinking about?"

Clarice seems to closely experience that weird feeling, that untamable sensation, like a terrible knife stab in her heart that brings her closer to the fatality of the final sentence. Triggering a powerful disorder of her neural areas. Some kind of a weakening of her vitals. Instantaneously, she has a personality crisis. She's not herself. Brave Clarice. But, fearful Clarice.

Leadership: Can you valorize a strong character trait of yourself, generated by a superior understanding from the interior of a cause of isolation and not from outside of it?

The character of a strong man, in the major outlines of a dangerous situation, functioning based on the model of a consciousness that is its own object of research, imposes itself as a part of the tendency of getting close to the causative factor of the relationship between action and inaction.

Causality, seen as a beginning of a new rule and not as an exception to it, is the content of determination that needs to meet very specific conditions in order to happen, conditions such as: "If you're not there at the right time... in vain you will be there some other time."

Such a man proceeds to attempt to counteract the negative effects of his phobias, shifting his attention from what he doesn't know, towards what he does know. And vice versa. The superior understanding that isolation gives you in an unstable space, one of tensions, pressures, risks and threats, is that you are forced to rely only on yourself, without comparing yourself or competing with others, without contradictions and artificialities, without others judging you.

Because, in the context of lack of proper understanding of the situation you depend on, the question arises: what can you become if you fail to accept your purpose of balancing yourself inwardly by opening up to the authenticity of experience?

Leadership: Can you feed your conscience by assuming an overwhelming reality, knowing that any attempt to prove yourself stronger requires a certain rule of choice between different emotional reactions?

A strong character trait can make room for "a way out" and can take the place of a trend of self-harm, if you know how to properly care for your own conscience and fuel it with the attempt of assuming a reality that demonstrates once again that the path you've taken is the best one for transitioning from one position to another. From the position of the defeated, to that of the winner.

Some emotional reactions definitely change the character of the human being: astonishment and frustration, fear or ecstasy. Be careful how you relate to them in any situation.

To value a strong character trait, generated by a superior understanding from the interior of a cause of isolation and not from outside of it, requires first of all to try out something new, with a certain risk factor, which causes the sensation of wandering and loss of self. And to not extend your state of being affected any longer, create a new trap, a new incertitude and begin to move toward it.

The biggest asset of the strong personality is the emotional reaction you have with your own life in the context of a heartbreak that should not discourage you, because through it you do not seek to be alone forever, but only for a short time and with the purpose of knowing yourself as someone else, more willing to mature through challenges, than to obey completely to the will of your surroundings.

The test of character is a spontaneous and unconventional approach to overcoming any phobia, summarized as follows: between the state of passivity and the state of determination is always the capacity of placing yourself above what you do not know.

A Lamb Lost In The Depths Of Darkness is the man who knows how to test an uncertain situation, simulating an entry into a framework full of suspense, full of emotions, to be sure he is truly ready to face the real challenges of his transformation from temptation to the impulse of creating new ways of acting.

A Lost Lamb In The Depths Of Darkness (I)

On September 14, 2013

Establish a correlation between your two faces, without letting your reason be strangled by some coordinates enforced by external forces.

Clarice Starling managed to find the murderer known as Buffalo Bill. She even reaches his home, the cursed place of horror. She feels her life is in danger, alone in the depths of the darkness producing the most terrifying dread, freezing her drive to do something constructive. The necessity of maintaining a toughened material composure against the extraordinary environment surrounding her imposes courage above the normal limits, supplying an energy that tends to run to its lows.

The weird force, which tries her from a subtle angle, surrounding her, almost paralyzing her in this unprotected area, changes position in an annoying way, thus widening the variation coefficient of tension. Terrifying, this force emits vibrations with different and more accentuated intensities, gives shivers and heart palpitations accompanied by a strong indisposition.

Suddenly, everything gets a somber connotation. The inability to tolerate the feelings of inhibition and frustration depresses Clarice. She seems surprised by an abundant flux of heat which tends to destabilize her vitals. This flux enhances the transfer of the energy which stirs blood molecules, triggering a rise in blood pressure. The brain goes into a state of inert thinking which weakens the capacity to react. Cerebral energy reaches a maximum in intensity, triggering a fast wear and tear of the senses.

Leadership: How do you assess the need to understand yourself during an experience of imminent danger, when everything that manifests as sensitivity has the potential of a "declining identity" consequence?

The probability to fall in the middle of the unknown, unable to find the optimal way to avoid the danger (equivalent to the inability of your own personality to express itself freely), it entails the existence of an increased incidence of the reference event to which you partake. This fact places your judgment and your emotions in the situation to suffer a defeat, sometimes a catastrophe. In certain circumstances, leadership becomes quite troublesome, very difficult to treat.

Leadership, as a favorable means of getting out of this unknown that doesn't ask for the permission to sabotage yourself if you're not careful enough, can divide all the convictions you represent, sensitivity, or the emotional and psychic comfort. And reason requires certain flexibility in creating a relevant and correct image of who you truly are in these moments. Because the reason for a different vision of yourself is the main component of change, ensuring a correct vision which doesn't allow you a firm grip in defending a non-performing model of being, and the necessary dedication in order to put it into practice.

Declining your identity in a situation of danger, when you are firmly convinced that there is only one way out (the unforeseen courage), is similar to trying to compare a plum with a cactus: you must gain from an experience of enjoying a pleasure in pain, surrounded by the feeling of being helpless in a hostile environment.

Leadership: What position do you take in perceiving a borderline experience between life and death, in connection with an eventual cause that cancels any attempt to transform yourself into a meaningful form of reality meant to make sense of the individual trajectory?

I fondly remember the words of Victor Hugo: "What man has not entered, at least once in his life, into this dark cavern of the unknown? None of the acts of his conscience had been final."

Through this he draws attention to something that can't be ignored, granting leadership a certain function, that of previewing your truly representative personal image with an extremely unclear resolution of a suffering that can be multiplied endlessly. Leadership is a permanent process of autocorrecting the judgment errors that could create a mental block in moments of fear and uncertainty. Hugo lets it be understood that getting away from the area that raises problems and creates hesitation is beyond the narrow vision about yourself which has been created by a mind tormented by inner struggles.

Nothing makes you more uncertain than a kind of battle with an unusual character, adopted without a prior analysis to the impact it has on you. You end up struggling in the inertia of inaction and your own inability when the processes and stages of the "heat wave", exemplified by those negative thoughts with pour incessantly through your mind aren't avoided. And leadership cancels itself automatically if you struggle between your own suspicions and your own strengths.

It would be wonderful if you followed this advice any time you closely experience that weird feeling, that untamable shiver owed to a badly defined identity: "Open your eyes wide in order to refresh your profoundly cobwebby vision. And to make clearer and clearer the horizon surrounded by a think mist."

Leadership: Can you overcome the limitations of pain tolerability in relation to the transformations that occurred after the events that marked you through their very impact?

The stimuli coming from a foreign environment are taken by sensory organs. And the more powerful and frequent the stimuli, the quicker to overcome the limits of thought and reason. If these limits aren't overcome in relation with the transformations that have occurred after adopting certain quick and non-fundamental decisions, then you won't be able to ensure the avoidance of a conflict with yourself.

And thus, the two opposite sides, your two faces, the brave one and the fearful one will threaten each other directly or indirectly, leading to the destruction by sacrifice of your reference position. This position works continuously, if the guiding needle of leadership, which validates your reactions and superiority, is in relation with the two forces.

In order not to touch the quantitative limit of uncertainty, establish a correlation between your two faces, without letting some coordinates set by external forces to strangle your reason. In any situation, the pain you feel can be overcome by the imperative of a higher purpose, that everything that happens to you negatively is a means of stepping on yourself.

The leader is the person who manages his fears with calm and confidence, able to experience the feeling of control over the situation he is experiencing.

A Lost Lamb in the Darkness's Depths highlights the possibility to fall on the negative side of leadership, when you don't want to overcome your own limits under the conditions of an intensification of some supraliminal external, as well as internal stimulus.

A Man Less Known

Engage in a process of reviewing the way in which you measure yourself to unexpected situations, leaving your mark on the evolution of the context of belonging to yourself.

The conversations with Chaplin revealed a less known man to Eisenstein. One day, when Chaplin visits him, a society game is taking place: someone must leave the room, and the others must grade the person, from 1 to 5, for particular qualities the person possesses: intelligence, charisma, humor, etc. Meanwhile, the host grades himself on the same questions. Afterwards the answers are put head to head and the humor rises from the disparity of opinions between the investigated person and the assessments of the others.

It is Chaplin's turn. He exists the kitchen and fills out his form. The others prepare a practical joke: the king of humor receives grade 4 from all of them. "Will he understand the humor of this situation?" Eisenstein asks himself.

Yet Chaplin does not understand it. He feels offended ! "The famous host does not possess enough humor for self-irony – Eisenstein finds funny – thus the grade of 4 proves to be fully deserved." *****

Leadership: Do you have the power to assume the passing and deceiving appearance of a low grade after which you can say "smile", by evaluating an image about people that includes the message of some exclusively personal thoughts about something you know vaguely?

The human privilege of being much more than what he knows he is does not belong to the person who, in an ample explosion of reactions and momentary emotions, leaves the table and breaks away from his one interiority. But to the one who manages to suppress his impulse of measuring up to his self-perception, enduring the shame, guilt or lack of presence of spirit. Moreover, the character of man is closely related to his merit of complying with the contradictory norms imposed by a certain situation.

The perception of self is sometimes like a flower that withers from lack of sun heat. The man who in his small world measures up to that undefeated and oppressive state of being, relating to the experience of every passing moment, with an allure of predictability of his own performances, will never manage to manifest himself as an infinitely strong and unbreakable force.

If what the Russian art critic Vissarion Belinsky used to say is true, that only man develops the tendency of being that which he cannot actually be, then in terms of leadership I will adopt a tougher stance, as the main source of a short reflection on the matter, and will say that successful people usually show their personality as being marked by all sorts of flaws.

Such people leave their mark in a negative way upon the evolution of the context of self-belonging, inclined to a certain exigency towards that which escapes their experience and reason, capturing as a primary spring of absurdity everything that is small, ridiculous, unfavorable and vile in every situation. Especially when the truth is hidden behind a fictitious "note" or specifically designed to be against them.

Leadership: Can you build an image of yourself based on the perception of a less familiar or confused situation, to prove that you are capable of launching yourself into bigger challenges?

The more sensible man's nature is, the more inclined it is to represent his own nature on a background of weakness, an unbearable and disturbing one. Being somehow pushed to bash others' optimism, in the spirit of the game of power, out of selfishness and arrogance, out of his actions correlated to fear of losing importance, he becomes whole again only by changing the opinion of others.

Self-irony, like self-esteem, is a process of initiation of pride that must be defeated. To defeat your ego is a power that only a leader can master.

Knowing the conditions and accepting the situations that ease the appearance of the answer to others' suggestions, is in fact, in this kind of life experience – with a scent of learning, a preparation in the face of the perspective of giving up high expectations (a perspective perceived as a threat).

The man who will not have the power to produce this "knowledge-acceptance" assembly, will not be able to make even of himself a reference framework for the progress in accessing the Superior Self, because he will not assume the fleeting and misleading appearance of a small grade after which a "smile" can be placed.

In leadership, other peoples' opinion of you is like an apple that dries out: no one wants it anymore, but everyone is sorry that they didn't taste it at the right time.

A Less Known Man is the successful man whose character and personality prove to be, in completely unexpected circumstances, completely different than those that caught the attention of the entire world. As opposed to what you knew of him.

A Man's Poverty Is Never Unhappy

On April 27, 2012

Try to get to know yourself better in trying to endure the fulfillment of a dream, by silencing the suffering assumed away from the unleashed world.

The day his grandfather had kicked him out he had been a child; now he was a full-grown man. He could feel it. Poverty – we say it again – had taken them. The poverty of youth, when it reaches a threshold, has the merit of driving the will to battle and the soul to high aspirations. Poverty robs material life and shows it in all its ugliness, giving boundless impulses to the ideal life. A rich young man has dozens of brilliant or gross amusements: horse racing, hunting, dogs, tobacco, gambling, feasting, and the like; all occupations to the detriment of the great and tender impulses of the soul.

The poor young man toils for bread and eats sparingly; after he has eaten, all he has to do is dream. He goes to free shows left by God, he looks at the sky, he looks at space, the stars, the flowers, the children, the humanity in the middle of which he suffers, the creation in which his being also shines. He looks at humanity so much that he sees the soul, he looks at creation so much that he sees God. He dreams and feels great. He dreams further and feels good. It goes from the selfishness of the suffering man to the pity for others of the thinking man.

*A wonderful feeling blossoms in him; self-forgetfulness and love for all others. Thinking of the innumerable joys which nature gives, divides them, dissipates them to open souls, and refuses them to closed souls, he begins to weep, rich in thoughts, rich in money. As light enters his soul, hatred leaves his heart. By the way, is he miserable? Not. The poverty of a young man is never unhappy. Every young boy, no matter how poor, will always be envied by an old king, for his health, strength, his brisk gait, his bright eyes, his hot blood, his black hair, his tender cheeks, his rose lips, his white teeth and his fresh breath.**

Leadership: Can you test the maturity of your reaction to life events so that proof of your worth is valid in one direction only – from general to specific?

What is restrictive in the intra-human realm is sometimes presented to us as a form of renunciation of the "altered" past and as a form of projecting a "fresh" future, related to those life experiences that transform you into someone else. Starting with poverty, which can be a virtue or a weakness, could be signaled (in a multitude of existential situations) and the emergence of a new, higher-level fighting hero who is not affected by the complex called "Low self-esteem". He is the fresh future, not the fermented past.

The status of the "New Man" becomes perfectly explicable if we take into account his inclination to dream, to analyze subtle states of mind, extracted from the pleasant moments spent in the middle of nature, to see life in an optimistic way. Basically, everything an unforgettable story needs. The New Man is a lover of nature, not a slave to material things, in that he shows his willingness to live without any pretense of originality and notoriety, but embodying the idea of a hero who has in him a flame meant to also contaminate others with his bravery. Either from the ability to endure his own bondage, which he painfully observes, or from a revolt against what he experienced intensely.

The light of all his knowledge and wisdom is like a poem: it is born more of a deep sadness than of happiness.

Poverty and the soul are amplified by man's struggle with himself, for the glory of God, for the high aspirations of honor, duty, justice, which make the experiences of life not bring him down, but bring him to a high level of spirituality. True spirituality means letting the experiences of life make you aware of the significance of approaching God through the struggle with yourself, so that by transforming pain into strength and wisdom, you can find the meaning of this world.

Here is the definition of Enlightenment: to strengthen yourself in a suffering that you can endure, gradually, thoughtfully, usefully, and thus to know yourself better in the light of God. Don't try to hide the harsh reality with unreal comfort. You are not tougher or brighter if you manifest yourself in the unreal, only in the world of dreams, but it is good to dream that you are someone else, "the man", the exponent of a high spirituality, if you want to strengthen yourself in the reality of God.

Try to know yourself better in trying to endure the fulfillment of a dream through the suffering of living alone for a while, only in this way you will develop certain qualities such as humbleness, patience or humility. You must go through the fire of suffering and doubt, in a grip of iron wills, if you want to know God and if you yourself want to become an Enlightened.

The proof of your value can be valid in one direction (from general to specific) – when you sacrifice the treasures of this world for the salvation of the soul approached from the perspective of a spirituality that seeks the essence of things, not their outward form.

The Poverty Of A Young Man Is Never Unhappy if we consider the story behind his subsequent victory, in a continuous relationship with God. Such a man fully understands the purpose and causes of his success in life only if he relates to the spiritual part of his nature, not to the material part of the world.

And here, I would add what a poet of the great existential anxieties confessed to me last night, because the words of a chosen mind are always like a breath of fresh air in the midst of so many deceptive currents:

"Nicu, my dear friend. A young man's poverty has no hope of being unhappy. For him, life is sometimes a series of losses from too much enthusiasm, sometimes a series of accumulations if he stands on his own two feet. Losses sometimes depend on it, and sometimes it cannot be avoided. Sometimes it's like a shipwrecked man on the shore, but scattering where he has, then he gives what he has. He always feels happy because the bonds of the soul cannot be calculated in percentages. Nothing is inaccessible to the hopes of his soul, he being full of dreams that cannot be broken even by nightfall. His mind is ready for the decisions he makes in the morning with his eyes wide open."

A Man Walks Through Fog Getting Closer To Himself

Try your capacity to overcome the difficult moment of doubt, so that you progress into self-knowledge.

No question can be formulated faster and easier than "why?" And it becomes all the more pressing that you have to answer to it without a doubt, if u can. A symbol of the conscience that initiates the start of struggles, whose restrictive understanding can only be understood by someone who holds the key to its decoding. Only the man that breaks free from the iron grip of intense thoughts and emotions, unstopped from their continuous action, entertained by the thirst to assert himself.

And only this clash of internal forces between the substantiality of the phenomena produces in a chaos stage, only the interaction between tension fields that coagulates in new layers, makes the difference between a winner and a loser. Only the struggle of an amazing experience, testing the constant pressure capacities, offers a person the possibility to open another understanding horizon of the inner world. Only the focused means, coordinated by a sole instinctual will can be significant in the stability processes of its balance.

Leadership: Is the predictability of your development limited by the benchmarks of a short-term decision that has the secondary effect of falling into a victim posture that forces you to confront yourself?

Clarice Starling doesn't suspect the deep implication of her boss's decision in the assigned mission. She doesn't know the true face of things. Her instinct seems buried in that corner of the confusion cemetery, full of judgment errors, where there's no transit fee, that belongs to no one and where all direction is lost.

Basically she is the bait for obtaining information from the only person that could provide precious clues in this delicate investigation, Hannibal Lecter. "A matter of routine," a well placed disinformation that accentuates a negligent personality trait, that weakness people can take advantage of.

Clarice falls in the trap cleverly laid by her boss and feels forced, in order to come out with her self-esteem clean and untouched by sinful pride, by the immense torture of the thoughts of rising to a high professional level to retake, no matter the turbulences felt lately, the investigation. Soon enough, this leads to decisive progress.

Only at this moment, when she feels abandoned in the trapped territory of the great psychologist, Hannibal Lecter, she begins to confront her own mind, with her own analytical potential specific to true knowledge. A victim easy to manipulate, but endowed with exceptional detective qualities.

A man walks through the fog getting closer to himself, to the truth accepted as answer to his struggles. Her boss hiding the truth in all these searches, questions and answers somehow creates a feeling of lack of value. In this case, Clarice's escape is a kind of escape from the rumble of the unknown and the fears, from a horizon with no escape and the repositioning in a horizon of inner rejuvenation.

But at the same time, this kind of mission stirs interest for exploring, escalading a high and sharp peak. Her success would have meant moving forward towards reaching a proper development level, her promotion on a superior step in the FBI division.

Are you prepared to accept the attempt to deviate from the conclusion of a deduction intrigue without diminishing the resistance of leadership in conditions of isolation?

A rejuvenation of the power to understand self, throwing a prudent look over what it means to be "connected" to ongoing external events gives leadership a certain plus, a kind of surprising the essential in people.

By means specific to leadership, used as much as possible to surprise the fragmented existential aspects that truly concern man, not only innovative reasoning and motivations that generate the moral values he cherishes, but also discovering what personal truth really means.

Leadership is similar to the paintings in an exhibition hall; you can't look at it and completely know the "artist" behind the works that carry his name. They disclose only fragments surprised by the painter, brought to life in a personal manner that touched him. But the public never knew them, just as they never knew the man behind them.

If you think paintings managed to capture very well some particular features, it's just an illusion, because it's possible that his mind is ruled by chaos. The existence of paintings is just an appearance that reproduces up front what seems to be permanent. But in reality, what lays hidden and hides a big part of the truth is the character of variable things.

Someone who manages to surprise a person that accepts the absurd and isolation, who manages to win the experience of what lays beyond the existential horizon of a man enslaved by his ego, he can turn leadership into an amplifier of human knowledge.

But at the same time, leadership diminishes its resistance when "accessibility" to human nature isn't maintained in time or is reduced only to measuring its potential. And especially if it doesn't lead to encouraging man's openness towards a stable configuration.

Leadership: Do you have the power to distance yourself from the mediocrity that is indirectly inoculated by the circumstances of a form of response to the stimuli of a form of reality that does not need to be shown, but only to emphasize its essence?

At the opposite side of a leader is his supporter, a regular person who apparently is under the command of an immitigable force. To accept or not this reality? This spirit addicted to the desire to create value, often knows unrest, because of the deep implications of the leader's decision.

The thirst to impose himself, the intrinsic need to know the true face of things and to distance himself from the mediocrity indirectly inoculated in him, and which he hates so much, catches him even more in the iron grip of intense thoughts and emotions. He struggles as a fish on dry land, near the water, living with the hope that a wave of knowledge will intensify again his drive towards an easy to assemble whole – towards fully exploiting his potential.

Someone who wants to know everything, hoping for a decisive progress, but who wavers between "to be" and "not to be" at the leader's disposal, finds himself constrained by the moods and conscience states to escape with his self-esteem clean and untouched by hungry pride, to regain his will to get involved in a game that often doesn't belong to him.

The action of this hard-to-win game is strictly connected to the searches, questions and answers pattern. If he doesn't produce an imbalance in the ability to refuse an order or a task, thus if you have the courage to say firmly and serenely "No." to the leader, then it will give you the possibility of opening another understanding horizon of your inner world.

To walk through fog, not believing exclusively in your art to score goals in the gate of the most accessible opponent is obligatory for participating to a game called "life", having as teammate leadership. It's the moment when you can get closer to yourself more than anything. Or you can get lost in delusions and permanently alienate yourself from the freedom given by touching a proper development level.

A reality that does not need to be shown, but only to emphasize its essence, has as its main correspondent that approach of the humane based on the uncertainty that you tend to neglect precisely because of the underestimation of your own abilities of handling things on your own and to decide the course of a mission on your own.

The essence of a hard-to-accept reality is often an appearance of an admirable vision of your own personality that depends on the degree of reception of a dramatic experience.

A Man Walks Through The Fog Getting Closer To Himself pinpoints that passage through the nebula of self-knowledge. It's a more or less long process through which the leader matures and develops his immunity towards sorrow, fear and doubts.

An old Italian saying tells that if a person never knows pain, they'll remain forever children. "L'uomo non educato dal dolore rimane sempre bambino." Or in other words, a leader that doesn't walk through the fog of self-knowledge, will never reach maturity.

A Man Who Seeks Himself

Evaluate your worldview, experience and science, raising them to highs that you accumulate within you at all times.

Eisenstein looks upon his work and at the same time meditates upon it. But I have reasons to believe that he also looks for himself in his work. He makes, for example, during this period, such a statement: "... and that is why in the genesis of the work, as so often happens, not only facts are reflects, but also the dynamic of the process of creation."

He now thinks more about death. And immortality. He searches for traces of the theme of death in his own work. And he thinks that perhaps, the blind implacability, which fatally moves forward in all of his works, always under a different guise, has now entered his life as well. The heart attack, with the same blind, implacable fatality, besieged him so many times, and now struck him seriously and moves forward, moves forward to mortally strike who knows how soon.

*In these moments, Eisenstein tries to retain every detail that "leaves". He has the sense of time that gets lost, that got lost slipping into the past. He remembers the assertion of an Anglo-Saxon who said he are living as if we have a million years ahead of us. You can live while accumulating time within you, or by spending it rationally, or irrationally, or, in the end, losing it. It is the very feeling he is experiencing. He experiences his drama with intensity. **

Leadership: Can you build a broad culture on the work that your life accomplishes for all your achievements, without getting stuck in trying to retain every detail that "goes away"?

The manifestation of the feeling of communion with broadening the horizons vis-à-vis certain projects and their impact, with a temporal basis, with destructive or constructive states of the self that emanate from the source of creation, often find their echo in slipping towards the depths of the depressing. Or towards the extreme of a high that disqualifies that "to be able to" of the obligation of bearing the weights, presenting itself afterwards under a form of completely unexpected life lessons.

The fact that feelings, erupted from the fire of ambitions and search for new ways of creation, take place between contrasts such as: gravity and cheerfulness, the pleasure of discovering and the displeasure of making your way through the tiresome effects of thinking, can be recognized as one of the primordial characteristics of navigating towards the madness of a game of life. Towards the end of a game dominated from one end to the other by fears and doubts, reflections and meditations.

The work that fulfills the life of an artist is the very theme of a philosophy whose diversity attests and expresses the consciousness of a final purpose that adds value to a thought of the type: "All I wanted was to show what I am."

Leadership, according to the principle "you are what you experience in the game of your own mind", captures the intense sensation you are trying – as an author of a model-work, when you accumulate time within you, spending it rationally, or irrationally, or, in the end, losing it. That is, the sensation of emptiness or fullness that you experience in the journey of meditating in every moment of life.

This model-work doesn't represent, at a stable equilibrium of its composing elements, only the indissoluble synthesis of the idea with form, not so much the image of a remarkable achievement, but rather an absolutely necessary requirement of assessing the vision of life, experience and science according to an accumulation of excesses and errors.

Leadership is the vision that your model experience gives you in terms of determination, discipline, strength and the endurance given to you by the work called "self-observation" in n overproduction signed "Live as if you had a million years."

A Man Who Seeks Himself seeks time and work at the same time, he meditates upon them, in order to surround himself, at a moral and spiritual level, with a protective barrier when he feels invaded by the negative projections of his efforts of completing artistic compositions.

Do not forget that in the genesis of the work, as so often happens, are reflected not only facts, but also the dynamic of the process of creation. To try and create a work, which afterwards can lead you to the brink of madness, is a risky way of understanding your purpose, of constructing and modeling, of evolving and defining yourself according to the details of determining order that "leave."

You can leave behind the excesses and errors, but their consequences remain as a sort of witness of the evolution towards a broader self-knowledge.

A Mathematical Representation Of How The Universe Works

On October 18, 2012

Materialize your desire to impose order and meaning upon the seemingly chaotic nature of existence by embracing the quest to decipher the harmony hidden in nature.

- Don't you understand? This pyramid was built to be in harmony with Fibonacci numbers, Fibonacci squares or the golden number that artists have always considered harmonious. We don't just think it's right, it really is.

Talma looked at the other two pyramids.

- All of them are the same?

Jomard nodded.

- Not. I guess that's special. It is a book that tries to tell us something. It's unique for a reason I still don't understand.

- I'm sorry, Jomard, said the journalist. I'm glad for you that you're so excited, but the fact that these imaginary lines are equal to 1.6 or what you said seems like an even more stupid reason to build a pyramid because that thing you called indicates a hemisphere or a grave in which you will not be buried. It seems to me that if any of this is true, your ancient Egyptians were at least as foolish as they were wise.

Leadership: From the perspective of a visual representation that expands and grows in complexity, is a perfect symbiosis between mathematical order and the apparent chaos of nature revealed to you?

Criticism of unconventional views may reflect our limitations in appreciating the intellectual depth of others.

- Ah, but here you are wrong, my friend, replied the scientist happily. But I don't condemn your skepticism, because I didn't understand what lay before us all day either, until Gage's keen eye helped me find a nautilus fossil. You see, the Fibonacci sequence, transferred into Fibonacci geometry, reveals one of the most beautiful patterns in nature. Let's draw an arc through these squares, from one corner to the other, and join the arcs. He tapped lightly on the drawing. Then we get an image like this:

- There it is ! What does it look like?

- With the nautilus, I risked it again. The man was smart as hell, even if I still didn't understand where he was going.

- Exactly! Imagine what it would be like if I enlarged this image by adding more squares: 21, 34, and so on. This spiral will continue to grow, rounder and larger, becoming more and more like our nautilus. And this spiral pattern is a repeating pattern. When you take the Fibonacci sequence and apply it to geometry, and then apply that geometry to nature, you see this wonderful pattern of numbers, this perfect spiral, that was used by God himself.

Leadership: Do you think that the interaction between the shape of the viewed object and its opening space could be understood as a representation of the aspiration to the absolute in the context of an ideal image?

You will find spirals in the sepals of flowers or in the seeds of pine cones. The petals of many flowers are Fibonacci numbers. A lily has three petals, a cock's-foot has five, a marigold has eight, field chrysanthemums have thirteen petals, some ox-eye flowers have twenty-one, and some daisies have thirty-four petals. Not all plants follow this pattern, but many do because it is the most efficient way to push growing seeds or petals out from the common center. It is also very beautiful. So, only now do we understand what a wonderful thing this pyramid is! He nodded, satisfied with his own explanation.

- Is it a flower? Talma also tried, taking the burden of being deep off my shoulders.

- Not. It had become serious. What we have uploaded is not just a map of the world, journalist. It is not even a portrait of God. It is actually a symbol of creation, of the vital force, a mathematical representation of the way the Universe works. This mass of stone integrates not only the divine, but every secret of existence. It has encoded, within its dimensions, the fundamental truths of our world. Fibonacci numbers represent nature at its peak of beauty and efficiency, a glimpse into divine intelligence. And the pyramid embodies them and in doing so embodies the very mind of God. He smiled wistfully. Here was the truth of life in the dimensions of this first great construction, and all that followed was a long amnesia.

Leadership: Reflecting on the pyramid as a symbol of creation and all of existence, how might this be seen as a representation that transcends the immediate, into a deep connection with self and the universe?

Talma gaped as if our companion had gone mad. I sat down, not knowing what to think. Was it possible that the pyramids were built just to keep some numbers sacred? It seemed foreign to our way of thinking, but perhaps the ancient Egyptians' worldview was different. Was my locket then also a mathematical clue or a symbol? Did it have anything to do with Jomard's strange theories? Or did the scholar read into that pile of stones something that the builders never had in mind?

Through the lens of this mathematical representation transformed into a natural model, don't you find this example to be a perfect illustration of how theory can enrich your understanding of your visual world? In perfect symbiosis with the idea that the natural world is shaped by mathematics, don't you think this can give you a deeper insight into how we can interpret and understand the world around us?

The relationship between mathematics and natural forms, such as the pyramid, reflects the interconnectedness of man and his perceived universe. In fact, the pyramid functions as a symbol of enlightenment and knowledge, suggesting that structure and harmony are keys to universal understanding. Through the pyramids, humanity materializes its search for meaning and order in existential chaos.

Leadership concentrates in its basic structure the following message: "Through order and balance we can access deep knowledge of the world. Through an image capable of enduring over time, we materialize our desire to impose order and meaning over the apparently chaotic nature of existence."

A mathematical representation of how the Universe works is determined by the intrinsic relationship between the cosmos and human consciousness. The pyramid, as a meeting point between mathematics and nature, is a gateway to the understanding of universal laws and allows the possibility to decipher the harmony hidden in nature.

A Matrix Of The Poetic World

Build a new horizon of what you are and what you will always be, representing your position towards the world as an ordinary person released from the trap of a marked existence of inertia.

I was thinking about a return in a time I have never known, but I have always imagined it would be grand, incendiary, filled with inspiration. To a certain extent, because of the need to acquire the most useful learnings and the highest knowledge, because I truly owed it to myself to overcome my complexes and weaknesses. But the key to change could reinitialize only after a short suspension of the present, practically contributing to the rebuilding of a bridge above reality.

Accompanied by the electrifying conviction that the sparkle of inspiration trapped inside of me could ignite the most powerful fire, I started to believe more and more in my logic and reasoning. But they were uncrystallized, in a system that exposed reality and could be used for acquiring, deepening and revising the knowledge I needed for my becoming.

And this powerful fire had only one objective: to pierce into the heart of the matter in order to extract, through a painful surgery, the substantial marrow, the color of a new version of reality, so that the window of time could be opened. Fire is a gateway to integration into a recreated imagination, a form of expression through drawing and literature, with emphasis on handwriting, suggesting the intensity and deep color with which burns the fuel called "revelation".

An incursion into a strange and confusing imaginary, structured according to its own operation laws, would pull me out of the routine I had been used to, awakening the desire to cross that temporary segment of dissatisfaction towards my own unsatisfying results. Altogether, it reintegrated the lively color of time in a single shape, on a single reference surface.

Leadership: How is your personality reflected in the sphere of a reality with deep significance, but does not fulfill you in terms of what you are able to conceive as a credible representation of inner life?

Instead of unlocking the gate of time, I have become its prisoner. I felt I am locked up in a temporary loop, suffocated by a bunch of difficult questions, paradoxes, ambiguities and deviations between meaning and direction. Misunderstandings of causes and effects. Distancing old tendencies, from the existing ones that set apart so much the two regions of the concerned cross-border area. This rose an unjustified fear similar to the question "who could save me?"

I was living with the results of an experiment of accelerating the unusual by absolutizing a browsing experience in a sort of Matrix, in a world of illusion, in a fictional space. Which instead of quickly revolutionizing the way in which I saw the world, it reduced the activation energy of an orientation reaction. What is more, it damaged my possibility to comprise in a positive way, the world's mysteries between the wires of a viable representation.

The Matrix, as an echo of thoughts, is a reality with great profound significance because it provides the coordinates of a form of manifestation of the Ego: "I am afraid of natural things." Seeing things from this point of view, that of a man who knows he failed in the attempt to resuscitate an advanced thinking and to carry through a strange idea, I can say that the fire got out of control and burnt a great part of the Ego tensed with desire and hope.

Somehow, my personality seemed to reflect as a mysterious embrace of deceptive psychology, on the condition of immortality in a world that operates according to its own laws, incompatible with those of the real world. In a single moment I understood everything. I have learned that I can cling to illusions, almost as a float through spatial sequences, common among writers and scientists. But I shouldn't have let them use me.

Leadership: Can you make an exposure of a reality that many do not know too much about, without depending on a place that come apart at any point?

Do you truly owe it to yourself to overcome your complexes and weaknesses? Can the key to change be reinitialized only after a short suspension of the present? Instead of unlocking the gate of time, have you become its prisoner? Are you living with the results of an acceleration experiment of the unusual?

To achieve a bridge over reality means to temporarily create another world in which everything is possible and where any desire can be fulfilled. In writing terms, it means experiencing a "fury of transcendental knowledge" and a "fever of creative intelligence".

Anyone can turn into a block of concentrated creativity energy, a super-hero of experiences of influencing the real, who easily breaks the narrow prejudices and the thinking mechanisms that have no solid truth and authenticity base. But an exceptional man, the creator who knows how to manage his own identity in a complete way, is the one who admits how much he owes it to himself, to his thinking, wisdom and ingenuity (which he must take into account to reconsider his impression, attitude, position on the truths of nature and science).

Or to penetrate the heart of matter in order to extract it, leaving behind a new version of reality by opening the window of time, thus calling total knowledge, inaccessible to ordinary minds, sometimes means to disqualify yourself in front of the ordinary and familiar of a line of thinking. It means to leave the field of knowledge that has been accepted by most, to step away from the standard framed in the key segment of life: the happiness of living the present moment.

How you relate to two worlds, the one created and the familiar one, depends on the metaphor describing the reality that many refuse to accept or cannot understand.

According to the dictionary, the metaphor is a figure of speech through which a common image is replaced with another more expressive one on the basis of a subtle comparison. The metaphor follows both a personal description and a unique interpretation of facts, beliefs, ideas. It generates a positive attitude, inspires a new approach to fiction from the perspectives of possible worlds, and comes in the name of a century of great challenges and visions.

Paulo Coelho metaphorically and accurately expressed a truth: "Look at all the wonders of the world, but never forget the two drops in the teaspoon." Meaning, create a new image for yourself of the area of experience you are living in and look at, but do not depend too much on its "enlightenment".

The world can be a place of thinking about new ideas and horizons through a prior reconsideration of external reality, but at the same time it can be a place that can come apart at any point if you lose yourself in the infinite variety of experiences of unifying reality and imagination. What guarantees the uniqueness of a scientist, beyond the lines in which he expresses his feelings, is the similarity between the "lower world" and the "upper world".

Fiction is the weapon of the Universe against which no world military force can resist, but which few can master to change the coordinates of this world.

The writer is the servant of revelation framed in a virtual picture. Basic premises of depth in the landscape of this painting, born from the opposition between form and background, experience-dream, are the following:

The poetic world is a writer's leadership lesson that helps us better understand the following finding:

Looking beyond that horizon you have "by default" equates to the unconditional acceptance of a new self-image referring to a supratemporal and supra-material being invested with features beyond any imagination.

A Matrix Of The Poetic World is a sum of visions, miracles, dreams and endless stories, fulfilling the function of "producer" of a wider reality, but one hard to accept for the minds bounded by the provisions of the present "it is never good enough."

A Memento Of Forever Lost Times

On December 04, 2014

Integrate in your own thinking the great teachings of science, stabilizing the connection between "faith in a superior entity" and what happens with yourself.

Back to Chateau D'if, the Count of Monte Cristo falls to his knees piously before the remains of the bed that Death used as an altar for him. During detention, Abbé Feria was for him what science is for God in front the Universe.

- Oh, second father, he exclaimed, thou who hast given me liberty, knowledge, riches; thou who, like beings of a superior order to ourselves, couldst understand the science of good and evil; if in the depths of the tomb there still remain something within us which can respond to the voice of those who are left on earth; if after death the soul ever revisit the places where we have lived and suffered, - then, noble heart, sublime soul, then I conjure thee by the paternal love thou didst bear me, by the filial obedience I vowed to thee, grant me some sign, some revelation ! Remove from me the remains of doubt, which, if it change not to conviction, must become remorse !

The concierge held out the strips of cloth upon which the Abbe Faria had spread the riches of his mind. The manuscript was the great work by the Abbe Faria upon the kingdoms of Italy. The count seized it hastily, his eyes immediately fell upon the epigraph, and he read:

"'Thou shalt tear out the dragons' teeth, and shall trample the lions under foot, saith the Lord.'"

"Ah," he exclaimed, "here is my answer. Thanks, father, thanks." *****

Leadership: Do you regulate your sense of value by resuming and re-contextualizing the higher mysteries of science, placing in the forefront of your life the closeness to the spiritual that is required and understood by your return to the past, but primordial?

The superior secret of science is, knowing what to do with what you've learned after you realized who you are. Romanian writer Ion Moja, who understood this thing, adds in the same key: to be able to conquer the darkness, visualizing as expressively as possible the way in which the fluid of knowledge conquers the secrets and discloses things, through suffering and hope – two moods that intertwined lead reason to wisdom.

The secret of science, similar to a body that works through the contribution of its systems, consolidates its properties by going from imperfection to perfection, from darkness to light, or metaphorically speaking, from death to life. We're talking about the esoteric concept "The Awakening of the Human Mind", that very few consciences knew how to understand it and control it in order to have access to a new awakening and to find themselves in the "Wholeness" Theory – through motivated reason forces that, at the right time enforce doing good and avoiding evil. If you don't want to sink deeper in the mud of remorse and doubt, you have to permanently resurrect the flame that warms your soul.

Regulating your notion of value by retaking and recontextualizing the superior secrets of science doesn't mean to fight for an unreachable perfection, but to reduce as much as possible your imperfections by putting into practice, through suitable ways, the new knowledge acquired during your lifetime. That makes you see the world from a different perspective.

Leadership imposed by the presence of a superior human entity, acquires the significance of revealing a new meaning of existentiality, that of discovering the world seen differently in terms of a more comprising knowledge. In an advanced leadership we can surprise the way in which reason manifests, which facilitates the knowledge of reality beyond the human being, beyond the cold bars of darkness and the feeling of vulnerability, by awakening and expanding the conscience that can be followed by an ample mobilization for the construction of a new identity.

Leadership: Can you introduce in the ministry-virtue relationship a mental extension model found in a "multi-link" configuration that encompasses and expresses an "outside" from within the being?

The attempt to better the status of final science user in comparison to a relevant superiority standard or, better said, to a perfection standard constitutes the vision of adding a multi-link mental expansion pattern to the relation servitude-virtue– that leads to the possibility of accessing some continuous training, strength and courage resources. This creates more connections with the full version of your own becoming, which has as terminus point self-knowledge, illumination.

It's all about serving a certain conscience and reason example, forwarded through the significance it grants to the meaning of life, and then, that supernatural virtue rooted in yourself, which gets cancelled through doubts and remorse, if it doesn't constantly acts upon yourself through positive experiences.

A "multi-link" configuration that encompasses and expresses an "outward" from the inside of a being is an inexhaustible totality of science and wisdom which includes God in the plan of existence, subordinating its parts with a pronounced cohesion determined by a common purpose, a connotative language with a relatively autonomous functionality and purpose. It is both an end in itself and a relief of consciousness, a reason that helps you to move forward on the way to things "high", valuable and eternal.

Leadership: Do you fulfill your noblest purpose of sustaining another creature in self-discovery and, together with it, generously offering the gift of the life of a being to carry forward the story of a spiritual fulfillment?

Spiritual science shows us that between death and a new birth, man meets certain entities, and I would add here, through an acceptation that goes beyond the simple meaning, that these two entities once attached and in development, they never separate completely. That voice of the soul, the thought of a much too rich experience that opens new horizons, whose elements wear heavy inspirational accents, is forever imprinted.

The first, superior identity – teaches and guides you through the genius derived from wisdom, by joining to God's spirit, to increase that innate intellectual curiosity to form the competences needed for integration and performance in the first plan of an eternal present. The second, the resistance entity– represents you when you're in search of the way around the drawbacks and constraints enforced by your transformation into a different type of person.

A leader who knows how to look forward but doesn't demonstrate his strength to look behind, hasn't discovered and isn't motivated by the geniality formed with two thirds of the soul and a third of intelligence. What the greatness of spirit and the sensibility of the soul reveal is precisely that trait of personality, which gives its possessor the ability to show their consideration towards those who contributed to his training – to adapt easier to the requirements of a more and more performing leadership.

The experience of deprivation that supplements the emotional wounds with that intellectual power close to the one who truly saves, resembles the sincerity and purity of a being who will gladly say at the end of a life full of meaning and hope: "Thank you, God."

A Memento Of Forever Lost Times encompasses that rare quality of not forgetting your "roots" even if they sometimes grow in an inappropriate climate, but nonetheless, fertile for obtaining a self-imposed superiority, or a superiority imposed by a foreign authority.

Permanently consolidate your "Stem" with new knowledge and teachings of your predecessors, so that your "Treetop" rise high above the peaks of performance and perfection. The essence of leadership can be understood through what passes, but is never forgotten, just like the teaching received from a parent, not just about information, but about the right faith that makes you overcome everything through hope and love.

A Memento Of The Man Destined For Himself

Be the expression of the experience of having your own world, before you can control a series of ideas with free flow, without limitations.

I got home, made myself some food. I was about to practice my cooking skills, when suddenly I spotted on a nearby plate two bunches of those tasty, juicy, fragrant, tender grapes. This proposal, coming from a more attractive, appetizing, pronounced taste, was more convenient than the alternative of a hamburger made in a hurry, yet quite rich in meat, so having a relatively high protein content, welcome for a long-distance athlete.

I stared at the grapes insatiably, measuring them with lustful glances, after the atypical desire to taste a unique, sweeter, softer, calmer experience, even if this experience of quenching my hunger was quite similar to the ability to taste from a significant source of fructose and glucose, basically sugars easily assimilated by the body that can be easily converted into fat.

So, I had to choose between a burger and fries and a fruit rich in vitamins, minerals, polyphenolic antioxidants. Also, I did not try to draw hasty conclusions, to attribute the causality of things that have nothing to do with my presence in a multifunctional space, but I tried to feel only that break from the everyday world, and to amplify it to the point of it turns into happiness, to feel that freedom that only the feeling of good will and absolute freedom gives you.

I chose grapes, obviously. I don't know why, maybe because of the laziness of cooking late, or maybe because of the desire to feel more energized, because the sugars contained in fruits generally give the body the energy it needs naturally. At the same time, I came up with the idea to find, as a justifying fact, the recipe of a dish I passed in the list of culinary experiments, to serve a small culinary artifice, and even more, to invent other recipes, other skill tests to which I could lend my name and thus feel my name imbued with the taste of a truffle discovered by chance.

Leadership: Is your attitude positioned in a stimulating direction an attempt to overcome any limitation of the idea of objective causality throughout the experience of existing as a being who wants to learn more about himself?

Of course, you need to think about every little aspect of the cause that challenges you to think. At one point, I told myself that a better taste than others doesn't make me feel different, better or worse, or different from other people. I'm my same old self, just a little sweeter than a natural taste.

And I think I wanted to get here, in the light of a mystery that took effect on the first act. Any taste depends on a feeling that you know only by experiencing it personally, which you can then fill with a representative content of thought, at hand, and which detaches you from all the notions regarding your previous identities, from the memories brought to you by the feeling of "home".

After all, perhaps the act of thinking is similar to the ability to taste a grape in the late hours: it is expressed through the extremely varied ways of making possible the connection between what is happening inside you and what leaves you with a sweet taste in your mouth (very important for calming and strengthening Qi and blood).

And if I wanted to be better understood, to feel that trust given to my words, to get more easily into the space between the moments when I put my thoughts in order, then I would try to think more in terms of cooking: to use my mastery to combine flavors, tastes and textures, to get a new shade of good taste, a completely new feeling of delicacy and refinement.

To be the expression of the experience of having one's own world means to recognize the opportunity to reflect on a life situation, in the light of the feedback received from one's own formation to represent a reality perceived through a state of mind (or through the image of what you are beyond all appearances).

It is left to you to reflect on the experience of enjoying a moment of deep satisfaction, through a Remisthesyon, an awareness of the nuances and multiple sides of your inner construction, an aspiration to the augmented sources of reality from which you tacitly sip your words, serenity, thought, positive energy. And that means extracting the meaning of understanding and supersensible, operative, useful knowledge, from everything that happens to you, from the core of your feelings, from your individuality, when you prepare something unusual from something sweet.

Surely you will feel the need to enlighten the mind according to the idea of using something that no one would think to use in such a recipe of simple ingredients: the gift of transforming a person who did not like to sit in the kitchen in a person passionate about that place.

A Memento Of The Man Destined For Himself highlights the consequence of an experience he lived through your nature in an enticing setting, at a time when you did not have the necessary resources to explore other explanations regarding what's happening to you or what surrounds you in real life.

A Never-Ending Friendship

On September 09, 2020

Take a look at what led you to who you are today, paying significant attention to the whole story that belongs to you.

I learned something from myself tonight, maybe I learned it many years ago, now I'm just experiencing it more intensely. I learned that best friends not only run 30-40 km a week together, speed or endurance, but they will always be together even if everyone is against them.

The long-distance voter has learned what friendship really means, feeling better the emotional, pure and strong connection that makes you a better person. He never gives up a sincere friendship in any form. It's something rare, precious, long lasting. Something as rare as a barely flowering rose that slowly opens to the new, reflecting self-appreciation and correct appreciation of others. The voter thinks, lives, sees everything from the perspective of speed and endurance. He gets excited before the competitions. He has fears. Sometimes he wins, other times he doesn't. But he always comes back to the group...

He always runs. And runs, and runs, and runs. In any weather. Any distance. At any age. He does not know how to give up ideals, dreams, a philosophy of life, past victories, against fate. He does not know how to give up on himself, because he has learned to be attached to his own physical, mental and energetic structure. Perhaps any philosophy of life begins with the sensitivity of a deep soul, hardened by the flame of pain, or longing for those who are no more.

Maybe this is where the Damascus Rose draws its sap, from the rooting that a sincere and loving soul has over another soul. And the runner, like a rose, is the witness of an existence that wants to be lived fully, absolutely.

Believe me, the strongest emotion that a runner experiences is triggered when, after many, many years of training, he once again sees the few friends who, 25 years ago, when they were children, met on a cold winter night and decided to run together. Maybe the paths of life, so twisted, took them away from the city where they met, where they grew up, where they became friends. Some have families, others don't. But they all became winners in a certain field of activity.

And, at one point, one of us breaks the silence on the mountain, and says with his eyes full of enthusiasm, and with a little nostalgia:

"I'm so glad we all stayed the same... even better than before."

Leadership: Do you trust that everything you experience is part of the ascension of an existence that takes on the memories of other lives, and that your ascension depends on how others see you in your world?

Running is a friendship that never ends. It is a goodbye that leaves you with many smiles and beautiful memories. It is a performance that is reflected even in other areas of activity. We will all meet again every week, every month, every year, until the years lose their number. Attachment is the watchword in running. Maybe, in the end, we will surpass our years, we will surpass any age, we will always exceed our limits. Because memories, friendship and strong character never die...

The course of this road, full of perspiration and resistance, as well as the way of Japanese weapons, is an approach that has two distinct meanings, but somehow linked by a magical reciprocity: it does not accept self-defeat and does not accept the so common "I'm better, better ranked" attitude. When you run, you remember what you feel for yourself, what you are passionate about, what you deserve, what you forgot in the tumult of ordinary life. Thus, you begin to prioritize the feeling of pride, that you are one of the winners, prioritizing in your existence the feeling of start and finish.

Both meanings are acquired by following this path, called Atrynfranidhis, meaning the inclination of the soul towards the noble goal represented by the defeat of infatuation and the abandonment of an Ego crushed by habits and dulled by time. Here we must consider, first of all, as a kind of pillar in the ascent of personal development, the defeat of the inner enemy: The ego full of selfish possessiveness over things, which demands constant attention and exceeds in circumference any praise from the outside.

Such an Ego can play tricks on you when you least expect it.

Running can be a victory if you let the Ego be a release from despair, a release from all worldly suffering, or it can be a defeat if you let the Ego dominate you, consume you, lead your life and destiny, making you look at everything through the lens of regret. He who walks this path (self-defeat) cannot adopt an honorable behavior toward a presumptive external enemy, called "augmented reality", which he will always encounter in a total and true confrontation. Because running, coming in the development of human character, has the possibility of manifesting the observable reality of the potential winner in an excellent stimulator of increasing self-confidence.

After all, I believe that the ascension of an existence that assumes the memories of other lives is reflected in the feelings you experience as an ancient hero, holding a burning torch: the intense effort you make to be unique is directly proportional to what you leave behind.

Leadership can be perceived as returning to a previous existence that decided eternal destiny: you must first prove that you meant something in the past, and at the same time be known in the present life as the same unique, great man.

A Never-Ending Friendship is a difficult running test, transformed into a limitless experience that offers you a lot of life lessons, tears and smiles. If you manage to discover the beauty of every running story, then don't stop...

A New Attempt At Defining Leadership

On August 05, 2016

Place yourself in an order determined by the rules of the distinction you make between the competence of deciding upon certain obligations and the capacity of setting the value of fulfilling those obligations.

First filming took place in the studio on Jitnaia street, quite well equipped for that time. Participants in the filming were actors from the Proletkult theater group, and later, for the mass scenes, both students of the Proletkult studios and working youth from the Moscow factories were used. Filming took place every day. Each time after filming, the crew discussed the work that took place and decided on what was to be done the next day.

During these discussions, Eisenstein asked for more than he was given.

Every time the producers, for example, tried to reduce the number of extras, Eisenstein felt like his appetite for shooting was being limited. In fact, Eisenstein envisioned each scene with great accuracy, looking to put his thoughts into practice during filming. Even when they were faulty. Because from here, from the first film, do critics start accusing him of redundancy. *

Is the quality of your connection to leadership born from that part of you that reacts to that which is conditioned by others, in the same idea of the multitude of perspectives of the concept of identity of your own Ego?

There is a correlation between the role, status and contribution in the deepest layers of guidance and control work, between the artist and his collaborators, which has as a pillar the assumption of the condition of being some noticing type of Creation (reporting any imperfections, presenting their qualities, the advantages of using it).

And assuming the condition of being a part of a noticing type of a massive creation, achieved with consistent support, is the manifestation of the nearest reaction of measuring own expectations and is determined by the following condition: "always ask for more than you are offered".

The director creates his own universe of actors, screenplays, filming, choreography and a diverse range of interpretations through language and action, in a scene lasting the entire length of the film. And that's because he has the power to get in touch with someone who can provide accurate news and information, but especially because he has the ability to put the scenic environment in line with himself.

The concept of identity of your own Ego refers to belonging to a reality that you develop mainly through interaction with the perspective needed for artistic interpretation and fabulation, even if in fact you are surrounded by other orientations, to a different extent from yours.

Leadership is the consequence of this condition. It is an imperative of absolute debt, that of making yourself understood, of placing yourself in a new order determined by the rules of the distinction you make between the competence of deciding on new obligations and the ability to determine the value of fulfilling those obligations.

The part of you that reacts to that which is conditions by others is the voice of responsibility, it depends on these two attributes: the competence and ability that contribute to the development of competence to build a living and possible scenario. Basically, they are interrelated and change after unexpected meanders of multiple levels of creation value, as a consequence of the predominance of that form of response to the attitude of your collaborators towards the creation in question.

What you notice in terms of treating creation, like a Jacob's ladder on which reasons climb up and down, the energies, predominant values of your collaborators, is that not only does their connection to the authentic review you're constantly making count. But more than that, their connection matters that gives meaning to the exigency of being you yourself the result of that creation.

The order determined by the rules of the distinction you make between your competences and the competences of others depends on the essence of the creation you highlight, the tastes of those who invest time and interest in the ideas of your art, their feeling, their ability to insert themselves in the scientific story of your creation.

A New Attempt At Defining Leadership goes something like this: leadership is the mark of a creation whose meaning and purpose are included in the rigor of the imperative: always ask for more than what you are offered !

A New Consciousness For The Truths Remained Silent (II)

Approach the style best suited to your personality by analyzing the concept of "life" as a constituent essence of art.

I was exploring the frontiers of human nature just as a creator aware of his power to pass from one reality to another at the end of each aspiration or vision. It seemed like I was continuously pushed by the effort of crystallization of the purest and always positive thinking. The importance of the philosophy of explaining the real or the things themselves influenced by man consists in the fact that it served as a transition from a factually point of view to a remounted version of the masterpiece called "I love being myself", of which I could talk about endlessly.

Looking at me from the perspective of art justifies somehow the idea of progress of the language of creation. To create something new out of nothing, to match all the elements from which man is built, only in congruence with the need to ensure a particular autonomy, the tendency to find meaning, coherence in his life. To comprise in the action of creative forces, as in an immense fisherman netting, all the emotional and cognitive resources that makes the man "ticking". That makes him live, suffer, love or dream. Which condition him to be what he is.

However, for this, I had to incorporate certain features in his Ego, in the purpose that he assigns himself, so that would appear that does not depend on me. To let him follow his path according to the laws of space, time, of cause and effect. Without infringing his freedom of will in any way of manifestation. Without messing up his values. Without putting esoteric filters around the emotions that are trying him.

Leadership: Can you demonstrate that your style of expressing the most important aspect of life is a breakthrough in preoccupation with experiential realities, from the consideration of a creation that rises above worldly things?

To hear the call of a powerful but fragile man, who clings to his ephemeral passage to Earth, when reality fuses with fiction into a mystery of God. And only then to intervene in his life. To change the direction he wants to go, by trusting his judgment. To awake in him all sorts of sensations, changes in thinking, to endow him with all sorts of feelings, to reinstate his inner peace, like a magician who always surprises the audience with his magic wand.

I realized that anyone can be a God, a creator, an artist who gives birth to craftsmanship and beauty. Like a child who chooses by himself the characters of his toys. Like a game developer. Like a painter, who once choosing his model, may finish his character as he wants, depending on the color tone he uses. Angels without wings. Demons without horns. Beings and things. Destinies and fulfillments.

Life inside art is a permanent struggle between the author and the ideal work. Are we fictional characters? Are we chained in the illusion of the fact that we are self-arbiters of our actions, and whatever way we would choose, still to a predetermined endpoint we would reach? What really separates us of the great mysteries of the world, of life, and universe? Are we just simple creations, or some creative artists?

Leadership: Do you open the way for you to know yourself thoroughly through the laws of creation viewed from the angle of a private life, stipulated in favor of an art that transpose man into another hypostasis?

Every leader has placed at one point in the position of a creator. To complete their creation (a fulfillment of the Ego), to create new recipes for processing the visible reality through which to finish their skills as an artist, as founder of new models of reasoning and new meanings of life. And because this aspiration is not denied in any leader, the art is what remains. The art of being more and more perfect, likewise a painter who is charged with the "beauty" of outside, and then puts it on canvas, for the others could see it too, in order to recognize his value and potential.

The style best suited to your personality will manifest itself in that direction of "creation" viewed from the perspective of exploring your own Ego, which has as meaning and purpose a new perception of reality. Only a dynamism of the boundaries between you and everything related to art, between creation, reality and evolution will succeed in emphasizing the general character of the concept of the quality that you most appreciate in relation to what you experience and use as an experience of enriching intimate revelations.

All these momentary situations, all this continuous chaining of transformations, diversity, quests, discoveries, effects, have the role of helping you to become aware of the image you have about yourself and to make your personality more aware of the need to form a type of man open to overcoming the limits imposed by the evolution of life as a constitutive essence of a particular art.

To protect your private life is to start looking at yourself from the outside and live affectionately from what you know you cannot offer to the world. That means to be on the side of creation that can only be to your liking. It means translating yourself into the image of a Creator who only accepts his own reality as the only way to measure and interpret the art of living in the present and enjoying it.

Leadership, as a form of cultivation of art, claims as a representation clause that version of reality extended infinitely within the creative universe that challenges you to overcome the limits of your self-conception.

The wheels that put in motion your ability to develop yourself, to assemble the puzzle that helps you cope with the change, and to intensify that form of creation that allows you to express your individuality and uniqueness, are given precisely by these alternations that are repeating endlessly. What exactly makes you "tick"?

A New Consciousness For The Truths Remained Silent designates the degree of knowledge of your own Ego that you touch only when you enclose in the action of your creative forces all the emotional and cognitive resources that make you "tick", such as beliefs, images, ideas and attitudes approached from the perspective of your vision of art.

A New Consciousness For The Truths Remained Silent (I)

Manifest a continuous tendency toward self-knowledge, by making from it a pillar of support for your leadership.

I felt a strong desire to carry in me everything of what I was tempted, the science of identifying and discerning all laws, which govern the human existence, the whole manifestation of his perfection, all the psychological and emotional elements that compose it. I was like a Renaissance artist who is trying to create a painting whose composition is conditioned by the death-life opposition available in one dimension of an aesthetic feeling rendered by a line used as a dividing element between what is real and what is imaginary.

With the only mention that the true content was in fact the victory of a thought of the Creator that left its mark on intelligence at all levels of manifestation of life, under the sign of interest in a reality with many controversies.

However, there was a great void inside the small encyclopedia of knowledge that I accumulated. A restriction. An obstacle. A barrier. Like purposely descended by an invisible enemy, by a force that prevented me to perceive in a very precisely manner the world, life, the human nature. Especially myself. I had to deliberately raise it if I wanted to step forward and get some progress towards perfection.

What is hiding the man? I was wondering somehow anxious, as if I had doubted the existence of God, openly challenging me to express my opinion as a man forced to say all that he believes.

Is he hiding the past and the future? The present is still too painful, I fiercely repeated to myself, yet essential, as it is a connecting factor, in full development, the central pivot of a perfect and permanent completion.

With how much meticulousness, I researched and verified my truths, findings, with how much scrupulosity I was pondering over the plans of "creation" aided only by the generosity of my own ideas and prejudices !

Leadership: Do you have to reinvent yourself to a higher level when you have reached the limit of trust in a reality that forces you to stoop to the level of what you are?

Do you know what are the strengths and weaknesses of your leadership? Leadership is the connecting point between you and other people, between what you really are, first as a man, then as a professional, and the image the others have about you. Are not you overwhelmed with a vivid anxiety when you do not know the "parts" that make you notice more carefully?

The actress, Anca Sigartau said: "When you have reached the limit, you must reinvent yourself on a higher level." The limit is expressed by the dissatisfaction that you have towards yourself, which in its turn has a negative impact on leadership, respectively over the other people. It is the great obstacle that blocks your progress. You cannot raise your leadership at a high level; you cannot earn the respect of others, if you are far away from the optimum expected by you and them.

Separating the Ego from the reality you experience by referring to the concept of cause or cause-effect relations, by increasingly breaking this "limit", is a form of hiding yourself, which can trigger depression, for then almost every perception of what it means to be different is deforming more and more.

In leadership you must keep in mind that the true value you produce from what it means to be different turns on you when the cause and effect relation that builds reality does not live up to a drama, meaning the part of sensitivity to remember the meanings of the hazard with the rigorousness of an unshakeable order.

Reinvention regards your relation to a reality that urges you to find out why it is important to see everything that already exists within you, but is not yet used, from new points of view.

Self-knowledge is the most important privilege you must use to convey a unitary image of reality that completes you by experimenting with elevated states of consciousness, such as reconciliation with what is your own or accepting it "here" and "now".

By redirecting the course of your own concepts and ideas about who you are in an exercise of honesty you open the path to a teaching exception: "When you try to anchor the reality that exists only in God you will live that state of peace that gives sufficient weight to the acceptance of the true meaning of life."

To reinvent yourself to a higher level when you have reached the limit of trust in a reality that forces you to stoop to the level of what you are, essentially means having the courage to be yourself in terms of what you are willing to accept following the cause-effect relationship that you decide.

We are daily witnessing to changes. The reality of yesterday is no longer of the present day. And will not be even of the tomorrow. And we must keep the pace with these changes, to accommodate with them. A genuine "perpetuum mobile" we are from birth till death, but a perpetuum mobile that evolves over an ascending spiral.

The power of a Creator's thought is distinguished by the unique configuration of orientation, thought, and aesthetics that you declare to be the most rigorous forms of conversation about a particular subject from which a very captivating picture can be made.

A New Conscience For Truths That Remained Silent derives from the quality of the replies you give only in the situation in which only by accepting an agreement with the concrete reality you can feel confident in what you have to learn to move on to another level of perception of what it means to be yourself.

A New Formula Of The Beautiful

On February 19, 2014

Assign leadership a value connotation that will endure beyond the fleeting trends imposed by a corruptible vision.

I decided then that art wasn't for me. But the painting I was looking at now was different in a way. There were three paintings on display. One of them is a landscape, a slice of everyday countryside. Another showed a woman painted in a strange way, without respecting proportions, that you could hardly say it was a woman. I suppose such a thing can be called art nouveau. I didn't really get what it was trying to say.

But the third painting was my type. It was – how should I describe it? Simple. A lot of space, strange colors that you would not expect. Here and there were blobs of color that didn't seem to mean anything in particular. And yet they did ! I'm not too good with descriptions. All I can say is that you felt the terrible need to always look at that image.

*I stood there, feeling strange, as if something very unusual had happened.

Leadership: Is your initiation of the steps of enhancing your personality based on the image you mold according to what fascinates you?

To seek something new, removing that comfortable banality in which a permanent self-dissatisfaction bathes in, in the huge row of false milestones that doesn't help you know if you are following the correct course towards the integration into a becoming devoid of "roughness", is the first step forward towards transformation.

Initiating the approaches of enhancing your personality is based on the image you mold of what fascinates you, whose roots are obvious through the large spectrum of expectations you have of yourself, through a satisfaction felt subjectively and objectively.

A corruptible vision cannot be a source of inspiration and cannot become reality. It is shaped around an image that has nothing to say and does not change during an operation suite. In other words, it is of no use to admire an image if you do not reflect yourself in it.

Evolution pertains especially to a vision of reconstruction and reform of your personality. And it relates to leadership through that intuitive understanding of the simple reality correlated with the feeling of deep satisfaction.

The value that underlies or directs leadership, comprised as a system of representations in regards to your true identity, can be reflected in the need to know. To be stimulated by a certain dose of inspiration, a certain experience, a series of factors relating to trends of reconsidering the way in which you index each part of the reality of existence.

The ability to inspire others, through new ideas, pushing their thinking into a broader direction, is conditioned by the assurance or promotion of an orientation, training and rehabilitation of your own perspectives. Thus, you automatically step into a position of defending your values, contributing to a deeper sense of identity that animates you and raises your level of enthusiasm – and doesn't empty you of content.

Can you give added value to leadership by developing your personality and its orientation towards creating a concept with its own evolution, identifying new perspectives on the reality you wish to transmit?

The orientation towards creating the a concept with its own evolution, identifying new perspectives on the reality you wish to transmit, results in the imposing of a new type of thinking that has a well determined share in leadership. The beautiful, as a quality of things perceived beyond their conventional matrix, is a value that underlines and directs both leadership and the manifestation forms of your personality to an act of spiritual happiness in the contemplative mind.

Considering your wisdom as an ideal in the shaping of a new model of leadership devoted to its own identity and to the creation of a new formula of representation of its own image of the world and life, you will be able to more actively support that processor of a high-end value called: evolution.

If you intend to you improve your image through a change that is carried out gradually at an individual level, then assign leadership a valuable connotation that will last beyond feeling trends imposed by a corruptible vision – that vision that doesn't conform to your inner authority.

A concept with its own evolution can be defined as: "Look At This Image As It's Your Last".

What fascinates you shapes on the significance you attribute to an image that surprises you by what it includes, by what it mirrors, by what it reveals along the way, by what pushes you into another reality.

A New Formula Of The Beautiful highlights that capacity of creating the beautiful in leadership and that is the prerogative of a personality oriented towards this purpose. The beautiful meaning the novel, devoid of shrillness, which inspires a comfortable calm that vibrates in accordance with the needs and aspirations relative to others.

A New Leadership Orientation

Dare to live through the revelation of a new representation of yourself, without realistically judging the character, qualities and defects of the world around you.

Is he a writer, or is he just Camil? Do you think loving a writer means looking over his shoulder as he writes, resting your cheek on his shoulder? Or should you hug his shoulders, leaving his hands free and allowing him to breathe? Do you think you can even sit down and place your head on his knees, to let him go through your hair with his hand, like through the fur of a faithful dog? Or to sit in a corner, wanting nothing more than to breathe?

If you said that to Camil, he would be laughing or would get angry and would yell at you: "You're a fool ! " Or he would look at you with malcontent as he would look at his fiercest enemy. To love Camil means to disappear when he wants you to, to help him forget that you exist, to melt into nothingness.

To write, you need to feel that there's no one around for a few miles round. It's not about the maid who is indifferent to you. She brings you a glass of water when you need it, or she goes to buy you cigarettes and leaves you there in front of the paper, tormenting, dying, resurrecting, dying and writing, without caring. Is it true that you wouldn't allow it, even if you weren't his wife, to not have a key to come to him when you wanted? Well, after hours of stress, he might want to bring in a random woman, a woman who doesn't ask questions. Would you accept it?

But then what does Camil mean by love? *

Leadership: In order to understand life better, do you have to commute the image of your whole being in the "Stand-By" mode generated by accentuating the feeling of dissatisfaction exercised by the discernment of seeing the weather of the world and the futility of the common man?

The most astute leaders try to reach a state of reconciliation with the role they fulfill, that of giving a sense to life and opening the eyes of others towards higher goals than meeting personal needs. But in order for purposes to correlate with their mission so that their abilities won't be placed in an autonomous region and lose their vitality, they avoid the conflict area with themselves, looking to think objectively, with a clear mind.

The superiority of a leader is not only related to the sustainable exploitation of some skills of intellectual activity, models of good creative practices, innovative and efficient, but is more related to the movement of the discernment to see the transience of the world and the human futility towards destiny. In the certain state, when it's your turn to move, but you have only continuations of intellectual activity which force you to be at disadvantage towards your position of superiority, the final battle is given against the negative thoughts owed to the inability to stand against of moral duty to face the contempt and opprobrium of the people.

In fact, the transience of the world and the futility of man is seen in the way it relates to the meaning of the life of others, whether or not he is willing to attach himself to someone without making him suffer later, without making him feel marginalized, even if he has to judge his character, qualities and flaws with realism. The most serious and last obstacle of a man who has succeeded and could go further with leadership is to cover himself with a form of forgetfulness, to renounce his attribute of the soul through a hypostasis of this kind: "better to retire than to accept a compromise."

A necessary way to understand life is to open your eyes to a world in which you can find yourself more in a visitor's hypostasis than in on of vulnerability (when you cannot recognize your attachment to certain standards, rigors, values).

The "Stand-By" mode refers to a long-term, but not definitive stay at a certain moment in the life that people around you experience as a feeling of separation from the outside world. It means to be perceived as a visitor of an exhibition in which there are not a certain number of paintings of originality and rare virtuosity, but only some exhibits that are worth seeing only once.

In this case, leadership can be regarded as a manifesto dedicated to raising awareness of a state of mind that starts from the feeling of a tragic inner desolation and continues with the revelation of a certainty: that you are not always surrounded by friends, and that what you do must have a higher meaning, such as that of referring to the scientific activity, to the act of creation. So, to be able to live through the suspension of social and emotional relationships.

The "Stand-By" mode of your functioning state doesn't ensure a variety of personal configuration options in the field where you're interested to evolve. Thus, it's pressing to switch on the "Wake-Up" mode, testing your ability to practice an opening towards new self-knowledge horizons.

Focusing on your personal life involves forming a more complete and realistic picture of the content of traits that you are inclined to consider compatible with your will to free yourself from the need for others to validate you for what you are.

A leadership expert drew attention at one point: "If you don't know yourself, how will you be able to accept something you can't change or change what you must in order to become a better leader?"

Before becoming a leader, ask yourself where you're wrong as a man, where you can adjust yourself and where you can find help. To the people around or in the performance of an independent activity? As investigation method for your operation, leadership can shape as an only reference point for evaluating the performances you can cling to in order to intervene in supporting your own defense against moral and psychic erosion.

Do this by identifying and determining, within the structure of your personality, that way of action in agreement with evolution of other areas of interest. That internal fire which makes you sure of yourself when you enter a rough patch of your career, in an alert activity rhythm.

Often, leadership is related to the severe nature and condition of the human being who has to relate to life through the decisions not to act on behalf of other people, but on behalf of an ideal of intellectual and creative fulfillment.

A New Leadership Orientation is about the need to connect to something above and beyond the relationship with other people who can disappoint you at any time through forgetfulness, carelessness, indiscipline or outrageous decisions. It is about the need to connect to a new form of existence: the inner one, marked by a deep initiative in the art of being unique beyond emotional and behavioral barriers. Here I refer, in particular, to the relationship between science and faith.

Can you represent yourself in the middle of the world as a higher being, without identifying yourself with the limiting emotions and beliefs of others?

Of course. By abstracting from the ideological and doctrinal tendencies of social service. One way is to call on the achievements of science, creation and technique applicable to your specialized field. A call regarding the need to increase the influence of science in society.

A New Look For A New Life

On January 17, 2011

Be prepared to serve as a guide for other people, resonating with that reality that would give them the necessary impetus in order to achieve excellence.

I want to draw your attention hereinafter on a pretty important point. And, for that, I will again refer to the movie "Pretty Woman (1990)", which I personally consider an excellent demonstration of leadership.

The controversial businessman, Edward Lewis,hired a prostitute, Vivian Ward, as a call girl. They lived together in a luxury condo, went together to his business meeting for a week. Moreover, thanks to Edward, she entered into the most exclusive salons of the high society. He also taught her how to be a woman with style, how to enter the restaurants and what to order there, how much tips she has to give and when, what she needs to drink with certain dishes, etc. He taught her how to speak properly, in a civilized and decent manner in a select environment.

In many ways, by refinement and elegance, and especially with her amazing beauty, her sensibility and her temperament, Vivian Ward has managed to attract everyone's attention, showing in a very special way that she's more than a prostitute, that she's a high-class woman, with a strong personality, distinguished and lively, with high aspirations and challenging objectives.

Leadership: Is the direction in which you manifest your affection the final form of how you choose to express your thoughts and feelings regarding an ever more decisive affirmation of a belonging to a consciousness that has, at some point and in some place, lost its hope?

In the « X Metamorphoses », the Roman poet Ovidius relates about the famous Greek sculptor, Pygmalion of Cyprus. Briefly, the legend says that Pygmalion sculpted a woman in a snow-white ivory trunk, which he names Galatheea. Although he wasn't particularly interested in women, he gave that statue a beauty that no woman could have from nature. He was so much attracted by that statue that he fell in love with it and asked goddess Aphrodite to give her life. After the statue was animated, Pygmalion married her.

The power of a great love influenced Edward Lewis' life as well. Falling in love with Vivian, spurred by strong feelings for her, he managed to "animate" her, giving her a new "look" for a new life. He served as a guide for her; he reflected a new reality, giving her the necessary urge for the acquisition of a new status and a different future.

Leadership: Is your attitude in front of the image of a reality that insists on resisting you determined by its representative valences?

Do you remember Colonel Pickering from the movie "My Fair Lady (1964)"? He uttered a phrase which would become famous: "Any flower girl can be a lady and any lady can become a flower girl."

The end of the movie « Pretty Woman (1990) » is edifying. Vivian, having that pride and consciousness that she can change, decided to continue her studies and build a career. She reached to the conclusion that she can move forward and rise above her condition – that of a prostitute, and become a "lady". She reached this conclusion after she entered that "sophisticated", more educated world, with a certain culture and manners, especially the culture of money, which was inaccessible to her.

Here's what the charm of a new world can do. Here's what "the hands of an artist", who knows how to emphasize one's personality, can do.

The system of "emotional creation" specific to leadership will remain dominated by the principle of originality and rarity of work, designed by an act of honesty, before everything and all, of unique or relatively high values. He who takes an interest in the great work of the leader, subject to assessment, will perceive some symmetry between the two roles: of determinant in human remodeling and of sustaining factor of unity and mutual love.

Leadership: Is the value of your image defined in direct contact with what is meaningful and alive in you?

The observation on the fact that leadership always features a system of thought that does not deny the existence of spiritual strength should be noted. This science has, independently, a useful value, and at the same time, an aesthetic value by continuously trying to catch reality in special crystallization during unforeseen circumstances, in which the leader acts as a miracle maker.

From this point of view, there should be a distinction between the "fashion" to be an artist of reshaping characters, which some people often confuse, perceiving them as a rendition of Pygmalion's myth as a factor of increasing the quality of interpersonal relationships, social cohesion and personal image.

The two types of fashion concern a solid investment system used in harmony with the opportunities of your own life, whose value is defined only in relation to what you feel, your emotions, but also with what others claim from you. But beyond the possibility of being seen by others as a delightful person, or at the same time, an ignorant of the soul, that escape of what is called fashion heaves in sight.

Unlike what we might be tempted to believe, the two types of fashion would bring some mental and emotional benefits of leadership development, so a stabilization system of the promoted image, whose value is defined in direct contact with what is significant and alive inside the leader. He is meant to perfect his work of art, given that, through the power acquired by the consciousness to retire to himself, taking possession of a self that, once discovered, allows the reformulation of the relationship with others, is guaranteed a unique identity configuration, establishing himself as a source of inspiration and hope.

Does your leadership feature a system of thought that denies the existence of spiritual strength?

Do you have Edward Lewis' gift to enter the scene of people's lives and determine their transformation? Do you have the ability to change for the better the future of those who need support, and then make it become reality? Do you use all of your influence to pave other people's way to self-assertion? Can you give people a new "look" for a new life?

If you're not able to give others a new orientation, it means that your leadership needs improvement. You must have a real skill in developing human relationships, you must "educate" people with an estimable patience and perseverance if you want them to reach perfection.

Change for the better the future of those around you, treat them with affection and esteem, give them the push they need for them to want a radical change in their lives. This is what will give quality to your leadership, this is the thing which will differentiate you from other aspirants to leadership.

The value of your image is given by the aesthetic of building an authentic attachment to the impression left upon you at first sight by a consciousness that no one pays attention to.

A New Look For A New Life is that transformation that produces a great satisfaction, resulting from a change progress, felt by all those who had the ability to move forward, rise above their condition and build a career.

It's the proof of your strength and your desire to change things for the better, it's the proof that you can gracefully enter people's lives and give quality to their transformation. Give people a new "look" for a new life, and they will be stimulated by strong feelings of gratitude for you. If you manage this performance, then they will be able to say about you that you're more than a "wanderer" in their lives, that you're their leader.

Use your power and talent in order to attract people toward positive outcome and performance. Be prepared to serve as a guide for them, resonating with that reality that would give them the necessary impetus in order to achieve excellence.

P.S. A skilled leader can lead to positive change and contribute to building a new « look », not so much physically, but especially in terms of thinking and mentality of people. Success will be on both sides and everyone will win from this positive transformation. But it also depends on... people.

A New Thinking Of Leadership

Start to have regard for the direction of your development, achieving a rapprochement between what you imagine that you are and what you are able to admit that you really are.

I do not understand what I could've seen in others, more than I could've seen in myself, in the case of incandescent imagination, for which reason a secret is germinates, and a discovery is required in-depth. I contrived everything from a desire of something different, such as the eerie closeness to a star shining ceaselessly through modifications of universal matter, through that "nothing is lost, everything is transformed", somehow through itself an illustration of the depth of my spirit of incorporating everything together.

Although inaccessible, I was still a man with broad views, a versatile construction of the type "intelligent driver", under the effect of invisible matter of a system of operation that could be run from anywhere called the Universe. Thoroughness was right for me. The tiniest discovery, accompanied by the feeling of an affective resonance, beyond that permanent state of exhaustion specific to the seekers of untold truths, awakened within me the chance of a new victory at an angle from which I viewed modern science.

Evolution is a consequence of truths not said in time, an unmistakable proof of the meticulousness with which new points of view are drawn on what scientific research can give in a context of the type: "believe in a Creator seen as an entity of your own being."

Being a messenger of a revealing destiny of new meanings and experiences means to think of yourself as a winner in a race with yourself, but in which you can test your limits to the level at which you are prepared to assume a painful choice.

Basically, everything I imagined about the world as an own creation in which no one can penetrate because of the acceptance of what was in my power to change through my evolution was to create a context of free access to a wealth of information that could not have been picked elsewhere and could even guide a scholar in a labyrinth of revelations and profound anticipative visions.

My only concern was about choosing between right and wrong, between good and bad, creating difficulties for others' freedom of expressing their points of view vis-à-vis the relationship with a Creator who allows himself to juggle with thoughts, with moral crashes, with any subtlety of the being, without being affected in any way by the consequences of a nefarious mystification.

The hardest pain of a Creator is to feel no trace of guilt to the accomplished fact, like a writer who shares his thoughts on paper without directly touching the rationality of his readership.

Leadership: Can you put in a favorable light what you experience at a level of an a priori knowledge without affecting compatibility with the precision of measuring the parameter "I am a Universe"?

A physics professor at Princeton by the name of Robert Dicke proposed, at one point, a different theory of general relativity, modifying Einstein's ideas. Keeping the idea of curved space, he added the idea of a field of forces, which led to the modification of fundamental, unanimously accepted equations, allowing for the explanation of other phenomena such as the redshift of spectral lines.

Everything you think in the field of science has the privilege of being challenged, or on the contrary, it can create a context of free access to new existential horizons. What can be considered as a reaction to important events in human life, in the light of findings which confirm the urgency of an appreciable increase of the construction of the décor of transformational effects of knowledge, has its origin in a phenomenology of the depth taken from the perspective of a freedom of borderless self-determination.

An a priori knowledge is the expression of the responsibility of rendering a truth that is intangible, in the background of a world that wants us, as an imperative of the passing time.

The strong stimulating character of the art of transposing yourself in a universe, as far as getting to the core of certain reflections and teachings intended to confirm the axiom that man himself is a small fragment from an interminable code can emphasize your endowment with the power of achieving convergence between what you imagine you are – "a totality" and what you are capable of admitting that you truly are – "a segment of totality".

Induced at a mental level, the feeling of this convergence between "totality" and "a segment of totality", exploring everything that is new and replacing the old that no longer satisfies you rationally or existentially becomes, from this perspective, a land of contrasts, highlighting the oscillating attitude between two competing identities.

First, an identity that discovers itself as sources of inspiration characteristic to a different, much more advanced version of thinking are assimilated. Then, an identity that makes you a prisoner of petty, limiting perspectives.

A creator who thinks in terms of choosing "I am a universe" can be counted as the image of a fascinating space of thought in which truth does not matter much, but only the story he says about his Ego – who must make people exclaim "Wow".

A New Thinking Of Leadership is given by the unity between ideas assimilated by relating to what is unknown and the image you project in the world, depending on the affective resonance and the fruitful appreciation you feel towards the direction of your development determined by the relationship between the two entities: the realist convinced of his truths and the storyteller asphyxiated in real terms by the product of his fiction.

A New Understanding Of God

On January 12, 2009

Miracles can give new meaning to the cycle of life, influencing deterministic views and beliefs in an unexpected way.

I found a long time ago on the Internet the following event , seen as a miracle . It is about a supernatural encounter that will give you a new understanding of Heaven , angels and discerning God 's voice .

In 2004, Kevin Malarkey and his six- year -old son , Alex, suffered a particularly serious car accident . The force of the impact paralyzed Alex and it seemed impossible for him to survive . " I think Alex has gone to be with Jesus , " a friend told his grief-stricken father.

When Alex woke up from his coma two months later , he had an incredible story to share . About the events that happened at the scene of the accident and then in the hospital, how long he had been unconscious . About unearthly music , which sounds simply terrible to the ears of a six - year - old . About the angels who carried him in their arms right at the gates of Heaven. And , the most amazing thing of all... about his meeting and conversation with Jesus .

The Boy Who Came Back from Heaven is the true story of an ordinary boy 's utterly extraordinary adventure . As you see Heaven and Earth through Alex's eyes , you will gain a new understanding of miracles , life beyond this world , and the power a father's love .

Leadership: Do you consider the impact of borderline experiences on your consciousness to be a continuous dialogue with God's intentional perception, in which each "cue" adds value to your worldview?

I believe deep traumas can open unexpected doors to celestial understandings. And stories of survival against all odds can amplify belief in miracles. In any case, the most revealing events can transform our understanding of life and death to the extent of an incredible existential scenario.

The boy's story brings up important themes such as the existence of the divine, the impact of limit experiences on human consciousness, and the possibility of accessing knowledge and understanding through experiences that transcend the ordinary limits of reality. Such occurrences not only stimulate curiosity and faith, but also challenge us to reconsider the way we perceive the world around us and our relationship with the divine.

The supernatural, as encountered by Alex in his critical moments, provides a window into dimensions of existence that usually remain hidden from the human eye and rational mind. Phenomena such as heavenly music or conversations with angelic beings suggest that there are layers of reality that can be explored through the prism of other senses than the known five. This may prompt us to ask whether there are other forms of perception or states of consciousness that allow access to such experiences.

Leadership: Have you considered the possibility of accessing higher knowledge through experiences that transcend ordinary reality, where perception and interpretation come together in a revelatory experience?

The interaction between heaven and earth, as related by Alex, can be compared to the dialogue between the conscious and the subconscious in depth psychology. This dialogue, though often cryptic, is essential to self-understanding and psychic balance. Furthermore, the ability to "hear" and distinguish the voice of the divine in the tumult of life's experiences can be seen as a metaphor for the inner discernment through which we navigate in tune with the emotional and moral complexity of existence.

Limit experiences can clarify the mystery surrounding life and death. Thus, Alex's story is not only the account of a personal incident, but becomes a catalyst for reflections on deep aspects of human existence and the interaction between the physical and spiritual worlds. Wisdom gained in moments of balance can illuminate two of the fundamental questions of existence: Why do we live? and Why are we given a second chance at life?

A visionary must recognize how existential events, anchored by his spiritual context, challenge him to reevaluate the way he perceives and values his own relationship with the divine.

A new understanding of God can only be gained through "miracles", unexpected and incredible events that force us to believe in a force far above the world, above everything we thought we knew. Never will a miracle be more needed than when we feel completely "adrift" in this tumultuous life, and never will we understand the presence of GOD more strongly than when the greatest misfortune has changed into the most unexpectedly great happiness.

Are you aware of how the inner voice guides you in the tumult of life, believing that this is a revelation of your psychic balance, just as the sky sometimes reflects the state of the earth?

A Painting Can Never Look Like Something From Nature

On December 26, 2012

The way you analyze and present your creation depends on how it is received: from up-close or from far away.

Avoid profiles, precise outlines of things. Do not make the outline of your figures a different color than that of the background that borders them, so that there are no dark outlines between the background and the respective figure. But don't forget that in small things you get rid of mistakes faster than in big things.

For example, in small figures one can see neither the faults nor their manner, as they do in large ones; for the little figure being made after the likeness of a man or other living thing, its parts cannot be carefully finished, on account of the great diminution. So it is not completely perfected, and not being perfected, its faults cannot be proved. For example: he looks at a man from three hundred paces away and judges whether he is handsome, ugly, monstrous or like any other; but you will see that however great your effort may be, you will not dare to give yourself a true opinion, and this because of the distance in which man is so reduced that his details cannot be distinguished.

And if you wish to see better the diminution of the man spoken of above, put a finger within a palm of the eye, and keep raising and lowering that finger, until its upper end is below the feet of the figure looked upon, you will see an unbelievable shrinking appear. For this reason, you often doubt the arrival of a friend arriving from afar.

Leadership: Can the thing on which you focus your attention imitate what is in nature, so as to facilitate the revelation of an idea through a comparison with the material world?

And I will tell you something important. A painting can never look like a thing in nature. Many times painters despair that they will be able to imitate what is in nature, their paintings having neither the relief nor the liveliness of things seen in a mirror – although they have at hand colors that, by their clarity or darkness, by far exceed the beauty of light and shadows of things seen in the mirror. They blame their ignorance and by no means the cause, because they do not know it. It is impossible for the painted thing to produce such a relief as to resemble the mirrored thing, although both make use of the same surface, except when we look with one eye.

The reason is that here two eyes see the same thing one after the other like A and B which see M and N at the same time, but cannot occupy M entirely because the base of the lines of sight C is so large that one eye sees the work of the second after the first. But closing one eye like S, the thing F will encompass K – because the line of sight comes out of a single focus and uses a body, so the second one of the same size will not even be seen.

Now, you may be wondering what is more useful: the lights and shadows of things, or their features? I believe that the features of things are of greater use than shadows and lights, because the lines of the bendable limbs are always the same and can never change, while the places and shadows in their quantity and quality are endless.

Leadership must unequivocally state the contours of a notion such as "looking in the mirror" when addressing creation issues or aspects of reality from the point of view of the processes of constituting creation.

A Painting Can Never Look Like Something From Nature, especially if we consider that the object of a painter's attention is the "mirror view" that facilitates a double vision of the surrounding reality, a much larger image of which the spatial dimension is only one component.

A Paradise For Mathilda

Highlight your resources in order to progress, without losing your power of being the master of your own emotions and feelings.

In the movie "Leon: The Professional (1994)" the little Mathilda, of only 12 years old, becomes a friend of the killer, Leon. At her insistence, he teaches her the art of killing and to be "professional". Therefore, she enters into that new world of weapons and murders. She takes the road of no return to "the sublime paradise" of the underworld - falling into the eternal "pleasure" of killing, and of making big money out of it.

For the first time, it begins to foresee the depth of the abyss, in which she was pushed. The life, on which she went, looked more and more like of an outcast. She was not going out than armed. This restless being, gentle and friendly, instead of continually watching over her, had taken the image of a killer, embracing this job with the recklessness that knows no danger or despises it.

At one point, Mathilda starts to do justice by herself, to kill the corrupt police that have killed her family. However, she hits the reality. She falls into the trap skillfully stretched by her victim, being on the verge of death. By miracle, she escapes due to last-minute intervention of Leon.

Leadership: Do you submit yourself to a character restriction that starts with an increased need for affirmation, followed by a repositioning of the meaning of life?

Are you living a prisoner's life? Mathilda took on the wrong way, on which she wanted to go with someone that could ensure a better future for her. However, she did not know for real the world of crime, in which she was spinning, and in whom she was trying to integrate. She wanted to practice a profession due to that she could not learn to live, but to die. She does not know what life of a prisoner is such an existence.

She was not the mistress of her own life, but was subject to a reality led by petty people, in her turn being defeated by her own thoughts of revenge. Undoubtedly, she knew quite a thin slice of humanity and of the highest ideals of it. This is, because no one had offered her understanding, protection, love and kindness in an unconditional way – she had not known compassion, understanding, and forgiveness. All these it would have raised her morale. It would have improved her self-image. It would have refreshed her mind, life, and would have raised her expectations.

Mathilda had added significance to her existence only when she crashed into reality, when she was on the verge of death, only when Leon was killed. The meaning of her life had changed suddenly, being easy to decipher: acquiring a new state of consciousness and an intensification of the desire for better and more beautiful.

Leadership: Do you simplify your conscience, or you hinder it when applying what you know about yourself?

The leadership of quality begins to take shape while improving the image of yourself and the world around you. While, the improvement of personal image cannot be achieved when you refuse to join those beliefs and healthy preferences, on which the true faith and your deepest feelings dictates you constantly.

Along with the "cheapness" of human reality, induced by the poor development of his conscience, it is necessary to consider another specific note of properties in the leadership system – variability – in correct conditions laid down by the emergence of new forms of organizing life, but also with new forms of power, such as the power to light your own life, giving birth to its own happiness and satisfaction.

Variability is that human capacity to differentiate of all that enslaves him through a series of life adaptation processes.

Leadership is designed to serve and please for any period of time, an important role falling on the sense that man gives to his efforts to produce more joy, without transforming reality. If one day he will no longer like this existence based on the meaning assigned to his own "content", man is free to devise another form of power, such as the power to accept what he cannot change, possibly improving also the dimension of his own self by studying his powers, in the context of activities to be performed.

The meaning you give to life is a return to your initial condition, looking at it with the thought of accessing and further coordinating your sensitive side.

Just as the chemist simplifies the countless combinations of the nature, highlighting the elements that compose it - so also you have to simplify your conscience, and not to hinder it, highlighting your good elements, from which is composed your character.

For your conscience to fully awaken, you must oblige your mind in one way or another to stay in contact with the new stimuli for a longer period of time - these new stimuli being activated by the contact with a benefic reality that would do not mark you in a negative way - that reality of your heart, of your good parts, on which you often do not take into account.

Let the good side of you to listen and to judge the relevant and correct arguments that support your decision of not to removing you from your moral value, and prevent it to take into account the negative qualifications that the feelings of guilt are assigning to you. Always be proud of being yourself, be aware of what you know, of what you are, of what you feel, what you think, even when you are surrounded by a strange and negative environment.

Someone said that among the skills, with which nature has endowed us, the first is the force of reason that lifts us above our own passions and weaknesses, and that makes us control even our qualities, talents and virtues.

Hardly trying to rise above our own "intoxication" with negative thoughts and emotions, trying to be better, more gentle, more correctly, more courageous – to finally realize the truth about your own feelings – it will determine your attitude, behavior, and will increase the positive potential of your awareness.

The content you want to add to life is given by the motivation with which you come to an agreement with the image you have about yourself projected externally.

A Paradise For Mathilda highlights the vulnerability of your own being, of your own world of thoughts, desires, feelings and false reality, in which you choose to live.

As a leader you are what you wanted to be, that is your own "creation". This creation depends on education, culture, development environment of your consciousness, on your ability to fit and adapt to your everyday objective reality, on your own will to choose and guide towards a constructive positivism. Creating a fake paradise is something dangerous - both for you and for society - that eventually, it will push you to its edges.

Do you know where you are heading? Are you giving up and admit to fit within a disadvantaged medium? Does your attitude make you not dealing properly when life raises forbiddance to you? How big is the force of your reason? Can you rise above your own passions and weaknesses? Do you have the courage to stand face to face with the truth about you? What does reflect this truth?

A Place Where Space Doesn't Exist (II)

Try to bring a complicated phenomenon up to a level of importance, by taking control over what cannot be expressed except through a negation.

The mystic moment when I became aware of my power of splitting the "real" world into the "ideal" one, with the rapidity of a casual spark of genius, by the very essence of subjectivity that dominated the experience of knowledge of time and space, incurred in trying to personalize the truth beyond nothingness. Around a core of longing for continuance.

The key to the whole charade was the very essence of subjectivism that dominated the experience of knowing time and space, captured by the relativism of a mind that played sovereignly with truths at times grave, at times easy, but always keeping the measure of a faith in God.

Apparently, I lived into an attitude of sovereign detachment against the death of a life and its replacement with another one, dominated by pulsations launched from the secret chambers of my own being filled with an infinite void. I think this was the trophy of humility to my so-called unity.

It was as if I had to remove 100 liters of water out of an empty fountain, and having no way of doing so, I had to improvise a running water network from another power supply that works only through the power of faith. Reality is not a symbol of unity and eternity, but a visible sign of the presence of God in an extended creation for an unlimited duration.

Leadership: How does your personality reflect in the sphere of a reality without profound significance, but which fulfills you in terms of what it can become?

But a long experience in the search of the Mysterious Magic can depart the man from reality, turning him away decisively – in the way a rock can be dominated just by looking beyond the "painting" by a skeptical analysis of himself. The majestic rock that cannot be touched only by the rules of a world that could be the future, always ascending to the strange waves of the unreal, it becomes the beginning of a transformation process of thinking and being into her walk towards new creations.

The Magical Mysterious, as soon as you imagine an accomplishment beyond reach, may be like a work of art that hides details that the painter did not want to portray, or the kind of a constraining mechanism that links the image of the word to the emotion of a secretive disclosure made far away from the eyes of the world.

The reality of this special symbolism, defining a vague reality with unclear boundaries and imprecisely defined content, seems devoid of profound significance, but it fulfills you by becoming the beginning of an endless process of reflection.

Leadership: With what should be filled the space between what you know and what you do not know, putting in brackets the attribute of a second reality, so as to give original features to the universe that represents you?

I strongly felt the attraction of a change which was manifested by thinking, but just as someone thinks of something deeper, into a crescendo of the curiosity measured only by the impetus of an aspiration worthy of Marion Bradley, as if awakened from a revealing dream of the creative perfection spell. The visible was connected with the invisible in many ways.

At one point, I found myself alone in the House of the Future, built by Robert A. Heinlein. Once you enter it you get literally into an infinite vacuum. You try to look outside … nothing. Absolutely nothing. What color is nothing? What form has? The form is the attribute of something. But here there is no size or shape. Not even the black as darkness. It's nothing. A place where space doesn't exist.

The reality that made me wonder which world I belong to was a kind of existence that I perceived only with the spirit, with the Ego desperate for a bridge between the symbols of an abstract idea, the symbols of an inner life and the symbols of an unfinished world.

The space between what I knew and what I did not know, putting in brackets the attribute of a second reality (that of identifying the causes and effects of deeper experiences), had to be filled with different elements of reflection, such as: irreversible time, fatefulness, human actions, life as illusion, all-encompassing death, etc.

Leadership: Can you change your perspective on reality through the perception of what cannot be fully understood and controlled, using as a means of proof the science of symbolism?

The void, space where there is nothing, no form of matter, is not somehow an abstract notion that brings a controversy over your knowledge? However, the void can be examined by a delineation of what constitutes a momentary impression, under conditions determined by the interest of expanding the capabilities of perception over what cannot be understood and fully controlled.

The void is not a physical or abstracted reality, but an inexhaustible resource to interpret certain points of view from a sensitive angle. Vision gains significance through the various interpretations that are given to it, so it should not be localized only on a material level, but rather on a symbolic level. Yes, the void is a lack of content, but at a symbolic level, it can designate the spiritual nakedness, the silence of forgetfulness over endless suffering, the sweet poison of opium, etc.

What is left to be defined after you have used everything you learned over time, containing at first only a negation of what you are going to fundament, it is an approximation of a dimension concerning a phenomenon whose exceptionality and even singularity can be expressed as a symbol or as an unavoidable reference indicating a new guideline.

Fantasy joins the science in an attempt to personalize the truth beyond nothingness, as a model of thinking developed in interaction with an approach over what cannot be expressed. If a statue has the aim of as closely as possible imitating a true human subject, then the scientific knowledge starts from the premise that there is nothing into which to believe.

The great science is found into the voids that you do not know. Or, rather, it is the result of what you get after you have faced an empty space, a framework in which the laws underlying the conviction and credibility take a particular form.

To provide continuity to the science into a search field for answers to the mysteries of life, the world and the universe, means to evolve through a process of thinking transformation towards a higher understanding that finds its creative possibilities into something that cannot be sifted or explained.

A Place Where Space Doesn't Exist is that "something" remained vague in a way or another. But it becomes a force evaluated by its effects beyond what cannot be found out, so through its effects over the knowledge induced by a certain degree of uncertainty.

A man of creation manages to raise before science a new "Jacob's Ladder" having two cases of power - one that attempts to reconstitute a special phenomenon and to bring it to a value of significance, the other by which he annuls the decision of validation of what he believes.

The lyrics of the French poet Guillaume Apollinaire remain genial at one hundred percent, "There are new fires there colors never seen before, a thousand unfathomable phantoms to which reality must be given" The void is nothing as long as it is perceived as a self-existent entity. But, it acquires extended valences when it is assigned with a meaning through interpretation.

The phase transitions of the void signals the successive attempts by which you try to lead a complicated phenomenon up to a level of significance, by taking control over what cannot be expressed only through a negation: "Do not know".

If you want your science to acquire the value of an inexhaustible source of revelation and creation, you must start only with the certain confidence without knowing in advance where you will reach.

A Place Where Space Doesn't Exist (I)

On February 25, 2015

Develop your power of imagination specific to the Creator, focusing on the idea of being complete even outside the space of rationality admitted by your own consciousness.

My intelligence was only waved by the eagerness with which I tried to create new representations of reality. Slowly, life turned into a permanent game of self-defense against the heavy questions that arised unanswered at every step. Exciting. I seemed to be a part of the romantic dream of a universal spirituality by the progressive coordination of the experience of migration towards an establishment of fiction - with its invisible tentacles wrapped around the reason, which would have proved to be so often poisonous. A fact that allowed me to get some autonomy towards science. However, a relatively limited one.

A sort of exit into the truth of the man who makes a leap full of enthusiasm towards the road that brings himself back to the place he had left. What to be? A mirage? Because a ravaging of the spirit crossed by meanings that escape the distinction between truth and symbols are revealed only by entering a parallel world through a temporary cancellation of the time, forming the core of a vortex able to absorb and dismantle it.

The only thing that remained after investigating the analogies between things, phenomena and sensations, between theories and practical applications, was my own story, lived directly into a different framework - among moving windmills, one self-induced by the brain in which were twitching all the fibers and searching for a release, brutally accelerating the activity of neurons almost up to the impossible. I was fixed into A place where space doesn't exist.

Leadership: Do you care about your interest in deepening a reality beyond your appreciation to gaining a new means of expressing an inner truth that only an artist goes through in the rise of his creation?

Still finding me among the meanings in the increasing hearing of the horrid longing for life, I suddenly found myself locked into an absolute of nothingness, swept into a soul of an immaterial world – which has become a memory that insinuated wherever I passed. Just like a treasure hunter who engages in a risky, but challenging road, and finally comes to integrate into a dream that does not exist anymore.

Somehow, I was fascinated by the same beautiful chimera that filled the visions of Cyrano de Bergerac about the other worlds, such that besides the soul and the spirit would be the third intellectual substance, having its own functions and organs. But to breathe a gram of this substance I had to let myself guided by the nature of the perceptive experience. And to accommodate myself with the power of suggestibility.

The most important inner truth that an artist goes through in the ascension of his creation is the following: what you are experiencing on the search for answers to the transformation of the world you want to understand and where you want to be understood depends on how you react to the eventual correcting of a limp or unfinished creation.

This creation is called representative "Obscure Limited", because in an attempt to test your mind's limits, as well as the deepest fears about adopting new perspectives on reality, asking questions about the role of the imaginary in shaping it, it seems to you that you are going through a narrow territory of action where you have little chance of changing something, a law or some principle.

The easiest, the expression of inner truths can be accomplished by experiencing the ecstasy in front of everything that exists without putting anything in place, through the imagination that truly filters the spectacular, novelty and plasticity of memorable images.

Leadership: Is the décor you want to integrate yourself in wonderfully created in such a way that you can shape the existence of a unique model of showing a theme of reflection on the relationship between "Original and Copy"?

Your transition towards a full stage of knowledge begins with a sacrifice. By an exit from the self and within the ordinary. Even if this may equate to a wandering. The comparison with this wandering can be complemented by hypotheses and special considerations on the experimental reality embodied in a framework of analysis of the philosophy of the mind, with the possibility of extending the understanding of the world or certain unknown phenomena but not obstructing fantasy and action.

As regards leadership, represented by the psychology and the vision of a private person, the essential is not to walk on the footsteps of other predecessors who drowned on shore searching for answers that could help them in understanding the evolution and knowledge of the world. But you have to walk on your own tracks and to avoid the paths of others. That means being original.

The décor in which you must wonderfully integrate yourself to succeed in developing a deeper and more nuanced understanding of the world you are creating and experiencing must be the result of accumulation, intelligence searches and answers. And every element added in addition to pure thought must be an ideal of truth that transcends everything by going to absolute.

Leadership folds perfectly with what you are trying to achieve in your full freedom of being where no one has reached, in terms of discovering a truth that changes something in the world.

Your power of a creator is notable by the fact that you generate a balance between what you want and what you can, between the real and ideal, by substantiating judgments of value through which derive new knowledge from old knowledge. The power of imagination specific to the Creator lies in the transformation of an ideal from reality into fiction, so that the space created from this new perspective takes on proportions and expands, even if in the end it seems that you are dealing only with an illusion.

The man who has the conscience of the originality of the idea and of the conception of change, swinging his intelligence by the fervor with which he seeks to give rise to new representations of the world, of the reality and of the hypothetical, always forwards on a path paved with new perspectives of interpreting daily experiences and emotions.

Being original it means to give up being right in as regards the limits that marks the transition from one reality to another. It means to identify an alternative framework of representing the world and the reality through which to redefine yourself. But not being a copyist, a blind follower of some patterns of thought, perception and action, you will be forced to go beyond the known path for crossing unexplored roads.

The link between originality and diversity is given by the vision you create about a reality where the truths are not only questionable, but it also provokes disputes, by analogy with a world that imposes certain rules that you are not allowed to put under the question mark and must undertake.

A Place Where Space Doesn't Exist designates that exit of the natural course of development, the virile risk assumption to get lost into the mysterious labyrinth of meanings that can enhance the resonance of what it means to be a visionary.

A Prayer For A God

On May 09, 2010

Evaluate well your qualities and limitations, before rasing your leadership on some false pedestals.

Most of the leaders follow their ambitions till their old ages, more than anything. Animated by one thought, by a noble purpose, full of initiative, energetic almost until exhaustion, they act in good faith and a constructive spirit with the intention of building their road to success and keeping their position on the long term, facing manfully all the obstacles that stand in their way.

Tutankhamun, pharaoh of Egypt, also had a great ambition, only one, but as an ideal that went beyond the narrow ideas of that time. That of bringing back in the Kingdom the presence of the divinities. However, ambitions are not quantifiable for those who fail to properly evaluate strengths and limitations.

Leadership: Are you sustaining the illusion by which the predestined destiny of an unfinished "work" is reflected in the future of an infinity of determinations out of which most of the values are above the permissible limits of your level of performance?

The enemies are just as numerous on the inside as they are on the outside. Tutankhamun was feeble like a night butterfly, under no circumstances, an ambitious person with a strong character. This boy was not able even to shoot an arrow and, as one of his generals well said, even if he knew how to shoot it, he would not know where to aim".

Before he was elected king, the high dignitaries thought they were assured that, thanks to his authority, the country will know wealth and glory. They were deeply wrong, because Tutankhamun, on one hand, did not have that leadership material, he was not a determined person, energetic, not a fearless fighter and, on the other hand, he suffered from a fatal evolutionary malady, which lead to decalcification, known as the "glass bone illness".

The cripple god. Could be called Tutankhamun a king? A young man aching hopelessly – a poor cripple, a burden for his Kingdom, an object of reluctance for himself? Could be called king a forceless, a wreck, a remnant of man? Could be called king the one who would shake with emotions when he had to take a decision, one who at merely 19 years old did not have the force necessary to bend an elementary bow, instead of being vivacious like a squirrel, burning with desire of living intensely would fall prey to the fiercest suffering? Could you call a king a man who instead of dominating and controlling thousands of people with an exuberant energy, strength of character and determination, was always helped by someone to keep his balance?

Always leaning on a rood in order to stand upright, or not to tire, such a man can only be dominated by a powerful feeling of pessimism, can only be timorous and haunted by a strong feeling of inferiority, under no circumstance, he could not be penetrated by a powerful sense of duty.

The unfinished work of a leader is the attempt to dominate a world from which he remains literally exiled and whose common space will no longer occur when the moment of assuming his own image will come to him. It can be compared to a physicist's attempt to control gravity by defying the laws of physics.

Leadership: Do you have "sequels" that always bring you in material or positional advantage?

How can a thing devoid of any value determine the value of another? Well, many of those who choose the hard path of leadership, in terms of an integrating vision and a specific attitude, often proposing a new model to go forward, just focus on inner development, but not to their weaknesses due to lack of predictability. These weaknesses are manifested mainly to themselves, in those moments that make them vulnerable to external contexts, generating anxiety, causing others to doubt the solidity of their leadership.

Leadership is the move you make on the chessboard of world, analyzing the usefulness of what you convey, which can often be interpreted in absolute terms as being "against you". The side of leadership that is formed, modeled and practiced on the chessboard of life, includes "the pawn" and the fields it has to cross to the transformation line, meaning to the status of "king". For the king not to be in check, he must have only sequels to bring him in material or positional advantage.

This transition from a good performer to an excellent leader will seem very difficult and stressful, but worse than that, even quite disturbing, you will experience the transition from a state of reference, of high spirits, to a state of panic, especially considering that how your supporters will perform on the chessboard of their success will define their future.

Leadership: Do you answer with an uncalculated "YES" to the principles of using power, even when power is disguised behind relevant formulas of the type: "The dream was and will always remain the essence for which it is worth fighting all the way"?

The terrible illness was fatal to him. While he was going down to the audience room, for an unseen and mysterious reason, Tutankhamun's stick slipped on the stairs, and he lost his balance, falling down the abrupt stairs. His head hit the edge of the column's pedestal. He died on the spot, without getting to say his last prayer.

The one who is meant to have a "body of clay", not one of "light", can never become a complete leader, just like the fluff of a dandelion cannot withstand a strong pale of wind. The dream can never be experienced fully by the man who is not born with inclinations for the great challenges of life.

You cannot trigger a man like this, and he cannot be better miraculously. Such a man cannot be put to sleep, and as soon as he enters a state of trance, in his hypnotic sleep, with his eyes closed, he may guess his illness and, still in his sleep, to order the proper medicine.

There is no medicine for the one who, with body and soul, have not been meant to become a leader. In order to be a leader, you must have both physical abilities, as well as native vocation. For the one he who lacks both of these characteristics, all he has left is to say a prayer or to take another road than that of the leadership.

The principle of using power sounds like this: "Try to march without tiring through the places no one has ever been in, without getting hindered by a shard called bad luck."

Conclusion: The old proverb "the right person at the right place" is valid nowadays, as well. A leader must have the physical and mental force necessary to fulfill his destiny. Of course, some people seem to be born as leaders, seems as if their leadership abilities have been written in their DNA code, but, for most people, these abilities are the fruit of an endless work. However, to promote an unsuitable man to the position of a leader is a big mistake, which will end in a great failure.

Are you building your future on an illusion? Are you always relying on someone to make your leadership burden easier? Are you always using the resources of others to solve the problems which are of your responsibility?

Are you basing your desires on some erroneous beliefs? Evaluate well your qualities and limitations, before raising your leadership on some false pedestals. Remember that you cannot do anything durable on a fragile structure.

A Priceless Gift From Nature

Learn to observe the world and life as deeply as possible, but each time as a different experience.

I look at my garden daily with satisfaction, as a painter observes his masterpiece, as an example of fulfilling an obsessive dream that will never be erased from the memory of life. It is like sweet touch for the soul, like when you listen to the sea, the waves, when you feel the sand burning beneath your bare feet, when the sun and the wind share your smile with you. At any moment you feel like in paradise. In the face of the greatness of nature, emotion is immense.

But not all that pleases you is meant to last over time, the details fade, the details are wiped out. Sometimes I feel only my soul falling into the abyss, a challenge from nature that pushes me to consider it more and more as being a black hole. Sometimes I feel the miracle of another world, other than the one reduced to man and paradise. Everything that delights me and inevitably fascinates me makes me think, I still feel like I'm part of a novel by John Fowles where I have to make a choice between destiny and wisdom.

One of the flowers in front of my window shows obvious signs of fading. The colors of the leaves have lost much of their intensity, the strain seems to be drier, devoid of life, enough to leave me silent when faced with the despair of an artist when he sees his painting torn to pieces, unable to breath, unable to change anything.

I am not immortal either, and only this unsettling feeling ages me a little. I still want to sip from the blessing of being happy in the middle of a time that passes with too much haste.

Leadership: Can you enroll in a way of looking at the fragility of an emotion experienced genuinely and seen as the totality of an interconnected world?

On the other hand, lilies, tulips, daffodils, roses, rhododendrons and hydrangeas are in the process of flowering. Observing their gentleness, I approach them enraptured by them and speak to them as naturally as a painter who, once he stretches the color on the easel, expresses his feelings for the landscape captured on a hot summer day.

An artist's vision is the maximum height of a flower in the garden that prolongs its durability as it is more exposed to natural light. But it can also be a petal of a wonderful flower that the wind takes if it does not contain in it the fullness of the true (spiritual) warmth given by the stability of a feeling cultivated in lyrical fashion.

In leadership, everything begins with the look inside of what's really going on in front of your eyes, like when you want to see the story behind the painting you would describe anyway, it remains an object that time hurts and robs it of its splendor.

Do not be sad because one of your favorite flowers withers, as if you were a part of its identity, a transposition from the language of nature. Rather, try to feel blessed because you have traveled the distance from admiration to affection, equating to a form of undifferentiation, an attitude of closeness, a strong connection between you and a creation of God that time will not transform into nostalgia, neither into an elegy nor oblivion, but will keep it alive in immortality.

A withered flower is the image of a guiding through the reflections of a reality that cannot be known by the mind, but only of the soul.

A Precious Gift From Nature may be a life lesson from which it is good to understand that everything is interrelated and interconnected, but we often choose individualism and separation from the spiritual things when everything seems lost.

Prisoner In A Coming Of Age Novel

Make your own way towards human knowledge, seeking the middle ground between time and following situations that can only be explained as being false perceptions of the present world.

Everything seemed to manifest itself in the fullness of my ability to carry out something that others simply dream about or keep secret, in how bees process nectar, i.e. by way of attraction between an interminable power source – live food for a mind that seeks it, not for one that simply wonders – and the flux of the state vector which drives the beings to action. And yet, why was this responsible obligation blocking my path, desperately clutching to thoughts and emotions foreign to me?

Responsible for this was the deepest of my inner voices that whispered to me all manners of revealing modifications with that finesse of the watchmaker that only has at his disposal, the usual blade of a pocketknife to finish the raw pieces. Constantly, it showed me the middle ground between time and the following of situations that can only be explained as being illusions, false perceptions of a present world, in the name of past and future, squeezed between the vast meanders and spiritual struggles.

I felt somewhat trapped in one of Dumas' coming of age novels. Its hero stirring with finesse and fantastic understanding of the highest and lowest of souls, until the innermost thoughts, until the last cell of happiness or unhappiness. After working with demiurgic powers in all of their complexity, he casted them into inspiring experiences, re-giving them that value that time took away from them, igniting the spark of life into them once more. To others he transmitted the objective lesson of divine punishment according to their degree of fault.

The reversal of this causal determination was constituted by the fear of ascending to a replacement of the power of understanding with the supremacy of the unwritten laws of leadership, in the unrest of searching for affirmation. Full of enthusiasm, I forgot to respect the art of succeeding to be myself a book.

Leadership: Do you start looking for SOMETHING that you want to change in a living world with everything it conceals, like a story narrated in a book that can be read as you try to detach a child from their dreams?

Mastery of what is required to be shown, contained and controlled with the full extent of one's ability, in an area of the causal effect, even in the shifting limits of imagination, is always an experience just as spectacular as the success of stirring souls and producing emotions. But just as questionable and difficult to handle.

Leadership does not separate itself from that which is required to be mastered when you do not know the coordinates of the intersecting points between "the hidden" and "the revealed." In fact, leadership is like a book that as you keep reading you yourself start off on a search for the outcome, you feel the need to analyze your own feelings, compare yourself to your other versions, and not put it down until you finish it. Leadership is a product of your own mind that comes to life as a result of your experience of assimilating other manifestations, just observing them and trying to understand their causes, mechanisms, feelings involved so you can become someone else.

Browsing a book, mastering a large construction that conceals the true face of what is important to assess in a certain pattern of thought, experience, action, and communication, causes a rupture of old canons in certain phases of trying to know yourself better. But it also presupposes a representation of an absolute transcendence of an author on the basis of false or secondary attributes that we often find in simple people, devoid of education, but having "street smarts".

In this case, the individual and his world will be substituted by the so-called empowerment of the imaginary, an experimental knowledge developed by estimating thoughts and emotions in the impressive situations of a character who is confused with the author of the book. Considering the fact that he re-invents himself constantly through a series of roles of relatively low duration, of which only those active and responsible deserve to be approached, we can have the feeling that the present is running parallel to the past or future and things can actually be controlled.

Leadership: Can the topics that can be approached in confirming a truly valuable book turn the desired change into something that happens through an effort to convey some images that only claim to be real?

Thus, he who intends on valuing himself in the image of a man of change, to the full extent of his capacity of understanding all that is happening around him, through everything that was and is hidden and can only be inferred, must first of all make way for the imaginary to manifest itself. The book that builds your personality is an accumulation of exciting topics, addressed through the highest and brightest of experiences that traverse reality to dream. In fact, a book becomes valuable precisely by identifying the similarity between what is past and what is definitive.

The images that claim to be real from a book that keeps you reading with bated breath, absorbing yourself completely in its story, from a book that teaches you to create all sorts of shortcuts to the life you want, may be the result of false perceptions of the present world, in the name of the past and the future, strewn through the thickness of the meanders and spiritual twists. Be careful to incorporate these images in the context of a reality that exists beyond what you think reality is.

By seeking your own path towards knowing a world living through all that it hides, oscillating between the boundaries of imagination or of SOMETHING that you wish to change about it, you will be able to more easily stay within the patterns imposed by a vision that goes beyond immediacy. Man, is a witness of truth, but at the same time a land of illusion and deception that "immediacy" cannot identify as being a determinant of stability or of its potential of evolution.

You cannot grasp an outstanding world with reason and soul alone, following through the numerous direction of investigation that come to the extension of this red thread of destiny called effect (through knowledge and discovery, through experiment and by monitoring the depth of the feelings that accompany individuals) only if you add to your ponderings regarding meaning and order, the consciousness of a discrepancy between facts and reality. But, thus, the well-deserved imagination can resemble more of an illusion. Be careful what you trust in !

Leadership is a book that has the patience to reconstitute a world of details by identifying the resemblance between what is past and what is definitive.

Prisoner In A Coming Of Age Novel becomes every aspiring leader who tries to make the link between the world of mere appearances, a world of prejudice, and a world of truth.

If you want to make your own path towards human knowledge, try to find the middle ground between time and following situations that can only be described as being illusions, false perceptions of a present world, in the name of the past and future, squeezed through the vastness of the meanders and struggles of the soul. Can you?

A Quality Of My Genius

On December 19, 2014

Transform your science into a source of utility, selecting and conceptualizing the "landmark" type elements that you have at your disposable in everyday life.

Umbrella. This word is inaccurate, false, hiding the very thing it should reveal. If we cannot name an object, so simple, one we have at hand in daily life, how can we expect to talk about things that truly interest us?

Unless we begin to incorporate the notion of change in the words we use, we will continue to be lost.

My work is very simple. I can to New York because it was the most unfortunate of places, the most disgusting. Fragmentation can be seen everywhere, clutter is universal. You need but open your eyes to see this. People crushed, things crumbled. The whole city is a pile of garbage. It serves my purpose wonderfully. The streets seem to me an infinite source of material, an inexhaustible storehouse of crumbled things.

*Every day I go out with my bag and gather objects that appear best researched. I collected sample in the number of hundreds – from the chipped, to the crushed, from the cracked to the squished, from those shattered to those rotten. What do I do with these objects? Well, I give them names. I invent new words that correspond to these objects. I am never wrong. It is a quality of my genius. **

Leadership: Can you get by means of the science of fragmentation to recognize truths that return the "Height" value to your authenticity?

Science is the sum of what you collect during the learning experience. And leadership is a product of science, composed of principles, concepts and theories understood and appreciated in relation to their purpose – to be applied successfully not only in practice but especially in your own life, and even more so in the model of personal and professional self-evaluation. How well do you fit to a setting offered by your own experience and reason?

On the other hand, the science of fragmentation refers to what you discover in every single thing when you analyze it from the perspective of a deeper reality beyond the ordinary of a close view. Fragmentation starts from the "primordial vacuum" and continues with the unexpected results, giving importance to anything even if at that moment it seems to you to be of no importance, giving any question an epistemological angle to the perimeter of a reality that changes and becomes unexpectedly unpredictable.

The attempt of giving new facets to reality, incorporating the notion of change in the "selections" you use as levers of bringing forth new perspectives, is a form of accepting everything as part of a whole. The whole of a personal creation, designed as a disobedience to the unanimously accepted rules of composition, facilitates the abandonment of what you know and believe in a regular sense, to a new model of thinking, a new form of understanding of the world.

Leadership: How do you assess the compromise between what you think will be the fundamental value of a thing chosen at random and the opportunity for a close focus on it to actually become its strength?

The selections, which can provide you with an absolute feeling of independence, processed in a more complex database, highlights the approaches of particular cases, themes with impact, new roles and situations, doctrine elements, having more hidden contours, difficulty to follow and trace, heavily influenced by subjective interventions, based on a superior understanding of surrounding things.

In this case, leadership becomes more than the value of an agreement between the ideal of the convention between perfection, imagination and performance, that very few artisans are likely to accede in. And these three constants, by associating themselves, can reach the common denominator called "superiority" only through the process of fragmenting data and information coming from the surrounding environment.

Then, through a verification of their coherence, by the eventual recoding of message variables – or more precisely through the prism of distributions of random variables, represented by way of progression and by increasing the flow of messages, along the lines of certain landmarks, can a new "truth" type content can be achieved.

Separately experimenting with each notion of truth, each source of scientific capital, each aspect of life, by means of mental actions – ideas, beliefs – that you feel compelled to do as a response to the obsession of changing something in the configuration of new models of representing reality, produces the much-needed inspiration and wisdom for illumination, as an expression of totality and perfection.

This means, in fact, to get by means of the science of fragmentation to recognize those truths that return the "Height" value to your authenticity.

A close focus on one thing can actually become its strength when the way in which you see and use it gains the accents of a masterpiece of realization of new courses of action.

A Quality Of My Genius prioritizes that personal reference model that incorporates characteristics and concepts, notions and features, subjected to a diversity of interpretations that lead to the development of science. If you want leadership to become a particular form of expression, transform your science into a source of utility, selecting and conceptualizing "landmark" type elements that you have at hand in everyday life.

A Rare Hint Of The Personality

Reveal your deepest feelings, for people to discover the truth about who they really are.

In the movie "Meet Joe Black (1998)" Susan Parrish, daughter of the billionaire William Parrish, carries out one last conversation with the Prince of Darkness, in the person of Joe Black. She confesses him with a deep uncertainty her thoughts. She was afraid. Deep down in her soul she knew that Joe is not telling the truth. For, she felt a wave of bitterness in his voice, as an endless pain, void of any energy, and any spiritual load.

Looking at her with pain in his eyes, feeling her inner unrest, Joe recognized his true nature for the first time, under the impulse of a deep conviction, his true self. Suddenly, he was covered by the most pressing feelings: of guilt, concern, sadness and despair, which became true. His first dominant feeling was compassion; the second a huge gap of nothing, as if would not be mattered the day of tomorrow. The will to fight his own conscience, with his temptations, his own identity, with his own weaknesses, was the great attempt that was given to him, which he did not anticipate, and which he could not pass.

At the end of the movie, the Prince of Darkness, in the person of Joe Black, leaves this world, but not before fulfilling his promise: to bring back to life the real Joe, that handsome young man whom Susan met at the café, and with whom she has fallen in love enormously.

Leadership: What is the basis for your belief that you know the truth about other people around you, no matter what you're willing to try to argue with absolutely incredible views?

Not by thought, but through contemplation and feeling (among people) Joe Black – the Prince of Darkness, was determined to understand, to live similar feelings and a personality closer to that of people. Susan, through her pure soul, by her sensitivity, through her inclination towards spirituality, has aroused in him the sense of justice, of true faith, of true and uplifting humanistic ideas, unleashing a split in his structure of the resistance.

All the people should be awakened and encouraged to redress what they have damaged in the lives of others, or what was wrong in their lives. But how? With feelings. By changing their spiritual condition. Just as Susan did, revealing to Joe Black her true feelings, thoughts and fears, could awaken in him the human feelings, so and you, in order to ease your conscience, to show people the truth about who they really are, you need to reveal your deepest feelings.

The expression of true feelings and emotions – this is the power that defines a man of a nobleness and a great spiritual wealth. Use this power wisely and with a positive discernment, worthy of appreciation. Thus, you will be more reconciled with yourself, and those around you will be always more winning. In order to relieve the positive aspect of your personality, you must engrave correctly in the mind and souls of the other people your own convictions and perceptions.

Leadership: Can your personality convey depth in the struggle between ego and soul, relating to some beliefs and points of view that you must take into account if you want to get out of your mind a truth that obsesses you?

The process of knowledge of the other people is like a weird labyrinth, similar to that game for children in whose complicated graphic you must find the path that leads from the center toward the exit. You could not know it better if you do not understand it, if you do not find the path that leads in the depths of their mind and soul, and if you do not determine them to reveal the negative or positive side of their personality, their best qualities theirs, or, conversely, the less laudable ones.

Just as the better understanding from the patient's side of the disease he is suffering, spectacularly increase his level of involvement in following the treatment - so the awareness and better understanding from the people's side of your deepest feelings will spectacularly increase their level of involvement in the process of changing their personality.

Leadership means judging people and their reality according to the beliefs you have, not according to points of view that invoke any absolute truth. In fact, the beliefs you share will help you understand the importance of what is happening to you, regardless of your will.

What is the belief that all your teaching encompasses? Is your belief to tell the complete and impartial truth? As someone said, the creed is the brief presentation of the teaching that you must create and confess.

A Rare Hint Of personality is the truth that you do not want to detach yourself from, but that you must accept, whether you want to or not. Joe Black's conviction to be honest with Susan was based exclusively on the contempt of that Alter-Ego who had almost replaced his whole being, but who had nothing to do with himself, but with the young man whose identity he had stolen.

Rather than being a devil disguised as a man, it is better to suffer as a free man who is tied to his fate and his deeds.

A Really Great Future Art

On January 15, 2010

Emotional communication can emphasize the cultural and social impact of a work of art.

At that time, the studio was organizing a screening with a first cut of the film. Writers, journalists, leaders of the military navy were invited. The revolutionary Marxist Lunacerski was also present. The Russian director, Sergei Eisenstein, greeted the guests one by one and thanked them for coming. An emotional silence reigned during the projection. When the light came on, the silence was not broken by the usual applause. Spectators sat on chairs dumbfounded with emotion and motionless.

Suddenly, Lunacearski sprinted onto a chair and began an excited speech: "We witnessed a historical cultural event. To learn a new art . From today , the art of film becomes an art really great future... " He spoke briefly, but very nicely. Only then did the applause begin.

Leadership: Do you focus your attention on balance and harmony during artistic creation, so that the moment of historical importance you capture highlights the power of art to inspire the depth of human experience?

The procedure of watching a film involves a careful and detailed editing of the film. The director, claiming ideas expressed in artistic form, uses various tools (such as music, scenery, subtle dialogues and visual symbolism) to obtain relevant information about his characters. It is important to maintain a calm and professional atmosphere throughout the creation, as if everyone were taking part in a historical cultural event. After a first evaluation of the film, all those involved in the cinematographic distribution process can establish an appropriate release and promotion plan, through a pep talk.

The effective and emotional communication between the director and the renowned revolutionary, among other guests, marked a moment of historical importance by emphasizing the impact of film as an instrument of cultural and social change, but also by highlighting the power of art to inspire and to mobilize significant social changes. At the end, the applause started, confirming the profound impact of the event, in that the speech demonstrated the ability of cultural and political leaders to collaborate to generate sustainable changes in society.

Leadership: How can you adjust the process of organizing a historical cultural event to reflect the emotional silence of the spectators?

The process of organizing a film screening includes several distinct stages, from script analysis to editing and projection. In each phase, the teams collaborate to ensure that the final film meets the initial specifications. Detailed documentation is essential to the success of the event, facilitating communication between the various parties involved, such as writers, journalists, and managers. An emotional silence can dominate the room during the screening, reflecting the emotional silence of the audience, who remain motionless with emotion.

Suddenly, a participant may stand up and begin an excited speech : "We are witnessing a historic cultural event. Let's learn a new art . From now on , the art of film will have a bright future." This recognition may come briefly, but its impact will be profound, triggering applause and confirming the importance of this new artistic medium.

Leadership maintains its quality as an extension of the original Creation, only if the Creator becomes the witness of a historical event transposed into an artistic act of great magnitude and significance.

A truly great art of the future derives from that act of creation that moves viewers by capturing a moment of historical importance and presenting it in a profound and evocative form. A successful film can trigger enthusiastic reactions and applause, confirming its artistic importance, and the excitement of the spectators can create an atmosphere of profound silence during the screening of the film.

Large-scale artistic events can strengthen the role of the cultural leader, seen as a witness of a remarkable artistic act that strengthens his role as an agent of change.

A Refined Form Of Exercising Leadership

On February 17, 2020

The titanic dimension of art is the miracle of the visual composition rendered by an intense experience designed in a personal creative style.

I liked the video of Freddie Mercury's "A kind of magic". It is not about the solid and fascinating element of human fantasy, or how the sounds are arranged in such a way that the musical idea sounds like a triumph of science over obscurantism, having a hint of fiction integrated into a particular story. It is about the human predisposition to the belief in the supernatural.

Seeing as how I transposed myself in this parallel universe, unlimited, splendid, full of substance, it is my task to upload the visual representation of the multiple correlations in the video, outside the Vital Sphere of the Common Understanding, with the parameters of a single idea: "Everything that is depicting the sight of an unusual talent is revealed as magic."

A genius creator is an artistic spirit defined by the nature of his relations with divinity. I know, and I am sure of this, that nothing can fit me more in the subtle shift from reality to vision, in a space of transformations of substance, than the joy of victory over chaos and death. Freddy Mercury lives in me, now and forever, in the kingdom of perfection where nothing is left to chance, because his magic is close to the propulsion point of my artistic spirit to the highest heights of Creation.

I also believe that this "Magic" acquires its definitive significance in the power of art to correctly combine science, talent and technology, in the broad sense of the dependence on dreaming and experimentation, that is in the sense of metaphysical investigation specific to controversial creations, in that everything has two possible interpretations. One in sight, the other hidden. Vision and feeling. The first being sheltered by a black fragment, assorted with the modern scenic ambience, the other noticeable only through a sufficiently strong stimulus: the desire to be someone else.

The magic in art is the expression of a burning desire, realized as the action of changing reality in a position of power illustrated as an unprecedented form of expression.

Man desires to be someone else only when he is not satisfied with what he represents in a universal memory, aspiring to something higher than the present can provide. I am convinced that Freddy Mercury's "Magic" has a separate substrate, something that can only be noticed in Borges' works, which at one point wrote:

"Now I am a man among the people. In the waking state I am Professor Hermann Soergel, who handles a file and writes erudite nothings, but at dawn I sometimes realize that the one who dreams is another. From time to time, quite rarely, I am surprised at the small and fleeting bits of memories, which, perhaps, are true."

Leadership: Have you found a way to build yourself, to fill yourself with truths, living at the boundary between "claiming a certain artistic sensibility" and "finding a clue to something noticeable only in living, but not conceptually definable"?

From time to time, I revisit the video. Magic has life, it has sensitivity, it has art, but it is noticeable only on the scenes where the black background predominates. And this intense, surprising, extended magic seems to surround me as well, whispering a burning secret to me, or revealing a truth that is hard for my ordinary mind to reach: "I am forced to bear the burdens of a memory that relishes only on forbidden things, with that fragility of the instant, having to highlight the strange memory of a once noble and uplifting world, close to the secret of metaphysics."

In this case, the line and color are constituted as external signs of a connotation of aesthetic consciousness, hence the need to give a new meaning to the art understood as a way to connect to another reality. It is as if I had found a mystical and rigorous method of waking up an old memory, from a time of my pre-existence. Something urges me to look for other memories to erase this, without knowing that the things I expect are rarely the things I will encounter.

Magic is a clue to something only visible in life, but indefinitely conceptual.

To the extent that the painting prepares to abandon the traditional drawing, focusing more and more on the technique of splash or the technique of air spray, magic cannot give up symbolizing the creator's state of being elevated from Earth to Heaven. Perhaps, however, magic contains more spirituality than the other arts, because it does not change its presentation form in time. The vision and the ideal of the enlightened being are attracted to God by an unknown force that carries after it and the body.

Leadership: Can the identification of your personality with another identity be understood as an effort to perfect an imaginary pattern, capable of reflecting the dogma of human embodiment in the splendor of the unique body of the ideal of being "supernatural"?

I found the explanation. It is clear that the symbolization of magic in art demands a certain coherence of the intermediation between superstition, coincidence and reality. However, I began to understand the things that surround me through the prism of this magic that verifies its secrets through the way in which the compositions of words, images, actions, and other phenomena are inserted into a single theme: "The transposition of the soul into an artistic language". Where does the secret of this high science start from? You can only figure out if you watch the video again and again.

I try to feel the magic, to penetrate it through the attitude of the man raised to the sky, through the mysterious disappearance of meaningful objects: the key of an old trunk, the rings of colorless quartz stone or cards. Everything helps me to levitate through self-mystification through the force of unknown truths. Magic has a special energy. You cannot see, you cannot feel, you cannot touch. But you know it exists, you know it has unlimited powers.

The magician is a God in sight, but very difficult to perceive. And Freddy Mercury wanted such a magician, a model of supernatural causation. At what cost?

Leadership: Are the personality traits that you give to other people's gaze in harmony with the idea that their imagination forms about you in a context of maximum living and transformed into magic?

You will understand the great secret, how to capture the essence of magic, not only if you feel the happiness of being Freddy Mercury, but at the same time if you feel the pressure and fear of it. The excesses of personality are blurred by the aspects of identity duality. Magic should not be integrated into a philosophical or metaphysical concept, but must be experienced to the level of the burning desire of the individual to integrate into a fragmented reality of universes, in the absence of the illusion of awakening to the simple joy of life.

The alignment with the Divine Reality belongs to the enlightened being who understood the spiritual saying: "He who wants to reach the kingdom of heaven must leave everything and follow me." For an enlightened man, magic is a way of withdrawing from the world, in the face of the pressure it exerts on himself, regaining one's peace, confessing one's concerns through the nature of one's relations with divinity. The magician rises from the ground not to frighten the world, but to deceive the ordinary eye with the illusion that "Everything is as he wills."

Freddy Mercury is that very creative spirit-led creator who says: "I am everywhere, but you can only understand me where there is no physical presence." And that being said, he's already fooling you. You're led completely in another direction. Because no one notices the gravity of their words in another piece full of magic: "Inside my heart is breaking. My makeup may be flaking. Another heartache, another failed romance, on and on. But my smile, still, stays on. The show must go on."

Leadership, or the magic of being different from the rest of the world, belongs exclusively to man's need to be above others and above himself, two forces united into one force. But at the same time, leadership is dominated by one constant: the sacrifice of hiding in a lie, in an illusion, behind a curtain that hides a world that is hard to describe, and even harder to experience.

A Refined Form Of Exercising Leadership is distinguished by man's ability to choose, decide and act knowingly as to how to be perceived by the eyes of the spectators, so that his image will not blur the focus of their gaze.

A Reliable Help

On January 31, 2009

Discover your teammate qualities in terms of how you are perceived by others.

Have you read the story of the Wright Brothers? On the night of October 2nd, 1902, Orville, who couldn't sleep thinking of the failure of the first flying prototype, was crushed by a single question: "What if you were to build a vertical tail instead of a fixed tail? Combining the movements of the tail with those of the front rudder, maybe the glider would no longer threaten to fall head first..."

The next day, Wilbur, learning of his brother's idea, thought for a moment, then said:

Orville, I think you're right. Let's try it !

Two days later, the Wrights flew with a glider that was much easier to handle.

The value that you assign to a "work of art" demonstrates the perfect synchronization of the reaction between what makes you feel the calling of a being superior to you and what seems to you to be impossible to achieve.

It is not a disaster if you did not manage to finish your duties after a hard working day. However, if this happens frequently, then you certainly need some help. You will never obtain great results in a short time if you do not find a reliable support to continue the hard work you started on your own.

Team work will allow you to create the things you cannot create on your own. I bet you know plenty of people who failed in their own business or in their appointed jobs, trying to do everything on their own. In a certain way without a loyal, powerful and motivated team, in a long term you will not be able to finish what you have proposed to yourself.

I suggested at one point that we are witnessing a shift from the "collection" of good practices to the "collection" of experiences, which forms a complete leader: the experience of interacting with one's peers, the experience of inner voice and the experience of transformation.

Leadership acquires a dominating position by a subtle reflection of reality, mirrored in the way we use that experience, but also by measuring the stability of connections we create between ourselves and others. So we are going, I think, towards what I call "experimental" art, that art of discovering our qualities in terms of how we are perceived by others – teammate or opponent. If this hypothesis is correct, it also implies other major changes.

Leadership: Can you give a "RETURN TO A NEW ENDING" value to an opportunity, that you had or plan on having, by expanding the field of consciousness on what is missing from an ensemble?

At a rugby game the player hits the ball and initiates the attack by passing the ball to another teammate. On his turn, the player passes the ball to another player while he is running towards the finish line. And so on, by passing the ball from hand to hand, slowly, slowly, the players advance.

Just like in a rugby game your career cannot advance by itself. Certainly, you will need a loyal team who can support you permanently in the activities you display. And in order for you to achieve your goals in time you have to pass to your team members the duties that you cannot do by yourself. It does not matter how talented you are, certainly, you could not fulfil some projects if you do not ask other people's help. This is the reality. Some tasks can be done only through the combined effort of more people.

It will come a moment when you will have to make a difficult choice: to act on your own or to appeal to the help of other persons. I warn you that your choice will follow you for the rest of your life, both for better and for worse.

Are you ready to stoically confront the challenges on your own? Think well before taking the road.

Living with the clear consciousness of the value of a certain "work of art" means enjoying an autonomy that is content with a work whose form of use is decided by someone who defies the definition of what "impossible to accomplish" means.

A Reliable Help is the luck that watches over you at every step, through an idea, a suggestion, or a referral, guiding you towards completing a work that few believed in, a work in which sometimes you do not get any thanks, but it brings you all that your eyes dream or all that your heart desires.

You are endowed with the property of being perceived as a "brother" of great value that defies the definition of what "impossible to accomplish" means.

A Representation Of What Is Hidden From View

On December 05, 2022

How you see yourself in your mind depends on how you relate to a vision that goes far beyond what you can see.

I was at my desk, immersed in an obscure silence that was looking for rest. I wasn't looking around, I didn't seem to be interested in anything anymore. I worked late into the night, until the sound of the cold winter wind penetrated the room, everything took on another dimension, that of a stirring dream in which I seemed to be searching for a missing person, myself becoming captive in a time of not forgetting from a Renascimento Contínuo. And if I were to put my thoughts on paper, to collect my ideas as simple fantasies, a process of contact with my own self, with my attitudes, with my thoughts, with my emotions, this was mainly due to the simulation of a reality that expressed my own creative forces through the prism of the way I related to the universe of my imagination.

And I fell asleep completely, with my eyes fixed on the shooting stars of the words full of metaphors that illuminated my soul in a time of unparalleled mysteries, thinking of what I was writing in a notebook full of thoughts that always makes room for other thoughts.

They were words detached of form and refined terms, spoken through repeated thoughts, but immortalized in a drawing of the heart enlarged to the scale of the entire solar system and transformed into a symbol of eternity, Sanctrisya Ophorum, denoting an incursion into universal memory. Just like this, rummaging through the chaos of movements in a virtual, four-dimensional space, so small that gravity overwhelms everything, beyond which multiple abstract forms of reflection can be glimpsed, my inner life seemed to become more and more accessible, because I had finally found a place in which to retire, a place from where the "Journey of the Word" germinates.

Leadership: Can you perform a gaze reversal quest and bring the outside in without usurping the sovereignty of the inside?

It never happened to me to go so far with my thoughts. It was as if I had crossed an invisible barrier, a demarcation line proposed by a time of returns to myself, always postponed, beyond which I could hardly find the way to what I thought could be a refuge, a way to detach myself from the environment, from any material dimension.

Of course, it was possible to simply wait, to disintegrate the images and messages of the part of my brain responsible for interpreting waves of sound and light, hesitant and intense, like those in a disturbing film where changing frames creates an optical illusion. But that would have meant usurping my inner sovereignty, canceling my reason to exist simultaneously in two parallel worlds.

To understand the universe, or how things are in the endless dream world, you must demonstrate that there is a reality independent of the constructions of the theoretical physicist, or independent of the analytical thinking of the genuine mathematician. It is about a reality of consciousness or of the soul in which the dream is nothing but an event that was or will be manifested, an illusion of three-dimensionality coming from another place, causing a kind of paramnesia: "an illusion of memory in which the past and the present appear mixed up, the real and the imaginary become confused. The subject has difficulty locating a memory precisely in time, or believes he recognizes a situation, place, object, or person that are, in reality, unknown."

Leadership: Can you create a memory-image after describing a vision model that transforms reality into a dream, according to the determination of a figurative context capable of signifying your interiority?

Of course, the usurpation of inner sovereignty is a form of manifestation of a distorted, exaggerated perception of oneself in a reality that is mistaken for a dream. In other words, you become someone other than who you really are, increasing the distance between what you see with your eyes and what you draw in your imagination.

A ray of light entered my heart and pierced my brain at the crossing of the border between two transparent environments, manifesting itself by changing the direction of propagation of a single wave of regret: "I've experienced everything I wrote, but I wrote nothing from the story of my dream". After all, this too is a kind of gaze reversal technique, an extension from the posterior poles of the eyes to the cerebral cortex, allowing a mirage of the unconventional, more or less conscious, to manifest itself as a representation of what is hidden from view, in an underground beyond the limits of the brain.

Is it not so? An unforgettable dream is realized by resorting to a world of the miraculous. And I didn't know if what my vision was showing me, somehow blurring the past and the present, was just a hallucination, a vision obstructed by the canvas of a black-and-white design painting, into which I had unwillingly integrated. Or, maybe I was just part of an image whose distance cannot be seen, because in the horizon of my words lies eternity that only the reader must glimpse. The meaning of this aspect continues to elude me, remaining a kind of enigma of mystical destiny, suspended in an Arabic note at the end of a book in which are reflected, as in an inverted mirror, the instant views of a personalized content profile.

Leadership: Can you determine the length of an internalized reality that gives verisimilitude to an image from which one derives the coherence of a Self that transcends time and space?

A small bit of history can be born from some words proposed by a vision beyond time, inside a dream that found its dreamer in a present that only wants to be eternalized, gathering all the previous experiences in one place, as in a perpetual synchrony. Everything seemed closely related to the fantasies that my words, alone, oriented to reflection, written and collected in the universal memory, could only convey as the language of a ravaged mind struggling to put a little order in its inner life.

I fell asleep with my glasses on, a fact that became a scene of rejection of the imbalance between reality and illusion, and I woke up with blurred vision. What could it be? Everything was happening as if I had sunk into an impenetrable darkness that was lit only by the light of the Godhead. It seemed that I was walking through an endless subterranean labyrinth, without a lantern, just to find out the turns of the depths where I had to grasp.

What was seen could have been different...

One thing is certain: I will never be able to remember the reality of the dream, without coming out of the reality that kept me prisoner in that dream, thus showing how I see things inside me. And even if I am not ready to draw a conclusion now, making words out of different thoughts, clinging to a semblance of objectivity, I will try to look at everything as if I expected to fall asleep again, and in a dream see myself again working in the office, considering that everything is just a pure coincidence.

Thus, I realized that reality is the mirror of an illusion that repeats itself after a while, in another form. Myself being only in search of a spiritual refuge that offers "from the outside" a world that I lack...

To determine the length of an internalized reality is to show how you see things within yourself, as long as the vision that forms a memory-image travels the optical path of a previously lived life or in a thousand such lives.

A Representation Of What Is Hidden From View is reproduced in an image of the self that is repeated in a multitude of other dreams, in turn followed by a Like and a Sigh: "what a shame I have to wake up to reality..."

The Limit Of A Researcher In The Complex Space Of Science

Provide a continuous development for leadership, creating new foundations of the science that is consistent with your personality.

I found myself in a mysterious correspondence with the foundations of complicated metaphysics, but beautiful through its rigor, after the specificity of trying to exercise my right to lead a universal empire. Tireless, I tried understanding the physical and psychological effects of the thoughts that intensely cross the obligation to be the Choice of a more "pragmatic" faculty, using indicators of measuring my progress in the transition between two states: disorientation and awakening.

These were necessary for subordinate objectives, such as the finding of a higher intensity of the dynamics of creation, that I could've been able to determine only through a collation of different interpretations, but which were subject to severe contradictions. Practically, the science I was practicing, the acceptance of a new vision of interpreting and edifying an art without obstacles, the abundance of details and emotions marked by the prolongation of life, was the representation of a reality filtered through a distinct sensibility different from what I was accustomed to seeing.

With subtlety, with the bold daring of a researcher that wouldn't allow themselves deceived by appearances, I approached that intense light of the "Yes", impossibly to modify, which could very well have meant "No". The result of these two opposite forces was a force which, acting as a black hole that inexorably absorbs matter, acts upon the turning point towards a new understanding of science. Was this the beginning of an experience of making knowledge whole?

Leadership: Can you understand your life experiences without taking an attitude of rejecting the belief that everything that is rendered as an exercise of creation results in a profound sense of power?

Like a physicist that, by taking two lead spheres, tries to measure the force of attraction between them, I have tried to put together the pieces of a jigsaw jumble, so as to determine the most powerful, permanent and indissoluble connection between man and his own self. In this way, I've taken, as a user, control of the most efficient "equipment" that participates to the construction of the inner universe of man, to his way of being.

This high efficiency equipment, translated by its unlimited understanding, the singular guarantee of a complete and uniform penetration into the root of human nature, if it were to be used properly it could've distillate mentalities to infinitesimal odds, to transparency, all the way to the essence. The powerful instrument also had the role of facilitating assimilation – it took over and transported in safety conditions towards a complex system of analysis, any type of armament or ammunition, any flammable emotion, any restlessness. Any waggish thought crossing the mind and accepted as an idea. Any vibration. Any manifestation that, going beyond measure, placed man in a tense context.

But I was wrong in many respects. I could not assure the permanence of this machine, I could not precisely measure the actionable and predictable parameters of man's character. For I was turned upside down by the foundation upon which the entire philosophy of young researcher Rulie Karl Frantevici rested on: "Facts without explanation cannot be considered science. But neither can the theory that isn't built on the study of facts be based on experience and it is rather purely speculative – it too, is not science."

Since then I have not been the same. The researched turned out to be, in turn, human. The sense of power that alchemy gave me through the intense training of the mind, through the act of creation, was suddenly canceled by that norm of life that says: "you will always have doubts about what you see and the way you perceive what you see."

Leadership: Can you establish the unknowns in the equations of reality in which your creative power is self-sufficient in relation to a world of concepts well established within you by reference to the temporal succession of the phenomena involved in the transformation of the human being?

At the boundary between the imaginary and the real that constitutes the ideas and beliefs supported by strong combinatorial arguments of TRUE and FALSE, ensuring the development of research underpinning the development of theories, is the creative dimension that articulates a new vision of man, as a result of science. And this vision must always be conditioned by the practical dimension.

Hence the need for as relevant of an evaluation as possible, making considerable adjustments to the estimates and assumptions considered in the test of appreciation or depreciation of the quality of the human subject. Two unknowns fed my fear of failure in the work of creation: the proof of the practice of a philosophy that transforms, enriches and eases man's life, and proves a lucid thinking and an exceptional intuition that translates into something of high frequency with reference to the Kingdom Of The Divine Logos.

The role of scientific research, in the intention of following the way in which thinking reflects to the level of behavior and in the intention of highlighting common patterns from the psychological structure of man is neither to falsify the truth, nor to disappoint through lack of cohesion of ideas acquired and enunciated. But it behooves it to offer an Ariadne's thread, leading, through a maze of various interpretations, to at least one exit. Towards a fixed abutment. Towards determining a model of concepts that can provide adequate resistance to the elaborated points of view, suitable to their share in leadership.

The reality of the specificity of my creation is a profound reflection on the tendencies of metamorphosis in the "New Man" of interpreting the information accumulated in a field that doesn't mean only present, but also, and most importantly, future.

The phenomena involved in the transformation of the human being are related to the development of a mentality focused on the accumulation of modes of expression in a wider framework of creation, configured not only by the freedom of thought, but also by the attestation of the value of life and the price paid so that life can be experienced and be meaningful. An example of the phenomenon would be "remind yourself of your goals but it's your big dream that can really help you work hard".

By developing new conceptions of "Man", embracing with enthusiasm or, more precisely, with a constructive curiosity any unknowns from the equations of reality in which he places himself in, trying to interpret them by relating to what is characteristic of him, you will be able to follow the way in which he develops and consolidates his own thinking.

And this process of research, supported by powerful combinatorial arguments of TRUE or False that prove the validity and poignancy of the findings, is reflected in the relationship between leadership and psychological lucidity.

Leadership: Can you turn yourself into an object of scientific research with the purpose of acquiring abilities of producing a reality capable of smoothening the way towards revealing an eternal truth?

But turning man into an object of scientific research, systematically placing him in the position of a "toy" for those experiments aimed at measuring knowledge and your most accentuated skills, may guarantee a complete penetration into the space of leadership. That breakthrough guided by a mature understanding of the psychological and motivational resorts that may result in your own evolution.

An object of scientific research is intended to represent a reality filtered through the penetrating analysis of a private detective who must find a unique connection between human personality traits and longevity, a connection between an ordered fact and a random fact that can produce a strong reflection on the meaning of someone's existence.

For as hardwoods coming only from certain trees, so too does the essence that individualizes you, the singular variant of your own Ego, cannot be redefined or replaced, it can only manifest itself according to its own configuration. Indeed, you can improve your skills by accessing others' way of thinking, relating to a higher level of consciousness. But you will not be able to mimic or quantify talent by certain canons.

Before being superior to others by better understanding science, be aware of your own limitations. Conduct research on yourself. Try to put together the pieces of that puzzle that defines you. Consider new foundations of sorting your own qualities by reassessing your relationship with experience accumulated throughout time. If you want to ensure a continuous development of leadership, try to create new foundations of science that are consistent with your personality.

After all that I have learned from life, through all that I have written over the years, I can draw a single conclusion in the form of a profound truth: "Who is not able to orient his conscience towards a superior, highly advanced world, will deepen into a total darkness from which he will never escape."

Leadership is the cognitive value of a creation, aesthetically, scientifically, or technically, which embraces an artist's personality in using the means by which an inner truth can obtain a communicable form.

The Limit Of A Researcher In The Complex Space Of Science draws attention to the negative consequences of your curiosity towards everything around you, especially to the laws in a continuous state of change that govern man. Also, prioritize that space of research of the human specific, wider or narrower, that influences leadership the utmost.

A Risky Journey To The Mysterious Realm Of The Assassin

Find the link between cause and effect: that constant of "to be" based on a discernment that sifts the true values of the false ones.

He lived in a system of thinking that claimed to be on the highest peaks of spirituality, but that ignored or despised the most part of the human being's moral reality. His way of thinking did not have in its neighborhood another height, ridge or peak, which any virtue, any guidance, or any positive influence could have investigated his whole cold and empty extent, petrified under a crust of false humbleness. A cold way of thinking, without even a shred of soul, of color, honor, of dreaming, and happiness, taking the form of an alarm clock, used as a means of selecting the future targets.

It could be said that he hated everything that came in his way. Everyone, but especially every old man, provoked him repugnance, an indescribable disgust, as a remnant of hell that distorted his image of the future and the purpose of his life. A strange space between the exponents of a completely and totally different thinking. An inevitable discharge, with all safety, of the direct tension induced by a confused mind, damaging, irrational, totally contrary with the social and human reality.

Anton Chigurh, this was his name, of the assassin, of the determined man, and loyal to his ambitions, who allied with the evil. This complicated and very harsh man, the man for whom life and death were not antagonistic, were not excluding each other, but interpenetrated as a symphony of impulses, of despair and confusion, this man, so hunted by his own limits, was he aware of the chain of beliefs by which he ascended and descended, step by step, until the reprehensible aspects that formed the inner horizon of his spirit?

Leadership: Can you impose an indifferent philosophical acceptance upon yourself, as in the face of an inevitable evil that will justify your attitude of the "maybe whatever is coming come" type?

To such a man, such a structure of judgment, such a player, caught in a constant game of the real with the unreal, you cannot apply the enchanted cure, the healing pill without caring about how and for what it takes the effect.

Typically, the miracle of healing is accomplished only for those who have built their personality on a particular logical thinking, meant to support the recovery of their own Ego. Of the ones that seek the link between cause and effect: that constant of "to be" based on a discernment that sifts the true values of the false ones. It was not also his case.

The spark lit. Anton Chigurh continued to kill, guided by some principles beyond the human being. Did he realize of all what was happening around him, and of everything that fretted inside him?

A mysterious fluid passed through his whole way of being, like a mysterious power bestowed through the illogical spaces that influenced the inner substance of the matter of his personality.

He felt proud and unbending, as the one that passes bravely the bridge of time to enter a mysterious realm. In a barren desert where there is no God or divine law, no marks, no oases of hope. But only two complementary entities: the emptiness and death. *

Leadership: Can you live up to your own revelation of yourself in the context of events that can endanger your integrity by canceling the soul's torment from the projection of hope towards a new beginning of life?

An accurate and complete understanding of the size of your own existence, through an assumption of the responsibility towards the result of your actions is essential in order to maintain the moral balance and the patterns that print a close harmony to your nature. This understanding, this important pawn in the hard chess game of "to be at the mercy of destiny" and "to be at the command of life" can be beneficial for both sides, having positive and also negative results.

Therefore, for a fruitful and significant becoming that aims to be kept in force for as long as possible, and not canceled at the first sign of imbalance, set your "alarm clock" to constantly remind you who you are and where you are going, that would tick nonstop and wake up your impulse towards an unrestrained and ascending progress.

Can you turn from a stone man into a living man? Just like a statue that supports the temporal degradation, your personality may suffer a certain "hardening" a steadfastness of your rational man claims to a level where no virtue, no guidance, no influence cannot change it.

To abdicate of the healthy principles particular to the leader, who tends towards excellence, means to get involved in a dangerous game with harmful consequences. The self-censorship, the freedom of the will must function flawlessly, like a clock scheduled to ring whenever you move away from the "normal" conceived by you during time.

Leadership: Can you keep your focus on excellence through a doctrine that puts the "inevitable" into the forefront of the projection of an inner world that consumes itself?

You can easily transform into an assassin, if not in deed, at least by the aberrant way of thinking, through the tendency of removing yourself of the surrounding world, by denying the fundamental principles governing the relationship between individuals, imposing a "jump" from the idealistic conceptions about life and the expectations from it.

A doctrine of understanding the human being that if cannot find common ground with the doctrines of the others around, presenting a particular composition of values, maintaining a certain pace of assimilating the elements that make up your evolution, is crumbling until disappearance.

An old Chinese proverb says: "If you know your enemy and know yourself, you can win a hundred battles without a single loss." Your biggest enemy is "the assassin" your own system of beliefs that influence your transformation over time, once with the assimilation of certain values that do not mix with leadership and with your guidance.

In leadership, the inevitable is the obligation to respond to one's own reflection on the world and life in the circumstances of an ascension that can at any point fail on the self-imposed path towards achieving your goals.

Do you accept to obey the meanders of a detrimental and unreasonable thinking, in total contradiction with the social and human reality? Are you guiding yourself after some healthy principles, characteristic for the human rational being? Are you aware of the chain of beliefs by which you ascend, step by step, towards "height"? What are the reprehensible aspects that make up the inner horizon of your being?

Analyze the tendencies within each of the axes that make up your character. Collaborate constantly with that strong and deep part of the personality that defines you, without expressing an implicit preference or appreciation of value for the statute of a personality that distorts your beliefs.

Your choice may be conditioned by the fact that the predominant element of your personality is not very well-defined, or, incidentally, is caused by the design of a tougher and a more comprehensive version of the reality. This dangerous tendency is interrupted only if the "alarm clock" wakes you up from the sleep of ignorance and of the inertia in thinking.

The reverse of one's own identity can turn into a stone when you fall into a cold, indifferent character, evolving more and more in the direction of the weakness called: vanity without borders. You become a victim of an implacable destiny, thinking in terms of vanity, as follows: "I feel that I am living in a barren desert where there is no God ! "

The beliefs that raise or break you are closely related to the significance of those events to which they assign a personal note of belonging to a deep and sincere soul that is not canceled in the face of successes or failures.

A Risky Journey To The Mysterious Realm Of The Assassin is a reflection on the values that we consider the best, but that we enslave to some purposes not ensuring the maintenance of a healthy and positive identity.

Just as the impression produced by a picture results in the composition of colors chosen by the painter, so the most revealing element of your own transformation results from a better coordination of the efforts to renovate the beliefs, but also through a closeness of that constant of "to be" based on a discernment that sifts the true values of the false ones.

A Salvation Buoy For All Those Who Are Drowning

Polish your self-knowledge, in order to increase the value of your positive ego.

I remember an important moment in my life, when looking at me in the mirror I said, "I do not care who I am ! I do not care about me ! "

A Spartan desire for self-destruction, due to the diminished capacity of self-outrunning, was storming in me, cold and ruthless. As a man who categorically got rid of the inconvenient ballast of some eternal moral principles, I felt compelled to push further and further, cold-blooded, fast-paced, until exhaustion, the huge ice block of fatality, emerged as if to knock me out.

An internal censorship was blocking the vigilance of my spirit, by removing hastily and imposing any remnant of my insatiable curiosity of knowing, to see what is having inside, more valuable "The Man". A kind of early coldness was flowing with power in me, conditioning any way to retrieve myself, to understand me better. I felt foreign to me, given away, abandoned in the middle of a terrible storm with its proportions, by its unforeseen. Carried back and forth like a sea wave, hit with intensity, and thrown without mercy into the great abyss of myself.

Nevertheless, I was to notice later, this very strange disquietude of the moment, this overwhelming struggle of my whole universe, the inevitable discharge, with all safety, of the direct tension induced by a negative thinking and in contradiction with reality, helped me by a cold analysis, to be more determined, perhaps wiser, tempering the spirit and making it stronger.

Leadership: Can you take on a new perspective on the backdrop of the reflection of your own existence, the boundary between the uncertainty of intentions that animate you and the revealing experience of sharing the thoughts that haunt you?

This nervous tenseness, capricious, unbridled, to which another one perhaps could not resist more than a few hours, gnawed me like a thorn, put my soul, thoughts, and all powers to a hard trial. For an effort so consistently amplified in such a short period of time, demanded a complete attention and an absolute strength, intense, decisively to change the negative aspects that I tend to overlook.

A moment of weakness threw me up of the ship deck of self-knowledge. I was slipping down, like a granite rock, at the bottom of the deepest ocean. The ocean of truth, of consciousness, and inner feelings, of death and spiritual resurrection. I plunged into a state of serious uncertainty, in the extremely cold and cloudy water of disgust, of despair, wandering like a straw on high waters.

The only way to reunite myself spiritually, the only buoy of salvation, was to interrupt the line of thoughts, which stirred me, and to admit "The man" in me, my true opponent. To win the race with me. And to rise up above the angry water, above all that I felt.

The rational man of me, the real man finally has admitted himself.

Leadership: Does the information gained from the experiences and accumulated teachings become a sort of external memory that you can access at any time as long as you have the willingness to understand the specifics of a mind that thinks of oneself?

You cannot be more than you try to obtain from yourself in the moment of thinking, first by sharing the thoughts that trouble you, if the representation that you make of your own reality is not a way of communicating with your own past, but also an explicit construction of identity, becoming a kind of memory of emotions and cognitions.

The "Destiny" of leadership, of the finest art of forming people, of the work of forming the personality, it is hidden behind your own potentiality or incapacity to overcome the moments when you cannot recognize your number one enemy: the man within you. This destiny can disunite, and grind like the soil, which becomes fine sand over time, largely because of a faulty thinking, of the emotions that come to the surface when you do not manage to face the truth, of which you move away because of the diminished capacity of self-outrunning.

The leadership, inextricably linked to the human destiny, of the one, who exercises his influence in the human area, gets value or degrades on the same battlegrounds between you and your own Ego. When you are tormented by strange prejudices, when you do not understand your place, role, level or reactions.

And when in the decisive moments of your life you feel stranger of yourself, appears the danger of leadership's collapse.

Leadership: How can you use to your advantage a knowledge based on the lessons learned from what you have experienced in the world of your own thoughts?

Have you seen how recovers a boat ready to sink? Do you realize that nothing serious happened to it - that somehow, even the longer period when it was on the verge of sinking, has its good parts.

Are you throwing yourself in a moment of weakness of the ship deck of self-knowledge? Or you find a way to better understand yourself, to see what's more valuable "inside" yourself? Do you have the power to get away from the boundless extent of the storm, which narrows your horizons, to redirect your Ego to a better-defined scale of value, and change your attitude? What are the good parts of the period while you were on the verge of getting "sink"?

Perhaps, Friedrich Nietzsche put the point on "I" when he related in his memoirs: "When you look long into an abyss, the abyss also looks into you."

Here is the oversensitive element that you encounter everywhere – uncertainty, alienation, deep crisis caused by the identity loss under the impact of self-consciousness. In the extension of leadership, this abyss represents the mixture of contradictions that resorbs the applied and innovative thinking (which has a special importance for your development), destabilizing the key-stages of the relationship with yourself. Or, on the contrary, through a twist of circumstances, it may be the opportunity to rediscover your own capabilities and limitations.

Going through the analysis filter of a judge every attempt to trace a certain direction in the movement of life, every aspect relevant to the delimitation of the coordinates of singularity (which can bring you closer to the truth of who you really are), you will be able to watch how your thinking reflects over time – which can materialize either in the involved form of simple insights and hypotheses, either explicitly and systematically, in affective or cognitive-behavioral approaches, which, in turn, have great resonance on practiced leadership.

Will you allow your most feared opponent, that destructive Alter-Ego, to drag you in the cold depths of instability?

Self-knowledge is that little narrow strip in your area of primary responsibility that you need to keep unaltered. The mystery of the art to may lead yourself is to really know your opponent, in entering into the abyss of your own being when you are caught in the midst of a strong storm, in revitalizing in your consciousness. Will you allow your most feared opponent, that destructive Alter-Ego, to drag you in the cold depths of instability?

Polish your self-knowledge, in order to increase the value of your positive ego.

The advantage of a knowledge based on the lessons learned from what you have experienced in the world of your own thoughts is that if they are shared and listened, they allow the verification of those personality characteristics that matter to people.

A Buoy Of Salvation For All Those Who Are Drowning signifies your attitude when you are put face to face with the cruel reality of a consciousness encumbered by certain aspirations, ideals or values that do not match your own potential; when the rational man of you, when real man does not recognize himself.

There are watershed moments in the life of every man, and of course in the life of every leader, moments of hopelessness, when appears the conflict between aspirations and opportunities, depressing moments when distrust appears. The only reliable friend that throws you the life buoy it is you yourself, finding those inner resources, and the necessary strength to overcome these moments.

It depends on you what alternative you choose: to float like a straw on the high waters? Or to navigate towards the proposed destination?

A Separation, If It Is Not Too Long, Increases The Desire For The Absent One

On February 09, 2009

Reunions can bring an intensification of feelings of convergent meaning, aiming at an enrichment of personal experience in the Part-Whole relationship.

Cheops finally learns from the mouth of an envoy of Benu, the Great Soothsayer, that the time had come to leave Memphis for Hermopolis, where the high priest of Thoth, the polymorphous god, who manifested himself in the form of the ibis and the baboon, was waiting for him. Meritites, used to the repeated and often prolonged absences of her brother, does not show any sadness, unlike Henutsen, who could not stop crying.

- Don't cry about it, sister, Meritites told her. You should get used to seeing our husband leave like this, often for many days and sometimes even months. We are left with games, children and relatives. It would be a good opportunity for you to visit your mother and father. And when Cheops returns, the pleasure of the reunion will be even greater, because a separation, if it is not too long, can only increase the desire for the absent one. When Cheops returns, you will see that he will love you even more and you yourself will feel your heart more bubbling than before.

Leadership: Does your own experience reflect a perpetual tension between the need for closeness and the desire for independence, envisioning a meticulous balance between the personal and the impersonal?

Cheops was not particularly surprised to find himself awaited when he appeared at the gates of Thoth's temple in his citadel at Hermopolis, the "City of the Eight," a few days' sail south of Memphis. He had left his residence in the morning, before sunrise, without informing anyone except Henutsen, with whom he had spent the night. The young wife had tried to be cheerful, for Meritites had told her that her husband disliked tears and entreaties. But he felt a great sadness in the depths of his soul.

Since their marriage, he had never been away from her for more than a day, to visit his mother, his royal father, and, more often, the construction sites of the two pyramids. In these few months, the attachment for her husband had grown even more, which made the separation even more difficult. But the moments of farewell did not last long. Khufus had fastened his belt, had taken hold of the long, smooth and solid stick which he used as a staff, as a club against the dogs, and, in case of need, as a club, and had started on his way.

How does looking at breakup as a form of increased desire influence your way of valuing long-distance relationships?

Leadership: How relevant is it to keep your destination secret, reflecting on how this influences the reception and interpretation of your trip?

He could have kept the sail boat and the rowers at his disposal to cross the flood-created stretch of water between Memphis, turned into an island, and the necropolis, but he had given it up. It seemed to him that when the downward current of the river was as rapid at the end of the flood and the return of the waters to their mother, you could move faster on foot when it came to going up the Nile.

In addition, he liked to walk, to exercise, to cross the roads of Egypt once again studded with peasants, who were hurrying to sow in the newly deposited mud. But he had wanted, above all, to keep the secret of his destination: the only ones who knew him were Benu - the Great Soothsayer from Heliopolis, Anhaf, his mother and his wives. During these days of travel, he had fed on the bread and dates offered by the peasants and drank water from wells or from the river when he could not find wells. He had walked all day and, at nightfall, he had slept most of the time on the banks of the Nile, in the papyrus thickets, or sometimes at the homes of hospitable peasants, who had invited him to share dinner with them and sleep on the terrace of their adobe houses. Arriving near Hermopolis, he had bathed in the river before going to the temple.

In leadership you will always face a dilemma: "You can form a clearer vision of your purpose by focusing your attention on movement and renewed paths, when you feel that you are discovering new realities, or when you perceive differently the intensity of the expression of nature and life your?"

A separation, if not too long, increases the desire for the absent one, if it is perceived as an opportunity for personal rediscovery and growth. In light of efforts to remain untouched by the burden of sadness how do you think the internal struggle between showing courage and feeling vulnerable manifests itself, reflecting on how you manage emotions in public?

Does the balance between keeping a secret and sharing experiences with new people in your life allow you to see the world through a perspective full of revelation and vision?

A Short Echo Painted On The Shadow Of Eternity

On March 11, 2018

Find a new meaning for your representation as an artist through the mentality of a small world that continues to broaden to something more magnificent than yourself.

What purpose does the universe have, with its yet undeciphered enigmas, passed through the filter of a time that only exists as an abstract notion? What reason does it have to extend indefinitely, like the meanings deduced from a glance thrown in passing within a labyrinth made in the style of a Dede Eri Supria? Why is god, who means all and everything, without which nothing is possible, accept the madness of being eternal?

I started off my day by going into the garden, itself primordial through the thirst of creation generated by the lecture of its poetry, in which the lines of gentleness, charisma, purity, and patience belong to a superlative existential fragility that the representations of nature, personified as a great being, inserts into my universe.

Here I find my peace, a wonderful sense of comfort and freedom, breathing the fresh air of peace. I feel at ease, as if sadness with its endless chasms would not reach me, in this garden with a seesaw, with plenty of green space and where roses of all kinds reflect my personality full of ambiguities, and yet, charming.

My returns to this place represent the background of an extraordinary story, like a sum of my wanderings in a context of the type: "There is a glance because there is an eye that calls for it."

Beauty is not to admire my "tone on tone" arrangements, but in always giving them a new meaning that resonates sooner with the favorite themes of genius artists, ensuring the shaping of the mysterious relations between the Creator and the Great Work.

Leadership: Does your creation find a blessed finality as a result of the fact that you have sought balance and harmony for all your life in a place that seems to be frozen in time?

Just as Captain Nemo could not deviate from the object of his creation, at the mysterious urge of the heart that does not bear separations, so too do I feel in the vastness of my own creation transposed into a universe of the word uncovered by terrestrial gravity in a physical plane, started from the necessity of unwinding and later arriving at a form of unique art.

As you might've guessed, I never get to travel too far, as Magellan, Amundsen or Columbus dared, only with the mind, the longing being infinitely stronger: I cannot separate myself from my garden.

I care so much for it that I feel that if I were not to exist, neither will it continue to do so. It is a kind of relationship of kinship, a reciprocity in various formalisms, a comprehensive approach to the universe that promotes centralized cooperation between a full authority and a foundation with the same initials: "The Number 17", which God chose as a symbol of the benevolence of the sacred.

The universe, still so impenetrable, continues to expand because my garden, through the care I have for it daily, continues to gradually open to my teachings. I can at any time attain a generous view worthy of only a fictional painting by Jim Warren, a spectacular sensibility from which the eons seem to detach, a wonder from a fairy tale by Wilhelm Hauff, representing both the main subject of an art that will pass through the centuries and the continents, as a magical stone with symbolic force that through its powers, makes happen any wish of the one who possesses it.

Leadership: Do you highlight the qualities you acquire in the presence of immortal works, according to a revelation in which only the chosen ones find their ultimate magnification?

God chose eternity so that all things created by him would gain a benefit for the common mortals themselves. He finds a sense of being eternal not so much by the act of creation attributed to an artist who always seeks to bring something new to Eden, trying to always pull something else out of dry stone, but because if He would cease to be, nothing would exist, and all the effort of millions of years would become merely a formality, determined by subjective whims – which resembles selfishness.

Do you know why Michelangelo's 'David' continues to exist as a compromise between the universe and mankind? Because the artist's soul is still in his work. So too will my art traverse many centuries from here on out because it comes from the heart and fruit of my garden.

If I had to find a correspondent in the history of the centuries, I would probably identify with none other than Nicolas Flamel; he too had a garden similar to mine, and his great science was revealed only to me, of course, in a form adequate to present thinking. His soul had probably condensed as a "divine essence" in the unique accords of nature and stopped on one man.

The soul of the artist is eternal not because he is looking for a place to feed his legend, but because he finds another soul to continue his work, thus fulfilling the destiny of a generation.

Leadership: Can you turn your work into a necessity of the living in the mystery of the embrace of the universe that opens your eyes through what you manage to encompass in a small space that grows as you advance towards the heart of a different understanding?

Nikos Kazantzakis expressed an idea that fits nicely with the horizon of my art, to which Flamel or Michelangelo has shaped a permanent role:

"Lord, tell me, how much farther should I go?"... and God answered him with a clear voice:

- "Until you can go no longer ! "

- "It is not enough, Lord ! Ask more of me ! " , the man grumbled. God answered with the same clear voice:

- "Go on until you can go no further"...

The geometry of the universe is molded by the supreme spirits surrounding the eighth plan, that of the Divine Absolute, flourishing where human imagination fails.

The equation of the existence of these forms of representation of God in a concept, in a material world, is included in the possibility of withdrawing to a place of your own and discovering the mysteries of the great forces of creation that can shape the perception of the world.

Leadership resembles the mysterious magnetism of a rare creation: it is immortal as long as it retains its fame and, at the same time, latent in the circle of a destiny that assumes a history of the presence of God in the world.

A Short Echo Painted On The Shadow Of Eternity marks the moment when personal creation, developed around a singular entity, gets the dimension of a history that repeats itself in various facets with each generation, with each cosmic rotation, to shape the destiny of an entire world.

The destiny of a whole world compresses in the destiny of a single man who has kept his meaning mysterious in a universe that seems to whisper to him: "You can never leave a place that continues to broaden."

A Show In The Honor Of Life

On September 08, 2010

Put to the test the strength of your character, by making from leadership a principle of life.

Recently, the famous actor Michael Douglas was invited to the popular TV talk show "Late Show with David Letterman", on CBS. Perhaps, the most important moment of the talk show was when they talked about the stage I of throat cancer with whom was diagnosed Michael. He proudly mentioned that, despite his disease, he will continue to shoot the movie "Haywire".

David Letterman, who did not stop looking at Michael throughout the interview, seeing that he did not fade at all when talking about his health, asked him: "You look great, you don't seem like a man who became ill because of cancer. How do you manage that?"

With all his well-known self-control, hiding all trace of anxiety, Michael answered without hesitation: "Because I'm on stage ! "

Leadership: What is the Self you want to express in the dynamic fullness of life as a result of the use of acting forces?

The answer of the famous Hollywood actor suggests the strong confidence that gives him the stage where he began and made his rich career, the stage on which he served and will always serve with faith and devotion, the stage which, although often exhausts him physically, gives him an impetus and strong emotional energy, at the same time.

The stage is where the connection with life is made. A true artist's whole world is the stage, and as long as he had to interpret a role, he had to play it good and constantly.

Playing a role is perhaps the greatest joy and happiness that a true artist can feel. The stage gives him the power to devote himself quietly to his work, playing his role with a vibrant passion, with a rare depth and aplomb, often despite many difficulties he encounters in real life. Lively, intelligent and very thirsty after excellence, dominated, among others, by an emphasized spirit of trust and hope, he will maintain on stage an amazing consistency in the attitude with which he appears on the stage and which it deals with the theme of roles.

The self you want to express in the dynamic fullness of life, as a result of the use of acting forces conceals an internalization of the image of others regarding you in the case of a situation where you are not sure that you have done everything to meet their expectations. This self is actually your most expressive, more penetrating and vulnerable side, more exposed to the critical and vigilant eye of the viewer who is interested in the facts, and not of their arbitrary narrative.

Leadership: Can you be brilliant on both main sides of your field of evolution?

What can you say about the character of every man you meet? Do you understand the features that individualizes him? What is the basis for his own development? Is it strong the faith in his qualities? His attitude makes him cope when his life raises hindrance? Does he accept the natural limitations imposed on him by life?

The answer of the famous actor, Michael Douglas, designates just such a reality, in which man feels essentially engaged in the "life-stage" relationship, both equally important on the leadership's fundamental axis – which contains power, virtues and character traits in its structure.

To achieve a strong leadership, not a temporary one, which will remain only in memories, you must create a lifeline between you and your potential to be brilliant on both main sides of your field of evolution: life and career.

Like an art surrogate that becomes a real aesthetic danger today, leadership may become more of a chore, a brake or a dilemma than a natural development of personal skills in circumstances that include self-liability. That's where, to achieve effective results, the leader fails to follow a clear direction of development, hardly focusing on understanding the impact of his own performance on the quality of his performance on the stage of life.

Therefore, one can get in the following situation. That instead of authentic leadership, based on the relationship between personal and professional, the leader to be given, by the network of his own concepts, ideas, philosophies, perceptions and reference points, a tempting substitute for leadership, a weak point in the middle of his evolution, expressed through a concentrated mix of inferiority and insecurity regarding his place in the social and existential structure.

What kind of leader are you? How much do you get involved in the stage-life relationship?

Leadership: Do you stay anchored in what you have described as an image of perfection in the core of which the doubt arises over your own conditions and values, according to the result of interpreting a role performed in a public show?

A true leader rises to a high level of thinking and artistic interpretation. The leader seems rather like an actor who creates with talent an important role within the organization he belongs to. It is up to his duty to totally identify with the character he plays, even if sometimes he is afraid of the intensity of his own emotions when he plays his guiding role.

As a leader, do you prefer to play tragic roles, like that of a parent who helplessly witnesses the tortures unfairly suffered by his own child, which he sees dying?

Or, do you adopt every time the same posture that the famous actor Michael Douglas painted for himself at the well-known TV talk show hosted by David Letterman - the posture of the confident, optimistic man who, healthy or sick, plays on his role constantly with great energy?

Michael has the undeniable merit to be crossed by a flaming boom, by a vigorous trust in his future. And, so you must have the same attitude. However, for that, you must turn your leadership into a life principle.

Your role, as a leader, is to lead the organization ahead. Nevertheless, the task of being the leader and the guide of the necessary transformations is not so easy as it might seem. People tend to express their increasing discontent with your performance if you do not lead them in the most favourable direction.

The leader is not at all a simple artist, but a true performer who remains devoted to his work. Full of talent and always looking, through his art, to maintain himself on his present place in the organization, he will manage to achieve everything he wants.

The result of interpreting a role performed in a public show is contained in the content of the relationship between what you are trying to project on others and what is coming back to you by discovering what you mean to the whole world.

A Show In The Honor Of Life can be called the performance of a leader, who does not lay down his arms and does not give up in dramatic circumstances. The life of a leader is a show by itself, in which he has the main role - a role that he must perform with an amazing consistency. And, in the way he is leading his own existence, says a lot about his ability to lead other people.

If you want to function at your best and be a high achiever, put to the test the strength of your character, by making from leadership a principle of life.

A Sign That The Gaze Still Seeks Its Eyes

A look at oneself is the vision of eyes that open before the infinity of an invisible world.

We talked so much about the eyes that seek their artistic gaze in the beauty of an accidental world, rendered in vivid and pastel colors. And I want to say that the look with which the eyes explore the open horizon of the beauties of this world is an excellent opportunity to test my spirit of observation, gravitating around fantasy and surrealism, so that I can discover in vivid images the whole story of a personal transformation without edges.

And if I call myself an artist, because beyond any artist there is a look at distance and depth, where color and black and white contrasts help create a sublime image, this is because all that delights my view is weighed out of the corner of the eye before being immortalized on canvas.

Even my gaze, a projection of the visual to the palpable of a world that has become a memorial on the map of fiction, is well hidden in the natural advantage of brown eyes, clear, full of life, highlighting the bright aspect of all things, Oshultarityo, the earthly aspect and the heavenly aspect. And if I were to take my eyes off the all-encompassing ones, just to draw in pencil the outline of a picture of my spiritual nature, and if I were to catch my eye with a look of ageless intelligence, I might be entitled to believe that everything that is in line with my art and creation activates a ray of living light that starts from one eye and ends up living in the spirit.

Know that the artist's eyes are like an endless mirror with two faces: on one stretches the material universe, and on the other stretches the metaphysical space of an introspective analysis that puts me front and center, rose up by the power of the spirit, in the middle a painting that must integrate perfectly into the environment in order to be highlighted. Rather, if my eyes consider the gaze as the whole measure of an authentic and singular artistic vision, then it is very easy to reach the painting through the 3D view that shows several sides of the same reality, by resonating with the realization of the Unity of the Self and the visible world.

Leadership: Can the unlimited potential of your creation lead to a projection of the visual to the palpable of a world that has become a memorial of a calling to spiritual heights?

I don't even think that there is a single gaze that the eye embraces unanimously, there are several gazes that the eyes reveal only to the artist, such as that gaze of the soul that creates different beliefs through truth, meditation and introspection, unity of idea, by imagination, by one's own example. At this point, my deepest conviction is that choosing all that is beautiful means understanding art as a "total experience" applicable to all times and all forms of manifestation of the belief in the existence of a universal creative power, including the gods.

Man's own reception takes place at a depth that is beyond words, beyond emotions, beyond the sphere of aesthetics, in the wider plane of ineffable permanencies. In this case, spirituality automatically maintains its height at the point indicated by a Creation that crowns an inner reality. And, as someone said, if we have an assumed inner reality that we communicate on the outside, then we have the ability to shape things the way we want.

I found this aspect talked about on the internet, in an article with spiritual meanings:

"At one point, a man saw another not only with his eyes, but with a certain penetration of heart and mind. And that man, who was just one of many, suddenly becomes unique. He then appears with a new beauty, with a new depth, with a new meaning, such a vision can last for years, it can last a lifetime, but sometimes, after a while, this vision fades (this is what happens when the sun disappears from the window and suddenly, said window's glow fades). And behold, for in that moment, faith enters the scene – and faith in this sense: faith as an assurance that what was once seen, and now has become invisible, is unquestionable. This is the faith we live with, more or less."

Just think of how many destinies have been changed and disturbed at a glance. With this in mind, I must emphasize something important: whenever we guide our gaze in search of a reality beyond the visible, whenever our gaze meets that of the artist who, through imagination, gives life to a flexible space. In a codified system of colors and signs, just as many times our faith in the harmony of creation, in the doctrine of artistic creation, is strengthened, intensified and cultivated by the meaning we give to our power to change one reality with another.

Leadership: How do you train your vision to display a long series of constants of a particular expressiveness, assuming that the recognition of your own excellence in the aesthetic field depends on your need for significance?

Let us keep in mind that the most important constants of expressiveness are line, color and shape, while the most important indices of sensitivity of the artist are depth, visibility, the idea of infinity, near and far vision. Therefore, let us be careful how and where we turn our eyes, so that the eyes with which time crosses our lives, the insistence with which time sneaks into eternity, or in the respite of a single moment of life, come into contact with the fascinating world of art.

The masterfully finished works, the works of painting or sculpture, even they look at me out of the corner of my eye sometimes, with those eyes full of expression, full of depth, helping me to focus on the exercise of seeing beyond my own horizon. This fact implies the acceptance of a special density of light that gives the fragile beauty of my finitude in a dimension of temporal infinity.

The very need for significance placed in a time of the desire to perceive a new reality, in the inner universe of every human being, denotes that the self-image does not blur the public one. Who knows how my spiritual mission in the art world will be fulfilled...

Maybe time will scatter dust over my words, maybe it will spread forgetfulness over my name, but not before my gaze has captured in its own language, elevated, subtle, those words long crafted, polished and clean as the bloom of light, which only the artist's eye can always color with another shade of beauty.

Yes. I am truly an artist, more than any artist, because time itself waited first for the recognition of my excellence in the aesthetic field, to invest me later with the confidence that my art was worth seeing and admiring.

The spiritual potential of a creation must reflect the artist's willingness to capture more realistically a moment suspended in immortality.

And if my world is invisible, unable to be grasped through sensory experience, this is because no one understands my intellectual and spiritual effort to create a creation that opens up other perspectives of understanding the communication between idea and matter, between ideal and material, between viewer and image.

Anyway, if you've come this far, it means I'm already in your mind, maybe I'm in your soul, even if you still don't see me and you don't know what I look like. A Sign That Your Gaze Still Seeks My Eyes...

A Soul For Victory

On April 26, 2010

Put yourself completely in the service of a noble purpose, without detaching yourself from your consciousness.

It is a great deal to enjoy a name and a high social position. It is a great deal to be the devoted wife of a very wealthy man. Your name is renowned and becomes almost as famous as your husband. Nevertheless, at the same time, sometimes, in certain circumstances, the same thing can become a hell. And what a hell !

There are occasions, which shatter any visions and exceed any human anticipation, putting human will at a test. Elena de la Vega, the beloved wife of count Alejandro de la Vega, an extremely pure heart, a flower of innocence, a very delicate soul, was forced by the governmental agents of the United States of America, Pike and Harrington, to play the role of a spy.

Like a sheep good to be sacrificed, like a soul destined to perdition from the very beginning, Elena was sent to an extremely dangerous mission, without the two agents caring at all about her fate. She must win the trust of the malefic French Count Armand, the leader of the secret legion Orbis Unum, and to find out the way through which he wants to destroy America. She can't act on her own, but according to the will of the agents, she has no choice but to submit herself with rigor, thus putting her life in danger.

If you watched the movie "The Legend of Zorro (2005)" probably you remember the end. Elena, together with her husband, focusing the entire skill, strength and intelligence, managed by an ingenious plan to dispel the organizers and plot against America and to save their own lives.

Leadership: Do you value each life responsibly according to the position you occupy in the context of a greater duration of exploiting opportunities of assertion - for which can be taken unfavorable constraining measures?

Elena de la Vega was a victim of circumstances, forced to action on a mine field. Maybe for a good cause or maybe not, but she certainly fought for salvation. She was just an innocent soul, but one alone makes no difference when there are hundreds, thousands, or hundreds of thousands to be saved, is not it?

Here's a question that a leader must ponder very well. It is the same question, the same for thousands of years, which almost all kings and emperors asked themselves: Do you have the courage, the moral power to sacrifice an innocent soul in order to save hundreds of thousands of them?

One more thing. If you had to take such a decision, to sacrifice an innocent soul in order to save thousands of other souls, would you be seized by emotions, would you feel overwhelmed by remorse? The very thought would fill your heart with anxiety? Would you morally endure to become guilty because of a single accusation, even if it was for the benefit of hundreds, thousands, hundreds of thousands of people? Only the thought that you committed the greatest sin, even if indirectly, would not it grind your conscience?

The unfavorable constraining measures imposed by your opportunities of assertion, as an attribute and finality of how to manage a crisis of identity, are classified into two categories: an intensification of the feeling of guilt in the present of a conscience that alienates itself and an emotional statement of responsibility taken to the point of sacrifice.

The strength of your virtues, taken from healthy longing for values and ideals, lies in the attitude with which you relate to what you feel you are in a way that does not allow you to accept even the very idea of a miracle. You lose control over your virtues when all the tendencies of your spiritual nature have their sphere of incidence constrained to the facts that enter in the sphere of the notion of being "a contributor to the change of things for the better."

Is your leadership a zero-valued character in the particular circumstances of a destiny that does not end up in your hands?

One of the main line of force of leadership is represented by the complexity of what you are about to become in an unstable situation. Which is defined by an exact match between the position that you adopt during crisis and your conception of superiority, sometimes rejecting it under an unstable or unfriendly climate to high performance. As long as the character is kept intact, regardless of the state of the conjuncture and the transformation of the concepts of life, leadership will survive and prosper.

Otherwise, if leadership is represented by a zero value character, in which there can be identified specific keys of norms and rules that cannot provide (on the basis of strictly outlined principles) a sufficient and fair protection against external influences, one may get in an awkward situation. The same goes when one reports to Art in a universe of surrogates and substitutes, a great variety of dysfunctional ways of thinking and acting, resorting to improper judgment criteria to a true "artwork". I refer to the Art of searching yourself in other people's soul.

You can consider yourself lost spiritually as far as your dignity feeds from the longing for some values that you do not normally have. And if the reality of your condition of a being, subjected to the randomness of existentialism is shaped by the inability to reach a definitive recognition from society, then the leadership you outline for yourself is one based on randomness, and not on the principles on consciousness.

A study of your mission, which proposes an analysis of your renewing acceptation of the content of a determined perception, offering a certain "dignity" to the categorical imperatives that open once with choosing a specific way of thinking and acting, can be presented as an orientation guide in the conscience's tangled thickets. Your level of dedication and mutual help gives you access to the higher levels of understanding your own being.

Leadership is the art of seeking yourself in the souls of others in a turning point that enhances the meaning and purpose of your existence.

There are even today people able to sustain real changes in society, in the lives of other people using the same two accomplices: an intolerant Alter-Ego and an extremist Alter-Ego. Using them, leadership turns into a surrogate, an inauthentic and consumed performance development product. Especially if we take into account that, over time, its the composition of defining elements, material and spiritual, which are found in the complexity of the realities we live in, suffer important mutations.

Leadership is not a play. Are you ready for disappointments? The more you position yourself higher in the hierarchy, the more you have to take more difficult decisions, the more you have to assume moral and spiritual responsibility for your own actions.

A leader, just like a wise man, which understands the consequences of each action which he voluntarily makes, prudent in his conclusions, deliberate in his actions, has to work for the common well-being, namely for everybody's sake and for each of them alone, assuming responsibility for every tiny little mistake he commits.

In order to feel his conscience appeased, he must exhibit an unlimited nobleness, of equity, a remarkable correctitude, to take care of the personal security of everybody under his command and, with an unyielding will, decision and perseverance in completely serving others, to take the most appropriate decisions, which would not hurt anybody, in any kind of circumstance.

A true leader has the scope of authority to control from what kind of circumstances was born the judgment of the "unexpected effect" type, which actually forms the basis of an approach of awareness of the role he undertakes emphasized by the measure of accountability for facts, thoughts, and feelings, over his integrity.

Conclusion: A leader can be put in a position to take decisions to the detriment of someone, but not to the detriment of all, and these decisions must surely have a legal argument. Some other times, unfortunately, the leader must sacrifice the life of some in order to save others, which becomes a tough decision, based on a lot of responsibility.

It would be ideal for the leader to sacrifice himself for the benefit of everybody, but is there such a leader?

Put yourself completely in the service of a noble purpose, without detaching yourself from your consciousness.

A Soul Trapped In The Net Of Time

On September 27, 2011

Reveal to people the true nature of your character, properly managing the qualities that they expect from you.

The end of the movie "Meet Joe Black (1998)" is very well done. Susan Parrish, the daughter of the billionaire William Parrish, looks on Joe Black how he was getting away together with her father. She hurries to catch them up, and reaches the bridge linking her father's property.

And, suddenly, Joe made his appearance. He was alone. It seemed he did not know where he is, turning his eyes all-over.

Susan comes closer to him. Regards him carefully. Something was wrong. A vague doubt, still perceptible, opened the way into her heart, leading to an increased feeling of anxiety and uncertainty.

- Where did you go? she asked with a glint of fear in her soul.

- I do not know ... Would you understand if I say that I do not think I will ever know?

A different man was feeling, undoubtedly, in Joe. The thing which caused to Susan a kind of nostalgia for his old way of being, the desire to find what she loved so much in him, the personality whom he was representing.

The prince of darkness had taken his farewell to this world. In his place had appeared the real Joe.

Leadership: Do you practice accepting everything that happens to you if you fail to meet the condition of relating to a limited space to explore?

The transition to a new reality has led to a series of changes in the balance of the spiritual universe of Joe Black. He was standing at the uncertain border between realities. He was in a particular place, without knowing how he got there. Moreover, it was not his fault that he could not remember anything.

Someone said that there is nothing judged more fugitive than the human nature. Susan accepted the real Joe in her life due to his affective and emotional qualities - essential qualities of his character, and since his whole being radiated that warmth of soul, mysterious, that inner beauty characteristic to the people that bear in them not only a specific charm, but also a specific magnetism, coupled with a great finesse.

Are the exceptional changes you are going through at a certain point of spiritual closeness the random characteristics of the surroundings that have led you to these thoughts and feelings pertaining to the condition of a seeker in the world of others?

A limited space to be explored is the level of reality that can be revealed only by accepting appearances beyond the experiments of delusions, nostalgia and fulfillment. When you've decided you want to know someone, he can become the center of the world that you yourself have created if you have the potential to become a crossroads of two paths: a fabulous journey and a destiny of sacrifice.

Leadership: How is your orientation achieved in the darkness of a reality that looks for a suggestive target?

Leadership can be described in a story, partly as a succession of questions with no answer, an accumulation of pluses and minuses that, in the end of what you are looking for, come to light and reveal a face you wouldn't have expected to see. This way you are determined to reconsider your position towards the others, towards yourself, towards the future. You are determined to reconsider your position towards other people, towards yourself, towards the future, looking from a totally different perspective.

In short, in unpredictable finales lies an amalgamation of thoughts, ideas, happenings that ask to be devoured with the power of the heart and mind, highlighting the way in which you can get help from their possibilities to manifest themselves as active part of the building of personality in day-to-day life.

You can survive in the reality that you do not understand by just increasing your potential to adapt to "unexpected".

Here we take into account the closeness to another world, different, thus, potentially hostile, because it doesn't comprise of any certainty of going back to the past. It must be explored and understood as an exponent of a becoming that judges the steps of the moment that must disappear, but remains unique.

Your orientation in the darkness of a reality that's searching for a suggestive target, attributed to the successful attempt to recognize the true potential value of the people around, is materialized in an existence product that can't be falsified according to your whole psycho-emotional structure.

You can't discover the unseen side of man if you're not ready to understand the truth on which his world is based, relevant in different ways.

Leadership: Do you connect to the essence of those around you by judging the steps of the moment that must disappear, but remains unique?

Only a person who bears in himself the germs of a good character spreading magical light that he bears in himself (by his presence, his attitude, through his feelings, only a person who radiates an aura of credibility, a new spirit, through his sincere and total self-giving), only that person has also the potential to connect to the essence of those around him, gaining a great influence over them.

You cannot deceive people with an aura of a good and honest man, you cannot inoculate them an extraordinary image of yourself. You cannot link a great friendship with them if you have a duplicitous attitude, if you are drowning in falsity, if you keep too long in the shadow your real identity, and if you hesitate to express your feelings. You must surround them with your positive energy stream, to stand exactly at their level of expectations, generating the most emotional state as possible.

What are the essential qualities of your character that help others to see more clearly how you really are?

Just as the blood, not treated by any chemist, is creating his own antitoxins - and so your character, if it is not altered by any negative factor, it improves and is creating his own opportunities to raise at the standards and expectations of others. You create on your own those necessary for the positive impact that you will have on the lives of others according to the true feelings that you nurture towards them, respectively, depending on their availability to come closer to you, and to accept you among them.

The beauty and the inner purity are the essential qualities of your character, are the only strong points of your personality that help others to see more clearly how you really are, and after a careful analysis to decide if you deserve, or not an additional recognition and appreciation. Reveal to people the true nature of your character, properly managing the qualities that they expect from you.

The Real Joe and the Old Joe are two faces of the same man, but in different planes of knowledge: one that stretches beyond the ordinary experience of life and one that is acquired only by accepting a fleeting moment that gives you the impulse of finding yourself in someone else.

If you want to deeply understand the phenomenon called "self-rediscovery", look beyond the experience of these two individuals.

A Soul Trapped In The Net Of Time emphasizes the idea of transformation of your own individual according to your character, and of the intensity of feelings that you express to others. Give people the chance to know your true inner beauty, give them time to adapt to your own personality. Try to spend more time with them. Learn to appreciate them for what they are trying to have more confidence in them.

Be more honest with yourself and dare to express your true feelings; do not hide them under a mask of appearances, so that they, in their turn, to be bolder and more generous with you, and to share the same feelings with you. If you really want more from someone, learn to give something more from you. Courage !

A Spirit That Rises Above The Eddies Of Life

The courage to step into the unknown gives you an unexpected ally, each step bringing you closer to the depths of my being, awakening echoes of a forgotten self.

I could feel every step in this unknown land reverberating deep within my being, awakening echoes of a self I was just beginning to discover. I wasn't just a lost runner; I felt like a cosmic explorer, mapping unknown constellations of my own soul.

In those moments of sublime uncertainty, I felt understanding wash over me like a wave of celestial light. The art of living, I realized, was like an unwritten symphony, whose notes were composed of the courage to step into the unknown. I could feel this courage rising within me, not like a violent flame, but like a gentle but steadfast light, turning fear into an unexpected ally.

I felt each beat of my heart like a silent incantation, an ancestral rhythm declaring war on self-imposed limitations. It was as if each pulsation whispered a cosmic secret, gradually revealing the mysteries of the inner universe I carried within me.

"I am more than I ever thought I would be," I whispered to myself, feeling this revelation permeate every fiber of my being. I was like an alchemist of my own destiny, a weaver of dreams, a spirit that soared above the eddies of life like a majestic eagle.

Leadership consists in the art of discovering a new self, in every echo awakened in the depths of the being by the steps taken into the unknown.

I felt a fascinating duality within me: strength and vulnerability coexisted in a cosmic dance, creating a delicate balance, like a spider's thread in the wind. With an almost painful clarity, I was aware that my struggle was no mere passing trial, but an eternal odyssey of self-discovery, a never-ending journey through the labyrinth of my own consciousness.

The unknown, once a fearsome monster lurking in the shadows, now metamorphosed under my astonished gaze. I could feel it turning into a magical realm, a fertile soil from which the rare flowers of my true inner strength sprouted. I felt every challenge encountered as a new cornerstone in the edifice of my authentic self, an opportunity to carve out of the raw marble of existence a masterpiece of becoming.

In that moment of overwhelming clarity, I felt all the mysteries of the universe condense into a single drop of wisdom. The unknown was no longer a feared enemy, but a Zen master, a silent guide on the path to personal enlightenment. I felt every obstacle encountered as a rung in a spiritual ladder climbing to the sky of infinite possibilities.

And so, in the midst of this seeming wandering, I felt myself discovering the most precious treasure: my pure essence, untainted by the fears and limitations of the outer world. I felt reborn, not just as a stronger runner, but as a cosmic being, in tune with the secret rhythms of the universe, ready to dance to the music of the spheres in the great symphony of existence.

Every step you take deep within your being awakens echoes of a self that, if you truly discover, brings with it a new understanding of the Art of Living.

A spirit that rises above the storms of life manages to see beyond the tumult of the present, finding the inner peace necessary to navigate the storms with profound clarity and unwavering confidence in one's own resources. Because true power comes from accepting your vulnerabilities, recognizing your own limits, and having the courage to overcome them with confidence and wisdom.

A Spirit That Shines

On March 09, 2009

Guide people towards a common vision by making appeal for their most profound values.

"Starting today we must raise and to clean the dust on us. We must reaffirm our countrie's greatness." This is the declaration of the American President Barack Obama after his nomination.

Through this advice, Obama wanted to win the trust of the people and their support people need tenacity, a strong and unique purpose and a compatible spirit of cooperation. This is what he tried to emphasize through his speech and he managed to make himself listen. All the American citizens understood the solidarity and the spirit of this advice and they had the certainty that things will straighten and all will be normal again.

The only way to move not a single person, but an entire nation is to appeal at national values - heroism, victory, devotion, and for this you need a huge force of convincing. You have to show everybody that you have a lot of trust in you and in the solutions you propose, that you are not afraid of changing and you will get involved with seriousness and professionalism in solving all the problems. And above all, you have to be capable to avert the people's negative thoughts and to make them optimistic.

Have you identified the basic moral values of people before sharing to them your vision? What side of your personality you must grow in order to succeed influencing the things in your advantage?

Does your leadership checks its value by developing admissible or inadmissible motivations?

Another aspect of the general thinking seeking to assign a meaning to any action, thought or feeling inspired by the leader tries a definition using the term "concrete", introduced more as a court meant to rule on the merits of the appeal urging to attitude, commitment and struggle. Clearly, we can formulate numerous criticisms of this concept, but it seems to apply very well in those periods of stagnation or involution, crossed by people during the process of change or adaptation to new.

Leadership involves in its essence a dichotomy between how the leader outlines the future and how people perceive his message. In turbulent and uncertain periods, the lack of solidarity is felt in people's hearts more than ever, every individual living for the "collective self".

That's why it is urgent for the leader to establish a "game" plan, as well as its expression in practice, to be easily understood, then accepted and supported by launching a specific call for solidarity to integrate his vision in a generally valid system of thought, with little resistance, to ensure and expedite measures of recovery.

Your leadership checks its value by developing admissible motivations, when you manage to convince people of something and get them to be steadfast in this belief, or by developing some inadmissible motivations, which do not support a cause people believe in, or that do not conform to a pattern of thinking that updates the need for unity among people.

Leadership: What are the clues to maximizing your skills for the art of understanding the authenticity of the experience and the psychological discovery that are the subject of a well-founded belief?

At what pace does your leadership evolve? As the power of a conviction, considered relevant to changing the intentions to start certain actions or decisions, is it converted into a permanent agreement to what you say?

A leader has a huge responsibility: he is responsible in front of the people for the way he chooses to solve the problems and for the manner he guides them. A leader under no circumstances can hide in the back of his team in case of a failure. In other words, he is on his own in front of the risk and the final responsibility is only his.

The psychological discovery that may contradict you at any time depends on how you express your beliefs where they do not exist or are not known. Leadership psychology distinguishes between the form of expressing yourself through different forms of communication and the form of promoting yourself through the opportunities to effectively involve yourself in what you think.

Defining the leader's psychology is to characterize it, to decipher the meaning of thought when the statements it often uses to repeat itself is related not to the authority it represents but to the understanding of the other people's expectations for it.

The hints of maximizing your ability for the art of understanding the authenticity of experiencing something and psychological discovery that are the subject of a well-founded belief are processed through the junction between the authority that gives you a certain quality or situation and your responsibility for failure.

Just as the dance steps are made in certain directions, pursuing certain rhythms and being heavily influenced by the mood of the dancers, so your way to excellence is made with every step you do together with other people, in the sense that you induce to them, a sense that involves feelings, or at least potentiate them. In other words, people must perceive your inner consistency, values and beliefs to which you guide yourself in life, so that they could attach to you. The beliefs that you have, and that you transmit to others through speeches will pave your way or will set up barriers to you.

Leadership: Can you draw a sense of your own importance by rotating or overturning an image that produces a hypnotic effect?

A simple way to make yourself loved and admired by all the people is to assume your responsibility and to respect the given word. It is not enough to encourage people to rise and to step forward with the head high in crisis situations. You have to get involved personally in solving the problems and to become a worthy model to follow. People will follow you only when they will see concrete and real results, as a consequence of your solutions which you proposed and put in practice. So, give people serious reasons to follow you.

The truly motto of the competent people is: "Today, not tomorrow." You will not be able to attract the sympathy and the respect of the people if you are not ready to take the initiative and to put in practice your ideas immediately. You have to act fast and efficient so that your results never delay to appear and to be as good as possible. You might not obtain spectacular results in a record time, but if people will not see that their situation is better, if they will not see a real progress, then you risk losing your credibility.

You want to be a respected, loved and admired leader? If yes, then give people solutions that can materialize, not only words of sweetness.

The hypnotic effect takes place when your beliefs force you into the goals that other people do not have to miss.

A spirit that shines is the man who guides people to a common vision, calling upon their most profound values. It thus manages to overcome the noble beliefs with personal image in favor of results that are in line with the momentary or perspective aspirations of society.

A Step Forward Towards Strengthening The Immunity

On April 08, 2009

Strengthen your leadership immunity by ensuring a moral order that would highlight your virtues based on high values.

I would like to relate you out below a moment in the life of the French General Charles François Dumouriez, from the time with French revolutionary wars, just as it was presented by the famous author Alexandre Dumas, in his famous novel "Le Docteur Mysterieux".

In one day, had come a great detachment of volunteers, rebels, who had to join the army of Dumouriez. However, among them, there were and many malicious ones - instigators, criminals, traitors. Dumouriez ordered his soldiers to be prepared in the position of battle. When the rebels approached long enough, he addressed them the following message:

- My army does not receive in its ranks than good patriots and honest people. The army despises the fugitives and has an aversion on assassins. Among you are miserable that push you to crime. Chase them by yourself of you ! If not, I order artillery to shoot, and I with my hussars will pass through the sword all those who remain standing. You have to understand: among you should not be assassins, or executioners. Expel them ! Become good, brave and great, like those that have the honor and reputation to be admitted !

What do you think was the result? Well, fifty or sixty people were expelled; they were made themselves invisible, as if they vanished into thin air. The rest had remained in the army and complied with its spirit.

Leadership: Can your advancement towards what integrates you in a big role be a determination of external phenomena, or does it belong to a figure that relates to a neutral background?

The "health" of your leadership it is not destined by the nature of things, but it requires much wisdom and responsibility of knowing how to accurately define your intentions, to evaluate very well the reasons underlying these intentions, and to act without harming with anything your own style of leadership that you adopt. The viruses that your antibodies have to fight are: superficiality, lack of dignity, lack of loyalty.

The science of leadership remains inextricably linked to the advantageous position that you have within the group in the key moments, when you are forced to initiate a change of assembly that would have an echo in the soul of others, and that would not jeopardize your ascension. Only in terms of a set of values (based on discipline, need of truth, integrity) by which people could identify themselves with your model, you'll be able to keep intact your relationship with them.

By accepting to move away from the principles that you have set, and that you advocate in the presence of others, it is like, suddenly a disease that you have not prevented and that you do not dare to diagnose it, would pounce upon you. The disease does not occur because it is caused by anything or anyone, but simply because you are not prepared enough to fight your own limits, because you are not analytical enough to notice the cracks that occur in your leadership in order to cover them in time.

Your advancement towards what integrates you in a big role can belong to a figure that relates to a neutral background, when what represents you can lead to an action that is not subject to a constraint of subordination.

The forming of a support team is an important ingredient for your activities. Just as it is the flour for a fluffy chocolate cake. The French General Dumouriez has strengthened the immunity of his leadership by ensuring a moral order meant to highlight his code of values based on the highest virtues. He has addressed to those people who did not meet his own criteria and expectations, ideas and aspirations, and told them to move away from his area of action. The most dangerous adversaries that deviated from his principles did not have to enter the ranks of his army.

Dumouriez knew too well that the only way to preserve the unity of a group and not to break it was to combine all the elements necessary for his leadership to gain a higher significance in the eyes of those he ruled. In other words, he should prevent the "disease" before it can evolve to the point that would have endangered his position.

Just as a doctor is concerned with curing diseases, so and you, with a general understanding, should comprehend in a whole the scattered symptoms of the "disease" that can affect your relationships with others, to know what the risk factors are, and act preventively. You cannot meet the disease with open hands, and control it, but you have to cut off the root, from its early stages, to oppose in every way to install it and to worsen.

Leadership is the decisive role you play in a large-scale action whose course you can only change by changing what is in excess, with what is a priority for achieving a balanced structure of human energy.

A Step Forward Towards Strengthening The Immunity designates that side from ourselves that tries to save us from a humiliating relegation. As a leader, you have the duty of great significance, to locate any possible "infection outbreak" by having examined its origin, and eradicating it before it spreads to create further complications.

A step forward towards strengthening the immunity consists in the establishment and adoption of effective preventive measures, and at the time of occurrence (despite the prevention applied) of the first symptoms of disease, it is required the eradication of outbreaks, or of the disease by energetic means.

In leadership, very helpful are people with a strong natural "immunity". The more they are, the easier you can intervene on others who are a minority. In other words, the selection of staff, and the intervention by vigorous action against those who for various reasons put "impedes" and inhibit others from following the path to performance, it is essential for a quality leadership. Just as everyone wants rewards, so we all must understand that we should conform to some requirements, and we all must understand that there are often quite harsh punishments for insubordination, for violation of ethical principles and legal provisions.

A Stranger's Access To The Insufficiently Defined Framework Of Science

On January 14, 2014

Point your research efforts towards new directions of valuing performance potential, so that your evolved science doesn't transform into a source of uncertainty and disorientation.

I was so close and yet so far away from discovering the inexhaustible fund of understanding resources, that pretiosum rubinus, the crimson stone of science. Penetrated by the almost invincible impulse of research, towards making the calculating formula of the index that measured all constituent elements of truths and non-truths, I skipped everything the abyss of nonexistence represented. A plunge into a parallel world. An adventure which has resulted in a disconnect from the routine of the "acceptable", allowing the installation of a flexible and adaptive thinking. And yet, restricted by an external force.

I felt I was conditioned to deny all I knew, by an invisible force that turned my research efforts towards new directions and priorities in rethinking the hypotheses that diminished the degree of falsifying the real by the imaginary. And this meant yet another step towards the multiplication of understanding perspectives of the way in which the great rules of science are born and function. Therefore, I had to try and highlight the discrepancy between what I knew and what I believed, guiding me in my work after Georges Cuvier's precept: to name, to describe, to classify. The difference was important.

As for my progress towards the acquisition of advanced science, which I had to take into account in order not to compromise my strength of being myself, I shaped my thinking according to the meaning expressed by the Romanian aesthetician Liviu Rusu:

"When a certain microbe is introduced into the body through a vaccine, it actually introduces the seeds of conflict. Fighting with these seeds increases the body's resistance to certain diseases. Spiritual vigor also depends on the resistance power of the "microbes" of primary tendencies. He who leaves himself to the will of his primitive nature will never be a creative artist."

Leadership: Can you capitalize on the performance potential that can change the image of the science you currently possess, expressing yourself through the idea "I can see beyond what they are at the origins"?

I couldn't really tell if it was true or false everything that was hiding inside that closed space that operated with unclear laws. Science had become rather a source of uncertainty. I could not exclaim, "See, you were right ! ", because first I had to prove that two distinct realities cannot exit simultaneously. A reality of an imaginary world and a reality of a rational world.

An artist who knows how to become one with his revelations, a creator who knows how to use the conquests of science and culture to build a strong self-confidence always expresses himself through the idea: "I can see beyond what I am at my origin". That is, I had to realize that I was more than I thought I was, and that I was able to better master the art of putting together, of associating materials, shapes, textures, of forming that structure in which the parts stand, without fighting the chimeras of the imagination.

Science is the priority of the version of a self who wants to relive part of another reality, one in which what seems to be in a certain way today, tomorrow is the exact opposite. I felt a stranger rather, in a poorly defined framework, equidistant from everything meaning comprehension, as if I fell on the outer slopes of a more complex impact crater. I was hit directly by what is called blocking-distortion resulting from a process of wishful thinking.

These attempts to manipulate science were accompanied mainly by the words of Romanian scenographer Helmut Stürmer: "Just when you think you got something and try hammer in a reality, its opposite appears automatically."

Leadership: How do you evaluate the act of overhauling your being out of an acceptable routine, by mirroring a near-perfect overlap between what isolates you from the world and the challenge of discovering a new world?

We will only be able to rethink leadership through the lens of evolution, applied in the context of ongoing relation to a well-defined framework of science, without letting ourselves be limited by the discoveries we've made. All that means comprehension, observable and describable, especially in the conditions of dynamic development, lies in the installation of a flexible and adaptive thinking, more imaginative and more creative. But one that is almost always restricted by that external force called "the rational."

To design and lead the process of developing leadership, specific to the science that teaches us that the resources of knowledge and evolution are endless, towards the durable approach of the different areas of intellectual gain, the deficit of uncertainties is taken into account. One that is born with questions succeeded over the time of our pervasion into a more evolved space of knowledge and self-awareness, conditioning us to renounce everything we know.

It is primarily the act of revising our own being through reflection, by analyzing coincidences and differences between what is proper and what is foreign, between what we think and the implications we cannot foresee.

Do you support science's quest for self-fulfillment in the field of leadership research, by challenging it to multiply the perspectives needed to measure one's own performance?

The invisible force that guides our research efforts towards new directions of valuing the performance potential, in rethinking those ideas, principles and opinions that are against our own assessment, is given precisely by the desire of evolution. Winning a decisive battle, through self-taxation, in order to gain our independence from under the sway of foreign rule – of that qualitative different form of knowledge, it is essential for avoiding any collapse. Which, taking the form of stagnation tendencies, instantly defiles any appetite for performance and innovation.

Leadership can be investigated through the outstanding contribution you make to the development of science, and the perspective of measuring one's own performance envisages a sustainable approach to science with the help of imaginative training reflected in a reality that gives us hope that what we see might be different.

We can say that our power of research is completely outside leadership's sphere of investigation when we cannot manage to fully exploit the resources of a new intellectual "birth" – the winning step in rethinking our positioning, in terms of approach, on a top place of science. A plunge into a parallel world, following the case of the intersection between the supply and demand of scientific capital, which enhances the exploration assets of leadership is the only way out of that compromising impasse, blocking-distortion.

Only by identifying the strengths and challenges of each new structure of adopted thinking, enabling our passing towards a higher level of evolution, will we be able to make a bigger step towards the multiplication of perspectives necessary to measure self-performance. And to implement all that we have accumulated to diversify and optimize leadership.

The performance potential imposed by the leadership dimension achieves the highest degree of creative freedom in the ability of science to answer any question, on the one hand, and in the pursuit of science to manage the key moments of the game called: "plunge into a parallel world".

A Stranger's Access To The Insufficiently Defined Framework Of Science aims especially to those individuals devoid of knowing an authentic leadership that will be able to impose change without having a scientific substrate. Who plans to open a new gate to knowledge and rediscover the leader within themselves should, first and foremost, focus research efforts towards new directions of valuing performance potential.

A Sun On The Way To West

On September 18, 2010

Find the decisive ways in order to ensure your excellence, by forcing the limits of your leadership for the sake of a higher calling.

Captain Rhodes tells the commando team, led by Lieutenant Waters:

- Gentlemen, I know you ere confrinted with alot, But we have to send you back. You have to fulfill a very important mission. The main objective is to find and recover Dr. Lena Fior Kendricks of the International Red Cross. The secondary objective is to recover two nuns and a priest who have a shelter near Yolingo, Nigeria. After you recover the targets, go to the Alpha retreat area. Good luck.

Lieutenant Waters and his commando team arrive in the small village where the three were, but, at the doctor's instance, which got affectionate with the population of the area, agreed to take several locals with them. The two nuns and the priest refuse to leave, because the people of the area needed their help.

After nearly two days of travel through mountains, they reach the Alpha retreat area. Then, Lieutenant Waters abandons the locals, takes the doctor to the helicopter and they abandon the area, without caring the fate of poor people who remained alone in the mountains, exposed to danger. He had no choice, he had to fulfill his mission, not undermine it, because the soldiers of General Mustafa Yakibu were following them and were about to kill them with no mercy.

Leadership: Do you depend on the existence of a "soul" concept from a psychological perspective on the power you have, with deeper meanings than the wrong choice of the moment can give them?

At some point, the helicopter the lieutenant and the doctor were in, passes over the small village they were in two days before. The view was terrifying. The village was burning in flames, dozens of bodies were randomly lying on the field. The stench of death was floating in the air.

The doctor was scared and seized by black thoughts. She was deeply affected by what happened and she feared that the people who had been abandoned will share the same fate. Weeping overcame her, as if her heart had been forever broken.

Anger and anxiety could be read in the eyes of Lieutenant Waters. The view of those terrifying images slipped revolt into his soul. He remained a moment merged in thoughts. He looked the doctor like in an endless prayer, unable to utter a single word. The shock caused by viewing those dead people was too much for him. That inhuman cruelty disgusted him. He was suddenly seized by remorse for having abandoned those locals on the field.

He couldn't remain indifferent, he wasn't able to commit such an infamy. "Ï couldn't abandon them", he said to himself. Then, finally, he uttered that secret word, the one of his humanity, which came from deep inside his soul. "Detour the helicopter ! "

Leadership means staying true to moral principles even when you are trapped in the trap of a sacrifice that you do not really want to make for someone else.

If you watched the movie "Tears in the Sun (2003)", you remember that, instead of safely leading his commando team and Doctor Kendricks "Home", thus fulfilling his mission, Lieutenant Waters decided to return to the Alpha retreat area, where he abandoned the locals, and guide them on foot, through the mountains, to Cameroon, where they would have been saved.

He failed to obey the clear orders he had received, putting his entire team, as well as the doctor, in constant danger. For once he gave the order to return, the real ordeal began. His career was in decline.

The mission was accomplished, but not entirely. Only four members of the commando team were still alive but they were seriously injured, including Waters, but most of the locals survived. The doctor managed to escape with light injuries. However, one can say the mission was a certain success because, in exchange of a few lives, many human lives have been saved.

Leadership: What restricts you to be human? You watching empathy as a precondition of prejudice, or as a substitute for it?

How many unpleasant surprises can hide the life of a leader. The decision taken by Lieutenant Waters was a huge test of his strength of character, it demonstrated his noble feelings, those of a man who takes risks and pushes his limits for the sake of a higher calling.

Leaders like Waters are consumed by a strong sense of justice and humanity. They don't emanate an attitude like "Come what may", but an attitude based on altruism: "I'll help you. If nodoby does anything for you, I'm going to do something." Inside their being lies a bit of humility. They are concerned with people's well-being; they manage to build a strong bong with them.

Your action always have consequences. There is always place for new maneuvers in leadership, especially if you are forced by circumstances to apply them, but if you move away from the purpose, be it because of feelings, then you may fail.

A man is truly magnificent when the nobility of his feelings gives meaning to a life experienced with a woken consciousness.

Conclusion: In the life of every leader, there may be landmarks, when he is forced to depart from the path of attaining the originally proposed aim, because motivations that impose it appear. The decision made in these decisive moments are crucial for the leader. If the result of these decisions is beneficial and leads to citory, the leader becomes a hero, and if not, the leader becomes "A sun on the way to west".

Can you combine the firmness with the emotional approach?

Find the decisive ways in order to ensure your excellence, by forcing the limits of your leadership for the sake of a higher calling.

A Symptomatology Of Aesthetic Experiences

On July 06, 2018

In the work you see must be felt the science and personality of the one who made it.

I strive to define some kind of oscillation between the initiative of interpreting an artistic composition and fidelity to the message placed at the forefront of awareness of the creative act. The world I live in, a key component of the opportunity to develop my general knowledge of life, of beauty and good, seems to have a lasting correspondence in a parallel universe. In a resemblance to the curving line of a dream limiting to the abstract and with the seemingly right line of the drawing, the right color found, that open access to a fundamental value of art called freedom of expression.

The very essence of this freedom, which is one with the service of God, having an openness to the logic and the value of life, marks a change in the composition and origin of a point of view already strongly supported by the space of an inverse mimesis. Aesthetic principle, developed especially in antiquity, according to which art is the imitation of the real.

Here I have to admit a second thing, just as primordial in the satisfaction of an objective vision as the supreme angle of view that allowed me to know the world as a mystery and to attribute symbolic meanings to it. He shares, like the old teaching books, the urge to find a mutation from art to science based on the continuity of a permanent transformation of a conceptual nature.

A visionary leader navigates a seemingly unchanging world to create new horizons capable of inspiring change.

Every stage, every aspect, every area of life shares something from inside an enigma, possible search cycles, identity grits, spiritual struggles, accumulation of meanings within a huge maze, colored with that hue of pink blending with gray, habits and expressions characteristic of style controlled by a reason that always lends an ear to the heart. Not for nothing, when I try to express my artistic potential, to visualize a new horizon, I feel close to a Don Quixote, transplanted into a seemingly unchangeable world, crafted under seemingly mysterious laws, made to fine or delight its makers as is just.

What is imagined as absolute as a supreme mystery in my art, falls into the extreme of a compromise between sincerity and the high degree of flexibility in defining a new profile of the architect of the world, in a modulated style of affective and overlapped labyrinths of the characters of my own Ego, my own traits and constructive deeds.

Leadership: Can you extend the reference frames of your imaginary representations with conceptual determinations in which personal experience is integrated?

A riddle inside an enigma is like a painting forged from the spontaneous gesture of delicacy, practiced for prolonged periods as a result of a close dialogue with the eye that anticipates a new direction of composition and responds faster than the hand. Once again, I am aligning my ways of experiencing a meta-esthetic in the course of my life, subjected to some quantitative or qualitative transformation.

Investing color with the radiant energy of the inner life, the magic eye of the opportunity to know how much I lie or how much I remain authentic in the psychology of the creator, akin to artistic experience, serving as a spiritual guide, with the great picturesque experience of a divinity that puts a common conscience in all people.

With great curiosity I observe the immense diversity of life forms and their apparent perfection, like a geneticist studying molecules, and is much more able to interpret the information gathered, trying to figure out what Jacques Ruffié called "one of the most mysterious frontiers of knowledge".

Undoubtedly, I have to reconfigure an overall picture satisfying to evolution. But not a total picture. Like a classical essay, it contains two major components: an informational one with cultural and perceptual determinations targeting the totality of imaginary representations grouped around a lax nucleus of ideas.

In the evolution of leadership, I legitimate myself as an outstanding exponent of scientific art. The first concept I summarize when writing, looking around, is this: "Observe Intelligently ! "

The testimony of a work as admirable as inaccessible is the expression of the association of colors and the mysterious depth of what you discover through everything you express.

Every painted work is an oversimplification of my intellectual property assets, which color is contained in its autonomous quality, touching hope, gentleness, attraction. How can you not see the green buds of the trees, the fresh green grass, the pigeon's graceful flight in the artist's painting universe that works only with the pencil, the paper sheet, and with established word combinations, with the means of expression of a knowledge that can only be borrowed, but without granting anyone the right to possess it?

In the book "How to Enjoy a Painting", writer Victor Ieronim Stoichiță tries to give an explanation to the painting called The Calling of Saint Matthew, made in 1661 by Juan de Pareja. To emphasize the importance of his experience, Pareja resorted to a figure of speech known as the author's metalepsis, representing the left side of the canvas, under the traits of a secondary character, but important though by its function: in his hand he holds a note that reads: "Juan de Parefa 1661".

The picture could (at the limit) operate without this character, which is an optional addition, without being meaningless however.

This is, in fact, the quality of a work that looks at its artist from the perspective of a fine observer and a sensitive eyewitness. But I do not want to stretch this subject too much, introducing other lines of force, contours of typical shapes for a work that portrays, in a general way, the portrait of an artist's individuality. I would just mention:

The only way to dialogue with the diversity of a vast world, with the help of the concept of totality, to replace the reality of life with the science that you have, is to place yourself in the work you are making.

A Symptomatology Of Aesthetic Experiences requires the exploration of frames full of mystery, short but content dialogues in an art of comparisons between personal experience and information perceived by language or image in the virtual "display" represented by consciousness.

An aesthetic experience is an increase in awareness of your reaction to what you are transmitting.

A Symptomatology Of Existentiality

On December 29, 2016

Decrease the distance between what you are and what it is possible for you to be by adding an extra meaning to the experience that singularizes you.

Read below the presentation of the novel "Duma Key", by Stephen King, the existing subject in the matter of a fine analysis of human personality, and try to catch the thread of this wonderful, meaningful story:

A terrible accident on a construction site rips the arm of Edgar Freemantle, darkening his memory and mind. The ordeal of the recovery period causes changes in his personality and boasts of uncontrolled anger that hasten the end of his marriage.

Edgar wishes he never survived the accident, but his therapist recommends a geographic-existentialist remedy: he advises him to completely change his life, leaving the busy city and the businesses in the construction industry.

*Retired to Duma Key, in the paradise of the Mexican Gulf, Edgar starts painting passionately, discovering an extraordinary talent. But his attraction to painting and drawing seems to be commanded by a force that surpasses him, like a constraint. Many of his paintings have a power that cannot be controlled, almost mystical, revealing secrets long buried, awakening the ghosts of childhood. And his talent can be, at the same time, a weapon...

Leadership: Do you start to understand the purpose of a painful experience when you cease to judge it in terms of an inherent causality, with that self-understanding given the manner of dealing with a new way of life?

What you become by means of an important moment, characterized through the means of a present that "is never good enough", so one that has the chance to be accessed only by accepting a strong feeling of imminent personal transformation, giving it a certain meaning, helps you better see the connection between what pertains to you and the things over which you really have no control.

The addiction to what is happening to you in favor of a broader existential change, managing to spread to the edges of the unknown, in the immense hope of a favorable fate, is the path to showing yourself faithful to a status and to a value of reference assumed through the membership to a guiding force that you cannot oppose. Whoever is given the chance to discover extraordinary talent must first experience the pain of surviving a crossroads of life, and not just survive, but find the strength to be someone else, a pioneer.

To restore an important moment and penetrate the profound meaning of facts, to dedicate yourself to the idea of Cause – what do you do with what has happened to you? – merging with it in the conditions of limiting and conditioning the freedom of choice, is a measure of your ability to continue to move forward by capitalizing on the experience that supports the ratio from cause to effect.

One's degree of determination is supported by that surplus of meaning of the experience that singularizes him.

Singularity is a concept that refers to the implications a major event has over personal progress. To become someone else, through the immense latent power of the mind and soul, means to keep from what is old only the useful part, it means to give consistency to transpired events in an ideal plane of existence.

Life is the progress that the result of the events to which you relate most deeply gives you, because it reveals your willingness to relate to the dimension of learning from what happened, so that you are more concerned with the things that really matter. This is also a kind of knowledge that you can consider together with the most hidden, or most intense, or the noblest feelings, because the vision of life and the most important teachings materialize in a completely different person only when negative events are viewed through a magnifying glass, both their importance and their consequences.

Singularity reveals the willingness to analyze the progress of your own learning, knowledge, by taking into consideration the finality of a stage of life, with related feelings, and materializing a new stage in a material and moral satisfaction.

To accept the truth about yourself by analyzing your willingness to make progress on a certain side of life, proving a great mental and emotional will, is the product of a materialization of knowledge based on less happy experiences, related to the most intimate and vulnerable feelings. And what is the truth about yourself? Are you willing to look at yourself differently? Are you willing to change, to become a completely different person?

The beginning of a review of life, at the level of consciousness and towards a new aspect of who you really are, is due to responsibilities that you have in relation to yourself in terms of the unfolding of events that you do not expect to occur.

A Symptomatology Of Existentiality, varying according to the evolutionary stage of man, is consistent with that experience that singularizes him. Thus, let us not forget the two great themes of existentialist thinking, according to French philosopher Emmanuel Mounier:

A Symptomatology Of Pedagogy

On November 13, 2016

First create something by yourself, then teach unto others.

He knew – he often had the painful opportunity to observe what people say maliciously: "He who is capable – creates; he who is not – teaches others". But Eisenstein never let himself troubled by such pettiness, calmly arguing: "To teach others in cinematography is still up to this day, and in full, to create."

These were not empty words. By carefully researching Eisenstein's pedagogical activity, we easily observe that teaching equated, for him, to studying, finding new creative solutions. The subject of his course - he declared programmatically – is entering the lab of creation. His course is also an opportunity of theoretical crystallization for an artist.

His pedagogical principles were very firm. He couldn't stand his students abandoning their own personality through mimicry. He snapped at them every time he observed such a tendency: "What is the meaning of this? Have you all decided to line up the steps from "Battleship Potemkin?" Is it me you want to imitate?"

He followed this principle ever since he began teaching. *****

Leadership: Do exclusively preoccupy yourself with the phenomenon "He who is capable – creates; he who is not – teaches others", reflecting your aspiration towards everything that is hard to know on the line of a trend of appreciation of the art?

At the core of any human calculation and any intellectual property, successful products amid the formation of general qualities that favorably influence the position of reference to the imposed or self-imposed tasks, there is always a personality. Rational in essence, irrational opposed to an external stimulus, personality precedes any mechanism of adapting to external imaginative constructions and creates its own laws.

The creative personality is interesting by the tendency with which it approaches the theme of art and artistic creations from the perspective of a question: "What is important for me to convey to people"? How do I contribute to maintaining and improving the position and self-image, as a creator of a scientific current, directing the completion of a work of art to an escape from trends?

Personality is not just the hint of an opportunity of theoretical and practical crystallization of a vision – after which you are left with little to do concerning what is happening in the surrounding world. Rather, quite often, it is a consequence of the exclusive concern for the phenomenon "He who is capable – creates; he who is not – teaches others", reflecting aspiration over everything that is hard to know and harder to interpret.

Being a creator targets that side of the personality that constantly gathers information and see everything from a multitude of perspectives. And to teach others is not a miracle of creation, it is not a journey towards the meanders of creation, it is not a game of human pulsations, between dream and reality, but rather, quite often, it proves to be a form of copying, of excessive mimicry maintained by using outdated methods, with poor or negative results.

The art that turns a creator into a pedagogue aims at that component of the personality that maintains the relationship between the imaginative projections of a possible world beyond other people's knowledge and an exploration of the self from the perspective of the rigor of defining a new reality.

It is the same teaching vice, frequently seen in those with high levels of qualification (and credibility), those who without themselves discovering a principle or concept, always show their willingness to submit fragments (entire chapters) from the intellectual works of true creators.

Leadership, during several stages of evolution of knowledge, is subject to the evaluation of the impact of a creation over the dynamics of the promoted creative process, over the integrating vision of the process of producing the results obtained by tensing the inventive spirit.

The best leaders, not limiting themselves to the conditions of self-directed learning, guided themselves after the exhortation that assures the unity of the lesson related to the skill of relating to people: "First create something by yourself, then teach unto others."

Leadership is first and foremost the result of entering into the laboratory of creation, then an opportunity of theoretical crystallization of certain methods, norms and guiding principles for future "artists". And, finally, it becomes the result of the painstaking approach of the complexity of every aspect of development that would obviously lead to a different conclusion than those listed before.

To be a good pedagogue means to teach people what art means by projecting their own person into the space of a reality that does not resemble another, because suddenly this reality can become unpredictable.

A Symptomatology Of Pedagogy brings into focus all of your intellectual manifestations that permit the diagnosis of a style of teaching of your own theories and differentiating them from other models of creation, so that you may be undefeated in the tendency: "He who is capable – creates."

A Symptomatology Of Victory

Learn to see through the transparency you forge by the means of rendering the creative power, accessing your new status according to the analysis of the impact of a higher degree of knowledge.

I have decked my secret purpose, my entire fortune with a plausible pretext, a liberating form of arranging a disallowed meeting, producer of an image with a unique value: "no one can tell". It was the answer to a long wait, an appearance of the genius that awaited its interpretation specifically devoted to a striking description of the infinite, in the superlative depths of creative power, in the perimeter of an emotion that even now sculpts fantasies in a mind that expresses itself through the optical effects of mirrors. The light, suffering multiple total reflections, produced a beautiful effect. Be very careful of a pretending that you wanted !

"I seem to be what I'm not you see" in this essence of the means of playing out a lucidity that abandons itself, as in the Myth of Sisyphus, through a sequence of reactions of the type "Stay close until you reach the end", but developed in the light of the law of the periodicity of a reverse phenomenon, such as an inverted image. Here, the creative power I had to show was announced to be a guarantee of perfect vision from the perspective of a physicist who dreams of traveling in the "timeline" of his own life to develop a new system of production and supply of reality.

My victory was in fact a violation of the standards of reality accepted by the preferences and expectations of the century in which I lived. It was the struggle I had to fight against ephemerality, against things done without a soul, such as things related to art and science. Only the writer Marquerite Yourcenar noticed the need for this victory in the fight against ephemerality and neglect. She wrote:

To do your best. To remake. To imperceptibly retouch the retouch itself. "I'm correcting myself, Yeats said, while correcting my works." He was one of those who had the good will to bother on his own initiative to rectify a mistake, to confirm a detail, to support a hypothesis, to facilitate a new research – facts for which I bring my friendly thanks.

Leadership: Can you live and manage a grandiose self-experience depending on the lucidity with which you encounter a different reality, effectively positioning yourself close to an edifying image?

A spontaneous separation of the two parts of me, by using the Gaussian lens formula, made everything complicated, made it have the nuances of a long evanescence. Two tissues transformed into nerves, two faiths faced with an ambient that denies and defies them, two ideas in an adverse relation. One acting as an active barrier, the other passive to the transporting of matter between the adjacent phases of developing the dynamic of relationships between an image of life past and one of life regained.

Evolution from the state of balance to the state of unbalance was possible, but highly unlikely. I didn't realize how alone I was, running from the world, retreating in the wilderness of a huge empire, in the delirium of possessing new knowledge neighboring the destruction of old ideas and teachings, proposing new meanings, even of this was not the primary source of my searches. Victory requires feeling and action, both immortalized in an edifying image of what makes me feel free, motivated, creative, more than the eventual satisfaction that would flow from contact with other people's experience, opinions, and attitudes.

It was an excruciating lucidity that changed self-experience, increased the misleading cheerfulness of the drunkenness of thinking about everything in terms of power, in order to seize absolute freedom, wanting myself leaning against one of those mysteries that give man the invaluable and bitter taste of the absolute. Too real is this feeling of make believe. Victory is the torment of keeping you lucid and creative in a reality that wants you to be someone else.

Leadership: Do you try to represent your fantastic superiority in this world by accessing the state of mind specific to the force of creation that asks: "Lord, make me your equal?"

Here is what Jack Griffin, Wells' hero, thought while facing the demons of his mind, analyzing the nuances of a liberating mystery:

To achieve such a dream meant that I had to overcome magic ! I had forged a magic vision – one that no doubt would come to disturb – on what this could mean for man. Mystery, power, absolute freedom... I couldn't glimpse any hindrances. Think for a bit ! I, a man as poor as a church mouse, a vagrant, with limited possibilities, to use the substantial merits of science, its inexhaustible resources, to rise on its highest peaks, in the sphere of truly evolved spirits, I could've become an invisible man !

For years I've worked. And as soon as I would overcome a mountain of difficulties, from atop of it, I would glimpse another. The multitude of details, trinkets, the claws of matter hidden in the vicinity of causes and effects ! Exasperation ! The outbreak of madness ! I had endured it all, I had clenched my teeth. But in the end, I had succeeded ! I had discovered the secret of invisibility, I had surpassed absolutely all men of science through the virtue of perseverance, by educating will, through the glow of an uncompromising lucidity spewing from the darkness of madness... And it worked... believe me ! I could see through the transparency I had forged. I could be in any place, without anyone sensing my presence. A sort of God. Here is where I started from, and how far I have come.

He who recognizes himself as a cause of a prolonged struggle, full of content, justified through the lens of the desire of being the best, the one who discovers a form of creation that speaks in the name of a certain superiority, will always express ideas, feelings, and the finest of aspirations in the equation of expanding his own supreme self.

A positive fact, because the one who doesn't correlate the victory of his labors with a favorable evolution, with a series of elements tied to a high degree of knowledge, will not be able to manifest himself as a lucid presence of the rational in favor of the effects of a certain lesson once assumed. And the supreme self, in a universe of infinite possibilities, of fantasy, tends to see the real world through a plurality of the possibilities of engaging in generating added value and innovation through creation.

A leader knows how to see through the transparency he forges. He is an artist who controls the art of transformation acting from a certain status and continuing to access that status according to the analysis of the impact of a high degree of knowledge, from the phase of an extension of his force of creation that asks: "Lord, make me your equal ! "

Such an individual, experiencing the relationships between an image of life past and one of life regained is useful to leadership through the fact that he merges with an immense projection of his actuality, obviously in an optimistic note, in a special and well defined category of the "different". And the different is often the harmonic fusion between creation and perfection, which gives a sense of total fulfillment.

A Symptomatology Of Victory has as a first consideration the basic trait of the genius artist, whose catalyst of differentiation can be at the upper limit of the maximum allowed by the laws of becoming, possible to be formulated as follows: "To achieve such a dream is to exceed magic ! "

A Thrill Of Ice In The Memory Of A Lost Traveler

On February 10, 2012

Give evidence of a strong leadership ability, by assessing the evolution of human experiences in the elements that constitute the reality of their life.

Eve de Chazelay was like cursed from her birth to suffer from idiocy, and only one man in the world, the young Doctor Jacques Mérey, managed to heal her completely, by breaking the curse and transforming her into an extremely beautiful creature, so delicate, cultivating in her the finest qualities, due to which, even the most powerful rulers of the time, the most talented musicians and artists have welcomed them with the deepest respect and even with envy.

How happy it could be a woman who became so beautiful, so wise, with so selected manners - along with her healer, her lover, so good, so attractive, and so affectionate. Moreover, how unhappy could she be, when the chaotic events that only God and His plans may comprise them, separates her from her lover, by putting on trial her soul, will, mind, and devotion.

Leadership: Are you following the progressive tendency to accept what is happening to you rather than trying to influence what you feel in a context that gives you the opportunity to reveal yourself to the world altogether?

The revolution separated them. Eve entered the circle of the most influential people in France due to her so big fortune, and her special qualities. However, although she had built an enviable reputation, although she had everything, her soul was still grieving. Only the hope that she would meet again the solely man whom her soul could accept him as a lover, was still keeping her alive. Nevertheless, this it was up to a point, when it was consumed and the last hope.

- Ah, burst out Eve, you know well, my dear friend Thérésia, the only man who could give me happiness, died. What is the good of waiting for a traveler who cannot come back? I lost him. It is better to go to meet him there where he is, in the grave. I want to die !

- Oh, bad thoughts ! Thérésia answers. How can such words come from a young and fresh mouth like yours? Grave - after sixty years we still think of it. Ah ! Live, live, my beautiful Eve, you will see what paradise you will live !

The Eve's heart, felt then a light touch, as if these words had come from the part of the one whom he loved, as if they were issued and transmitted into space, causing her a new breath of life: "We will meet again, Eve ! Wait and hope ! "

Leadership: Is it necessary to distinguish between the tendency to be too active in relationships and the tendency to experience an inward joy of authentic vitality?

How well are you integrating into the world of people's reality? How do you rate the development of emotions of the people around you? What are the elements that make their world and how they behave towards others? What do you have to do for people to keep the charm of their own moral and emotional beauty?

The most important things you learn in relationships are just as necessary as the tendency to experience an inward joy of authentic vitality.

The difference is that in the first case you depend on a certain period of time, a certain circumstance and the duty to be grateful to others. In the second case you depend on hope, the concession you make the candor to embrace the mystery of life and its essence, using the term "motivated", when all you love is stolen, but you know that it will be returned to you at one point.

Once again, I must insist on the fact that emotions and feelings constitute the substance of leadership. The leader remains, if not in the immediate reality, in any case into the internal matrix of the everyone, that is into an inner world, in which they could not exist without him, and him without them. A leader who can not redirect people's emotions towards him, could never raise his level of influence.

The mystery of life is based on an emotion called "gratitude" which at some point will turn into an uncertainty that will prove as beneficial to your spirit as is faith in a special reunion.

Theresa has played excellently the role of a spiritual mentor and a trainer of people, by transmitting to Eve, with all her conviction, the certainty that her lover is alive - in a simple and original manner, managing to highlight the depth of reality, through the allusion to the "paradise "that Eve will live, radiating exactly those deep, intense and unexpected feelings, those magnificent spiritual sensations - controlled - which, leaving their mark on her mind, to sweeten her existence.

If you have read the wonderful novel, "Le docteur Mysterieux" of the writer Alexandre Dumas, then you know that Eve had lived and hoped - at the Thérésia's suggestion, and finally she had met again Jacques Mérey, they got married and lived that so beautiful and interesting life that only two warm and loving souls can share it.

Can you diminish or dissipate those negative emotions that dehumanize and distort the essence of the human being? Does the alarm clock of your leadership works perfectly and could it produce on time that beneficial latch in the existence of people?

This incursion into the people's lives that cannot longer feed his existence with any hope it is like an alarm clock that forces the man to awaken all his senses, to recondition his own network of feelings, emotions, values and beliefs.

As a leader you have the duty to ensure yourself that this alarm clock works perfectly and can produce on time that latch into the existence of people, by triggering in them those intense feelings, overwhelmingly beautiful that leave their mark on their psyche, producing their radical transformation towards better.

Leadership is that "wait and hope" that you inspire to those who recognize your power to be present at a moment that may constitute a new beginning to change life.

A Thrill Of Ice In The Memory Of A Lost Traveler designate that searing experience that it is installed in the life of people disconnected from the beneficial reality; of those people who fail before the test of devotion towards their beliefs and expectations - that unique experience that is wasted and go without bringing anything good into their soul.

Just as the eye of a painter often stops on the elegance of a gesture, on the burst of a wing, on the drama of an attitude, on a spot of color, on the purity of a line - even so your leadership, in order to acquire meaning, you must feel what exactly matters to people, you have to act on time under the virtue of your representative role, reporting yourself to their world.

You have to stop your attention over those errors of consciousness, over those purely personal elements, irrational and emotional that had left their mark over the reality of their lives (such as pain, sadness, hate, fear, etc.) and to remove the emotions, which can lead them to emotional "paralysis" that once they flood their existence, are just very difficult to change.

Conclusion: Support people, encourage them, and by positive suggestions to motivate them to be with you. The positive suggestion determined by a positivity of thought will be a proper weapon for the annihilation of pessimism, inactivity and lack of initiative.

A Tormented Soul In Hell

Whoever isn't endowed with the talent of leadership will not be able to take upon himself a great burden and turn it into success.

The prophet started for the palace of the king of Israel, Zedekiah. He had to warn him at any price about the danger threatening him. If the king does not listen to him, there was no possibility of salvation for him, his children and his people.

- Surrender yourself, the prophet said to him. Surrender yourself and kneel down before Nebuchadnezzar, the king of Babylon. There is no escape. You must surrender and beg for his mercy. Maybe he would spare your family and leave the House of the Lord untouched, as well.

Nevertheless, Zedekiah, despite the warning of his prophet, didn't want to surrender. His mind simmered ambitious plans. He was blinded by the splendor of his dream, which was to set free his people from the domination of Babylon and to regain his lands. He was firmly convinced that he could fulfill his dream.

Even so, the prophet looked at Zedekiah with great sadness and realized that he was lost. For he guided him to live in peace, but he wanted war. And starting a war against such a powerful king like Nebuchadnezzar meant pure suicidal.

Leadership: Do you have the opportunity to truly visualize the effects of your actions by experiencing them from the perspective of an improvised role play from the high sense of pride of expressing your personality?

The beginning of an endless hell. Finding that Nebuchadnezzar destroyed a large part of his army, king Zedekiah and his three sons left the palace in the greatest hurry and arrived at the plain of Hebron, where the rest of the Israeli army had retreated. But he didn't get to gasp his breath when he saw above the platform that rose above the city a cloud of dust and inside the cloud, spreading all along the horizon, the Babylonian chariots of battle.

Zedekiah immediately ordered his army to take the position to fight, and his horses be straight away brought to him. "The lord shall fight along with you and you will arrive tonight in the Be'er Sheva oasis as winners" he told them.

However, nobody noticed the terror that struck Zedekiah's face. No soldier could imagine that, in fact, their lord's knees weakened when he saw the hundreds of battle chariots going down towards him at a dazzling speed.

Leadership: Do you work on accepting your own facets that you cannot accept and whose vibration draws situations that you experience in the state of being under the sign of fatality?

A soul tortured by the fear of death. The famous writer Valerio Massimo Manfredi was not wrong when he said: "When a king feels at the mercy of his enemies, his despair and fear increase over the top, thousands of time more than the poorest and most humble of his subjects who have known all his life that he is hollow and defenseless."

Zedekiah was seized by panic. At that very instant, there were so many feelings tormenting his soul. A growing fear seized him every time he saw his enemies vertiginously approaching him, feeling the imminent danger. He thought about Nebuchadnezzar's cruelty and felt an icy tremor of fear rising on his spine. He knew that if he and his children were caught, Nebuchadnezzar would find direful punishments for them, and maybe he would find a way to keep them alive for weeks, months, or years, creating for them an infinite inferno. God knows the tortures and the sacrifices they would have to put up with for the rest of their lives.

With every second passing by, Zedekiah realized even more that he was in a difficult and dangerous situation, which he could not control. The Babylonian battle chariots were getting closer and closer, and like a storm, they destroyed and killed whatever got in their way.

Leadership: Do you rely on accepting some lower values of the module to design a vision, embracing an attitude that clearly shows that you are the adversary of a destiny from which resignation arises?

You cannot run from your mistakes. Zedekiah didn't want to die. He had to run, he had to save his own life and that of his children. With his heart seized by the fear of death, taking his courage in both hands, he left his army, thus committing an unforgivable mistake. For nobody likes coward leaders.

Without a leader, any battle is lost. The whole army of Zedekiah panicked, and people started running everywhere. The Babylonian warriors followed them through the desert in their chariots, as if they were hunting wild animals, killing them all.

As I said in a previous article, the fate of king Zedekiah and his children were tragically. They were caught and enchained. His children were barbarically executed in front of him, and his eyes have been removed and taken to Babylon to live forever in the darkness, carrying inside the pain of losing his children. Values, such as tolerance and refusal of violence, could not instill a healthy vision of the future.

Mircea Eliade was right when he said: "Those who have never endured the struggle for the fulfillment of an absurdity consider to be madness everything that exceeds their weakness and mediocrity."

Open your eyes and see the real you ! Zedekiah was a leader with great ideals, but with a weak character, lacking the spirit of a warrior, and, altogether, unrealistic. Being aware that his army stood no chance against Nebuchadnezzar's army, which was much better trained, equipped and had at his disposal more soldiers, however, he decided to start the war, despite his prophet's warnings. He, therefore, became responsible for the destruction of his entire army and of the death of his son. And the punishment he received, the one of spending the rest of his life groping in the dark, in the abyss of loneliness, held in derision, was within his audacity and his unbelievable courage.

Zedekiah's power, honor and soul were put at a difficult test because he wasn't able to fully predict his future and take measures accordingly. He proved to be unable to manage the events that he himself caused and to be a real leader to his people. Only the greatest human minds, the ones truly audacious and gifted with the talent of leadership are capable of assuming a great burden and turn it into a success. Not the mistrustful, irresponsible and coward natures, like Zedekiah, who abandon his mission and his people in order to save his own life.

What about you? Are you a true leader? Look at the truth with your eyes wide-open. Are you a leader with great ideas, but who rambles on wrong paths in order to fulfill your own goals, just as Zedekiah was?

Leadership is the result of the warnings that must be inscribed on the surface of your own consciousness such as thought, image, desire, fear, from which you can draw an important lesson: "If you want to do pastoral service, never forget who the sheep belong to."

Conclusion: Starting a war without ammunition or a proper strategy is a lost war from the beginning. First of all, a real leader must be honest with himself, must be able to properly assess himself in respect to what and how much he can do, and not to lie to himself, relying on vain illusions.

Foolishness, cowardice, aberrant decisions, incorrect assessments, arrogance, will have repercussions for all, especially upon the leader. Panic will seize him in difficult moments. And once the negative and irretrievable consequences appear, regrets will be in vain, and he will remain nothing but... a tormented soul in hell.

A Tormenting Adagio Of The Blood

On December 14, 2013

Discover the algorithm that allows the creation of a better defined profile of your personality, experiencing another dimension of leadership.

Senator Ruth Martin addresses the man who kidnapped her daughter. From within the words so deep and affectionate that only an innocent soul can taste, under the tension of an inner clash of two opposing forces, between David and Goliath, between ability and crash, breaks through that chain of thoughts, emotions, desires, that must challenge at all costs the sick mind of the kidnapper. Of the fierce killer, Buffalo Bill.

The oscillation of internal energy, in the phase of self-transformation, takes place under conditions of stress and anxiety, which can be measured by the heat of the soul that prevails with intensity through the voice that begs for mercy. A part of this gentle being remains silent, shivers, remains hidden behind the peaceful and quiet temperament. While another part of it groans and throws itself into battle with latent understanding, with the unbridled passion of a player unwilling to lose.

But in the prison of thought a thread to thin of hope is built. The woman's weary heart, this pulsing system that expands and contracts rhythmically to ever higher temperatures, accommodates only deaf and unexplained noises, creating overwhelming whirlwinds. Powerful turbulences that extend based on the law of instability towards another dimension of the self. The discharge frequency of positive stimuli is hard to estimate. Her determinism, the effects of propagation reactions of negative pressure waves, are extremely difficult and costly to investigate experimentally with a psychological instrument of measuring self-esteem.

Leadership: Can you achieve a certain intensity of the performance of being more meaningful, more dependent on the mark of a new position in man's sphere of knowledge, to produce a new version of the vision of the value of life?

Some crystals, when put into a fire, melt at first and then volatilize. So too does the heart, arduously strained, trembles to its foundations and then shudders until it collapses. The chemical analysis of blood would reveal new degraded compounds that reduce heart rate, high sensitivity semiconductor sensors that slow blood flow. Heart pumped blood enters slower and slower into the arterial system, creating an oscillating tension. Nerves call upon themselves and are transformed into a scattered algorithm that modifies the operating variables, making its approach inefficient.

Sound vibrations must create a mood that offers depth-giving and impulses, re-creating with great sensitivity the heartbreaking image of an unthinkable soul twisting. But the effect is not the desired one, the woman's approach only causes a great deal of uncertainty and daring at the same time. Buffalo Bill becomes more hidden and more calculated in his decisions, but in no case more temperate.

The echo of the voice is not that far-reaching, stimulating, relevant to the creation of a sphere of positive influence. It cannot form a perfect whole, that stable foundation for the leadership it intends to impose.

The Senator's vision of the value of her daughter's life does not reach the heart of the killer precisely because it is symbolic, it is based on the wavelength of her political position, less on the territory of empathy. The vision must first be an opening of the self towards another, then to change the direction of a belief towards the fulfillment of a mission.

Can you complete your leadership position by self-regulation of the soul dimension when you are under the circumstances to experience the pain of your own consciousness?

Both by the temperament of his personality promoted during the qualifying "tournament" in the first echelon of excellence in leadership and by its own methods of analysis with which he is endowed with, the leader can comfortably set his dominant model into an accessible position. He usually functions as an objective mechanism, equipped with levers of self-regulation and self-control so well defined that he won't dissolve his positive state of being. This state can rotate 90 degrees through a simple exposure in a gloomy frame of a difficulty moment in life and can transform itself into a state of total abandonment.

Jorge Luis Borges, one of the most important writers of the twentieth century, said: "There comes a time in every man's life when they find out who they are." This self-knowledge is not the result of some miraculous power not understood by anyone, but only the way in which the unconscious recognition of our inner life and the identification with those feelings that can be recognized in ourselves, play an important role in ensuring stability.

The strong and sometimes violent feelings that overwhelm man, often darkening his righteous judgment, take place when experiencing another dimension of leadership. A dimension in which compassion, understanding and love are dominant. But this spiritual amalgam can leave way for weakness, by establishing and applying different approaches, positions and norms.

In chess, the position is seen by both players as perfectly equal and without a chance of entering the device of any of the opposing parties. During the toughest of existential moments, you can complete your position of leadership by auto-regulating the soul dimension, but in doing this you will hamper any logical flowchart of developing a viable strategy. Unfortunately, strong minds are hard to break in the face of ingenuity. So do not seek to discover in ingenuity some considerable forces of influence.

Leadership: How do you assess your ability to cope with a situation at the limit where a second of emotion proves to be stronger than a thousand images?

Inspired permanently by an innovative spirit, permanently giving up on any trends that do not represent a fundamentally psychological attitude and to any type of thinking that does not focus on beliefs and positive emotions, the leader also makes available to his own will and self-constraint certain facilities, ideas, scenarios and convincing means of expression and perception. By experiencing new approaches, behaviors, attitudes and behaviors, he has to prove virtue and morality, offering a basis for authentic quality: to weigh, to judge, to be wise.

An oscillation between two opposite poles does not lead to a "madness", but to an understanding of the existential ineffable. Under the inner tension of a clash between two opposing forces, between David and Goliath, between ability and crash, breaks through that chain of thoughts, emotions, desires, that greatly challenges the character and personality of man. And this represents the only and most difficult way of exploring leadership in tense situations.

At this time, only those who have the courage to turn the focus of attention to themselves will be able to capture the "imperceptible", measured by the heat of the soul that succeeds with intensity from behind its motivations. But in this case, the only noticeable thing is the psychological phenomenon to which leadership assists impotently.

Be careful ! You could end getting stuck in what regards the making of better decisions if the guiding principle of your responsibility is subjected to the feeling of "loss of self" in favor of the emotions that offer a value fundamental to your message regarding the existence of a common nucleus of humanity.

A Tormenting Adagio Of The Blood is a metaphor that expresses the depth of human suffering in its attempts to resolve its spiritual matters. It expresses the inner state of the man aware of his own limitations, trying to extend the power of influence, or at the very least to maintain its leadership position.

A Triple Change Of The Light

On September 26, 2014

Concern yourself about the direct perceiving of the essence of art, developing the experiences of those conceptions elaborated in detail which may further lead to maximizing your reason of creation.

Eisenstein's concern for the cinema is duplicated by another one. In the foreground appears a seemingly unusual passion: Eisenstein mounts on the stage of Bolshoy Theatre, the opera "The Valkyrie" by Wagner. He makes it, as he states, with an indescribable enthusiasm and inspiration. He makes it concerned about the direct perceiving of the music and its staging embodiment.. He also makes it and with the thought of some experiences that he would use in the upcoming movies.

He checks his ideas about the unity between sound and image, about the dramatic function of color. In the final act, for instance, he composes, in agreement with Wagner's orchestration, a triple change of the light across the whole background of the scene … (silvery light, coppery and azure blue) and puts struggle between the shades of azure blue lights and the purple flames in tone with the score of "Feuerzauber". We are witnessing here, in fact, at the experiences of some further elaborated concepts. *****

Leadership: Can your model of creation illustrate the experiences of some scientific associations marked by thoroughly elaborated conceptions, so as to ensure the reception of new meanings of the image you transmit?

Through its permanence in building and developing a high mastery, leadership may be a double-edged sword, headed either against the one practicing an advanced form of art, or against the one who fails to enroll his ideas "with the something extra" in the sphere of a vast experience of creation. That also means a becoming at the level of perception of the advanced knowledge forms, of superior intellectuality, of some relevancy unknown aspects.

An orientation towards the authenticity of discovering new dimensions of the art through an initiation in the space dedicated to the revelations and perceptions that recommends you as an artist, may differentiate you from the crowd by the imprint of imagination and originality. Practically, when you create you have to highlight a personal view of certain moments, experiences or beliefs, that captures the most important elements of your model of thinking.

As a director, you must secure a definitive "supremacy" of some conceptions capable of becoming part of unforgettable moments and an image that tells a story about the personality and greatness of your own being in the colors of a reality that is as mysterious as possible. Your vision must reflect more than a crescendo of the will to achieve something with which to fully identify yourself and that would contribute in the same time to the development of what might be called "Self Representation".

Personal Leadership is a reflection of the experience used in future achievements as a result of interactions between the content of ideas you have to play in a new forms and concepts built and promoted which you choose to highlight your abilities.

Leadership: Do you use the "alternating current" in the crystallization process of science rather than the continuous one, using "closed-open" contacts?

This experience of the self that flows all over the creation, meets curiosity, the willingness to try something new, the ability to perceive intuitively the place of art in the manifestation of some new entities like "the change occurs through access to a particular source of renewing the reference points in defining some new trends" with future challenges in the way of managing the concepts on which rely the leadership models.

To use in the crystallization process of science more the "alternative current" than the continuous one, seeking that characteristic of thinking that gives greater value of certainty to the conclusions you have achieved and to the conceptions you have formed, is equivalent to the long and systematic using of the creative experience rather in the sense of achieving the extension of the rules for applying the knowledge used in the future projects.

The norms of applying knowledge have as a main characteristic the performance achieved in testing the effectiveness of creation in a conceptual format (describing the relationships between man and art correlated with reality) to fulfill the role of triggering the effect of authenticity.

While the contacts of "closed-open" type are actually two aspects of your own self. The first aspect concerns the possibility to stagnate into a pattern of counterintuitive thinking, the other one takes into account the possibility to improve yourself through a better exploitation of ideas.

The path towards authenticity is reserved for the means of realizing some further developed concepts, tributary to some ideas and trends of the future, which through their essence and consistency mark the being rendition manner of a form of perception over the interaction between the content and image you project upon the world.

A triple change of the light aims the diffuse assessment of reality that you represent in the "fever of creation", leaving a free path towards the construction of some new patterns of thinking. For managing to develop the experiences of those conceptions elaborated in detail which may further lead to maximizing your reason of creation, first, concern yourself on the direct perceiving of the essence of art that connects you to what you are by yourself: an opener of horizons.

A True Trainer

On January 04, 2009

Make from your art a luxury to ensure the guarantee of originality, without offering too much value in advance.

An old Arab proverb states: "Humanity is divided into three classes: those that are immovable, those that are movable, and those that move." In this article, I will address only to those people who need an impulse to "move" in order to increase their level of performance.

If you want to get better results than those you have obtained until now, if you want to reach a high professional level, then you must find someone who is better than you in the field that would help you move more easily and faster in the desired direction. However, the process of preparation it is slow and requires many hours of study, and finding a wise mentor to help you in this respect it is not just a piece of cake.

Leadership: Do you build your essential elements of the training plan and personal development, focusing more on the artistic side of your compositions?

The shortest way to achieve professional performances is to attend periodical courses of training and improvement supported by serious and skilled trainers. However, mostly, you may find that the trainer is not a good professional at all, but just an excellent manipulator, who only follows to acquire material profits from gullible and ignorant people that can be easily fooled.

I have met people who remain deeply impressed when a trainer provides them various information, without knowing that in fact that information can be found in most of the books from that field appeared on the market, or information taken and unprocessed (sometimes less studied) from the true professionals.

How to recognize a professional? A very good trainer does not reproduce the ideas of others. Hence, he carries out his contribution by himself for explaining some elements or processes from the respective field. And each of these elements, resulting from a technique of expressive association, is a space with a self-evident personality, about which in life you have an idea in relation to the perspective you have on reality. These elements must overlap with the completion of imagination into a concept.

In art, as well as in teaching and coaching, it is not just the representation of the image that matters, but also the impregnated qualities of the imagination from which ideas, visions, and theories emanate. These qualities are fluidity, plasticity, and originality.

Leadership: Can you prove the uniqueness of your ideas through a strong representation of imagination from the point of view of artistic syntax?

Since the middle of the nineteenth century dates an ingenious idea: art is a "luxury" because its production was the prerogative of some rare beings, of some people gifted by nature with special skills - those who possess "genius" or at least "talent".

I have met trainers who have attended various specialized courses abroad and return to the country where they present from start to finish what those before them had taught. Just like the wireless phone such individuals, which, at first sight, completely overshadows us, are doing nothing but rendering at their courses - word-to-word - what the others have presented before, much better than them. And sometimes they distort reality. They offer their value in "advance" through a complete mechanism of fooling the world, presenting themselves as the good connoisseurs, focused on a particular direction.

Can they be called "pure" professionals? Can be said about their art to convey knowledge that it is a "luxury"? Do they have that spark of a genius?

I attract your attention not to fall into the trap of false experts, highly skilled in stealing others' ideas and presenting them as if they were their author. I repeat. The fact that a trainer talks a lot, nice and with intonation, it does not mean at all that he is also a good professional.

True professionals prove the uniqueness of their ideas through a strong representation of the imagination from the point of view of the artistic syntax, which involves putting in relation after a predetermined order a selection of elements, motives, forms of expression, following a logic of the maximum gravity that makes possible a unique interpretation.

Leadership: Can you use and share a symbolic technique, starting from the fact that everything, however insignificant in its precarious appearance, conceals a fundamental alterity?

A true trainer manages to convince people that he is really a good professional. While, a good professional uses his freedom of thinking, he distinguishes by his own original ideas, in no circumstances "borrowed" from others. A true trainer has most certainly a blog and most likely wrote several books.

Nevertheless, it is highly difficult to detect a good professional if you are not well-prepared, and if you are not in theme with all the news in the field. Therefore, I suggest you that before participating in various training courses to inform yourself regarding all the aspects in which you are interested.

Paraphrasing the writer Mika Waltari, I would say that the information that some trainers provide are like stones thrown into the water. When you throw a stone into the water, you hear a loud noise and the water stirs, but after a few moments the water surface becomes smooth and no trace that the stone left is not visible anymore.

If the information provided by your trainer are not useful for you, it means they were just a little "noise", it means that his whole science does not leave traces in your thinking. In this case, the trainer is not a good professional at all.

However, I have also met extraordinarily good trainers that really had something to say and the participants had something to learn from them; they were not simply conveying information, but knew how to make it interesting, as challenging and as "orange ", they knew how to capture the listener's attention. Whenever, I was around them, I knew that I will found out something new. Nevertheless, they are very rare, especially in our country at this time.

I would not like to lengthen this article too much, that is why I will stop here. I hope you will have the luck to meet trainers that come with new and original ideas, and which deserve to be listened. Beware of imposters !

Leadership is the art of being professional in a direction that everyone follows, but in which you are labeled as the brightest mind, a reformer of cult for perennial values such as: "impact", "authenticity", "innovation".

A True Trainer can be an artist who knows that when talent is genuine, he has nothing to lose by initiating creations and approaches that, in their generous idealism, resort to a strong motivation: the fecundation of ideas that are worth promoting.

A Winning Way

On January 10, 2009

Orient yourself to your leadership strengths, without ignoring the positive side of your being.

Sun Tzu advised us: "Avoid the enemy's strong points and attacking his weak points." A skillful leader does not rush into a battle where there are no high chances of success, but only if he finds a way of getting out victorious. And one of the best ways to create a real advantage, a sort of a protective shield, is to recruit people from the opposing camp.

In "Cheops and the Great Pyramid" Guy Rachet, tells us about the Cheops' expedition to Phoenicia and about the diabolical conspiracy that has been instigated against him.

When returning from Byblos, Cheops was met by his trusted officer Ineke, together with other two soldiers. He did not suspect in no way that they sought to kill him. However, even before the three of them act, Kerset, the daughter of Reyen - one of the richest men in Byblos, jumped to his help and killed two of his attackers, injuring the third in his leg with two arrows just before to run. Cheops escaped unharmed, without a scratch, and now he had to find out the truth at all costs from the wounded attacker.

Normally, after finding out who was actually hiding behind the conspiracy, Cheops was supposed to kill this attacker who wanted to take his life. But what do you think he decided?

There seems hard to believe, but he left him alive. Moreover, together with Kerset, they bandaged his feet and properly took care of him. His gesture was by no means reckless, but on the contrary, it was a noble and a well-thought one. For in this way, the attacker, through a moral duty commandment, would be grateful to him, and could help him unmask the impostors. Even if Cheops' decision was not an easy one, he resorted to this solution thinking about his future benefits.

Leadership: Do you extend your maneuvering space around an image that represents you with a superior quality that you so far ignored on your character?

All people make mistakes. The chargeable consciousness, the careful observation of moral duties, as well as the compliance of a right behavior, determine them to admit their mistakes, to learn from them, and to strive to correct them.

Intuition, along with the capacity to exhibit a ponderate behavior, dictated to Cheops the decision that he took, helping him to easier anticipate other hazards. Leadership is based on these two qualities that can change your attitude in times of difficulty. They reflect the "cap" of your own potential, being the guidance system that does not let you deviate from the right path. They amplify your leadership potential through a positive outlook on own capacities.

A quality of your character that you may have ignored so many times is the ability to be active in a new initiative in an impetuous way of repositioning regarding immediate external challenges.

To convince yourself of the leading power that lies within you is to respect the boundaries between "form and substance", in accordance with the values that you assume in such a way that you do not regret it later. The shape is given by unexpected events, the basis is given by the way you treat them without doubting yourself.

Therefore, your first concern, as a leader, is to always keep in touch with these two benchmarks that frequently interact and complement each other, frequently checking how your area of expertise progresses.

The image that represents you through a superior quality of your own nature is given by the added credibility and celebrity status that you must skillfully exploit by an honorable gesture.

Making an abstraction of the inner voice, which whispers exactly how to act and what road to take, it is like someone would completely destroy your guiding system, and would take all your guiding intelligence. You get to behave chaotically, without a coherent strategy, with no structure, without logic, without an integrated thinking and a plan that would correspond to your skills, and to ensure you a certain safety in your deeds over time.

The guiding system allows you to behave with much care in critical situations and to approach things with a lot of skill. It connects you to your positive side that accentuates your personality, which enhances your smoothness in thinking, and frees your true leadership potential. That point of support that continually reminds you of your moral values, encouraging you to obey them, even when you are surrounded by people who lack these values.

Orient yourself in any situation to your leadership strengths, without ignoring the positive side of your being. How do you reach a high level of performance in leadership?

Leadership: Are you expecting to benefit from a hesitation skillfully provoked through a true strategy of ambiguity, of which the most promising prospect is the recognition of a superiority that has not been determined with certainty?

If you really want to reach your proposed goals, be prepared for many disappointments. Put in the top of the list your self-confidence for the purpose that you follow to reach, and especially in your working partners (business) that you choose. Because, remember very well, no matter how much confidence you have in your own abilities, if you do not find a reliable ally to help you in trouble, you will never succeed to reach your goals.

Just as the craftsmanship is characterized by the production of objects made in the spirit of art, especially of the popular one, even so, a high level of performance in leadership can be achieved by developing trust in other people in the noble spirit of ethical and moral values - which come in support of your assessment of their fair value.

How do you appreciate the people's confidence? How do they appreciate your confidence?

Recognizing a value of superiority that has not been determined with certainty is an opening to new experiences from which you have to deduce some personality traits that rise above "to know" and above "to understand".

A Winning Way is the adoption of that feature generically called "adaptive process" from which ultimately derives the effect of "positive dominance".

About me

On Mai 07, 2022

When it comes to describing myself, perhaps three words fully characterize me: perseverance, curiosity and enthusiasm. And I think from here it all began.

I pride myself on the attributes of the art I propose to be thoroughly understood by you, the reader, but not so much for the merits of a particular teaching, but rather because I have planted in myself the vision of the scientist who knows how to change the truly spiritual, profound criteria, a world that was something yesterday, a world that you will not recognize starting today.

To not think in terms of Creation and Creator, and to not distinguish between kitsch and art, are the criteria of closing a world in itself, in a dull and irrelevant display of ideas, visions, and freedom of expression, often perceived as things without meaning, ready to be buried at any time in a shallow grave that most probably a writer like Mika Waltari would liken to a sand book that can only be enjoyed by forgetting about it.

Leadership: Can the significance that you attach to your association with superior intellectual activity be understood as the effort of an Exceptional Creator to express your vision in the space of a relationship with the purpose of being more than Legendary?

Behold, a principle worthy of Victor Hugo: "Nothing is born without roots, nothing is measured without amplification." First of all, I am grateful to myself for the books of various content that my destiny has brought to my mind before I thought of my future, just as bees remain grateful to the natural phenomena for the pollen of the various flowers that reach other flowers constituting a cross-pollination designed to sustain a whole ecosystem.

It's a just pride, not arrogance on my part. Not only have I acquired the attributes of a chosen knowledge holder, but the result of a thought that boasts that "it had experienced all it said", because action is more important than theory, but I have related to myself as to the work of a painter who transposes on the canvas the images created by the mind of a writer who experiences his life in a famous, big and heavy story, a huge volume guarded by the vision of a scientist.

The results are befitting. The more than 1200 articles and 6 books that I've written up to the present time, the helpful webinars and well structured membership program, is certainly the evidence that I detain a serious stock of knowledge.

Extensively, if the universe has given me a destiny of legend, a destination that art assumes by the courage of not giving up the honors of an absolute power, the power of building a grandiose idea through a syncretic image, then the literature they make available consists of an analysis of alterity: I am a painter as well as an architect, and a magician.

Leadership: Can you value your own achievements in the context of an influence that joins the regular events that make your life work for a progress creator, inducing a remodeling of all the core components associated with a world that is supposed to be superior to its other variants?

When you are near an exemplary destiny, with strong spiritual valences, you must accept another variation of the meaning of life and of the world in which you live. Just as the greatest desire of an artist is to create a strong composition, full of light and emotion, so my greatest desire is to build an edifice, which I hope will not ever collapse. This edifice accommodates a large part of my knowledge, enriches daily, and I think worth a visit for all who wish to improve their performances.

An additional condition of a meaningful being is to let go of a vision meant to be reflected in the evolution of the administration of the sphere of science and innovation, not only to exaggerate the transmission of the appreciation of the quality of a life full of joy and happiness. Just as Henry Ford's wish was that everyone could afford a car, just as Bill Gates's desire was that every person could afford to have a personal computer on the table, so my wish is that everyone could understand the concept of leadership and its hidden aspects.

Leadership: Do you inspire yourself in creating your own uniqueness in the context of a set of causes and effects, not taken into account, despite a disturbing destiny and its apparent fragility, when you need to remain complex and courageous in your choices?

To my parents I reproach that they have not learned anything of this life, their destiny has not given them the wisdom specific to those who have in essence understood the rules of a world that must constantly change until it becomes perfect. In fact, I have learned absolutely nothing from my parents, although they have both had important leadership positions. There is a certainty: I have always been a self-taught person, and I have not bowed my head to the advice of obtuse people, not open to the great science, to creation, to progress.

The pleasures of life are for the people who do nothing, and sacrifices are for those who prove their majesty. Some were born only to be forgotten, completely deleted from the book of life, others have adapted to the most unfavorable conditions of life to change a whole world and perhaps to gain immortality. Being a genius means not blindly giving heed to the requests of your parents.

When it comes to leadership, as in other areas, everything starts from what you know and what you do with what you know. Even if you have talent, you should practice it every day just as a basketball player is practicing basketball shots every day for his progress to be visible.

If you don't have talent or leadership abilities, the good news is that you can be a great person if you manage to help others, even in a small way, to develop as humans and proffessionals. Who knows, maybe a reference from me will be of service to you to help others around you.

Be honest, and I'll be honest with you

Abracadabra, Who Are You?

On June 19, 2010

In order to know the reality, a leader must also master the art of dissimulation – a fearful weapon, but efficient in most situations.

In a previous article, "By all the rules of the art", I told you about the young prince Hamlet, who, wanting to avenge his father's death, took the strange decision of pretending to be completely out of his mind. With an unequaled ingenuity, Hamlet played his role perfectly, making everybody at the court, and especially King Claudius, his uncle, whom he suspected of his father's homicide, to believe that the real cause of his madness was the love for his lover, Ofelia.

Completely absorbed by the words of his father's ghost, who had told him in the smallest detail how the crime was committed, and driven by the instinct that only people who want vengeance have, Hamlet initiated an immediate attitude change, adopting an intimidating behavior for absolutely everybody, except his best friend, Horatio. Moreover, being a creative and enterprising nature, he succeeded not only in catching attention, but even to provoke anxiety for the entire imperial court.

The French moralist François de la Rochefoucauld made a short definition by which he emphasized a great truth: "The highest art of skillful man is to know how to hide his skills".

Hamlet could not prove the guilt of his uncle Claudius, if he had not adopted a very good strategy, although risky from many points of view. For only by subtlety he could defeat his enemy. Very skillful and clever, he prepared everything with special care, finding an intelligent and efficient way of hiding his vulnerabilities. Furthermore, taking that false mask of a madman, and playing his role with the skillfulness of an exceptional actor, he managed to cast away all doubts.

The supreme ability of keeping under control the minds of people consists in knowing very well the human psychology. The mask that Hamlet took, helped him reach his goal without giving rise to any suspicion. However, he had to enter his role both physically, as well as mentally, thus making to disappear the most visible trace of his true face, of his true intentions, which naturally accompanied his preparations for the unmasking of his father's killer.

Leadership: Can you represent your conception of your own self in a situation of conflict with the intentions you are considering, in an attempt to take control of a dangerous or uncertain situation?

A mask of appearances. To put on a mask in order to surprise your enemy's secrets, to gain his confidence and nothing else to do than to take her off in order to bring his doom. This is, in short, Hamlet's vengeance plan. Acting under this mask of appearances, behaving just his role told him to – by gestures and attitudes, lying with his body, just as others lie with their mouths, combining the truth with the falsehood– in the limit of plausibility, he handled skillfully and confidently the art of dissimulation.

You are never better disguised, more capable of distorting reality and diverting the attention of people than when you hide under a new look. Under his mask, of the weak and defeated man, with no character, of the man not prepared for the life of a leader, however, was hiding a tough character, unyielding, unforgiving with his enemies. Maybe this was the cause for which Hamlet managed to impose himself so well in front of everybody. Everything depended on the way he behaved – in such a way that he showed that the reality he lived in was completely different from other people's reality.

The self you want to project to the world, in order to recover the causal relationship between the act and the reward involved in a moment that is favorable to you in terms of interpersonal relationships, in an abundance of linear curves, accompanied and intersected by landslides and uncertainties, is a reversal of your morale and traits, not what others see when they look at you.

This self forces false feelings that make you feel better, but they will lie to you in order to satisfy their own desire, to see you defeated. As you well know, Hamlet gets close to madness, simulating madness and embodying the denial of reason.

Leadership: Can you become a reflection of truth through your intentions in handling a reality that denies human comprehension?

Hamlet had the ability to choose his play and role. His great contribution consisted in that he conceived the play and played the main character. The play he created must train, move and please the audience, and so it happened. However, for the play to be well individualized, and in order to turn into a full success, he had to take into account permanently the plausibility of the presented happenings. In other words, everything had to look as real, and as natural as possible.

In his case, truth was nothing but a dissimulated servitude, which he used in order to subdue others. Arousing feelings of pity and compassion by his theatrical play, he strongly engraved in the minds of his spectators the reality he wanted, to his feast and use. His fake behavior that he adopted helped him reach the aim he proposed for himself. The manipulation of reality was the manner that he obtained results.

A reality that denies human comprehension is a catalyst for the potential for action at the level of deed, thought, and feeling that is manifested by the association of a depressed state.

The categorical reconstruction of such a reality is sanctioned by a fall into the abyss of a wholly unfulfilled desire that causes slow spiritual death, that is, separation from God and the transition to a state of irrationality of sin.

Abracadabra, who are you? Represents the mystery you need to unravel when you turn into someone else, into an individual who seems to have no connection with one before.

Leaders, just like most people, adopt attitudes and behaviors adequate to usual situations. However, in unusual situations, when instinct shows them that something is not as it seems, the cleverest ones seek to know pure reality by adopting a mask behind which, however, vigilance is awake and the ability of analysis is deeper than ever.

I refer here to the situations when a leader feels that someone hiders him, that he is being sabotaged either from inside the team, either from outside it. In consequence, in order to know the reality, a leader must also master the art of dissimulation – a fearful weapon, but efficient in most situations.

Accomplishments Of The Antecedents

On November 23, 2016

Turn your attention to art, developing confidence in using the tendency of going back to an existence and an experience predestined for eternal glory.

Following made data, you discover how disparate every scene returns to the imagination of the filmmaker. In different periods, at massive time intervals, in the contemplation of one or another of the new idea episodes, accomplishments of the antecedents.

For instance, the cathedral scene, when Ivan announces that from now on he shall be known as "the Terrible", is being sketched in February, in March, and then in May and in November 1942, so – only from what I could get to know – in the course of almost one year's time.

"Ivan the Terrible" is born volcanically, as a primal phenomenon, with an eruptive force unrestrained by any filmmaker. Slowly, the outlines of the future film begin to reveal themselves, the material produced disorderly by the imagination is taking shape, it is being grouped on the directive lines of the future script.

Studies during the development period of the film too converge in the same direction. Eisenstein researches even the characteristic positions of the hands and fingers in El Greco's paintings. *

Leadership: Can you integrate yourself into an existence lived in the past with the purpose of experiencing "the new man" from the perspective of a visual composition that perfectly describes the situation in which the masterpiece eclipses reality?

Creating a composition in art is a process similar to the discovery of a very popular destination that deserves to be explored with limited resources, using a reality which bears a topic full of existential implications that can affect a connoisseur of art. I am referring to the perspective of a visual composition that perfectly describes the situation in which the masterpiece eclipses the reality by the fact that the model of general attention acquires the hue of "version of a larger world."

I believe that what is missing and needs to be built in terms of a completion of composition of inspiration and creativity, with all those necessary for serving the ideal of an alleged "new man", is the opening, familiarization and trust in using a tendency of going back to an existence predestined for eternal glory."

The New Man is the symbol of the old man to which is added that unforgettable prestige, specific to the artist who feels his own condition marked by a harmonious otherness, sought and always invoked.

Leadership, in the trajectory of a movement of change in the profound evolution of a new thinking, is the tendency of modifying the perception vis-à-vis the "new man" that you want to create from reconstructions of certain models and values, lost or forgotten. So, a perception that forms only when you were able to get to know in a certain timeframe.

Self-change can take place in a context of accepting a vision that depends on a way of thinking emerged from a close examination of an image, merged in the elements of pictorial language, forcing to consider the current tendency of identifying yourself with "the new man."

This "new man" must induce the idea of an eruptive, unfettered force, of a source of re-orientation of your own mentality in the direction of a geography of the experience of an innovative perpetuum that analyzes the effects of the distance between many time periods over the order of their own beliefs and preferences for their version of tomorrow.

You must live the experience of being gripped by something that is more powerful than you, to be ready to integrate into a reality that differentiates between a broken destiny and an exceptional image.

A leader always lives the experience of being "between" cultures and distinct living spaces, but is someone who communicates between them through the capitalization of certain parts of assets of the past.

Leadership is a case of an import of certain preferences of communication and spread of a certain type of content, beyond the image of an ideal life and perfection. In other words, trust in a previous existence implies being in contact with the tendency of updating your own being.

Accomplishments of The Antecedents is related to the encouraging of startups of new creative ideas, by increasing ownership of confidence in using the tendency of going back to an existence and experience of leadership predestined for eternal glory.

We would thus increase our sphere of understanding the process of continuously sailing towards other time periods, thus enriched by studying other personalities from different eras, restoring and including into actuality certain standards of evaluation of the elements of culture such as ideas, values, attitudes and beliefs and their implementation into a new becoming.

Adamantine Adornments Of Leadership

The way your leadership evolves depends on the perceptions underlying on other people's expectations and the way you relate to them.

Everyone has a story. I accidentally found out the story full of humanism and special values of the dentist Roland Hermann, while reading Careers magazine. As I was saying in the article "The charming pulse of life", Roland is a leader through the abnegation he has towards the people with a low standard of living all over the world.

According to Rolland, the hardest thing to face was to provide dental care to several refugees in Gore. Besides the fact that they were many, they also had multiple problems. He said:

"The selection of patients was very painful; it was pressing me very hard emotionally. I had in front of me a patient with problems, and I was his one and only chance. The question was how to provide the same chance for everyone to benefit of. If I worked very much on one patient, the possibility to treat many others decreased. If I partially solved one's problems and managed to treat others as well, I would feel sorry for the previous patient I should have treated further."

Leadership: Do you explore a challenging situation of the type "the chance of reinventing yourself" through the much wider extension of the field of using a double reflection?

The way you see yourself in a moment of hardship is an evolution of the chance of reinventing yourself through the much wider extension of the field of use of double reflection.

The first reflection is the expression of the aspiration to travel in a direction contrary to your interests and declared purpose. The second reflection starts from the consequence of the aspiration to discover yourself differently in the world, all the more so as you are concerned with neglect in everything related to profession or social life.

By his very nature, his mentality, the way in which he linked his life and feelings to other people, trying to help each of them as much as possible, the dentist Roland Hermann has proven that he possesses a high morality. In 2011, he has proposed to himself to engage in other humanitarian projects by which to contribute in helping those in great suffering. Nothing could make him give up being the friend, healer and mentor of those in this situation.

Ensuring your success that validates your leadership position is to look with grateful eyes upon all the wonderful things that happen to you, after you have embarked on where others have never ventured to step.

Roland Hermann is the kind of man in whom the initiative prevails. Setting his goal to relate with people as well as possible, always focusing on every one of them, identifying their needs and expectations in the most realistic manner, and being there for them in difficult moments, his power of influence increases, and his leadership evolves more and more towards success.

Roland's love for his career, for life, for other people, is often mixed with a living pain because he cannot consult and treat them all, because he fails to satisfy everyone's needs in an effective manner. However, there is something solemn and mobilizing to see a man like him, full of kindness and good intentions, inspired by noble feelings (empathy, kindness and friendship), rushing where others never dare to walk.

Leadership: Are you subject to a becoming that reflects the canting method from side A to side B?

Someone who works under pressure can't avoid the harshness of reality, perceived and understood through its consequences, which give meaning to life based on the cognitive, emotional and behavioral experience gathered in time – through the consonance of convictions with the actions that serve some great impact causes. It all depends on the way in which character is spiritually interested in the success of its positive pattern, gifted with the power to convert a dark past into a brighter future. Neither from this point of view do we have reasons to believe in the death of the art to become greater human beings.

Two of the obstacles that hinder your becoming as great human being, whenever possible on the spiral of a becoming that clears away from humanitarianism, amplified by the impossibility to find out the abyss of your unwillingness to emotionally manifest yourself in front of someone, are the limitative convictions and the rational fears that permanently exert a certain pressure.

And this pressure, reflected in the "canting method from side A to side B", has its origin in the value of self-respect (raw at the request of the conscience that propagates in the matrix and fiber of your being) that replaces all the access ways in order to obtain the consideration of others.

"Side A" corresponds to lucidity in evaluating your own actions, while "Side B" corresponds to your experiences being evaluated by others. A person's perception of himself, represented by the contact between the two points of view, will be founded on one hand on common sense considerations, which are totally subjective, grounded on the knowledge of being honest; on the other hand, on selfish considerations, grounded on the knowledge of superiority. And, on a third hand, on conscience considerations that recognize themselves only thanks to the existence of others.

Leadership: Does your character bear the appreciation of benefit in a context where deterministic events lead to the same effect?

One of the reasons why many leaders fail is that they do not give importance to others' needs, not struggling to meet their expectations, or fail completely to relate to their values. What do you feel for a dear person that you see getting lost, and that you can't help? Is it pain? For, that is the feeling that Roland experiences whenever he fails to treat someone.

Nobody follows you simply because you hold a position, and even it is a leading one. As long as you don't meet their requirements, and don't answer their expectations, your stay there, between them, will be a constant pressure for them. It's like you have the "medicine" that could cure them, but you never administer it to them.

People guess the kind of man you are, and if your character does not bear the appreciation of benefit, of doing good, they will never be interested in following you. The way your leadership evolves depends on the perceptions underlying on other people's expectations and on how you relate to the circumstances that make your intervention necessary.

The effect produced by the complexity of deterministic events is that of repartitioning the tasks you can undertake, making them matter.

Just like every ocean has a lot of precious pearls that adorn it, so your leadership can become more precious and evolve to success if you add to it the finest "adornments" to nestle in people's hearts, filling them up with light, joy and serenity.

The Adamantine Adornments Of Leadership are composed of: the control function of the field of experience, the measure of values that inspire you to believe in yourself, the ability to act as a reward for your affirmation, and the higher order derivatives multiplied by updating factors, such as the virtue of giving and accepting sacrifice.

Every helping hand whom you give, each time you are together with your people and show them that you care about their fate, your sense of responsibility that you manifest towards them, your attitude full of ambition, courage and optimism that you have in front of them, are adorments which, even for a moment, bring spring in their souls, promote their happiness and encourage them. Such glittering ornaments emphasize the quality of your leadership and make it evolve to an even higher level.

Abnegation, professionalism, solidarity, optimal settlement of problems and high morality are some of the adamantine adornments of your leadership, whose value will be recognized by the people you lead.

Adaptive Leadership

On March 25, 2015

Transform yourself into a man that sets himself as the basis of everything, defining your own way of relating to the space of a higher instance.

- I have something better than the barrel of a gun or the tip of a dagger, so that I may heal my pain. I have the very pain itself that kills me, said Maximilien.

- My friend – Monte Cristo answered him with just as deep a sadness – listen to me:

At one point, in a moment of despair as big as yours, because it pushed me to a similar decision, I too wanted, just as you, to end myself. At one point, so too did your father, in a similar state of despair, wanted to take his own life.

If your father had been told in that moment, when he pointed the barrel of that gun to his forehead. If I had been told, in that moment when I removed prison bread from my bed, bread I had not touched for three days straight. If we were both told, in that supreme moment:

"Live ! There will come a day, when you will be happy, and will bless life ! ", from wherever that voice would come from, we would have listened to it with the smile of doubt drawn on our lips, and with the turmoil of mistrust. And yet, for how many times, when your father hugged you, did he not bless life? How many times have I not done so myself…

Maximilien, give yourself the patience to accomplish this difficulty task – wait, and live – and I promise you that the heavens will bear down their gifts upon you ! *

Leadership: Do you follow a potential profile of a leader determined by the height of a temporal "superiority", involved in the resetting of your status parameters?

The experiment of "pain", by means of temporary constraints or by means of a delimitation in a different chapter of life, in a puzzle game in which you have but one piece at your disposal – waiting – in order to restore spiritual and moral balance, represents the first moment in which the supremacy of personal ego is questioned, and in which you face your true quality.

And often, the quality, constantly carrying the debt of a higher purpose, precedes the rise of interest in respect of matters relating to the criteria of clarity and predictability, in an image of a completely different and special spiritual need.

The representative profile of the man sets himself as the basis of all things, by adopting the conduct of being informed by the eventual changes that can mark him or that lead towards fulfillment, bringing him closer to the imagined ideal, by order of his whole spiritual content, can adapt to the shape of a fine hourglass that measures the passage of time in favor of what he is able to promise and accomplish.

The profile can be perceived and treated often as possible link in the relationship between reality, expectations, time and life experiences, based on both inner and outer knowledge. The profile of this type of man is dictated by his capacity of relating himself to an external point of view, to an enlightening authority that exercises its power in applying a pressure related to that same matrix of transition probabilities towards the new, towards the better and towards a new mode of being.

Leadership: Do you need to clarify yourself upon the values you take from the position of an optimal reference level that establishes the relationship between the content of a reality that eternally refuses itself to human comprehension and to the content of a faith experienced through a consequence of despair?

Important in playing a huge role in the course of events, is to be heard by a superior entity of thought, wisdom, control, supervision, and to be identified as a key man, as the main cause of an ampler change in the scope of a plan of extending leadership.

To be able to test your character, to climb the steps in a development that will be good, as far as you recognize the true importance of "superiority" in your life, you need to connect to an alternative source of validation – which can sustain and promote your capacity as a guarantor of the support in achieving mighty goals.

"Superiority" utilizes all your state parameters that vary greatly at any given time, and depending on the specifics of your individual nature, on the nature of intended purpose or on your openness to which you relate to towards change, you will become a part of It. You will yourself become a superior man, through the newly established connection at a level of direction and action.

The most important value you can get from the position of an optimal reference level, which indicates you as an impressive authority in EVERYTHING, aims at recognizing your ability to make compromises in what regards the way in which you transform the lives of others in the face of a destiny that, even if it imposes a suffering, does not bear any offering.

The biggest compromise that you have to bear as a leader is to become a mirror in which the lives of others will be reflected, in an eternal confrontation with the regrets or joys that your memory brings up.

Adaptive Leadership refers to the process through which the integration between your own self and a superior thought entity, produces an effect that may or may not positive values. Take your state into account. You can feel the influence of "supremacy" only if you give someone permission to fold upon your state of being, in one way or another, and produce a total reset.

Added Value

On January 28, 2009

Assign the dynamic force to your potential, by creating a leverage that would maximally increase efficiency.

A little girl aged of only seven years enters with confidence on the skating rink. At first sight, she does not seem different with anything from other children of her age that are coming every day at training. They are skating with the same speed, continuously repeating the same movements of arms and, like other children, learning daily new figures of skating and new dance moves.

However, from all the children, she is the only one skating and during breaks. She is the only one remaining still a quarter of an hour after the closing time. Moreover, she is the only one that has most of the bruises on the legs and hands.

Observing the dedication, with which this little girl struggled to execute each movement after the ending the classes of training, an employee of the skating rink asks the coach:

- After so many falls, and after so many bruises acquired during training, why did this girl continues skating even after the program?

With a lot of conviction, the coach replies:

- Her ambition is to continue improving herself; her dream is to become the best skater in the world.

Leadership: Do you update the image of your concrete involvement in the dynamics of a transition process, from the "test of your inner strength" to the stage of "the cost of exploiting maximum potential"?

The only important factor in building your own character is related to the way on how you conquer that vast territory, limited by many of those around you, that unites your mental forces of the physical ones. You can conquer it by a decisive act of faith and will. Your ability to count on yourself, on the dedication with which you get involved in supporting your own attitude is the highest reward that you bring to your personal and professional progress. You have to grow in yourself before becoming a long-distance runner.

The performance is a complex process, by weaving into a whole welded and balanced the various temperaments and characteristics of people. No matter how different would be the internal structure of each individual, performance cannot be created than by bunching those particles from him that, taking them out to light, grinding them through work and dedication, are bringing him more towards excellence, turning his potential into advantage.

Performance is the hue of suffering you are experiencing through your constant dedication to fulfilling an authentic passion.

Trying to become a performer, without trying to bring out the maximum of your potential is like coming into possession of an ultra sophisticated light bulb, even if you live in an area that is not connected to electricity. First, you need to get a source of energy, a powerful electric generator - such as the ambition to be the best, to prove a consistent and deepened concern for each of the decisive stages of your own aspirations' concretion, and only then to connect your abilities on achieving results.

The energy, as someone once remarked on the web, is the force that makes go "something" of your potential in dynamic or conversely, therefore an applied force, which produces a change of state.

Can you assign your potential a dynamic force, creating a leverage for yourself (that particular form of energy) that maximally amplifies your efficiency?

Can you produce a change in your mood? What is that "something" of your potential, on which only if you apply some force may become active and enough energetic in order to raise your level of competence required for your professional development?

Leadership: Can you bring a personal contribution through your experience, skill, and dedication, to achieving benchmarks in case you reach a threshold of exhaustiveness in your field?

Inner strength captures that manifestation of character translated by cultivating and experiencing the feeling of superiority. And the cost of exploiting maximal potential, responsible for producing the resonance phenomenon through which the soul, the mind, and the body become a unique and blessed entity, is what you do while trying to overcome your limits.

The elite performers are also people, like all of us - they have passions, aspirations, ideals, ambitious thoughts and fears. Even if you will read many formidable things about them, they still are people. And, equally, they passed through many trials and failures during their life, just as the other people.

However, there is one thing that sets them apart from all others: an added value. In other words, they continue to train themselves and even after working hours, when everyone else stops working. Their value increases, largely due to the extra effort they make in order to improve themselves.

You should not be a very intelligent person for becoming an elite performer, but you must be willing to develop your potential so you can evolve in the career you have chosen. If you do not continue to develop, progress and improve yourself more than the rest of the world, you will get stuck into the routine of mediocrity, and therefore, you will never reach excellence.

The threshold of exhaustiveness in your field is reached when the work you do with passion identifies with the assumed guiding principles, leading to a violation of the limits of resistance encountered during training.

In this case, your reference value is given by the ratio of willingness of enduring any sacrifice and the ambition of achieving a high ideal of performance.

Thoughts thrown down, without any selection, without beginning and endlessness.

Leadership becomes increasingly neglected at the present time. Individuals, who occupy important positions, but not willing to comply with any of the rules of common sense, like those who "plagiarize" any of the work of others. They do not understand what "integrity" is. For as a blind man lacks the sense of observation, they lack the self-consciousness, which, like a pearl sinking into the sea, increasingly loses its value and tends more and more not to mean absolutely nothing.

Furthermore, the leadership, which reflects the meeting of self and human nature, diminish its chances to benefit of a harmonious development, specializing in the lower layers of a vision and some sick manifestations, deprived of any virtues.

Just as multicellular organisms arise from a single cell, the egg cell, so your potential of a leader will develop from that single connection that is established between the parties which define you, guaranteeing your right to impose yourself firmly in the process of changing things, of the actions that you can change. Towards obtaining benefits and fructification of long-term results.

If you want to engage in the race to perfection, learn to think like a leader who knows exactly what are the strengths and weaknesses of his own Ego - that controlling his senses, and grinding his character.

When you investigate and understand your own being, your own character, and your own feelings, you feel that you win once again the fight with yourself; you feel that you advance and progress. You feel, just like a sculptor who can send a message to all by his works itself, that you keep things under control, that you keep some stability in terms of your life, and your Ego in relation to your leadership.

You feel that you answer with consideration to any form of transmission of your ideals. You feel that you can calculate and value, just as a philatelist calculates the value of any stamp by a solid expertise, any form of exercising your authority, any action that you entrepreneur. You appease your mind, consciousness and soul knowing that the principles that you have imposed to comply are not violated by doubt or indifference.

A leadership that is based on the high pillars of understanding the depth of "Man" finds its mission once with the consequences of your progress. Or, temporarily or permanently end its mission in the situations when you are headed by what dictates your critical conscience, not the pure reason that prevails. You can fight for preserving and developing your leadership only if you pay the very expensive insurance policy to make sure against a depreciation of your Ego.

The way you pass through the "tunnel of transition" determines the way you will perform in the future.

However, leadership cannot occur by itself. First, you need to separate Ego of Non-Ego, namely to improve the relation with that part of you that is working normally, who knows and always knew that you are, and you can be more than you think you are.

In the end, all your efforts will prove to be in vain, your own Ego will exhaust by itself. And your leadership will go down without shining, its quality will be lost in time, without anyone ever knowing of its existence.

Your future may reserve with high probability the "surprise" of confirming an ineffective leadership, which is closely related to that complement of your own way of being. Only as you progress in leadership science research you discover your deficiencies.

All types of contentions or rivalries, in the brushwood of which, by the way, not only original thinkers wander, seekers of pure ideas who, by their relationship with science, put themselves in the support of innovation and renewal, but also novices in learning. That's why these disputes can become true sources of profit. They may represent the start that break the future performer from the intelligence unit in associative form, in a team, facilitating the birth of a new mental horizon and the approach of a new attitude to the challenges of knowledge and inner world realities.

However, this start fully reflects that pleasure to find out extraordinary things, springing not only from the loan agreement of scientific matter "substantiality", but especially from the road guided by the flame of adventure, creation and innovation burning deep inside your soul, that adventure of orientation in the world. Only by simply accepting a hearty dose of individual intellectual work, by the power to break free from dogmas, to be completely original, you can achieve mastery in leadership.

Following the experience to navigate in a labyrinth of the absurd that has in its center the tendency to rewrite the rules of leadership in agreement with some non-moral standards, the value of your own Ego is recorded. An Ego perceived separately from reality that sees himself as the most important part of reality.

As foremost representative of a kind of pseudo-philosophy not at all potent, that awakens only doubts and suspicions, you have the power to withdraw in a listening and waiting attitude or in a hardness attitude similar to: "I am against everyone." – that can be quenched only by a certain disinterest.

Leadership: Do you subscribe to the plan of the tendency to be self-sufficient in the stages of the reality you explore?

In the plan of the tendency to be self-sufficient and to develop your mechanisms to perpetuate superiority, I find valid – as a more acute wakeup call – the option to exclude yourself for an undetermined period from the equation of the obligations-achievements audit. The constraints required for the investigation of different aspects of transition towards new approaches (researched by the science of avoiding both overestimation and underestimation of the leadership capacities), can become so complex that working alone could seem impossible, Although, it is a basic variable.

This division of your abilities is beneficial if it enhances your ability to think, to take decisions and act in various circumstances. It plays an important role, can keep you away from failure by eliminating many obstacles that impede the exploitation of those individual resources, which have the particularity to produce positive effects.

The results can be determined through integrating this dependency position to all "circuit" elements to detect, estimate and adjust the expectations of those around. Although, in theory, this method always applies; in practice, it's possible to apply it only when the shape of the circuit, but also your performance are stricter and closer to your own fulfillment. Of your own destination called "accomplishment."

In the first stages of the professional progress, when the war waged against the science of leadership has barely broken out, as a consequence of creating and applying fundamental research ideas to the leap in human conscience, you have only yourself. Only what you have with yourself, what surrounds you. So a limited budget of knowledge and a weakly regulated system of levers that would allow you to make Human Resources more efficient.

And this crowd is made up of other leaders, always increasing in numbers, of evermore "intruders in a very narrow space of thinking" – perched in undeserved positions, who as top products are sold in small quantities until they devalue completely and nobody wants them anymore.

And inside those limits, difficult to overcome, based on reason, some atoms collide, generating energy. They close, creating a vacuum, even when you are about to discover your personal and most precious values and resources.

Moreover, calculating and synthesizing the information necessary for the identification of a new version of reality from the subjective chaos of limitless impression that, by becoming representations, contribute to the enriching of knowledge of the world and life, and you basically increase your ability of understanding certain structures of relationships and drawing conclusions about said structures.

The bridge making the connection with the great power of science, taking into consideration the probability of manifesting authenticity as a combination formed by chance from a realism pushed to the extreme and through the clarity of understanding based around events and their context, is permanently crossed by the stringent impulse of heading towards where you've never been before.

Thoughts thrown down, without any selection, without beginning and endlessness.

The funniest are those TV commercials, when an individual appears (a doctor, professor, artist, etc.) and says: "I studied abroad for x years". As if that makes him better at anything...

If you so studious and full of merits, best to tell us how you have contributed to the development of the science you represent !

Have you moved mountains, made any important discovery, constructed a new thinking, entered the Guinness Book of world records, or something of the kind?

If you have not managed to bring science a step further, I suggest you go abroad again and keep studying !

You are still at the level of: "I still have much to learn ! "

It's a long way to get to the level of: "I can invent and change".

What contributes to the completion of the leadership is that definite explanation of the essence of your being, followed by its finishing in time, with the most exquisite care and finesse. This self-knowledge, supported by a special ideal, will contribute to the triggering of some constructive actions, to the alignment of your system of values.

The message that matters

What I learned today can be summarized as follows: people are tempted to postpone the most important thing for an hour. But that hour is exactly what counts. Once you lose it, the whole day is lost.

So people wait for the next day, and again lose that important hour, hoping to replace it with another hour, but one that is no longer the one that matters.

And because they have lost that important hour they are punished to lose a day. And that hour, and that day repeat and are always lost, transforming into weeks, months, years, a lifetime.

Because they have always postponed the most important thing with exactly the sole hour that matters.

Now imagine that She and I have lost 5-6 years because She couldn't even send me one message. Exactly the message that matters.

A journalist asked the general manager of "La Fântâna" (the market leader in Romania in the segment of distribution and bottling natural water used in water coolers) why he chose to expand his services in other countries, when the local market seemed to be a place for everyone. He said: "More than the dynamics that we now have locally, I do not think it is healthy to have. You have to grow into a certain rhythm, otherwise you lose control."

Always impose certain rhythm of leading and take advantage of what you earned prior to want to get more. The rhythm that you impose to your leadership determines your value and qualities.

The heart is the propeller organ of the blood, causing it to flow in one way. It contracts (beats) and pumps blood throughout the body.

When the atria (those two rooms of receipting blood) ceases to beat regularly and begin to contract in a disorganized way, it reinforces that atrial fibrillation (the most common heart rhythm disorder), which favors the formation of clots of blood when reaching the brain can cause strokes, paralysis and even death.

In leadership things are almost the same. If the rhythm of your leadership is irregular, sooner or later you will lose interest and motivation, you will lose flight. Instead of continue to fight for your proposed goals, you will block at a particular channel that will have a negative effect on your success. Instead of continue battling with problems in professional life, you will cease to get more involved. And so you will cease to exist in the human's soul. You will fail !

It is well-known that the best surgeons can save their patients because they have specialized in a particular type of operation that they can make better than anyone else. And you must enjoy this kind of reputation, keeping the rhythm of your leadership to a level acceptable to those around you.

Configure your art with thoughtful care, with skill, so as to generate a new state of mind, a state of spiritual contentment.

Just as a stone carver is able to eliminate roughness and imperfections of the stone producing a quality paper - which has a huge effect on all those who look at it, so and you, as a leader, must remove the imperfections of your art, aligning it to a particular standard to be loved by everyone. So, configure your leadership to great art so that it would arouse a strong and intense feeling of passion among the other people.

If your leadership does not generate in people that mobility to lead them to productive actions, that lead them to aspire and to determine for themselves higher ideals - for example to become as good as you in the field - means that you have not given a proper and serious training. And in this case, you should seriously think to check your professional knowledge and leadership skills.

To be the best in the world in a certain field is to realize that you are rapidly developing towards perfection, while others remain behind you for too many years to be able to count them.

And if the brightest spirits were gathered in a wonderful brainstorming, be aware that everyone in one place would not even make 1% of what you did, and all of a sudden, they would not get close to your talent for over 1000 years.

One man does more than the rest of the world. Take Freddie Mercury for example. If all the singers in the world were gathered, do you think all of them together could ever make a "The show must go on" version 2.0 ?

You must always be aware of your uniqueness and value !

If Romania wouldn't have had a few valuable people that would spread certain chosen skills or a unique knowledge across the borders, it would probably have been conquered long ago.

Therefore, I encourage the unique and truly talented people to affirm themselves as much as possible in the world ! They are the only hope of wellbeing of this country !

Politicians can always be bought or blackmailed, but the image of the country around the world is proven only by a minority when the majority does not have a better option !

The big problem of characters becoming "big stars" overnight is that they have rushed to affirm themselves, but without allowing God to polish their talent to perfection.

It is one thing to sing from the "pain" of a general tendency, and another thing altogether to know how to make art... even from a grain of sand !

Perfection is the secret geometry of form and background, in no way a randomly cast color.

The beginning of a big failure is to come into the spotlight much too early. The fact that you show a momentary brilliance does not mean that you are a genius, it's just an encouragement to start looking for a new and pure world.

So few are sufficiently determined and protected by providence to discover it.

Sometimes moving in certain conditions towards the past is necessary, in compliance with a certain distance regarding your "shadow" that tries everything and wants to outgrow you through a sum of weak points that would distance you from your value, from what you truly are. This shadow is nothing else but your hidden doppelganger, the unacceptable part of yourself, the dark part in space where you are trapped between aspirations and achievement, which stops you from evolving.

Your limitations, slipping towards the edges of your individuality meet an only opposite force when you decide to escape the inferno of the noise torrent in the darkness of your mind. This force helps you strengthen the control over your hidden abilities. To step away from the ground zero of your restlessness, to escape the painful punishment of the sin to be subject to your own essential, sensitive and useless nature.

In this regard, arises the necessity of certain efforts to piece the appearances, to clarify his position regarding the "shadow's" tendencies to minimize his value. In conclusion, a better understanding regarding the situation he's confronting. And the results shall be equal to the risks assumed by pushing away "the shadow" that imprisons him in the perimeter of dilapidation and regress.

The ambiguous content of self-perception, for a man that isn't conditioned by any rule, for a man experiencing one the one hand intuitive, on the other hand attractive and easy thinking, enhances in good measure leadership abilities. This happens only if in the context of a crisis or sustainable development, the man shows a great deal of his flexible personality, taking upon himself the challenge to reduce to zero any attempts to discredit himself. Meaning losses at the image level.

Thoughts thrown down, without any selection, without beginning and endlessness.

A manager has to know his company just as well as a gardener knows his garden. In fact, it is also a matter of common sense. You cannot maintain the company at a high level of performance if you do not know well enough your employees and the practices that they use it. Developing and improving relations with all the employees of the company is the first and the most important step that a manager should make.

What kind of "fertilizer" and what concentration are you using in order to keep people active? Is your relationship with them renewing or matures in contact with your type of personality? Is the development of the company happens under the sign of their transformation? Have they developed themselves under the beneficent effect of your example and guidance?

Just as a skilled gardener knows each plant of his garden apart, so the manager has to know very well all the staff; to know how to evaluate their professional level and to develop their skills. The ability to approach all his employees, to understand and satisfy their needs and to guide them towards the best direction makes the manager more than just a chief, makes him a leader.

Leadership: Are you wholeheartedly involving yourself in developing the human "base"?

A manager is leading on the basis of what he makes, not based on what he says. If the employees are finding out the lack of minimum knowledge or even a lack of professionalism on his part, then they will not be involved in the organizational development or in the continuous improvement of their work. However, in this case, the question arises: how could become a manager an individual without a thorough knowledge?

For the efficiency obtained by a team to be maximum, it is necessary that the manager to follow the proper functioning of the organization's activities.

Just as a gardener sees in the seed the fully grown tree so you have to see in people your company's future success. That is why the consistent and deepened concern for each of the decisive stages of selection and recruitment process it is so necessary. You must keep in mind their best qualities and the need to recover and enrich their horizons in the light of a development, which would combine the efficiency with dynamism, precision and ingenuity - if you want for your leadership to flourish.

I will not be too long about it. I will add only that. I cannot know with certainty whether you are a skilled gardener, as well as I do not know if you are a talented manager. I do not know if you value your employees as much as a gardener loves his garden plants. All I know is that if you want to be a skillful manager, you must respect the Human Resources and to get involved wholeheartedly in the development of the human "base" because of it depends for the most part the progress and evolution of an organization.

Respect the best qualities of the people, by building their horizons in the light of an as natural and as healthier evolution.

People's concept about you is supported by the extent to which they believe that you could enlighten them in some way their situation. They will ignore and neglect you, and will consider your leadership one uninteresting if they will not find in you that light of hope-giving. Your impact on them will be even greater as their interest on your leadership will increase, the far better they will relate to your ideas, on how you express your concept concerning your role and to the mission of your art to lead them.

If Romania wouldn't have had a few valuable people that would spread certain chosen skills or a unique knowledge across the borders, it would probably have been conquered long ago.

Therefore, I encourage the unique and truly talented people to affirm themselves as much as possible in the world ! They are the only hope of wellbeing of this country !

Politicians can always be bought or blackmailed, but the image of the country around the world is proven only by a minority when the majority does not have a better option !

Is your leadership situated at a minimum or at a maximum altitude?

So, in order to evaluate the progress in your relationship with people, you have to submit your leadership to an analysis. This analysis must have in view some very important points, namely: the maximum and minimum altitude, to which your leadership can ensure its functioning at the best parameters, as well as the degree of extension of its various stages of development.

The minimum altitude plays the role of the basic level, to which operates your leadership, and which controls the erosion processes that can destroy an important part of your performance area. While, the maximum altitude is that calculated part of your evolution that can ensure you maximum efficiency.

It is known that vitamin D is essential for the immune system functioning at the best parameters – which supports the general health. However, only in the presence of sunlight it is synthesized.

In the same way, the necessary component for your potential growth depends on the functioning at the best parameters of your leadership. However, this essential component, carefully invested in your "engine" of excellence, can be synthesized only through the engagement of some basic elements, such as: professionalism, the quality of services, passion, the assumed responsibility, or ethics. This "component" is your reputation, and this determines the altitude of your leadership.

These formidable opponents, closely tied to an underdeveloped reasoning, difficulty to maintain and of low power of understanding things, like real targets in continuous operation, but without generating any particular intellectual profit, orients the individual in a direction that doesn't offer the possibility for a "Refill." And thus, the stimuli of intellectual development will show their limits, preventing any penetration into the private space of the great science that pulsates and changes constantly.

If we will succeed to prove to other people that we are capable of guiding them with wisdom to a successful career, if we will restore their hope in the future, only, then we can consider that we have the necessary abilities to succeed in leadership.

Maintenance is a generic term for a variety of operations initiated when a contingency occurs. It creates an unwelcome and prolonged fall of the system of values, beliefs, motivations, attitudes, life experience, enhancing the feeling of injustice.

To block powerful players from connecting to your security system during maintenance is synonymous with acceding to a visionary experience without setting the risk parameters on a certain area of refuge. It means to lose the motivation to act into the unknown.

Leadership: Two processes of producing information, needful in the context of the representation of subjective projections.

We can distinguish during the stages of creation, two processes of producing information needful in the context of the representation of subjective projections, ideas that give contend to the approaches that support other realities.

A process aimed at the subjecting increasing of the self-perceived specific competence, through which you get to the upper level of assuming imagination. From here stemming the possibility of imposing yourself more, by the direct exploration of the subjective reality.

The second process dominates the conception phase of producing representations of the self in relation with the ignorant, the bizarre, with a reality that is hard to accept, in which emerges – giving up issues of detail – the project of the work you want to create. Basically, you offer a new direction to creation, enhancing information as a measure of disorder, of surprise and improbability. These produce innovation and originality in making leadership through the individual configuration of a particular thought process, of a route that has never existed before.

Subjectivity is one which, upon processing and assessing external or internal reality, attributes one of its components the status of a sum of multiple forms of manifesting the existing, marking and liking the obsolete past with the existing future, as a possibility of personal capitalization.

Thoughts thrown down, without any selection, without beginning and endlessness.

Does science trigger a full rebellion in your mind? Did you end up regretting every moment that keeps you away from yourself? Can your mind support the weight of the expectations you always generate? Does the arduous desire to escape routine, the desire to achieve absolute change, become priceless?

Some of the precise, exact "incomes" you achieve from leadership can be substantially surpassed by "expenditures" as a follow up of that fact that your position towards yourself and the idea of change is built on an uncertain premises.

The incomes, which can be limited in certain circumstances, mostly depend on the efforts invested in the study of those ideas and revelations that can materialize into exquisite results. While the expenditures and the whole body of a grounded knowledge and a proper orientation in the field of the dares you come across over a long period of self-evaluation. The higher the incomes, the more the "rest" you are left with after paying these basic expenditures.

The beauty of leadership is always given by the closeness to live. That is why the best leaders are constantly "resurrected" by authentic creation in a time that offers them the profound and unique opportunity to receive, to incorporate or to integrate a new sovereign relation with everything that means life. They are always interested in consolidating internal stability by always approving the interruption "request" of their functionality when inspirational fluxes change or gather up.

Thus, victory over physical, mental and cognitive vices is approved, bringing without the fear of crossing the boundaries allowed by their own authority, a new and welcome color in life. The burning desire to escape routine, the desire to achieve absolute change isn't an extreme, but a priceless tool. Nobody can advance at a personal level, if he revolves in the circle of a continuous development.

We should look deep inside the bowels of this living mountain called man, studied under the giant lens of a flawless lucidity, thus from the standpoint of a rigor of thought. And extracting a well founded disclosure that doesn't emotionally or physically hurt. Then we might consider him a loser or a winner.

The road towards absolute knowledge is closed when man enters the atmosphere of a compulsory or self-imposed psychological reality. In order to keep in mind a few of leadership's future characteristics, that we can have a glimpse at from the open perspective of human nature, which feels the need to express doubt, dictating the evolution of a game of discrepancies, consisting of the construction of new experiences and feelings, we have to ensure the necessary material for coming up with the alternatives man must explore.

This material, a characteristic of the man's way of "being" may have hidden vices, minimum resistance points, giving in under the pressure of some external forces. Based on the level of emotional and mental strength it possesses, when a modification of the intensely enjoyed reality is sought, he can participate with all his being in a positive or negative transformation process. Mostly when the addition of hard and inaccurate stimuli, hard to polish in "high pressure" conditions, doesn't ensure optimal functionality.

Beyond the present leadership barrier, beyond the barrier constructed by human mind under the influence of emotions, there is an absolutely unknown field, which resembles so much with a path that's never been walked. The alternative to a momentary stop is a hesitation out of which a man incapable to control his own frontiers can hardly pull himself out.

Who dares to venture beyond their own frontiers, given the fact that all those sudden indisposition oscillations and focusing difficulties with a destructive effect reflect upon himself? Given the fact that all those personality manifestations, the natural and artificial are enclosed in reality's disturbing truth?

Leadership is an extensible model of thinking that will focus more and more on the idea of being complete even outside the space of rationality admitted by your own conscience and your own objectivity. The complete is a self-entity, a sort of unique features that characterizes you, something to be put on the first place, and that so many will not be able to detect and master it.

This assumes to support the possibility of a temporal fusion between the past now and once, even if this may mean do not fall agree with what requests another version of you, an Alter Ego.

Now, when you are caught in the grip of a new torrent of knowledge, found outside of the consciousness of others, you are no longer just a brain that rationally coordinates searches towards a grand beginning, but rather a robot, programmed to perform the mission they are designed to do daily: to obey superior orders, coming from a higher court of judgement.

How do you reach your constructive limits? With the risk of a "hypertension" emergence in your way of approaching the process of evolution, which, untreated, can irreversibly erode your growing potential?

Culmile gloriei se ating greu după mulți ani de muncă bine dozată, făcând sacrificii conștient acceptate. Este o investiție pe termen lung pe care ar trebui s-o ia in considerare fiecare dintre noi pentru a putea face lucrurile normale extraordinar de bine, canalizându-ne energiile în direcția potrivită spre atingerea excelenței.

A quote that I found by chance on the internet, and probably many gurus of our times take out of the bag full of secrets, when they want to capture the public attention at meetings and training sessions, it sounds like this "Overcome your expectations. You are not motivated to do extraordinary things, but to do ordinary things extraordinarily well."

All sorts of experts from different fields are happy to explain why determining the level of expectations it is inevitable, and as important as the process developed later, when you start to establish your goals.

However, they forget not to take into account the improperly dosed efforts, because there were not struck by that limit of affordability that no one could pass it than with a single price: a decrease of the capacity of understanding things and of appropriate response.

Sooner or later, this self-overcoming, promptly, and determinative, will come out of the womb, and will flood the capacity of understanding things, of assimilating the new knowledge, helpful for performance.

It is a private matter of trend, of interest, or somehow of survival that grieves me. A kind of altering the factors stimulating the renewal, disconnection from the internal device control, an incurable disease that sometimes from ignorance or haste, we tend to fall prey. The continuous struggle continues between two regiments, one, who wants to gain a position of superiority, but cannot keep the conquests, and the other one, whose outpost is near to the measure's track, of balance and normality.

In such a context, I propose to test an alternative way. A finding. Namely, the finding that according to it, the conflict between the two regiments plays a vital role, keeping us in a continuous rapid rhythm; putting us face to face with ourselves, with our capacity of development, by educating the mobility and willingness to follow the ways of progress.

Now she is again free to manifest herself according to her wishes, again on top of the situation, again available to bring her contribution to strengthening the relations between interior and exterior.

So in order to better understand your own limits and the development of that feeling of overcoming the being, follow the implications entailed by triggering a unique configuration of your personality. More precisely, the part that refers to perception, affection and thought. This entails coherence in the preventive and control actions of a prospective "slide" towards the extreme.

A "paralysis" which is profiled in a decisive moment of life can have as effect delaying or even canceling the upgrade of the interior configuration meant to improve the level of self-knowledge.

Leadership is a continuation of the live experience you are engaged in and in which you reflect yourself just like in a mirror. Often, in order to leave the "turbulence zone" that impedes your development by a consistent tracking of consequences, leading to an end for the battle with yourself, you have to explore in a deeper sense the common aspects of life experience and its implications at the borderline between "to be" and "not to be".

Treat science in the same way that the cat plays with yarn. That is the whole secret.

You find peace and inspiration only in the midst of nature. Every strand of grass always tells you something else. Don't try to count. Just listen. And look.

When someone walks away from you, wish them a wholeheartedly Bon Voyage.

Some confuse the church with God, just as they confuse fervent reading with the Great Science.

Show me a man who has changed and innovated the field of science, and I will show you a man who knew God.

The Great Science is only for those who have devoted themselves entirely to Creation.

Know how to see... and if you don't succeed, someone else will see for you when the time is right.

Talent: What others find so hard to do must be surprisingly easy for you.

Treat science in the same way that the cat plays with yarn. That's the whole secret.

When you really like a song, so, so much... also the voice and the lyrics, especially the rhythm of great finesse, all that remains is for you to experience it in another form of art, as if you were part of it.

Those made to embrace the secrets of the Great Science permanently offer something new through their own creative "production".

Those who ask little from life orient themselves towards the poorest targets.

The man who thinks only of money will never be a Creator. Creation is a journey into the valley of patience, which has as its correspondent a quotation from the bible: "Leave everything and follow Me ! "

Continually double your value based on the results of your talent. A valuable man is a talent with great power of expression.

You cannot be an excellent actor if you lack the magic... Please, interpret the small roles, leave the big ones for me.

The greatest power of creation is for you yourself to be the expression of its completion.

To see everything from above, be prepared to climb many more unpredictable steps than you are prepared to encounter.

You can think as an employee or as a leader. It depends on how high you want to express your uniqueness and how strong your will is.

Music is that part of the soul that rejuvenates your mind.

A truly gifted man is a man unsurpassed in the world. And he knows this well: "I learned nothing from any teacher. Everything I know I learned only from myself.

If you have a talent and stick to it, everything is so easy. More than easy. If you have no talent, imagine how hard it is to start something.

He who was given the science was also given the ability to generate change.

Only someone outside the system will succeed in changing the system.

Whenever you take a step forward to the heights of Great Science, remember that most remain a hundred steps behind. And if you take a step forward every day, you will realize at the end of the year how far others have fallen behind you.

The man who has a talent has it anywhere. The man who has no talent has it nowhere. Thus, a mule who has talent does not need to study abroad to become excellent. And whoever goes abroad to study, will return the same as he left: without talent in any direction. Everything you need to discover your talent is right around you. But those with foreign education will never know this. As they go, so they return.

If the eye can see, then the mind can work. Especially on vacation, when you are relaxed, then the mind works best, because the eye no longer tries to observe, but really admires.

Only the one who succeeds in taking a science to another level can say that he benefited from the support of the universe at every stage of his "quests".

Who is more open and inclined to progress: the one who constantly brings news in a field, or the one who has nothing, nothing, nothing to show the world? Judge for yourself.

The truth awaits. Only lies make haste.

He who does not know how to see, will not be able to understand.

You'll never shine like a star if you get down to the grass root. So many people go down, so few go up.

There is nothing but infinity. And some angels disguised as humans.

So much will change in the realm of science by the end of the year. Some will be one step ahead of everyone else. They will intensify their efforts to innovate in the sphere of science, constantly offering new perspectives, new approaches, new creations. In others nothing will be seen. Nothing, nothing, nothing. Nothing at all. The nothing is everywhere..but you don't have to be nothing.

However important some consider themselves, the Internet will show in the New World how small and insignificant they are. Gone are the days of the false teachers, the "evil sprouts" who held the world together with their ignorance. Thanks to the Internet, all the world's attention will be directed toward the truly intellectually and spiritually gifted, the true trailblazers.

Some are constantly moving towards a new beginning, others are far too far behind to have any beginning. In fact, some are too far behind to realize that they are behind. Most of those left behind leave no trace, while the leaders constantly leave traces that open new horizons.

Only those who make a major change in a science can say that they have made a major change in the world. The creative force is the art of conquering science, before completing its transformation into a complex system.

If you are SO in a field, what is difficult to do becomes extraordinarily easy. If you are poorly prepared, what is simple to do becomes extraordinarily difficult.

Princes and princes. As they come, so they all go. Nothing can be seen behind them. Nothing, nothing, nothing...

Progress is the labor of man who makes his science known. The man who does not present his innovations to the world does not have the ability and knowledge to ensure progress.

Countless changes will take place in the fields of science and technology. And some will be the spearhead in exactly the most important directions of development of science.

More and more people are running for high positions, but very few do not have the initiative to build a blog to show the world what their science says. Everyone loves high office, but very few have anything to show for it.

The world belongs to the awake who act and draw their own powers from themselves. Just as they would extract gold from the depths of a mine. (Erika Nachez)

Have you seen the movie "Ran" by Akira Kurosawa? It shows how the rigidity of an old man, the head of a noble family, leads to the complete destruction of his entire clan. (Erika Nachez)

Old people always use outdated methods. Only they use dynamite where the fine hand of the master must wield the chisel.

The one who was given science was also given the ability to make discoveries in several fields. That includes the ability to gain new insights into spirituality.

The only thing that those left behind can do is to smooth and leave the way clear for those who want to take it forward.

There is nothing but infinity that powers the universe. And there are 1001 angels who cross time under other identities. Only science will reveal this truth, in a moment that will last as long as a thousand years.

Faith means believing in a treasure that is always hidden.

He who never takes one step forward will always take three steps back.

If you are not a man of change, you will not have people of change near you. If you do not excel in a field, you will never be surrounded by excellent people. This is why battles are lost: because the leader is also weak, and the army is also weak.

Whoever has something to say, say it. He who has nothing to say is silent. Whoever has something to show, shows. He who has nothing to show, has nothing to hide.

You love art for nothing, you, man of finesse and refinement, if you don't know how to make yourself a work of art. Artists without their creation are like a violin without strings.

No matter how great the effort, you don't feel the fatigue at all. This is what happens when passion meets talent.

The world does not follow those who sit. The world moves according to those who move things. Don't let a day go by without bringing something new to the field of science.

Those who know will know even more. Those who don't know will never know.

Only real talent can win. Your only strength is not the vastness in which everyone is lost, but the limit above which you can consider yourself brilliant.

People who have no special talent claim a certain importance through the prism of general culture. It is as if Beethoven started studying chemistry and physics to compose the Moon Sonata. Therefore, the responsibility of a creator is not to obtain generalizable knowledge, but to obtain a knowledge focused on a particular purpose.

Save the books from extinction!

For those who want to help the whole world, in terms of information and knowledge, I recommend scanning/photocopying a book – at least one book a week. It doesn't matter the field. The age of the book or document does not matter. But to someone, maybe the information from that book will be useful.

You can then convert the scanned images to PDF, and put them on the net (Scribd, Internet Archive, etc.). It should be noted that "Internet Archive" has no limit regarding the size of the files you upload.

I recommend CS (CamScanner), a very good mobile application for photocopying books, especially because it has the ability to remove shadows, and has many other effects for the clarity of documents/books.

Angels were demons first. In the beginning there was hell, then came heaven.

When you listen to DeepHouse in secret, the atmosphere is totally different from that in a club, because it strengthens your soul strength.

This is the reality in Romania for the last 30 years, especially in the state institutions, where the stakes and relationships are at stake: husband, wife, father, mother, children, cousins, neighbors, friends, in-laws, etc.. Whole octopuses, a corruption infernal that does nothing but drastically reduce the prestige of the institutions. Our country is full of "somies". In the institutions where you observe these degrees of kinship and friendship, there is the greatest corruption, and ZERO specialists. All institutions have slowly gone downhill, and soon they will no longer be of any interest...

Thoughts thrown down, without any selection, without beginning and endlessness.

Becoming functional only with the price of failure, leadership never ceases to interest spirits concerned with their future, with how they will act in their new position. This science evermore planted in the mindset of our days, is helping the man ambitious to create, treat and expose art – not as some commodity where the "commercial network" allows it – but rather as a long term investment, as a reflection in the mirror constantly enlightening his true skills, passions, motivations, intentions and ideals.

From the moment of events, so once you start to flaunt your knowledge and practice your skills, the danger of decreasing your value becomes smaller. The most powerful effects of stimulating hidden abilities, creativity and productivity become increasingly obvious, providing real answers that you will use in your path to success. So you will always seek to act in a way that you would not have normally done.

Do you create leadership as some commodity or as a long term investment?

An enormous amount of practices borrowed from various famous models of leadership or made in collaboration with prestigious professionals in the field, through sharing of resources, does not induce a dose of responsibility. But it can produces great harm, transforming leadership in a duplicate with exaggerated claim to impose itself as a major art.

Obviously, the rudimentary copy of this leadership, performed under untrained, undeveloped and unproved processes and techniques, which can afford only short term positive results, will hardly have the original qualities.

In short, leadership must be a dynamic process, based on motivation, and should not be turned into a duplicate valid only in the current day of your "review". For your leadership to take shape and have long life, you should adjust your attitude and practices appropriately with your own potential to yield results even in the absence of examiners.

In terms of development of a man who cannot distinguish well reality from appearances, the problem of achieving faithful and plausible leadership reproductions to increase the size of your productivity gain after a series of ambiguous results, clues that he did not know initially how to interpret them, becomes pressing.

The inferior quality material out of which such an individual is cut, processed with small "artifices" rather than with thinking operations: analysis, synthesis and comparison, comes to be used in making all kinds of prototypes of leader with claims of advanced levels.

But given the fact that someone interferes – in terms of gain such a person represents to other people or the loss they feel themselves – for leadership to like and allure on the line of contrast effects between old and new, everything takes on a serious tone. In this case, leadership becomes a disappointment, a damage targeting exclusively the proper functioning of a company.

We can always identify a series of failure indicators in fulfilling a leadership objective, such as: "grade repetition" following current assessments, which attest low levels of competence.

Specifically, grade repetition in communicating a vision of personal transformation. Or grade repetition in teaching a life lesson which leads to the involvement and simulation of practical skills. Grade repetition in assuming an obligation, directly involving yourself in others' activities, peacefully, faithfully and efficiently exercising your authority. Or grade repetition regarding freedom of speech violations.

All failure indicators are linked to the need of belonging to a much broader awareness that, when making decisions to impose obligations, is dormant and ignored.

I tend to believe that one of the leadership development trends is that of monitoring and evaluation of outcome indicators of excellence production activity of people around you, consisting in the temporary nature of the image you form about them until you get to know them, and another image, the one you have after getting to know them very well.

Clear opportunities to expand leadership within the personal life of people, not in the sphere of organizational activity, are increasingly emerging. Vast expansion possibilities of perception about people, by reproducing reality with perfect objectivity in all its aspects, by different criteria for assessing work and its importance, with the help of leadership and its options to control influence are looming.

But especially through your model to relate to the reality of their soul, to their power to recover, to rise above all weaknesses, so by increasing your adaptability level to their operating conditions.

I have the impression that, concerning the forms of human knowledge, without reaching a complete settlement of what bothers man, pushing him to reckless deeds he may regret later on, leaders do not have a very rich experience, stemming from the experience of a vast area of expertise, that aim the ingression into a discreet area of attachment to the importance or usefulness that man gives to his own creation.

An impossibility to appreciate what is truly relevant to ensure maximum productivity, makes the image of leadership completely compromised.

Can you transform your leadership into a form of a perfect art?

You cannot be a leader if you contradict, flagrantly, and with detachment, your voters. You cannot be seen as a great man, if you cannot validate your upstanding character.

Just as the archaeologist must put together the discovered historical relics, painstakingly, with patience, imagination and intelligence, in order to get that all of the historical period from which they date - so do you, to be able to give value to your leadership, you must bring to light from the soul of the people (especially from those complicated and difficult) that multitude of small feelings, but steady, which define them, which gives meaning to their lives, that feed their sufferings and joys. To put them together, then to keep away, or at least to minimize the most harmful ones.

It is not enough to be a leader only with the name, only because you were accepted in the lead, but you must present your leadership in the light of your real qualities, of those qualities that make place for "better". You must create from leadership a form of an accessible art, serious and entertaining, not decorative - a form of art that would serve as a means of relationship and transformation.

A dysfunctional leadership, poor of content, sickly by the constraints imposed, riddled by the uninspired decisions - may, however, in some cases, to advance to higher levels, but with the risk of producing sorrows among people, in their consciousness. The thing that will entail more serious consequences, such as your sudden, total, and definitive abandonment, just as a neurological disorder untreated on time can advance to the brain causing patient's death.

Just as a painter always considers the formal structure and color in order to optimize image quality, so people need to consider your inner feeling, so that they could be able to optimize more efficiently the resources necessary to carry out the activities in accordance with your goals.

And this world of emotions, in the immediate vicinity of the complex of beliefs, allows us to submit, in its own conception, to that empire of thinking error, mostly focused on destroying the unity of being. An empire born by chaining all the events and decisions, of the quid pro quos ("then" instead of "now") established under the order of agitation or unfulfilled waiting. Pointing towards a less elevated form of "being", towards a wrong understanding of development prospects.

This is the question that troubles us. What common language can ensure the fruitful partnership between an Ego, oversized by the productions of understandings provided by the source of life and the leadership of social utility, not only scientific, on the scale of temporal continuity, taking into account the real needs of training and progress?

Well, it is the language of the freedom of expressing yourself and being yourself, conditioned by reactions of thinking about oneself, closely related with what fascinates you, by appropriating the elements of a perfect science. This freedom has a function of command and control over what possesses you most – the extremes, one of closing and one of opening the exchanges of beliefs – turning you into a quality human being, freed from all limitations.

Fiction imposes itself through a great complexity of composition, knead, development and relating to new values and attitudes, derives from the reasons of "Death" and "Resurrection", understood as a new form of activating the self that manifests in the form of a reflect of guidance.

Referential constraints, based on the excess of reason leading to impressive findings, constitute the minimum necessary to achieve superiority. They are actions or activities in which you prefer not to take part in, but that have great importance. They are meant to restore the system of interrelations between reality and fiction in a state of equilibrium.

If you don't prepare for a departure from yourself, then the replenishment of knowledge and crystallization of a particular understanding structure of science will have as symptom your withdrawal into a private "hell". You will place yourself under a new setup of unaccountable causes and effects, in the guise of a counter-strike, which will be experienced in time.

Adelante

What helps you to be a completely different person is the result of a small element that can transform the phenomenon called "connect to yourself" in a perpetuum mobile of future actions.

It does not matter what I say, rather what inspires me. The sublime moment of awakening from the heavy sleep of laziness, the unexpected escape from a graceful prison called self-sufficiency, extends infinitely long until I look away from my projection in the mirror and contemplate the horizon. An instinctive creation in which the future is revealed, differentiated between the word of spirit and the color of the pictorial image, refuses a deep analysis, but gains magical valences. It frees me from the illusions of my own vanity.

The possibilities of integrating myself into a new reality are countless when the force of creation falls decisively, like a bolt from the sky, on the need to rid myself of the passive-reflexive side that hopes for great things, but fears direct action and confrontations. Mysteriously, I feel like I am attending an extraordinary experience, deep in an imaginary otherness. As if I was suddenly released from some thick chains, and the sense of the release of non-random, unexpected, but plausible based on the blueprints of a parallel universe, would trace my life a new task. Fortunately, I don't know which one. Yet.

My hand writes without me, as the weather changes without any sign, without any warning, I manage to weigh the contents of a world without walls, this is the only way to skim the horizon according to an exhaustive note: "Oye, piensa en tu futuro ! " Everything occurs particularly at night, but I cannot explain if it's just a match, an addition of a divine or universal matching. Then dance to the rhythm of a music heard only by me.

Leadership: Can you create a relationship of reciprocity between the creation you serve in a sublime moment of catharsis and the transfiguration of a reality that forces you to submit to it?

All through a transfiguration of creative inspiration, revealing the intermittent mystery of matching of rhythms, like loaded springs, ready, ready to explode, reflective of the time in which desire, vision, and divine calling were born, entered in words and the connection between them, I practiced the possibility of being myself.

I reversed the passive role of being a product of creation, to the reason of receiving what was offered to me by the composing laws of the forces of life. Without reflecting on unknown ideas. The reality to which I had to bow respectfully, patiently, with dignity seemed to be drawn from a text by the writer Heinrich Cornelius Agrippa: "He who writes in the universal voice must be purified and cleansed by sacrifice, have strong hope, constant faith, and the mind be lifted up to the high God, and then he will surely obtain divine power."

It was a sort of reflection of what I think of myself in a revival of vitality programmed and maintained at any cost of spiritual energy, a total refusal to obey, to stop, to ID myself in the face of fixed rules. A clash of arrangements in which winning is self-surpassing. It is an attribute of the physical dynamics of a system that can be derived from the equations of motion of a body in the direction of an intelligent sound that has a Level 10.

Leadership: Can you raise your personal example to the rank of a virtue by valuing the potential of mirroring in a double similar to you, identified by the Supreme Self?

I became somebody else entirely as the intensity of perspiration increased where there was nothing but imagination and courage. For what some call "Adelante", in the tension to a prior intensifying one before it, that quality of being synchronized with the novelty from everywhere just to make it live on the improvised stage of a uniform time, porque la vida es corta, I call the it the Higher Self coming from a divine core of adrenaline.

The necessity to get closer to triggering a chain reaction with unpredictable effects, what I have in mind when I am caught in the game of manifesting the reality I create around the idea of "illusion", most likely comes from the invisible of a mistake or a fault unacknowledged, expressed by the perception of unknown magic: "Yo vivo hoy no miro para atrás".

Operating an internal opening to an unnoticeable outside and yet present, a metaphysical "beyond", a vice bursting with splinters of fire, an implementation of escape from loneliness in the event of stopping suddenly while, for other laws of life, get to go beyond myself and see what is beyond the possibilities encompassing a whole. A world summed up in one word integrates me in the structure of the supreme divine: Intensity.

The beauty of what you see in the mirror is the attraction that does not know any limits to what you experience intensely in the present of a completely different future than can be imagined at the time.

To live in an essential manifestation of will, a form of renewable energy, inexhaustible, of a high vibration, by reducing the unknown to the known, as a promise of an experience that overjoys me greatly: "Que viva la vida ! ", as if amid a predestination that I cannot run away from, it became the expression of the desire to do a work at the subtlest level of my nature. To regain periodically perfection beyond fracture and polarity.

This manifestation is unexpected reaction to rushing to what is born and never dies, enriching the life of spiritual freedom and spirit to continuously increase the amount of content and spirit of creative freedom, now proposed to aesthetic revision. Accompanied by the release of energy equal to the difference between what I feel and what I think under the law of action and reaction.

A life that takes happens on "fast forward" is essentially the power to live every moment to the maximum intensity. In the context of such intensity is traced the accession path towards a deep and lasting reality, able to be reborn in every gesture, action or reaction, fueling the revelation in which the reality formed outside of yourself disappears at one point.

Leadership aims to bring personal Creation to the level of the Supreme Self, so that what you highlight through your intimate confessions bears the stamp of a universal consciousness receptive to the pulsations of an authentic experience.

Adelante suggests the recreation of that intrinsic reality by recreating the intensity and force of suggestion with which you express your thoughts or events involved in shaping a unique, authentic personality.

What helps you be a completely different person is the result of a small element that can transform the phenomenon called "connect to yourself" in a perpetuum mobile of future actions. This little item has as a reference point the valuation of a moment through an intense and revealing experience. The immortalization of this moment creates memories that will last a lifetime.

Aleph

The place you look towards can be the revelation that motivates you to become yourself the best version of the reality perceived through the scenario of a dream.

It is a starry night, thousands of sparkles light up the sky as in a beautiful spring dream. Amplifying each sliver of light, my eyes are engulfed by a "beyond now", having the conviction that each star is a possible world, an Azyanasiell Elgnisira , a dream waiting to be dreamed. And, here too, that state between two worlds takes place, the one we think are and the one that can be.

Geared toward a transcendence of the temporal, I think of all those who have gazed upon the sky before me today, and wonder with every blink of my eye if anyone else shares the same sense of awe and reverence for this vast and eternal cosmic wonder. Gazing at the stars, getting used to the cosmic darkness, I discovered the subtle beauty and hidden messages in an Ishtelephes Sdrowuiah Osoyulae , a kind of window to unknown worlds that reflects a mirror of my inner universe.

It is necessary to bear the darkness, to stay still, to be patient until the eyes adjust to the fleeting lights of the universe, in order to understand the Aleph.

I saw innumerable eyes wide open, scrutinizing me as in a mirror, I saw all the mirrors on earth, and not one distorted my panoramic view, focused on a chiaroscuro generating mysterious reflections. One of the stars, the dearest to my gaze, confessed to me that there is no other mystery than time, this infinite interweaving of yesterday, today, the future, forever and never. I felt it as an extension of my soul, free to express its reflection in a dream transformed into a living reality, in a specific way: "every moment experienced through reflection is an extension of infinity in the senses" .

I didn't close an eye all night, knowing that everything I saw was a dream that I will retell in all the lives to come.

Leadership: Can you capture the essence of an immediate moment so that your perception does not alter the impression of a self-referential whole that reflects the reality mirrored by your own imagination?

In a starry night, deeply shrouded in mystery, I felt the universe reveal to me a part of the puzzle of its immensity, seeming to whisper unspeakably deep secrets to me.

- What am I, in this immensity? I asked him with my gaze wide open, encompassing every corner of the heavenly vault.

And the universe, with its mysterious eyes, answered me:

- You are a star that never wants to go out, the light that knows no sunset.

And then the Aleph, the immediate source of my reflection in the universe, summoned me as a witness to the rising of a setting star. When the darkness of the night is the living dream of reality, forcing me to make the non-existent exist, the impossible - possible, then I am nothing but the light of a star that shines through the experiences of the one I was, in the eternal life of the one I will be.

In this case, the Aleph will become a fragment of life shining in the universal memory, the triumph of spirit over matter, the state of permanence of the Self in a moment in a million years, the symbol of a world that has gained its omnipresent unity.

Leadership: Can the exposure of your emotions in a unique setting transform your perception of reality into a broader vision of destiny, so that you give your self a meaning of "luminous guide"?

I always imagined, looking at the dark sky through the reflection of the light in me, that time - an eternity of uncertainty stretched before me, would show me the path from dream to destiny. The long look at the sky, the intuitive will to give an aura of revelation to a promise once made to time, reminded me that every darkness carries the seed of a light just waiting to be discovered. Having reached this point of reflection, my soul seems to resonate with the feeling of a character from the movie "Buried (2010)".

It was it a dream, above reality, or a reality that buries every dream? The protagonist, buried alive, discovers a hidden Zippo lighter in the coffin At first , he only uses it to light his claustrophobic space and light his cigarettes . However , later Paul notices an engraving on the lighter , which appears to be a map , with cryptic lines and symbols. The discovery fills him with hope , believing that the map can help him find a way out of the coffin. Paul spends hours deciphering the map , using his knowledge of the area and the clues around him . He begins to believe that the map was intentionally placed in the coffin to help him escape . A divine sign. Discovering the map gives him a sense of purpose and hope , motivating him to keep fighting .

The point at which leadership takes shape is this: "Where you look can become the catalyst for transforming a vision that inspires action."

Aleph is the state in which you manifest yourself as a traveler in the depths of existence, it is your first step towards self-exploration and understanding the divine manifestation within you, in a continuous process of transformation and discovery of the power that envelops you with the brilliance of a constructive vision. The way you observe what inspires you reveals your worldview, just as looking at the stars defines your conception of the universe.

Allow Me To Give A Voice To Your Gaze

The look pointed towards you is the look you cast in a mirror that tells another story about yourself.

This is the nature of my being: una ampla realidade afetiva passed through the filter of a gaze oriented towards the work of an artist who asks for the support of all the forces of nature engaged in the emancipation of life (individual and cosmic) to address the celestial soul. The same look must match that absolute "unleashing" of the Impressionists, which can only be experienced in nature. In other words, the nature of my being is the nature of a universal memory called to recognize the cohesion of the whole pictorial space in all layers of a perfect spirituality, older, but more current than ever.

That is why I continue to put my experience of surreal life under the incidence of a colorful easel, in the exceptional conditions of the elaboration of a painting called Altforisthesses, or "The power of representation of nature through art". Because I am also a painting and I have to keep myself alive, forever, in the memory of an expressively perceived image, complex enough not to justify its duplication in the real world. The mirror in which I look right now is the artist's own gaze in which one reads the sense of proportion, of color, of the balance between beauty, form and expressiveness.

How perfectly I came to look at myself with the means of expression of a high-quality painting...

My work itself seems a kind of penetration into a sanctified reality with the power to give life to the pictorial space captured in a story of nature. I think that here I am also looking for the aesthetics of my existence, through the eye that follows an image reflected in the mirror of a corner of nature, penetrated only by the lifespan of a magic brush, clean and delicate, which is quite similar to a jewel of the color of the emerald meant to fulfill all desires.

Leadership: Does the importance you attach to the search for a symbolic content in art allow you to understand your own being by belonging to an existence that exceeds the perception of the reality of the world in a subjective experience?

Patiently, I try to paint the desired surface of the canvas red. Then, with the wet brush, I try to spread the color of blood on the background of a reality that, without being ignored by the superimposition of a light wave, I would have preferred to keep in a philosophical passivity until the moment of raising my spirit to the rank of virtue.

So, be careful with the composition you present. The artist's eye can concisely and in a unique way describe the art of giving coherence to a person's vision carried to greater heights of consciousness, expression, management of emotions, through alternative means to the sacred language of God: through color, word, forms, motion.

Wait a minute, try to put yourself in my place. Seek to touch my gaze in a dream of divine inspiration, search through a background of warm, vivid, or intense colors, and only by earnestly searching for the challenge hidden in a beautiful body of nature will you be able to discover yourself as a fabulous expression, becoming mysterious. The painting itself is the gaze from a wake thrown into a dream that disconnects you from the monotony of an existence too little fulfilled.

Or, like an uninterrupted gaze, thrown before a sea that separates life from the idea of adventure on the other shore, waving its waves in a watercolor style, with a universal movement, using a soft brush to obtain a defining aspect of surrealism in a subjective experience, try to find yourself as a given of self-freedom in a meaningful story, entitled Admionsferhis, designating the graceful flowering of a destiny that has relentlessly followed its divine vocation as a guide on the paths of art.

Leadership: Can your creation reproduce the mirror image of an artist's soul illustrated by highlighting the closeness between the horizon of a vast world and the aspiration of a transposition of reality into the monumental?

Two gentle eyes embrace an artistic gaze that seeks its destiny in a memory of reality caught in the nets of a time and space already ignored by the rest of the world. Two entities of image processing of a strongly orthodox consciousness, an unexpected vision of nature and the creator of the petals of a rose of flames, both being mirrors of the divine, unite their reality in front of an adjustable easel.

The effects of this double spiritual fit are a splendid philosophy of beauty and an unprecedented science of art, subtle and refined.

I never thought I could possess an exemplary testimony of a relationship between me and God, between two eyes that perfectly overlap their meanings, down to the smallest detail, like a painting that remains a testimony of the effort to have a reach to the public, made from the pleasure of a risky adventure around colors and forms of expression.

Here, somewhere, is found my reconciliation with the essence and metaphysical consolation, my faith in the work of a creator of worlds, considered as a measure of the relationship between the image of a natural inspiration and the aspiration of a transposition of reality into the monumental. And if you were to ask me what the monumental is, through a painting that fits into the universe of my unsubdued, gentle, comprehensive soul, then I would answer you simply:

The monumental is the result of a desire projected on imaginary representations, regarding the existence of an evocation of God within the figurative, realistic art.

I've said it before, a long time ago, and I repeat. Art is the creator's means of constituting himself in a vision which the eye calls "comparison". It is accessible only with the means and techniques of a painting that oscillates between the beauty of a profound stillness, the greatness of nature (including its chromaticity) and the exercise of remembering an astral moment captured in a triumphal motif of the lyrical ego, showing up as an Alter-Ego of divinity.

The eyes and the gaze reach an agreement on the meaning that the horizon of a larger world puts forward, afferent to an allegory of life under the artist's guidance, placing him on the horizon of a desperate awareness of the divine vocation. When the gaze is cast firmly forward, with nobility, with a special ability of understanding, this presupposes that the eyes are aware of the vastness of the horizon communicated by the depth of a revelation: "I am more than the result of the representation of an external perception and a conscious, intentional image."

The question that needs to be raised is already mentioned by the eyes: "how far does the horizon extend?"

A look at art presupposes knowing how to distinguish reality from what is only the image reflected by a mirror, drawing a clear, dividing line between the inner world and the one around you.

Allow Me To Give A Voice To Your Gaze if you want me to immortalize you in a painting whose theme, in addition to the spiritual one, shocks through the novelty of an extraordinary association, in my case, the association with a storyteller who begins his story with his image reflected in a mirror. A mirror of a complete artist's reinventions.

Alone In The Great Unknown Of Leadership

On April 27, 2019

"When I will reveal this, the Mystery will finally be revealed to those devoted to me."

Robur is the scientist in the work of Jules Verne who, while trying to demonstrate to the world that his invention is a genius vision of the future that everyone should share, through the addition of scientific performance, encounters the firm reluctance of people who have no inclination towards the new, towards improvement and innovation.

Seeing the hatred unleashed in the souls of people because of the success of his aircraft, a very sophisticated idea at that time, Robur had nothing left to do but to address those few who understood the role and performance of science, those endowed and destined for the achievement of the Great Work, but also to those lacking the demiurgical ambition of building a new world through the appeal to the forces of technology:

"Citizens of the United States, he said, my experience is over. But my opinion is, at the moment, the following: that we should never rush things, even when it comes to the progress of mankind. Science must not take precedence before morals. I stand rather for evolution, than for revolution. In a word, you have to get to a place only when you are awaited and the time is right. Today I would be too early to be able to cope with so many contradictory and divergent interests.

The nations are not yet baked for union. I am leaving, therefore, taking the secret of my discoveries with me. But it will not be lost to mankind. It will belong to it when it is trained enough to take advantage of it and wise enough not to abuse. Farewell, US citizens, farewell ! "

And now again, this question: "Who is Robur? Will we ever find out? Today is known, Robur is the science of over the years, maybe that of tomorrow. He is the sure reserve of the future. *

Leadership: Do you have the strength and courage to introduce yourself to the world as a variant of discovering an experience of reality that no matter how fast you try to cross it, no one has the patience to go through it?

Whenever I read Robur the Conqueror, I feel entitled to associate the idea of a prototype of an advanced and rigorous form of thought with the causal links between events that coexist in time, sustaining evolution. The only argument that is the sign of an authentic individual emancipation in an accumulation of facts characteristic of determinism, causes and dramatic effects is the desire to see a better world that it is not meant to remain just a dream of a sleepless night.

Beyond the struggle between faith and science lies the consciousness of an opening to infinity, the conception of a rupture of the mentality inherited from the totalitarian past, a break in the fortification wall of the reality that people living on two different poles experience daily: between the intensity of a revelation of divine nature and doubt from which worldly truths are built.

Perhaps I should carry out an experiment of thought on another boundary to highlight the strange rules of my theories behind a future world as a fiction that defies the conventions of a common façade of existence, reality, and survival of man in a universe designed and informationally guided by a Meta-Cosmic Intelligence.

Undoubtedly, I would be deeply angry at the fact that there are so many minds reluctant to novelty, unusual with a supposed infallible idea of who and how the true God is.

Leadership: Can you overcome the limit of immediate knowledge by learning to look at the absence of what you are in a world that does not recognize the importance of the relationship between "priority and hibernation"?

Science gives you an opportunity to experience a different reality, but the strength of the soul that comes from the confidence given to overcoming the limits of the unanimously accepted norm of society is given by the degree of relevance of representing the image that you are building of an ideal world.

For now, this world seems more inclined to evolve when it is surrounded by a mysterious holy aura, when it is indissolubly linked to the existence of a special being, unfortunately, no one knows its phone number, that is, the existence of which can be verified. Curiosity is the only big challenge that helps you better reflect on reality.

Let me induce upon you a state of cultural and emotional curiosity. What do Jesus Christ and Robur the Conqueror have in common, despite the fact that they have suffered reproaches, dangers, persecutions? Well, maybe both, one and the same hidden under another name, left this world because people were not prepared to recognize the genius of a far too ambitious vision. In fact, I think this world belongs to the one who knew how to change it in a future forced to conceal its past.

If I categorized Robur as a victory over anonymity, at a time when everything, almost everything, is treated in the face of an exasperated community of negativity or rebellious belief, I would probably suspect it as the occasion of a lesson of conversation on "Sorry – seems the hardest word".

Leadership: Are you prepared to think of yourself as the latest version of a truth that, if overloaded with doubts and fears, could be distorted and could not be understood?

I think that it belongs to Robur what Carl Gustav Jung affirmed at an a-temporal moment of meditation: "I've had the experience of being overwhelmed by something stronger than me, something people call God."

And if I were to assess the duration, the power of a form of thought, and how far it can travel in time, I would relate to the fact that Robur still lives today by means of each scientist who has the secret of the pyramid builders, the Great Work, an image of perfection that can only be eternal, unlimited, infinite.

I'm not trying to put into anyone's head the image of a reality which has often put me in a dilemma. Worry not, I'm not planning on changing an entire world, just as Robur did not succeed in his time. But I allow myself to do so that the world does not change me. Robur is a form of protest against what the people want or expect in a society without direction, full of habits.

So, the really important issue of providing maximum unity to human knowledge must be approached from the notion that no solution is perfect and that you can always lose something from choosing a solution to the detriment of another. As spatial expanse, the divine plan is limited by two earthly coordinates, geometrically defined in two fundamental orthogonal directions: its cause and effect, its science, and its conquests.

Leadership: Do you know how to see the whole picture of what's happening to you in a world where there is neither the past nor the future, but just an idyllic realm controlled by the art of an artist who has been telling us a fascinating story for years?

The Resurrection Sermon will take place in only a few hours. A mere coincidence with the steam of this espresso called "personal opinion" that has just reached the Internet buses, in the sight of the world, waiting to penetrate the spirits that have the spark of genius, and not only. Perhaps the death of Christ strangely coincides with the departure of Robur among men, and that "Resurrection" is his return to a world of great uncertainty and extreme events, a world of which there is still a great need to sustain the expansion universe.

The man without knowledge remains a rotten, rootless tree. I cannot afford to judge people's attitudes to a form of superior intelligence that is a premiere in the world of science. I abstain from any impatience in criticizing the less educated and lazy minds who have not understood the symbol of this sacred event, a joy of sharing biblical truth: the fact that the "Resurrection of Jesus" is entirely placed at the expense of the greater deed of the science that the alchemists called "transformation", a division, and a reorganization of matter into another space and time. The secret of the immortality elixir.

Every year science flexes it's muscles more and more, bringing the necessary arguments to the true values of spirituality in the form of inventions, creations and discoveries with which the world is expanding its horizons, as the universe expands edges. It is necessary to be a Christ or a Robur as a sign of God's victory over the weakness of human nature, as a foreshadowing of the release of many of the bondage of the sin of remaining ignorant.

The true power of spirituality consists in freeing yourself from the wounds of the past and rediscovering the way to what you will become, without falling prey to the pride of seeing yourself as being better than others.

Robur did not want to be a leader, he did not force his authority through the means of science to radically change a world, but rather let people lead their lives as they want, so that they can figure out the consequences of their own vision and knowledge. He chose to leave but to resort to constraint, but left behind a proof of what seemed to be a probability before: science makes everything possible.

Christ did not lead the world through the gift of his wonders, which had to make true words full of wisdom, but left behind the crumbs of a chosen reality: that everything can have a solution, but above all everything can take another form. Any disease can easily be defeated, and death can be a projection of life into an endless infinity of multiverses.

"The secret is to become another". Perhaps someone, like Christ or Robur, succeeds in each generation to move on to other travesties and other reincarnations to successfully establish a single purpose. Let us "Welcome" him every year for Easter. The work and glory of God in the kingdom of heaven consists, in fact, in the development and application of science to building a world in which to be better with one another.

In the hearts and minds of more and more scholars pulses the thought of discovering a means of acquiring eternal life or conquering space and time. But Robur has yet to reveal his true identity, he does not hurry his appearance in the crowd. And we do not see God anywhere. However, we know that He exists among us and everywhere, waiting for the world to be as open as possible to a truth that can rightly be disputed.

Perhaps after all, God is a man, but not just anyone, rather the embodiment of the highest science that has managed to go through and govern the entire universe. Umberto Eco said it better than me: "When I reveal this, the Mystery will finally be revealed to those devoted to me."

Leadership means to leap into materializing a broad vision, while also manifesting your ability of not going against the reluctance expressed by others when faced with change.

Alone In What You Understand About Yourself

On April 21, 2014

Develop your whole personality for the essence of art and thought, skillfully selecting that world according to which you individualize your style of leadership.

I often talk about myself, with a lot of freedom of expression, with my soul, through the interweaving of dreams and chimeras, only from the desire to tame the unique destiny of a thought originated from the "Hidden World of the Open World", so as a spectator of the events captured in an existence filled with symbolic and metaphorical load. Yet, this powerful impulse that hides deep motivations, resuscitated by the acuity of an open mind, commanded by the duty of the self that acts with a force twice as large on the support called prinuthimia creation, has nothing selfish nor narcissistic within itself.

It is simply a favor to my free nature, the product of a complicated operation of the mind that extracts from the space of a time known a priori, certain aspects of understanding life, which then makes them usable. Or maybe it is just a thought of a captivating unknown that keeps demanding more and more of me, of who I really am when no one sees me, in the middle of which is my life with all its purpose, whose link to leadership results in an attitude of total, absolute dedication to the world.

I speak about myself even of many do not understand me, because I myself no longer know if I am part of a whole science, a prerequisite for a particular identify of internal "brand", or maybe the science of a part that admits to the great basic instance, intelligence. Everything seems wrong, like innumerable rivulets flowing through rock teeth, not finding their rhythm. Of course, this doubt must somehow be replaced with self-assurance, or permanently suppressed by that penchant for the grandiose.

Depending on the exploration of which worlds do you individualize your style of living in the mirror of an emotional vision, so that you remember who you really are when no one understands you?

If would make this abstract entity known to the world, the self unplaced in the apparent world that gives value to oneself, introducing an operation with "n" elements, I would most likely get the vector product – a vector of fixed size that has direction and meaning, a measured art, demanding in terms of impact over the quality of the correct and efficient management of the cohesion funds allocated to leadership.

Art makes leadership. And to judge a new type of art means to unconsciously compare it to your own ideal, with the ideal of the Ego and of its status quantities based on experience. This, by setting the synchronization process between the unknown structure of a world devoid of landmarks, ready to be explored, and the known of a world that is in a constant search for balance and identity.

The first world has as a central point recognition and designing an identity that best reflects, in an optimistic and dynamic note, what you understand about yourself. The second world activates that option of rejection, between what exists within you in the shape of assessing activity that suffers from modifications and adaptations in the configuration of your science.

The discussions about myself, trying to highlight the value of a unique artistic consciousness in shaping the unseen things, in the clairvoyance of the "Renaissance in another World", are easily understood in the words of the aesthetician Liviu Rusu: "The depths from which the pleasures originate have an immense extent. The superiority of his being is that he suspects his great depths, but he realizes that he cannot possess them."

Leadership: Does the image you perceive through the content of your thoughts become a possible transparency of the reality through which you can achieve "an ascension to the top of creation"?

Between the two units, artist and leader, the only possible process, by essence of content, is the process of continuous and immediate integration of one of those two worlds in self-experience and personality.

A leader can turn into the "content" creator of one of those worlds, and one that must be left to experiment and perfect with that care of an artist that paints the portrait of someone only after he made his own portrait, then he creatively associates with that science of being a median between the lower and higher to one's own essence, only if he finds within his own reason a binder for sanding perfection.

The leadership style practice by a leader, whose uniqueness is given by the configuration of those two worlds, which is never like anything else, depends on the means of revealing, primordially, personal resources, as a part of a comprehensive science, targeted not only at organization and business aspects, but more towards the intellectual aspects of creation, opener of new horizons of the Ego.

An ascension to the top of creation can be done through a form of connecting to anything in the world, by writing or by fact, by drawing, by dream, by living grace, by the images proposed in thoughts, by the sensitivity of an artistic talent, so that what you express can gain the inner strength that other people need to evolve into another human condition: that of an archetype of plenitude and totality.

Alone In What You Understand About Yourself highlights that deep knowledge of the self and of the possibilities of evolution towards true performance, in tight correlation with the permanently changing reality and with "human specificity" in continuous molding.

Alone Tonight

On January 29, 2016

Learn to turn leadership into the entity of the essence of being someone else, amplifying the message obtained from the oscillations of the connotations specific to the self-rediscovery.

I stumbled upon the second game of a self-rediscovery achieved through a sort of coming together of things that cannot be seen, making themselves felt between sleep and waking, integrated in the fullness of an active and moving whole. I thought that only Dante could involuntarily climb down into the darkest abyss, going through its inaccessible dimensions, assimilating all of its substrates and valences, so that afterwards he can miraculously return to the top of life's dimension.

Helpless, but lucid, I feel I became the prisoner of a feeling expressed through means provided by a leitmotif, by a guiding idea that can change my conception about the relationships between "Above" and "Beyond" hidden through the specters of the night. Often times, loneliness is their product. Can you guess who opens my eyes upon waking?

Alone Tonight is my way of working towards the establishment of a prolonged rest, a bleak silence, a dive in the absence of any interaction with the world, the removal of any meaning from its context. It means understanding, relief, forgiveness, relaxation, undertaking of self-consciousness. It involves experiencing the essence of being someone else in the deafness of an Ego that does not require approval, acceptance, justification and praise for what it is and does.

But this doesn't mean that I can escape from the supervision of a substantial intelligence that correspond, beyond all understanding, to a sort of imaginary intrusion in a world in which, in reality, I will never have access to. It is a challenge of putting myself in the shoes of an Elohim in a mysterious land, boundless and timeless, beyond laws and edges of the universe.And if I'd fought with all the strength I held inside, I wouldn't be out here.

Leadership: Can you take on an experience that accentuates the feeling of vulnerability, integrating yourself into a reality that gives you hope that what you see could also be different?

To turn leadership into the entity of the essence of being someone else, on the basis of appropriating beliefs that underlie a modified self-image, you need to amplify the message received from the oscillations of connotations – positive and negative, specific to an absence from the fragile box of the world you usually perceive. Alone tonight is the man who tests his Ego with the conviction that he can change himself, recreate himself, be his own master, only if he moves away from the superficial ways of the world and seeks to find his inner peace.

The man who wants to guarantee the revelation of unique truths of himself, to which only advanced and esoteric science can answer, needs to achieve a sort of imaginary intrusion in a world in which others never have access to. He not only bows to the reality of the self that needs to be experienced fully by constantly relating to a world full of color and diversity, but to a world in which black gains more ground, seduces and impresses just by being different.

The world's greatest inventor, Nikola Tesla, always wanted to find the answer to the question: what happens to a setting star and with the sun that is no more?

At some point in life, I believe that every man of science takes night and darkness as a reference point, this imperious ambiguity that allows enough suspicions, motivated or not, generating hidden effects, leaving you to believe anything. I've wrestled with angles all my life, It's always the halos and the wings that keep me blind.

Leadership: Can you get away from a point that you carry within you incessantly, removing yourself from a center of the world that is actually you?

Wilhelm Hauff, one of the world's greatest writers, confessed in a moment of "Alone Tonight" what exactly it was that made him feel great, free and calm:

"I am but a poor young man who has to make his way through the world with his quill... I belong to all, I belong to myself, but I do not belong to any school... I do not feel above me a master or teacher to whom I owe obedience, beyond the eternal laws of good and beauty, to which I tend, even so, in an imperfect way. I may not be able to keep form far from the influence of time, but my spirit will remain un-Goethean, un-Tieckean, un-Schlegelean and immovable."

I feel the same thing, as a kind of synchronization between the chosen spirits. I have often tried to surprise myself with a philosopher's hypostasis, to speak to myself in a timeless frame, as if I were talking to God, even if only in a temporary way, avoiding the bypassing paths of immeasurable pride.

Because I have to move away from a point that I carry incessantly within me, that is, to stay away from the motivation of being someone else, which is nothing more than the desire to evade through knowledge, through language, through ostentatiously distributed book references. At the same time, moving away from a center of the world in which I feel like a God, waiting for a reassuring confirmation only from my mind, I actually assume the right to be forgotten by the world. Alone Tonight becomes the means by which my objective Ego becomes a transcendental self, as if wanting to say: "I'm still not enough to change myself."

Over the characteristic of frequency of these self-integrations within the darkness of an open mouth of time, on which depends the fidelity of principles of reason to the detriment of others, a great importance is exerted by the low frequency of the impulse of leaving my "non-happenings" suspended.

Something I have not yet experienced, is multiplied through monologue, in the absence of any interaction with the world, by going deeper into a meditative content. In fact, this is also the subtle meaning attributed to the expression: "There is nowhere in this universe to hide from you tonight."

Leadership captures my need to be a total being, a respected one, fully understood and appreciated, that does not disappear permanently in an intimate setting, far from the world; only then does it sharpen its intelligence of self-knowledge.

Alone Tonight can determine a line of force of your becoming, through a sort of imaginary intrusion into a world that others can never access. But for this, loneliness – the darkness of a moment – must be your motivation, the product of the determination of going on a superior path of knowledge, and not something super depressing.

Amen

Remember what defines you as an artist in a time which never slows its course.

I admire my roses every day, as a painter admires his painting shortly before finishing it, to make the final touches, trying to distinguish the message transmitted by nature in a context of a "passing event". It is the clear evidence of a high spiritual force, a testimony of someone more versed on the condition I am pushed towards, that of being a wise and knowledgeable being, one who recognizes the importance of stopping time in a single moment.

Here in my garden, as everywhere in art and life, despite all the secrets of the universe revealed only through a loving being, the impression of returning over time finds its place in a colorful setting, where I recapture my meaning. The composition of my subject, this time as vast as a grain of sand from n hourglass with no way out, meets a prayer, a regret, and a good deed.

I could graphically represent the possibility of reading a narrative given to me daily by the rose, in the colors of a mysterious reality, hidden in the flow of endorphins from a more enigmatic brain that calls for interconnection mechanisms between the earth and the universe.

Through an ever-ascending line, passing through all the achievements and majesty of nature as a metaphor in a groove of time, I could keep with veneration the connection between my life, a field of desires ever wider than planned, and the refined sensitivity of an artist who glorifies the miracle of this world through a resounding AMEN.

Any artist who aspires to immortality takes as a model of inspiration the unique nature of a symbol from an image, half virtual, to extend the distance between suggestion and perception.

I have experienced the durable nature of a rose, part of a grandiose nature, sure of it, never succumbing to the weaknesses of a celebrity who lived for a long time between the backstage and the ramp. I was the symbolic representation of a key character in a complex novel endowed with a history of the human soul, regarded as a form of selfish exploitation of moments of doubtful nobility that would bear the consequences of a possible scenario of belonging to a mysterious sign of the gods, at a time when artificial intelligence was totally rejected.

I have known all the enigmas of the world, all its cunning, all the joys, all its realities. I have lived a lot, but I have met only a few people truly worthy of praise. I was part of the nostalgia of the great emperors, from the science of the great alchemists, from the inspiration of the great artists, but the hardest I was touched by Peter the miner, who sold his heart to the unholy only to find that nothing made him happy anymore. I was, in this case, the field of observation of an existence full of teachings.

"When you have a cold heart, nothing moves you, nothing gives you joy; no painting, no music, no dance. You have no pleasure but food, drink, and sleep. This was the way for this man to travel through the world without purpose, reminding himself only rarely of the time when a poor boy, forced to agonize his living through work, had been happier and more joyful."

"Watch out. I defeat the pain. I'm alive again", whispers to me the thread of a thought that feels like an endless prelude to grace and divine forgiveness throughout an immortal life, derived from the proclamation of the imminence of a change of mentality in an evolution of pure consciousness. A kind of spiritual awakening for an immediate awareness of sin not to have experienced what the soul truly wants. The sin of not using all that the Creator has given to men: a return to ourselves.

Leadership: Do you possess the rare quality of combining in a single formula the generous contribution of nature to completing a perspective on what it means to live your life by reference to the essential axes of a vulnerable destiny?

The rose. The whole world in a single image that portrays the destiny of an unfinished work. A life framed by the gentleness of an unrequited love, or the purity of a star flight, or by the finesse with which the artist describes the portrait of a common man who writes his story in the book of immortality. He is the only agent of nature who has the power to remember the details of the past, continuously experimenting with the existence of the character of Wilhelm Hauff's work.

I was blind and now I see. What if God is not for me? Wonders the man who walks without hesitation into sin, but hits the unbearableness of his own character. Nature hears the heart's struggle, calms its nerves and gives him a chance for forgiveness in the form of an understanding: "One quality can remove all defects."

The splendor of the spirit is manifested when small deeds become expressions of a higher divine mission.

What "the little man of glass" told Peter the miner remains a parable of repentance: "Remorse, springing from the heart's courage to love, always reconciles things and, if I were convinced that you are regretful of the sinful life you lived, I would try to do something for you."

When you experience a strong emotion of what has been done in cohesion with everything that is essential in life, in the effort to correct your character, as the rose directs its strain into the wind, especially after the storm, the spirit of your being gains the splendor of deliverance of the fatality links.

And when you are living through the mysteries of a purple rose, as well as the history admired with great emotion, you actually realize the artistic potential of a young director who, by laying out fact after fact, in a cycle of centuries, prepares the soul of the world for the treasure that is reserved for it, giving meaning to a higher mission: to make the work of the Lord known in the smallest deeds.

Leadership: Are you able to understand the voice of nature reinforced by the imperative of a destiny called upon to follow you through similarities that link you to the past in search of a symbol to use in a unique message?

Oh, what a chain of wonderful happenings the rose destined for me. But the heavens always watch over the symbol I want to use in a unique message: "Try to keep in the memory of the world everything you experienced in the moments when you were someone else ! "

The rose has witnessed an existence that is repeated by the idea behind the story, namely that any experiences seeks the right coat, and any impulse of manifestation of spirituality seeks its access to the word. In the transition from wealth to suffering, and from suffering to joy, Peter the miner used to say: "Better to content yourself with a little than be filthy rich, with a lot of gold and a cold heart."

In art, as in life, you are condemned to love a reality that immediately immortalized in a memory beyond words, can never be changed by anyone, but only enlivened with a bit of color, with sensitivity, with divine greeting.

Only a brilliant artist succeeds in rendering, as a persistent chronicle of events taken from reality, even if somewhat diluted with meaning, the reading of a line of union of the soul with divinity, the supreme purpose of existence. My only concern comes from the fact that I have exaggerated my understanding, the spiritual impulse that resists time, and this active manifestation of the desire to conceive an aesthetic of fragility, suffering and joy that follows.

Leadership: Is your existence a reality that has begun to be visible with the creation of a character full of contradictions, but one that resists throughout time through the theme it addresses?

From the moment I went back in time, to other lands, I created a different ambience, another variant of myself that lives in a parallel reality. I was the image of a rose that grew in the heart of fairytale character full of contradictions, but inspired by reality, which is equivalent to plunging into a truly fascinating universe where ordinary people suddenly discover new forces designed to transform their lives and themselves into... something else.

At the same time, I take up the fact that the idea of measuring things, order and orientation, in the aesthetics of the joy of living in the memory of a long-forgotten past, in which only the term "holiness" could measure the distance between regret and repentance, between pain and well-being. The present, how different is it in a "Look back" theme check?

To wisely experience a return to other times is not a philosophy of the science of creation and creation, it is not an immortalization of the remnants of obsolete morals, but rather the effect of a thought designed to perpetuate the battlefield of a pain that always sought relief.

Meditation on art begins with the justification of the idea of finitude. I was the purity of a rose located in the foreground of a painting where saturated colors are too cold to be beautiful, but in which imperfection is a virtue and every character, measured with the accuracy of time, is absolutely wonderful the way they are.

The past is gone for good, it's time to say: Amen !

The power of an artist lies in the correct choice of a symbol meant to represent him outside the theme he addresses from the perspective of time, but of a life lived through successive recharges.

Amen is the scream of an artist who looked around, saw the defects of the world, and chose to say "Farewell" only to return to it in other times, in other places, in other dimensions of being, in order to perfect his work. At last, I believe I will be found...

Ameno

The divine act of Creation is a very fine experience in interpreting a reality full of significance, about the significance of transforming the original image of nature into a "mirror image".

On many occasions I have noticed that the path that my life has stretched out in front of me passes through a garden full of roses, cared for in the field of Inmariasty consciousness, letting itself be better known through a kind of spirituality, intellectual and elite, that only the most talented artists are able to acquire. Ameno, Ameno, latire, because I am given the privilege of having a golden hand, used as a remedy against the constraints endured by the ruses, such as humanity's attempt to intervene in the course of nature, in its laws, in its work.

Inmariasty, in complete love and truth, is the prophetic name attributed to a matiro outhisum relationship between "the light of truth", "the divine in nature" and "the resort to intervention in the plane of artistic experience", as the creator ventures to the highest visions of beauty invested with a unique symbolic value. A very exposed term in the sublime act of prophecy, because "Whoever sees my interior, must not look at the external aspect", creates the impression of something living por medio de una escritura sagrada, so that a series of situations and events that put me in front of myself get the nuances of contemplating the relationship with a Deus Absconditus.

Through the gentle touch of the soft petals, with that ease of a touch of fine brush, but also through the practice of flushing the leaves, one by one, with the help of a handkerchief from the softest velvet, I gained a different focus on life, a parallel way of soul development with resonance in multiple examples of creative initiatives. The rose, without which one cannot conceive the existence of a Latiremno art (the close union of the believers with the profound meaning of a sacred image), refined in a refined way a kind of return to the purity of forms and to the real nature, apparently hidden behind the figurative. Ciò che è santo è sempre segreto...

The effect of widening a creative vision is given by the sensitivity of a mystical spirituality caught in an image of perfection that only resides in the science of art to find in nature a likeness fitting to your personality.

Often, I was tempted to choose another road in my life, a path that deepened into a thicket of bushes, but I find myself forced to admit that a strange force has chosen me, and better than me, shedding a strong light on the truth about the world in ways that are difficult to accept for the existing framework of knowledge. The success of an artist is a final analysis of the collaboration with God in determining the order of distinct phenomena that facilitate the execution of remarkable compositions. Ameno, dore me !

Everything seems to me painted with the blood of the miracle to exist in total discretion, but also in a circle of impressions of a moment, blooming beautifully around an aesthetic ideal. The roses, making up the breath of the sacred space in which the timeless utterance of the Divine teaching is contemplated, supports me in the subtle refinement of the expressive model of artistic processing of the abstract message, chosen to nourish the spirit of immortality. It is an art to know how to turn sensitive matter into an immortal body, then to withdraw into its light.

The art of enlivening the rose is just the beginning of a mystique that emphasizes the resurrection of our Savior Christ in a sui generis surrealism, mirrored in the consciousness of the world through a partially figurative image.

As for the place where I surrounded myself with the sanctity of a resonant image in the "embrace of baby Jesus", who knows only an ascending orientation to the autonomy of the artistic language, I can at the same time recognize that manifestation of a state of wonder and admiration which the artist experiences in a gentle, decently, patient way, when it comes to abstract painting, nostalgically recalling the lights of times experienced omoovia-sethys in the spirit of alchemy.

Leadership: Does the art that your Creation retains possess the mystery of the richly ornamented interpretive style, aided by a vision of divine destiny conceived as an eternal archetypal journey of initiation of the self into the mysteries of a figurative composition?

Therefore, the experiences had at every moment of life, within a more rustic drawing style, represented a kind of mentor in the subtle refinement of a lasting language, of a chosen aesthetic taste, of the additional rigor in interpreting the creative themes, of course adapted for contemporaneity. I think that here, too, my thoughts deserve to plunge into a flurry of ancient roses, forever hiding in their meaning a secret that can drive away kitsch propagators:"We are what we see and admire repeatedly."

Ensuring the correlation between life and art, in relation to a symbol of beauty and positivity, rests on a natural instinct to reproduce living images, of the essential phenomena that adorn the Cychesthea Creation, to plunge into the world of options with sensitive potential, sometimes revealing a tangible reality, sometimes a utopia or idealism fallen into the trap of fantasy. Without being too sweet, romantic or expansive, the rose whispers a secret to me: "Be like me, without forgetting who you are ! "

Thought of as a miraculous appearance of a divine messenger, by sharing in the pure image of God, so giving him a very orthodox feeling in the expressive pattern of a childlike, angel-like smile, I tried to describe the rose (for the eternal glorification of the faith) in a transfer of positive traits from un espíritu puro to un espíritu sagrado, in a sublime and supernatural way, truly transforming the grace of the holy into an Argyasantri place (written in a divine name). It was not easy, because it meant to experience the rose as a natural expression of my privacy in correspondence with a figurative elegance.

Leadership: Is it in the nature of the creator within you to cross beyond the Ego to the border with another world, claiming a human vision in a universe of the Imperial Self?

Nothing is easier for a painter, compared to the splendor of an immortalization of life (narrated in a few sequences beautifully described artistically), than to render in an artistic way a situation produced by facilitating the encounter between the immanent and the transcendent. With a single glance given to a unique flower, caught in a very red and yellow image, which seems to be reborn in the hypostasis of a sensitive human being who begins to learn an articulated language madeagis istenantza, the essential image of Creation acquires a marked quality of grace and poetry, but with an increasing weight in the transmission of the solemn message: "What is deep never disappoints."

If I were to extend this idea in relation to the impact of reality in the world of the rose, I could resort to the supreme point of view of Bishop Ghenadie of Râmnicului: "The idea of our holy religions, preached by the Savior and the Apostles, and introduced into the minds of men could not remain here for a long time only in the form of mental conceptions, for they also needed a body, but they had to be represented by representations borrowed from the field of arts and from the book of nature."

The Imperial Self used by the artist to create the coordinates of another world, in a miraculous harmony of four roses with totally special smells, gathered together and merged in a perfect synthesis, has as the only correspondent in space and time the following touches: a touch of color, a touch of nobility, a touch of naturalness, a touch of surrealistic bill, a touch of modernity, a touch of stability and a touch of infinity.

I finally understood that being divine means to express artistic effect of rose petals under another sky, another name in pictures or in words, in body and soul. God is the perfect equivalent of the real rose, richly admired and enveloping, forever hiding in its depths a mystery: "to flourish perfectly in an attempt to recreate a possible world, as objective and subjective as any other."

The idea of the holy faith is the transposition of a form of inner language into an expressive composition with a tribute to Nature and the Creator, with the intention of achieving a likeness to Him under the effect of a power anchor: "I gave you a vision of my divine form for you to be able to recognize me as a miracle of nature within yourself."

Ameno is the model of cooperation between art and feeling that reveals the unity between man and nature, personified only by a sensitive psychic, a meticulous thought patiently working visually, ideally and conceptually, which often uses divine intervention to reproduce a more vibrant thematic and a reality, more revered and closer to the soul of the believer.

Amsterdam

On January 03, 2016

Accelerate the understanding of your own evolution, developing your sense of nesting in the arms of a stable self that does not change despite the various attempts of the times.

The more I feed it, the bizarre nostalgia of my youth, when I was rushing in the face of momentary impulses, supporting that unbranded state of "Don't worry, be happy", paradoxically had the gift of putting me in touch with everything material and immaterial. The fruit of an ephemeral nonsense or the shadow of a fallen backstop?

I would have liked to take the whole world, grasp it with my hands, as the sea takes with it the small piles of sand, and make it mine, wanting it without boundary and without turning. Without knowing that this is a Fade-In transition. "When I close my eyes, I can only see miles of the headlights / Fleshing out the distance."

At one point, I felt like I was the world, everything around me sipped in the contents of a glass of living water, lest I get swallowed by it. I was flooded with the deja-vu sensations, pushing myself forward, in a way that moved between extremes – between dreams and memories. How do I respond to their calls? Of course, I was overcome by the situation.

Visionary leadership explores the familiar unknown, using inner perceptions to redefine external reality.

Something was leading me completely over my powers. A strange body, dropped straight out of the sky with the power of a lightning flashing for a moment, then disappears, translated as "I miss you". And I miss you. And I miss you. But though dreams and memories were stirring up, they were neither the end nor the beginning of a new journey. But only the guarantee of an "unknown known."

The unyielding winter light brings me back into the blanket of a relative timeline. All the heavens above me and all the lands inside me, taking the appearance of new self-orientations, revealed by the perception of a star of the immortal soul movements that have so often hit me with good will, facilitate the walking through the universe in memory of a time reborn. "You love me then you leave me, still I lie here."

A time that I feel I will never recover again, but which I would love to experience once more. "And I'm lonely here without you / Miss your breath against my skin."

Leadership: Can you demonstrate the validity of your progress model by connecting to the reality of a known space?

The opening of a possession of memories – from London, New York, Amsterdam, one more intrusive and deceptive than the other, to which devotion to passing illusions can only give footnotes to an underground of consciousness, emphasizes my position in relation to the greatness of being.

A known space is a place of memories and regression, causing an incentive to motivate what has remained unfinished, and at the same time, it is a reaction of a response to a stimulus of sufficient power called a decrease in distance from an earlier position. Such as the position of a seeker for the meaning of life.

To be able to use leadership to demonstrate the validity of my model of progress, I connect to the reality of a known space. I navigate through the sensations of those things, moments, places that represent me and have brought me to fulfillment. This means that the actions of my personal life, in support of a happiness and joy, are in harmony with the journal of my life, my memories, my emotional dowry.

Reconstructing the present from the echoes of past memories becomes a way of navigating through seemingly irreversible time, when consciousness resumes its logical thread of introspection, turning "what was" into a guide to "what will be."

"Do not forget about yourself, do not forget what you've been through, do not forget what formed you, do not forget what you've met ! " is the motto of leaders, for they do not live by virtue of inertia. They know that one of the greatest ironies of life is that people do not attach importance to the "then" moment than when they are on the brink of forgetting it. "Now" is his will "Then."

The science to resonate with the "Past" moment in a "Now" that will also pass over time can be attributed to the truth that man acts from certain effects he has felt and which he has not yet buried. Memories, under the direction of positive or negative experiences that tend to repeat, underlie the foundation of a guiding character in a continuous search for one's own identity.

A leader demonstrates the validity of his model of progress by connecting himself to the reality of a known space when approaching that model of experience to get involved in a past that remained for him a background of everyday life.

Amsterdam is the result of a past that continues today. Time and space placement of a self-reliance, receiving my singular imprint in the endless play of light and shadow of the mind, which resembles a paradox-paved road (trying to understand them I would only wander through my thoughts !), is an acceptance of my own "beginning" that maintains my primacy.

An Amazing Example Of Leadership

It is useless to understand leadership if you do not know how to use its essence wisely.

Successful writers, Napoleon Hill and W. Clement Stone, tell a wonderful story in the book "Success and Attitude". One morning a pastor was trying to prepare his sermon in difficult conditions. His wife was out shopping. It was a rainy day, and his little boy was restless and bored, having nothing to do. Eventually, desperately, the pastor picked up an old magazine and flipped through it until he came across a vivid picture of a world map. He tore open the magazine paper, tore it to pieces, and spread it on the living room floor, saying:

- Johnny, if you can put them together, I'll give you 25 cents.

The pastor thought that would keep Johnny busy for most of the morning. But ten minutes later he heard a knock on his office door. It was his boy, with the puzzle solved. The pastor was amazed to see that Johnny had managed to finish so quickly, arranging all the pieces of paper nicely and redoing the world map.

- Boy, how did you finish so fast? the pastor asks

- Oh, well, it was simple, Johnny said. On the other side was a picture of a man. I put a sheet of paper underneath, remade the picture of the man, placed another sheet on top, then turned it over. I thought that if I put the man in order, the world would be fine.

Leadership: Do you accept reality before you focus on the things you think you know, considering that what you see is an unplanned image that is gradually being built?

How well do you integrate into other people's "made-up" world? I must emphasize once again that the vision of an image is the essence of leadership. And the leader always remains integrated, if not in the immediate reality, in any case in the internal matrix of the image he has built about reality, that is, in an inner world in which the image could not exist without him.

A leader who begins to clash with the mentality and attitude of the people, so who cannot redirect people's emotions to him, will never be able to raise his level of influence.

So he has to build an imposing image out of the pieces that people put together and put together to form an orientation towards a future based on expertise and vision. Moreover, the leader must form a cult of personality centered around the central figures, so to perform a combined search for an image with a certain reality in order to highlight the difference in approach to a knowledge approach.

Johnny played an excellent role as a "human trainer", conveying to his father, with all conviction, that a man can be "in order" if he succeeds in shaping him (just as a sculptor shapes his works, according to his will, but also according to his own way of being). Anyone can be changed, depending on what you want to see in them, according to your own criteria, provided you are able to integrate into their world – so provided they accept you as a "shaper" and mentor.

If you consider yourself an expert in the field of leadership, if you want to increase your performance and reach a high level of influence, then seek to relate as well as possible to people, learn to arrange those "pieces" that make up each of them and to feed them with that defining energy for their being, for their future, so with an incentive to invigorate their spirit. If your performance does not increase the performance of others, then it is only your fault.

Leadership: Does your prestige reflect on the image you are gradually building about your vision, accepting some form of compromise before focusing on the reality you know?

The image you build of your vision is an expression of your significant belief in two opposing realities: a slowly changing reality as people continue to advance on a beaten path, and a reality that cannot manifest, which is only in your mind, so it's actually a fantasy. And the only form of compromise that you have to accept before you focus on the reality that you know is not to get fully involved in the search for a vision that cannot come to the surface.

Just as primitive people never researched the disease that afflicted them, they sought God — just as in your case, in vain you seek success if you do not research your own being, if you do not think like a high-level leader who knows exactly what the strengths and weaknesses of the people he leads are. When you research and understand your own being, your own Self, your own character, you feel as if you've again won the battle with yourself, you feel that you are advancing, that you are progressing. You feel that you are in control of things, that you have a certain stability, that you have answered every question. You reassure your mind, conscience, and soul by knowing that the principles you have set for yourself are not violated by doubt or indifference.

The measure of your leadership is given by the way you focus on other people, when you focus your attention and care on their Self. Just as a painter seeks to emphasize through light and shadow the individuality of every object in space, so you, as a leader, must emphasize through your leadership the individuality of the special character of other people, by virtue of that sense of nobility which highlights and values their inner beauty.

In vain do you feel comfortable with the idea that everyone else is listening to you and following your example, giving them the responsibilities and authority that they need, because your leadership may not have substance, and you may be wrong about what you truly are. You might be just a boss, not a charismatic and beloved leader.

The essence of leadership is not to shape a vision that makes you no longer distinguish reality from the simulation of "enriched reality".

An Amazing Example Of Leadership has to do with your involvement in a game with two opposing realities: a reality that is out of your sight, and a reality that is in front of you that is objective. What determines the image of a leader is the vision that springs from these two realities, able to inspire the kind of commitment and energy that he will need to reveal his creative potential.

An Anthology Of Literature Without Frontiers

On August 05, 2018

Expand your horizons of representing the art from which spring, inseparable, form and content, from the perspective of a character playing a role in a work on the line of destiny that you yourself choose.

In a way, I had to resemble someone as experienced as myself in the art of original writing, without doubting its meaning, so that the world could see the value of a chosen occupation without hindering the name of the author and his titles. From another point of view, my work, superseded by the effort to think of myself as a sort of demiurge who gives profound and infinite senses to the human condition through the language of art, would be said to have been worked out of the "non finito" material of a reality associated with an area of objective constraint at the border between the spatial conception of the painting and the promise of alterity.

The ensemble of the deep springs of an artist's work is studied by the determination to substitute the given reality with a life experience produced or taken from elsewhere. As a relentless pursuit of perfection immortalized through creation, trusting too much in my own forces and having the power to distinguish between finite and infinite, between heaven and earth, between self-surpassing and stability in everything that is related to the emotions of looking back, on the ground of a general acceptance, but one based on the denial of the need to relate through the dialogues of scientific knowledge.

It was as if all the world had secretly and unobtrusively waited for the work of a nonconformist young man who could satisfy the world's locked aspirations in a revolutionary-liberating manner, but without him also presenting the concrete space of the immense through L'esprit De Finesse. This is equivalent to a targeted coup – by the word of salvation – in the overflow of a life that refuses to enter a much too narrow grid of interpretation, reality unable to be fully integrated into the context of the meta-language of a spiritual science.

Total devotion to eternal ideals transforms chance into revelation, creating an expressive language that combines originality with symbolic depth.

Russian novelist and playwright Ivan Sergeyevich Turgenev at one point asked: What does Don Quixote express? His answer was quick to appear: "Don Quixote represents faith in something eternal, unthinkable, the belief in the truth outside of man, a difficult intrusion that requires service and sacrifice, but which is accessible to total devotion and sacrificial power."

The most significant moments of affirmation of my expressive language, resulting from the stylistic sphere of distinct comparisons, relate only to the place of a subtle ambiguity that leaves free the territory of any possible interpretations. Man is no longer seen as a manifestation of the hazard, but as the revelation of connections with occultism, the symbolic environment, with different stylistic and thematic areas of art written on the coordinates of an indisputable expression of originality, a revealing poetic authenticity.

Leadership: Do you test your ability to transform the artistic object into a kaleidoscope of experiences and sensations, radically rethinking the subject of your art from the endless perspective of a single individual who cannot justly receive and interpret the real?

My intervention in the actual realization of the private "mystery" not only places art at a level of unique, original expression, leaving behind something that was not yet out of print, but acquires a new dimension of perception of reality and topicality renewed by the meanings they develop. The artistic object is the rare, hard-to-understand and accepted book, highlighting the absolutely useful binder between an elite culture and a mass culture.

Look at how I can create a disturbing effect from an intense color expressed by the word "non finito", as a symbol of fear in the passage of time, to give it the specific value of an object that shades a mysterious aspect, something other than the idea of destiny to which Don Quixote relates by accompanying me as a devoted comrade to myself.

I first associate living a unique life experiences with the need for effective solidarity carried to freedom of expression, represented by refusing to comply with the demands of society in my area full of secrets of a Don Quixote, carrier of intrinsic significance. He contradicts and combats everyone with all the enthusiasm of an artist in search of the identity that lives in and through difference, not in spite of it.

As long as I allow my need to be right to condition your "state of being" through the mirror of illusion, that is, the condition of being above me, you will be incapable of staying open to the idea of the story.

Literature feeds on such an obsession of confronting human time with the promise of alterity, seeming to have the effect of a limited life experience in the sphere of the artistic world that relinquishes its harshness through a madness unintelligible to everyone. Man's intimate madness, with sarcasm and ethical lessons, is the only thing that matters in seeking the deep understanding of the whole of the so-called "parallel universe", as a kind of suspension between plausible and unreal, between natural and mysterious.

Leadership: Do you position yourself within the bounds of a judgment that tends towards stringent causal explanations, without representing the lasting interest of art in the creation of a truly spiritual experience?

I remember in my mind the name Machiavelli, of which the Romanian writer Alexandru Balaci said at one point: "He was a humanist in the sense that, in the center of his lucid attention, he always put man, not the entity. But always his political lucidity, the vigor of reasoning, have been allied with the artist's impetus. This explains the fundamental coherence, logic, and feature of his work. Machiavelli was not a speculative, on the contrary, his work was characterized by a true escape from the metaphysical and the abstract."

If I look at myself from the perspective of an appreciation of aesthetic experiences crossing and overlapping each other, as a relationship of symbolic forces, leaps and emotional qualities, no matter how the meanings of things live, I come to act as a fictional character who can still see outside of his own world. Striking from a scientific space in which reason intertwines with imagination, I integrate myself in the expression of experiencing a new time of creating an artistic consciousness that never makes concessions in the face of bad taste.

Machiavelli would not allow the wisdom and virtue of his experience to damage my style with the real perceived mistakes of insubordination before any critical, imperative, moral authority, or in the face of spectacular exegetical assaults. This, even though I have often allowed myself to refer to expressions that do not necessarily belong to the metaphor, but to the syncretism of several ways of thinking reality, in which expressions assimilate to other, non-sensory representations.

A courage beyond myself, which can only be divine, authenticates me in a space of diversity of ideas as a beneficiary of many distinctions that recognize my primacy in the design of a creation beyond the rigors of time.

The virtue of assessing my belonging to a sort of hidden determination that only the Universe seems to cause, considering myself privileged in front of the view beyond the visible boundary of this world, is circumscribed to a sphere of encompassment of vast, seemingly unlimited spaces, of feeling, of spirit and of perceiving affinities with the characters of other writers.

To create a literature of great strength of language is to ensure the transition from the figurative representation of reality to the expression of the essence of renewed things in the field of an art that takes the theoretical horizon of human interactions into the context of asserting a symbolic, autonomous and private space.

An Anthology Of Literature Without Frontiers shows differently the urge to write, as an act of liberation from the burden of feelings of belonging to a trend or a particular current, experienced by an artist tested by burden of an unconfessed secret that presses towards being communicated through a symbolic essentiality.

An Aspect That Should Not Be Neglected

On April 17, 2009

Use your autonomy to find the best formula for change, focusing your full attention on how the rules set by others allow you flexibility in dealing with change.

Yesterday afternoon I was reading in the swing of my backyard when, suddenly, from the next yard I hear the new owner saying to the children who came at her four year old son's birthday.

"Ok kids, now we play the hide and seek. It's a new game, but you will love it, you'll see. I'm going to turn with my face at the wall, and until I finish counting you have to hide wherever you want in the yard. But be careful, don't hide in the house; there are a lot of places you can hide in this big yard."

Said and done, the countdown starts:"1, 2, 3...10. Who's not ready I'll take it with a shovel?" But as the lady turned around I heard:"Ionut, I saw you. You can get out of the car hood. I told you to hide, not to get on the car."

Unlike other children who were hidden all over the yard, Ionut sat on sight, and that because his mother has not explained clearly enough what it means to "hide". If she would have told the children to set in a place where they cannot be seen and found, maybe Ionut would have understood better what he had to do and he wouldn't get on the car but, more probably he would have hidden behind it.

Leadership: By means of which indicators can you measure the clarity factor of the image that makes you think you are in the middle of an unfinished action, is there an equivalent effect of the decision that must be fully up to spec?

The success of a company depends first of all on the employees and on the quality of the offered services offered to clients. A company will be a winner even in the most difficult moments if the employees understand very well what they have to do and if they get involved in finding solutions and in implementing them. It's not at all surprising the fact that the employees who are well trained always have the wanted efficiency, unlike those who were not trained efficiently.

The ideal of any human resource specialist is finding employees who are willing to achieve performance, capable to obtain better and better results. Then, he must ensure that the employees understand which is their role in the company, that they know why are they doing this work and that they understand very clear which is the purpose of this job. If the employees don't understand what they have to do, more likely they will not get involved in their work and they will not accomplish the aims and the tasks that are provided in their data sheet.

Two indicators can measure the clarity factor of the image that makes you think you are in the middle of an unfinished action, there is an equivalent effect of the decision that must be fully up to spec: the ability to differentiate yourself from others and how to respond to the application of new rules.

Paraphrasing Anda Rasca, the general manager of the Abc Training Consulting company: "If the employees don't understand very well what we are demanding, it's possible that the result of the tasks to be unsatisfied and to influence disadvantageous other activities in the department or in the company."

Indisputable, the manner in which the manager or the human resource specialist manages to formulate the working skills determine the level of implication of the employees in the activity of the company. So, the working duties have to be very clear.

Leadership: Do you have the overwhelming energy that prevents you from carefully leaning on some key aspects of situations where you move from a "test" imposed - to a rule that limits your maneuverability?

A rule that expresses the autonomy of the individual says that no matter what goal you are pursuing, no matter the specialist that sets your path for you, the position you assume must be the one you are really pleased to live with and that you are not willing to apply at the exhortations or pressures of others.

It's a signal alert for the companies when the employees begin to lose interest in accomplishing their work duties. This might be a consequence of the fact that they don't want to work or they don't know exactly what they have to do. For nothing the companies have standards and procedures very clearly defined which gives employees the opportunity to evolve, if they don't understand what exactly their tasks are.

This is why, the role of a human resource specialist is essential in everything regarding the evolution of a company. Together with the technical setting, they have to clarify the employee's duties and to follow the way of accomplishing these tasks, to explain what they have to do and to show how to work.

What predominates in any man, like any employee, is the ability to differentiate not from the qualities he possesses, but from the attitude adopted despite the influence of others. That is the difference between ordinary and formidable employees: the former accept any push and stick to the rules, the latter are willing to support their own views to the end despite the rules set by managers.

Do not let your employee status become that of a puppet that is easy to handle in a game that does not belong to you.

Being employed does not mean being a slave or a puppet, it means you are contracted to bring about a change in the company. You have to look at yourself as an absolutely necessary person. When the manager draws you a task, you must first ask yourself if you have become the backstage show that is more spirited than the scene on stage. Have you become too predictable? Are your actions too easy to read? Have you by any chance become a "workhorse", a "clown" that others take full advantage of?

A genuine employee thinks this of their manager: you are the one who changes first, then I activate my options that can bring benefits to the company.

An Enigma That Only Gets Solved In Mystery

On May 21, 2015

Put an end to old traditionalism, calling for expression through improvisation, interpretation and composition.

It seemed that something eluded me, as a meaning of that creative rule that was under the sign of the magical power of the word whose picture was missing, whose essence, living as a silent witness in my heart, crossed the electrifying wire of the story I was about to invent. Of the fantasy, thirsty for something new and strange. One mystery did not give me peace, disturbing my horizons of imagination, the mystery of all mysteries, the connection between art and life, the detachment from the daily routine that deliberately refuses to propose a purpose in life: it was the mystery of expressiveness, the distinctive feature of the poetic language.

The word, without being uttered, only sniffing the breeze it emanates at every flash of inspiration, taking on as a reference potential the very experience of creation, fiercely succeeding itself to a complex experience, on the axis of a vertical time, seemed to measure eternity with weak human power.

Sometimes, interest for the argument whose counterargument I declared I understand, a neutral whole, "I don't know something, but I do know something else instead", so a restart of the description of the imaginable, a sincere reformulation of the expression that admitted the interpretation of an inexact truth as a potential for inspiration, suppressed the use of the word. And cancelled the essential component of its art, which was – in my case – the spark, the metaphor, mira profunditas. Finally, if the potential of processing and polishing the word was reduced to zero, then my science will not be able to provide any stake, any hope of advancement.

Leadership: Can you achieve a projection of the relevant image of yourself through the interpretation you give to the cultivation of thoughts about the thinking that shapes the surrounding world?

The great French critic, Hippolyte Taine, tried to answer the questions that turn the art of seeking meaning into a different art, that of creation, hoping to give writing finesse, spiritual generosity, a certain lure for those willing to read. "What is a word? How can you, through a black scribble strung together on a paper, to refill, in its place, the personal view of colors and forms, the interpretation of faces, the guessing of feelings?"

Surely. The word that defined my creation through excellence, similar to the behavior of a ball on a roulette wheel, represented a formidable art contained in the phrase "what it may be, may just as well not be". A flower of luck giving itself between the unknowable, knowledge and exposure. An enigma solvable only in mystery. Its relentless force coming from the load of meanings that it highlighted, as an element of structure produced from successive transformations of the original matter – it itself a bud full of sap, a world reborn from its own ashes and always with a change in its constituency.

The word is a repeating thought, on which you focus more and more, trying to be part of a world where the creator and the created are interchangeable.

The interpretation I gave to the cultivation of thoughts about thinking from which I was trying to model the surrounding world could be classified according to various criteria which theoretically and practically allowed a better knowledge of my specific way of being in the idea of a long reflection on the meaning of life used a scale of cumbersome ascension into the world of literature.

Leadership: Are you able to embrace new forms of application and guidance of creation towards the territory of a revolutionary art, so as to rule over what you conquer?

Traditionalism can be defeated by the ordinances and metamorphoses of creation in connection with a theme that provokes the interest of artists, especially in the literary field. Practically, traditionalism is a form of limited thinking, going on a single line of approach to a subject, without containing other representations or parts of another representation, without resorting to expressive force and symbolic charge.

The evolutionary way of forms that creation customizes, in light of new exposures of ideas (definitions, theories, approaches), become profitable when you attempt to overcome what others call normality. They demonstrate their efficiency in various experiments of becoming – as a science of the mind, or as a science of the impact of freedom of expression around a world whose transformations are ordained by creation – having as a main characteristic the use of certain meanings that haven't been accessible to anyone, but that can be a standard of performance to which you relate.

Any developer of new art, someone who puts an end to old traditionalism, expects the discovery of hidden meanings and its values. For art succeeds creation. Always such a leader, an artist whose medium of authentic expression is achieved by means of improvisation, interpretation and composition, demonstrating his vision from the position of a seafarer into the unknown, fights to change the rules that are governed by the sign of the powerful magic of creation (a grand deployment from an ambiguous beginning to an end that ensures a chaining of ideas) by making an epic armor.

To master what you conquer means to educate your mind to acquire a wider sphere of manifestation, encompassment, and validity in a great refinement creation in which all objects and persons around can be a plastic game in the great picture of life.

A leader rules over what he conquers. As a reward for your effort, to the extent you manage to embrace new ways of applying and guiding creation towards the territory of a revolutionary art, more pure, more detached from foreign influences, subject to the requirements of efficiency, productivity, profitability and competitiveness – to the extent in which you manage to grasp with imagination the "infinity lost within the abyss" – only then will your performance in developing a multitude of aspects, in managing a variety of experiences and types of content will increase significantly.

Conclusively, in this regard we have the full of truth quote belonging to Romanian philosopher, C. Rădulescu Motru: "The actual mastery over nature (of that which is unrestrained in creation) can only come from the ideal mastery the mind gives through its scientific conceptions. The latter contain virtually what facts will later achieve in practice. As scientific conceptions gain a larger sphere and become the intellectual property of a great number of souls, in the same proportion rise also the temptations for grandiose practical concerns and establishes between people a closer collaboration."

The language that helps you understand how to gain a new perspective to look beyond the barriers imposed by traditionalism has as a premise the very meaning of the word that you compose from the experience of life and whose value is expressed as a code designed to give a specific meaning to the reality segment that makes up a parallel universe, a different world.

Leadership is the word you can read in an image used to clarify a feeling, a dream, a memory, a sensation to reveal the part of you that wants progress, growth, recognition of merits, achieving artistic success both intellectually and culturally.

That word is "Transcendence", and such leadership relies on special connotation that he brings to an event or phenomenon that is emblematic of the renewal of thought.

An Enigma That Only Gets Solved In Mystery highlights that hard to understand thing, blamed on the creation that flows through the strait guarded by the two towers of "imagination" and "vision", being the fulcrum and center of the forces of the ability for development and capitalization of the formidable art contained in the phrase "what it may be, may just as well not be."

An Excelsior Of The Search For The Divine In Creation

On December 29, 2019

Be at the height of the creation you project to achieve the ideal of alterity, giving priority to the encyclopedic value of an image over its artistic mastery revealed in nature.

I retreated into my own world, a world of reverence, a world of imagination, a world of absolute refinement, standing around other shrubs of the same species as me, Rosa Damascens, as a sphere of yellow-reddish light from the visible reality of a secret work. Patiently and attentively, I listen to time as it maintains its idea of*Prisofindesyum*, the first line of defense against the ephemeral detached from the condensation of the total experience of a world dominated by mercantile interests, given the forgetfulness of all those who deny their path, religion, purpose. Could I, by some outburst, by some supreme decision, save her from oblivion?

I would have liked for people to communicate freely and unhesitatingly with me, as they speak to each other, with no hidden intentions, no hesitation. To try to approach my friendship (Phi's work) by transferring emotions from discreet to visible, through the attention given to each thrill of pleasure – which I hope they feel at my sight. I would have liked to not only be seen as an object of admiration, the projection of an image in the mirror of beauty salons, but rather as a loyal confessional partner, in an effort to interpretively probe any pain, any joy, any event.

I can understand any tear in people's eyes, but no one shed a tear for me. And a rose that understands the tear humbly poured from the eyes of an ordinary mortal can only be the spiritual work of a creator who knows how to put together the image of a man transfigured by the grace of God and the living spirit of nature.

If I am bound to the world of people through one eye, because the other cannot see, then this eye is the secret of the aura beneath a sensitive creator, who substitutes his words for the presumed content of symbolic representations. The impetus for transcendence, for the sublime, for the beautiful and the ideal, through the interweaving of dreams and interpretations of syncretic poetry, must be considered the first step in defining a load of charm and elegance, sublimated and spiritualized through art, connected to the chance of ascending an authentic aesthetic destiny.

Leadership: Do you consider the circumstance by which your work is offered as a space full of transcendent allusions, through its entire appearance expressed in terms of a mirror of maximum fidelity within an image with great evocation power?

I found my artist, or the artist found his work in me. With breathlessness, determination, glee, I became my master's favorite, not just some ordinary rose, but Double Delight, who knows how to blossom beautifully around the artistic and revealing testimony sprinkled with the beauty of nature in the protection of the vault arches that fulfill the unique aspect of the House Venerate in One. Don't I know how to always surprise you with another look, another color, another word?

Here, in the only Christian place remained as a determined empire of another life and characteristic of another historical epoch, without escaping the knowing look itself the vivid and expressive factor of the lines and colors specific to Impressionism in the composition of the image discreetly stopped at the limit of nature, além de qualquer tendência passageira, one can recognize the true value of a single secret incarnation: of heavenly dreams and moments of brilliance in favor of Ab Aeterno.

Let us not bypass this sacred space, questo spazio che provoca la tua immaginazione, magnified with irradiation in the aesthetic exigency of books written by the ancients, naturally accepted in the composition of a world that is always opening further.

In order to speak in terms of "Sanctity of the Divine", I must first prove that there is a permanent connection between the creator and the soul, between life, art and nature. The artistic example of a flower of divine origin is ideal in the spatiality of a vivid, colorful, captivating image and in full relation to the perception of a seductive artist who has a high state of inner peace and proves a vibration of high spiritual living in the process of contemplating a classic painting.

Leadership: Can you conceive of a vision of transcending ephemerality, living under the open horizons of an intangible identity that endlessly extends into a form of universal spirituality?

The rose provides the form of the active matter, called the soul, in the most subtle form of the holiness of "Newton's Chest". Who really understands me, the one who has made a habit of looking at me with the eyes of an artist and with the skill of an alchemist, will use the totally special representation of Job above the sphere of Ain-Soph in the space of subjective moods, with an idea: "the perception of the concrete of the abundance of an existence without purpose, which wants to be experienced plenarily, absolutely, is explained only by the resemblance to a work of art".

Was I designed for deep scrutiny, in the constant search for a consubstantial alterity? Performing a search for what is eternal in the deep, restrained sigh of an intangible identity that sends to the world of divine mystery, I have perfected the connection between the modeling of pure feeling and the self-modeling of "A Being Without Time". Or, as the writer Cornel A. Ailincăi very well said: "Nothing can be more challenging than to find a permanent openness, in innumerable forms, towards a relation with another and an impenetrability with its form."

Full of the emotions of a Benedictine reality used in practicing the vital virtues of the Hellenistic Eye, enveloped by the pleasant scent of various perfumes from the elixirs affiliated with a scruffy mind, the path of my life I think increasingly resonates with an external, ancient and medieval reality, corresponding to a single art. Maybe it was written that way, or maybe I added to the writing a new hint of belonging to the World of an In Vitro fertilized Heaven.

Leadership: Can you relate your artistic vision to the introduction of the temporal into eternity, in order to increase your chance of elevating the spirit and heart to the Great Creator at the level of image of the living moment reflected in the "Body Thirsty for Perfection and Beauty"?

A rose seen through an artist's eye betrays the consciousness of a spiritual state that controls the most precious mind, often misunderstood, invested with a good capacity for synthesis through the prism of a system that creates models, making it so easy to float in the wonderful universe of otherness.

I will not allow you to name me thy neighbor through the perception of the inverse sublimation path that stands in front of the primitive meaning of the term symbol, without first finding a resemblance, an incarnation, a sense, a work of divine mercy, a fulfillment of prophecies, or without acknowledging "The appearance of one's measure in the manifestation of Everything".

This l'angle de vue suprême, allowing the artist to know the world as a rich source of meanings, traverses Mercury's magical seals and spirits through a single deepening into the operations encoded allegorically by a master emeritus in the methods of personification and art to transcend the visible. With the help of an corpus odemycros, suspected of deformations of his own names in a specific way to the ancient cabal, the artist sees with admiration the principle of the difference between "Yesterday" and "Today" without completely closing in the imaginary world of the world of Ain Soph.

It was well said by someone that whenever there is an intensification of chaotic events, there is also a convergence of multiple timelines. How well did you know me really by taming the divine destiny, through the harassment of the moment and the burning of the lasting being, so that you grant yourself, at the same time, the chance of raising the spirit and heart to the Great Creator at the level of the image of the living moment reflected in the "Body Thirsty for Perfection and Beauty"?

The existence of a form of universal spirituality in the field of the visual consists in the perception of the concrete of the abundance of an existence without end, which is to be experienced plenarily, absolutely, only by resembling a work of art.

An Excelsior For The Search Of The Divine In Creation is linked to the premise of investigating the powerful visual offered by a special interpretative approach, a rich source of meanings attributed to an imaginary world that can at any time come to life through the artist's attempt to illustrate the entire depositor of his affective memory on canvas.

An Expressive Rejoining Between Two Existences

On February 03, 2020

Try to highlight the reflected part of your soul so that what you express through creation has the property of a Creator with no equal.

I often see myself in the brush tip of a consecrated artist, one at my master's level, even when the world does not recognize his creations, these experiences of a life with a living, sensitized, eternalized watercolor effect, which seems to begin to speak with you through the resonance of the universe. All other people accept it somewhat under the condition of their singular essence, because they are all different, but none manage to penetrate this fragile and ephemeral composition with me. None but my master.

Resonance to an exceptional destiny. When my master speaks to me every morning, always in other words, when he paints me in memorable touches that slowly complete the image of a fascinating picture, conquered by the addition of vivid colors, then I know that I am not a rose. I am not held in the memory of the world by a single brilliant artist, him having something important to prove to the universe, bringing in his spiritual correspondences an original thought reality, woven on the thread of an always different life.

The charm of being an artist through agreements meanings of shapes and colors, while that to be a rose corresponds agreement of spiritual enthusiasm and vibrancy of sensitivity that turns every reason taken from reality into a true self-portrait.

In art, the dominant character of aesthetics is the vibration of the human soul with the help of a pure form of expression and consciousness. I do not ask anyone to be like me, beautiful in my eyes, betraying happiness through beauty, endowed with the subtle energy corresponding to a symbolic attribute in correspondence with the spiritual impulse, that is, possessing that "Thus speaks the Lord" in the sense of embodying an angelic being. I only ask for this, and I ask only from myself: to be something that can only exist once, in every important astral moment.

Leadership: Can you evaluate the greatness of your own existence based on the completion of the creation that an artist could represent in the case of a more comprehensive presence in its continued lasting?

If I have learned to read people's faces, especially my master's intentions and thoughts, this is due to the stability properties of art landmarks, in light of what I am intrinsically and uniquely, including here: visual acuity, visual representation and suggestiveness of the striking sensation. A rose knows how to strengthen the presence in the foreground of the portrait the artist makes of his soul.

Of course, I would not call myself Double Delight because of my reference to the action of the colors and their mix (red, yellow and white), if I did not emit an energy, a vibration of rare purity and good will. And depending on the experiences of mirroring in my own immediate sensibility, they manage to convey states, feelings, thoughts and desires. The manifestation of the human soul in the artistic plane translates through the effort to reflect a part of my personality beyond image and form.

I'm very proud of myself. I would like my name to continue through the ancient Archimedes(a reality that is aligned with myself), like nowhere else, in a kind of play of lights within an astral moment, without boundaries, capable of vibrating the human soul, or the manifestation of the affective soul in the concrete Ruah. Perhaps it would be easier for me to consider myself as Titian's equal in terms of the greatness of finding an aesthetic correspondence between the physical shell and the inner irradiation.

Like any rose caught in a game of crystal mirrors in the middle of a maze of words, I have long lived far from human life, in the synthetic beauty of an angel body, explained only in the cosmos of the spell of a dream moment from an exchange of mysteries and fabulous legends. It was so hard for me to forget about myself, the world, the mutual resonances between color and feeling, but I had seen too much from other universes that I did not want to float around these mysterious forms of haloes and illuminations. The experience of being a rose mirrors the quality of being a fruitful artist.

Leadership: Can your creation offer a new profile of self-idealization reflected by the image of a world that updates its version in a receptive environment to the noble and eternal, such as: "exchange the soul and the experience of the world"?

I turned myself into a creation, the divine essence processed by the spirit of nature that causes the effect of beauty, which amplifies my value in terms of developing a better version of the original called "Double Delight". In other words, the artist is the echo of the latent sensitivity with which the beauty of creation is preserved over time.

From the perspective of a reality whose only sense is to obtain an image with many vivid colors, part of a creation starting from the significant level of subjectivity that gives uniqueness to the linear gesture, I can only think of understandings that oppose arguments to any challenges of the language especially constructed to direct artistic life and semantics in another direction, in another interpretation of the Infinity Symbol painted in red.

The exploratory function of emotions (deshprenyan) is closely related to the function of substituting an image of nature with the image of a living being (lochynorum). Thus, an effective engagement in the symbolized universe, mediating with the consciousness the presumption of alterity expressed by delegation, by the word or expression to which all things are done and appear in Diexvinthis(the content of a living image), marks the beginning of the work modeled with feeling and humility within a self-modeling at a numberless age.

"Dyerosthedis", or the utterance of the divine presence in the simultaneity of the timeless, denotes the way of interpreting an erect shrub by the very power of nature to portray it as a lasting, profound and mysterious pattern of inner and intellectual experience of cabalistic practice. It is appropriate here to mention the possibility of the existence of the rose in the evolution of the human being through Borges' words: "Important is the work that I perform with this ephemeral material, called a symbol, so that I can achieve it in the discovery of a new world, without borders."

Although some reasons have urged me to do so only and not otherwise, perpendicular to the direction of the main path of living by dream, by mirage, by the breaking of reality, in the end I became part of the harmonious structure of the universal totality, towards the phenomenology of ontology and the knowledge of creation. The soul imbued with the art of oil painting eased my passing from the divine to the humane. Now I am a man amongst men.

Leadership, or the version of the New Man, is the greatness of an existence experienced and materialized through an idealization of self which is obtained by raising the creation to the level of a Creator (one with no equal).

An Expressive Rejoining Between Two Existences is possible when you manage to impose yourself as an artist from the perspective of a gaze coming from a world previous to the one you are living in now, with the mention that everything you experience can be felt in another universe.

An Extension Of The Gaze Captured In Images

On September 09, 2021

This is the secret of art: to look at the surface of the sea as if you were measuring its depths.

One day I will write a treatise on art, looking only at the sea, listening to its waves, admiring its vastness. By the way, I think this is the secret of art: to look at the surface of the sea as if you were measuring its depths with your eyes. And isn't art the sea seen from the blue of imaginary eyes, with which one can give a color replica of an image that has become a symbol of mystery and at the same time of abysmal existences, of truth kept in the secret depths of the world?

It seems to me that before my eyes opens a comprehensive picture of the beautiful times of yesteryear, with a double effect on the recollection of an episode recorded in the history of art, through the diversity of forms that the waves take in an unconsolidated view of the world. Here, I opt for the deliberate or accidental taking over of a theme brought up to date by abstract expressionists: "Iniathyessia", that is, the recollection of a memory from the past and its metamorphosis into painting.

I see the sand on the shore, and I almost ignore the really fine one in the sea. And people without God will continue to seek God, even if HE is everywhere, but not always in sight.

Honestly, this is the impression that the sea gives me: that I must find the hidden truth of the world, the mystery of the Divine Logos, in a deposit of wave-forms and wave-hypostases, so that the art I am to give shape to highlights the image of a painting supported by chiaroscuro accents. A painting capable of giving a large replica of the image of the Absolute.

Leadership: Can the image of your creation express a sense of self-renewal through a direct comparison between what is perceptible to the eye and what is hidden from view?

A true artist can always change the coordinates of any science, such as leadership. But a leader will not have much to say about science, much less about art. Someone was right: *"However, the leader turns his field into an art in which he excels. That makes him a leader and an artist."*In that case, ask that leader to write a treatise on art, then you will have proof of his excellence.

Another issue debated in art is that of the gaze which meets in a polyvalent manner with a mystical reality. It can be the look with which the eyes explore the open horizon of the sea, when the color of the sea turns golden at sunset, mirroring itself spectacularly only in the soul of the surrealist painter, the admirer of castles, which gives life and color to his subjects.

Sometimes the sea is seen not only as a reflection on human artistic sensibility, but as a microcosm of the relationship between Creator and Opera, especially as a foray into the peace of the soul that makes us be understanding in the flow of life. And who would really understand the language of the waves as they embrace the shore, perhaps find out more secrets. Maybe then it would be easier to capture the walking picture of the beautiful times of yesteryear.

I became deeply attached to the tradition of the great universal painting, just as in the most beautiful moments of silence I became attached to the reflection of the rays that the sunset brings as an argument that painting must bring light into human life. Like the movement of a lantern in a dark room, my eyes try to probe the impenetrable depths of the sea, to share their discoveries in real time with others, but without leaving land.

Leadership: Can you look at an artistic creation through the possible similarities with your own destiny, so that you appreciate that feeling of union of the Ego with a world of mercy and silence?

Sometimes I am haunted by fanciful ideas, such as that God has hidden his kingdom in the depths, so that only those with a very deep view will reveal the ins and outs of an almost unsuspected existence. The reply to this pattern of thinking also appears: whoever remains completely unknown always leads a lonely existence, carrying in himself the memories of an unhappy childhood, which gives his soul structure an increased sensitivity. That is why color is a physical extension of exacerbated nerves, as the English historian Herbert Read rightly said.

And an artist who tries to know God must endure the weight of the sea before contemplating the infinity of the sea immersed in his own thoughts. Or, he might contemplate the multiple hypostases of the sea, celebrating it as a matrix of unreal existence by relating it to various representations, feelings, and thoughts of the spirit. Depths that are not directly known, but as stated by philosopher Georg Wilhelm Friedrich Hegel, they must be scrutinized only by directing one's own spirit to the inner world.

In the imperfect circle of my optical universe, the perfection of that oscillating motion, of an energy controlled on an unlimited surface, consisting of trillions of liters of water, is outlined. It is not possible to stop this continuous alternation of creation and ocean energy, except with the feeling of having woken up from a long sleep. A deja-vu flashed through my mind for a split second, throwing me back to the end times, and then awakening in me a kind of nostalgia for something inexhaustibly inexpressible, which amplified more and more. Great artists already know this feeling and know how to overcome it.

And finally, my eyes continue to search for the descriptive and rigorous truth of a sure and complete picture: that of an old man who, alone in a boat, can calm the waves and feel the sea in an intense and profound manner.

A true artist will never try to capture the distance of a new horizon, or the depths of an underwater world, without mastering the reality near his own being.

An Extension Of The Gaze Captured In Images materializes in a reflection on human artistic sensibility if we try to see everything around us as an expression of the confrontation with the thoughts and emotions that make up a vision, a mystical experience, an extrapolation of the ephemeral world.

An Eye To See And A Mind To Understand

On March 09, 2020

Only in a discreet setting do similar spirits meet and complete each other, those of great subtlety and originality.

The magician once told me a secret about God, in an intimacy where no one and nothing was in its place, because this was provided in the scenario of the performance of the show. Everything had to betray an increased mystery in the presence of lights ready to go out. Curiosity and horror targeted me in an unlimited powerlessness, in a state of tension in which I grudgingly accepted the conditions of an image of falsehood.

As if God were, in turn, a mysterious magician, whom the effects of magic could not substitute within a reasonable time, had transformed him into a fiction of Kafkian perception that could only become reality in an outstanding art form. Finding this, this well-kept secret, I was already feeling above the rest of the world.

And yet, I continued to feel cloistered in a dark space, away from any trace of feeling, close to a gloomy mysticism from which truths can hardly find their way. What could the world be mad at if it knows less than I do, especially since so many times I have relied, patiently, with interest, honestly on the nature of simple things, that everything is as it should be, not as it seems.

Even the weakest gaze has its inside, even the most unfamiliar view has its specificity.

The truth was beyond my comprehension. I had entered into an emptiness, an extension in the exuberance of the subjective wilderness, on the edge of the bottomless abyss of silent and tense silence. Somehow, I felt unnecessary, like a painter who can't find his inspiration when he has to mix the simplest colors. Comfortingly, humbly, by a simplifying intuition, I imagined God as an invisible voice, the echo of a perfect creation in the rising tension of an expectation that will never end.

Leadership: Can you simplify the visual information in front of you and translate it into a suggestive image, prolonged by compositional continuity in favor of an original art that is not subject to the usual patterns of reality reception?

The feeling of a mystical expectation lingered in the air. God amused himself secretly, behind the tall, imposing curtain, while the magician surrounded me with wills and woes about the clandestine piling up of all the temptations to which magic is subjected. I did not want to face the truth, nor the falsehood, but I had to let myself be led by the work of a fascinating image, as when the painter shows his spirit of observation, the power of conviction, the talent of artistic transfiguration of the stages of the creative process – in an irredeemable attraction.

That's just to immortalize the moment of tension. And because I didn't want to be that way, it just happened to be the opposite of how I wanted it to be.

A place foreign to my being, but close to art. Here, a magician and a God gave me all the ideas regarding the articulations of the theory of creation of eternal truths, not being in their parabolic substance, of perspective, but a mere natural circumstance of the very human, but also so imperative vital impulse to dominate reality at a time when my words were constantly "I can't, I don't understand anything".

Leadership: Are you beginning to realize that visual information means being one step ahead of the actual experience of reality, considering that the purpose of a creation is to induce a state of fullness that belongs to alterity?

After a while everything was silent, a suspension of the freedom to understand reality, an intrigue worthy of a novel with upsets. The magician became unseen behind the curtain. And God finally came out, taking a sober and distant air, as in a dynamic picture whose construction suffered some logic errors. I was guessing that everything is a well-played farce, a forgery of an older faith by playing a story that has the sudden appearance of a spark of inspiration.

And yet, feeling overwhelmed by an invisible tremor, I learned how to help build the memory of other fictional characters I often identified with. Each construction captured by me, being categorically analyzed with an artist's eye, becomes a fundamental landmark for the opening of other artistic horizons. And the same landmark that can be wrapped in an unusual magic, so cleverly tricked, it fulfills a universal function, and a particular one, especially if I make an act of creation that has in its composition the bent temptation of secrecy and its accessibility. God, as well as the persistence of the one who unites with Him.

A magician is a God because he knows how to tell about God as a magician hiding behind an impenetrable curtain, designating a metaphor in a play of compositions, where only God can see and understand it through a secret whose decryption key no one can find. The whole mystical painting was outlined by a spontaneous artist, who is not a brilliant artist but by the act of concretizing the reality that will remain for years and years in the memory he placed in the deepest place in the soul of the other magicians, who aspire to be Gods.

Leadership: Does the variety of meanings you attribute to reality betray a simplified vision of the purpose of your creation, a fact that indicates the disposition of art towards opening a long-term perspective?

The lights went out slowly, as time goes by when you look at it in a painting by Salvador Dali, but in the darkness, one could distinguish the faint glow of a simultaneity and resonance of the kind of soul that longs to be truly creative. I ventured into the darkness, which became darker and darker as I tried to bring my creation to the level of magic, with superhuman efforts. But I felt far more enchanted by magic, as the very creation, hidden beneath dozens of masks, drew me closer to God, inviting me to understand art in a dual world. Everything is a picture. A show. Art. Magic.

Visual information refers to the way of describing a high contrast image, anchored to a certain reality, to a certain landmark, to a certain situation. It is what you capture in reality in the form of an image that claims to be important and positive for the realization of the idea of "miraculous" in the vital space of creation.

And if I stop here, to not liven up hazy gazes too much, it is because I want the end of the novel "The Name of the Rose", by Umberto Eco, to make you understand magic, even if few of you are prepared to understand it from a visual information perspective:

"I will quickly plunge into that wilderness, perfectly smooth and unobtrusive, in which the soul ends truly happy. I will plunge into the darkness of God, in silent silence and ineffable merging, and in this plunge all equality and inequality will be lost, and in that void my spirit will lose itself, and will no longer know neither equal nor unequal, and nothing else: and all differences will be forgotten. I will be in the simple foundation, in the quiet desert where the differences are never seen, in the intimacy where no one is in his particular place. I will fall into silent and uninhabited divinity, where there is no work or image."

Just magic.

The long-term perspective that influences (high-level) leadership is the product of the merging of two distinct entities: a magician and a god, a theme that wants to materialize in a world of the miraculous and a vision that is intended to be achieved exclusively by nurturing faith in a transcendent world.

An Eye To See And A Mind To Understand are two distinct entities of an authority called "Creator" whose images mirror each other, overlapping only by reflection in a plane of evidence and a plane of discretion.

An Illusion That The Easel Of Time Paints With Rare Mastery

On December 12, 2023

Review your vision of the image you are contemplating, looking at yourself as if you were looking at a reflection of nature in yourself.

I walk on the sea shore, among the gusts of wind that make the waves change into the colors of a painting as if from a work of fiction. A man wants to cross immortality, and to do that he must give himself to the moment when the waves, as they pour in, can envelop him in a powerful energy, turning him into the muse of painters who will look at the splendor of the sea.

Yes, the sea calls me, the waves call me, the sunrise envelops me, and not anyway, but just as the artist's brush is driven by the faith of an eternal work, Esthelpih Sreycuss , painting the picture of a seductive and fascinating world.

The sea completes the image of my artist nature, mixing times, emotions and aspects of external nature in a kind of ideational crucible, a container capable of withstanding very high temperatures, in which I boil the burning passions of a hallucinatory wandering in a parallel universe, symbolic, occult, plurivalent. In addition, what my rich imagination can perceive clearly and perceptibly, seeing this space of the absolute hard to locate on the axis of time, letting myself be carried away by the illusion of an increasingly intense experience, is the complete image of a thoughtful nature of the artist, of to this crazy, impetuous, independent and refined nature at the same time, which is entrusted with so many divine powers and privileges, so many possibilities to manifest in the high world of the Peerless Creators.

One will hardly be able to assert that all that can be called beautiful in art, and having great aesthetic force, is to be found in the mechanism of sight. For in order to delight and charm a soul receptive to beauty, possibly gazing at the sea glistening in the sunlight, man needs the regular emotions behind the gaze.

Leadership: Do you direct your attention to the process of exploring a world that transcends the limits of the immediate, opening up to an endless universe of possibilities and artistic expressions?

Everything is bathed in the beauty of a reality that delights the painting of pure eyes. Illustrative in this sense is what I feel when I walk on the seashore, the emotion of peace and existential stillness, like an uninterrupted flow of the sound produced by the waves, in the beating of the sun. To the extent that the sound of the waves represents the whole giver of emotions, subordinated to the aesthetic dimension, so without in any way separating the sight from the hearing, my art can be conceived in the ultimate simplicity, especially when in this simplicity several different sounds resound simultaneously, but which are so well united that sometimes I think I hear only one.

Here there is something to hold not only in the field of sight, but as part of the field of hearing focused on regularity, capturing the same interval of moments of silence in the same beauty that resides in the innocence and pleasure of looking. So, feeling irresistibly tempted to take note of the image which causes the eye to retain an auditory recollection, almost as long as a thousand clear days last, and even after it is gone, I may cause art to be called "the property of sound isolated from to be deep".

Obviously, in order to better understand the sea, I must not only look at it in comparison to myself, how big it is and how small I am, but I must imagine the elements of the rhythm of the waves as being indifferent in themselves, such as the sounds separate parts of a string, or the beat of a drum. And how can a succession of such beatings become significant in the midst of tides and marine currents?

Leadership: Do you contemplate your spiritual essence in every corner of your self-image, making the connection between a world that flourishes in imagination and a world that comes to life in reality?

However tumultuous, or unexpected, the waves have no effect on me unless they establish an artistic-mystical effect on me. It is like a vision of Borges who organizes his story as a pendulum that oscillates between reality and dream, until the dream becomes reality, that is, two superimposed versions of the same fact. As he mentioned at the end of the Zahirul story, according to the idealist doctrine, the verbs "to live" and "to dream" are perfectly synonymous.

Here is Borges's idea, as it emerges from "Circular Ruins":

"In the book that is the universe, God has written our fate. This text, however, cannot be read by us. Like the dreamer, Divinity is a projection of the inexorable will that created or wrote the world. The magician who dreams a man realizes that he too is, in turn, the dream of someone else whose life project was foreseen in the divine project. The dreamer's efforts to understand the divine will are from the very beginning doomed to failure. Moreover, even these futile efforts were foreseen in the dream of Someone who dreamed them or in the book of a divinity who wrote them."

As soon as the broadest gaze merges with the apparently insignificant sounds of the sea current, or of the waves, according to their nature and content, as some admirable secrets of nature, then the art of the beautiful (in its absoluteness) becomes a pure characteristic of the activity to see all diversity in unity. The artist sees not only the borders of the world, but opens his wings to the endless horizon of his own vision, in which he discovers the inexhaustible source of the dream from which the magician creates amazing illusions.

The starting point in the construction of art is the validation of the reality that your image outlines in a dream. A dream that God nourishes with meaning.

An Illusion That The Easel Of Time Paints With Rare Mastery is the image with which the artist contemplates his own immortality, in a spectacle of forms and colors that transcend the ephemeral limits of existence.

To dream is to watch the waves of the sea while God paints your life in the colors of His soul, with the same devotion with which the painter creates his masterpieces, thus becoming a part of the divine picture. After all, the sea was foreseen in my dream, in which I dreamed that the soul of an artist changed into a magician. And if you noticed well, my vision was, in fact, the projection of a reality, blessed by the hand of God, which suddenly became a dream, in an illusion that the easel of time paints with such skill.

And, to conclude, I will quote a passage belonging to the poet Jean Guichard Meili:

"The only thing we can be sure of is that the future belongs to artists, at least as long as they are not overwhelmed by external constraints. Because we now know that the most contrary forms do not destroy, but add, after all, that they do not there is never a fundamental disagreement between the most settled past and the most uncertain present, that there is nothing left to do but to give the artist the confidence he demands in return for the evidence of affection he gives in his every work .

As long as there will be people, who will prove feeling, there will be among them some who will not be able to resist such an affection. Nothing can be more beautiful than extreme will, extreme sensitivity and science..."

An important discovery is a thrilling inner adventure that the artist experiences

On April 19, 2012

True inspiration occurs when the artist explores and reflects on his own creation, thus succeeding in highlighting the depth of his artistic vision and providing an authentic perspective on the subject at hand.

Under the influence of this strong impression, Eisenstein works on the editing of his film, making great new discoveries in terms of cinematic expression in his work practice. He works on editing in a "creative ecstasy", in a fever in which he allows himself to be impregnated by the frames of the film or which he "hears and feels". Again, the discovery of the mechanism of the creative method is subsequent to the "creative ecstasy" and takes place at the moment, not at all poetic, when the director is forced to pass his finished film through the editing table to shorten it.

This is no longer a moment of inspiration, but a simple technical operation. Revisiting his work in this way, the artist appears strange due to the apparent lack of reason of combining the frames. The editing criterion seems to him outside of any normal cinematographic criterion, completely incomprehensible. Barely trying to understand his own creation, he discovers the new laws he had made. Again: "I do not seek, but find." Again an important discovery is actually a thrilling inner adventure that the artist lives. He now discovers the existence of a "fourth cinematic dimension", through what he calls "visual harmonica".

Leadership: How do you shape the creative process to achieve the perfection of a harmonious and visual work of art so that it is fueled by your inner passion and faithfully expresses your unique vision?

In the art of film editing, the discovery of a new dimension is a thrilling inner adventure for the artist. Similar to modeling neural networks, the director experiments with various structures, criteria and techniques, seeking perfection in the creative process. In his creative ecstasy, he painstakingly adjusts scenes, staging them in such a way that the end result sometimes seems irrational. However, analyzing his creation later, he discovers new laws that go beyond the simplistic technique and outline a unique work. Despite the seemingly incoherent adjustments, the process turns into a visual harmony, an artistic criterion that reveals a unique filmic dimension, enriching the inner adventure of the artist.

Therefore, in the art of film editing, the discovery of a new dimension is a thrilling inner adventure for the artist. Similar to modeling neural networks, the director experiments with various structures, criteria and techniques, seeking perfection in the creative process. In his creative ecstasy, he painstakingly adjusts scenes, staging them in such a way that the end result sometimes seems irrational. However, analyzing his creation later, he discovers new laws that go beyond the simplistic technique and outline a unique work.

Leadership: How do you manage to combine virtue and perception to reveal a work that transcends all cinematic expectations?

In the technical moments, when the artist runs his film through the editing table to shorten it, he realizes that this seemingly mindless work reveals new rules and patterns. The minute adjustments of the frames, in his creative ecstasy, reveal a visual harmony that he himself does not initially understand. The criterion of montage, although apparently outside any normal cinematic criterion, reveals a new cinematic dimension, a fourth dimension.

The creative process thus becomes a discovery of an inner adventure in which the artist discovers new laws that he has made intuitively. Barely trying to understand his own creation, the artist reveals the principles that governed his work and realizes that these discoveries were not deliberately sought, but found in the midst of creative ecstasy. This approach, characterized by Eisenstein's words "I do not seek, but find", enriches the inner adventure of the artist, bringing to light new criteria that not only merge the frames, but give them a harmonious coherence, as in a structure of a neural network.

A director must bring to light a new cinematic dimension, where the harmonious coherence of the frames becomes a testimony of his inner strength and artistic virtue.

An important discovery is a thrilling inner adventure that the artist experiences if we consider that it leads him to explore unknown aspects of his creativity and reveals to him new ways of expressing his artistic vision. Moreover, this inner journey can bring the artist a deeper understanding of his own identity and his relationship with art, significantly influencing his style and evolution as a creator.

An Important Step In The Field Of Science

Learn to make yourself the memory of an invention that bears your name in the higher realms of the divine.

A worker in Lyon, named Joseph Jacquard (1752-1834) one day found the pieces that had once made up Vaucanson's mechanized weaving warfare. Someone had brought them to the arts and crafts museum where they lay in a corner. Jacquard took them with him, repaired them, assembled them and began to make improvements. He introduced punched cards, creating "one of the most beautiful industrial mechanical inventions of the century" as he claimed. And which bears his name. Jacquard's name. In fact, they were cardboard boxes with holes, arranged in such a way that the silk print was obtained. Changing the cardboard, another model was printed, and engraved cylinders were used to print the print, set in motion by the force of the steam.

*Instead of 200 workers, who initially did this work by hand, all that was needed was one, helped by a child who, with a machine, produced 28 yards of printed paper in four or six colors, per minute. But Jacquard's idea inspired Herman Hollerith (1860 - 1929), who, in 1871, built a computer on this system. When in 1940, Norbert Wiener came to the conclusion that the fast computing machine for solving partial differential equations must be a double-digit numerical electric machine – such as the presence or absence of a hole in a card – he remembered Hollerith machines, manufactured by International Business Machines Corporation. It was an important step in the field of electronic computers.

Leadership: Can you express your attitude towards the content of the reality in which you develop, with the motivation that underlies the creative actions, through the medium of the matter from which everyone and everything is made?

A technical solution to a problem discovered through technical elements, this is what you need to become an innovator, so that you yourself become the expression of a creative will. In order to move to a high level of performance, so as to bring the essence of your existence closer to the essence of the divine, you must first prove competence, independence and consistency only by modeling the matter of which everything is made, such as space and time, within the terms with which is written your version of being a true Creator.

When we talk about the divine, we think of the few spiritual means absolutely necessary for the evolution of the world: creation, discovery, research, experiment, reflection, exploration, all starting from an attitude of objective acceptance of reality and continuing to imitate reality for the benefit of the fulfillment of the Great Work. And starting from the divine we can define ourselves as scientists through the prism of what we are able to become after challenging our ability to think, to elevate our thoughts, beliefs and actions to the rank of "great deeds."

Try to understand your purpose through the meaning you give to a single thing. This thing itself must admit the possibility of re-evaluating your existence since the divine in you resonates with the introduction of a new step in the field of science. What you add to your existence must take into account what you add to your accomplishments so that you become indispensable to the realization of a patentable invention. The Divine is the creative part of you that rises above the edges of the world, before which nothing is hidden, nothing can stand in its way.

Deity (or the divine) is revealed through the contribution you make to the development of the discipline that makes you famous.

The result of an inner calling is the revelation of a God who gave life to man to reflect and support the evolution of his science. He who has done nothing for science has done nothing for God either. Life itself is a star in the constellation of science. Without science, life could not have gained the brightness of a star.

Beings of the divine, I urge you to be like the Creator, one who never tires of expanding his field of science. The higher realms of the divine are those miracles of creation, diversified, which show the power of the true God.

An Important Step In The Field Of Science is made only by those special people, pre-chosen by God to bring the world to a high level of spirituality. And spirituality is that force of science to interpret, anticipate and predict in the field of reflection and action a new understanding of the concept of reality.

An Introduction To Adrian's Ineffable

On September 11, 2015

Exercise your power of discoverer, embracing what emerges through a unique intellectual composition.

I did not want for the world to see in me, lost in another world, perhaps parallel, by using an esoteric language, the dissolution process of the active substance called: "Philosophia tribuit sese transformandi"– the composition of thinking started from the grave minutiae of life. Uniquely, I joined the representations of a modernism of conceptual art that surpassed the moment of maximum expansion.

Often, I enter that state of boundlessness of a writer who thinks big, compared to the readers who think in bits. From here, a philosophy of communicating through creation, a style that led from introspection to the analysis of a potential autonomous instance of control over the alternations between meanings and ins and outs. But, like a firefly that glitters for a moment and then vanishes, the whole view of my ideas regarding the art of writing fades after the first roar of the excess of fiction.

Think of the endlessness of a starry sky that faces living reality in a game without rules, like a sublime manifestation of an elegant formal concept. You will glimpse those latent impulses towards an excess of gloomy reverie, an exacerbation of the leap towards uncertainty, seeing the entry parameters in the formidable evolution of direction variations. Was anyone ready to see in me what could only be seen through the tiny window of subjectivity?

Leadership: Can you give meaning to a form of authentic expression that conveys symbolic messages beyond the real content of words, opening up to causal points of experiential-empathic values?

To the hero of writer Thomas Mann, called Adrian Leverkuhn, everything had to come out from something with an imagined meaning, to be discovered from something that can be created or built on an artistic support. His letters had to be deciphered in order to be understood. The one reading them wanted to smash his head against the walls because he could understand nothing from them. It was a power of control transmitted through a form of expression that was previously loaded with hidden meanings by a wizard.

Adrian, without known how to read the notes, without digitation, mastered this extraordinary form of expression and didn't use it to create confusion in his musical compositions, but rather to discover new harmonies, new exercise of modulation, new constructions of melodic figures with an undefined rhythmic.

I was a sort of mirror of Adrian, but one that turns into an imagination of a face carried in the balance of the core experiences of meaning. I have but one quality, I thought to myself while tracing, in my serenity, a fairly undefined line. I had learned to use what others would never be able to comprehend: the knowledge of crossing an added ordeal of intersections from which descends a single path. The science of being a question to which others cannot find an answer.

The causal signs of the experiential-empathetic values that bind me so much to Adrian, reigning over the stack of abundance of expressions and terminologies encountered only in specialty literature, were given by the demands of an immediate expressiveness that betrayed the agitated and nonconformist side of my being. They could be analyzed only from the perspective of a form of perfectionism that exhausted me completely.

My inner struggles, the exacerbation of the leap into uncertainty, were actually the fine vibrations of Adrian's thoughts.

Leadership: Do you take on the responsibility of authenticity by using compositions performed after the model of a form of expression projected on the basis of a rigid scientific support?

The one who is sufficiently plunged towards the authentic that he thinks broadly of what others are only prepared to understand in bits and pieces can very easily deviate from the agreed upon rules of leadership. Leadership is based on projecting a knowledge that guides towards and extension of thinking, to win the freedom of not being limited, passing the information from a single rigid frame of reference to one of navigating towards the different.

Only those who embrace what emerges through unique intellectual compositions, even with the risk of it being a question to which others can find no answer for, will be able to add new meanings to their conceptual universe.

The artist customizes his training and development by assuming the experience of engaging into a science of the particular, seeing the creation as a divided lot of imaginative elements. This customization presents a connection with exercising his power of discoverer through the fact that he feels attracted to an experience based primarily on a variety of themes and unfamiliar approaches.

Thus, you can give a new direction to your actions and especially to your own self – which struggles to carry out its projection in a universe of those known and unknown, of the possibilities of reinvention through the accumulation of imagined meanings attributed to assimilated notions.

A solid scientific support in literary art is a case of self-abandonment in a space full of emotional, intellectual and spiritual burden, tangent to the demands of an immediate expressiveness that does not allow you to create neutral characters, only ones with a special destiny.

The whole of the artist who is testing his scientific competence and literary skills resides in the power of the imaginary to reconstitute the feelings of a self-conscious mind from fragmented pieces of partial information. These come in interaction with the particular of an exaggerated, yet shiny subjectivism, through the impressive impulsive force of the desire to amaze in any form.

In this case leadership determines its identification address from two distinct perspectives: one of totality that succeeds chaos and the other of the interconnections between the aspects of novelty you paint relative to the trends of manifesting and correcting misunderstandings.

To create the premises of a development whose effect is that of rendering a form of expression through creation, with the risk of your authority in terms of art being challenged, means to represent "totality" on a value plan by extending those interconnections.

And if you want to assume your authenticity by using compositions made after the model of a form of expression projected on the basis of a rigid scientific support, all these premises will materialize harder or will be proven false.

Leadership is what you bring out through authentic expression, in accordance with the model experiences of a mind that, thinking of oneself, rethinks the entire world.

An Introduction To Adrian's Ineffable highlights that category of individuals that experience an exacerbation of a plunge towards uncertainty, a problem specific to all artists who want to evolve through the expansion of knowledge – starting from a subjective context or from findings that are difficult to validate, but from which they manage to produce something of value.

An Outsider Of The World Fitted Into The Normal-Mode Program

On March 10, 2014

Trigger the spark of inspiration that gives uniqueness to your space of intellectual excellency, cancelling the "programming" that's been created by the interaction between the meanings and denotations of unanimously accepted knowledge.

What characterized the meaning of my knowledge's evolution, corresponding to different access levels to the quinta essentia underlying the construction of the Great Work, was that fervid lucidity that aimed to confront the inertia of origin: "It Can't Be Done." Through a reinvention of pure universal language of knowledge. Of the creative act, rid of the utopian ballast. Of making. It was that lucidity that turns incertitude into a shapeless scientific creationism, under the form of a superior intellectualism that grinds ideas endlessly, revaluing the instances of a judgement long passed.

At any cost, I wanted to profit from the knowledge of penetrating the meanings beyond the meanings of meanings, at any cost. Which revealed themselves through a succession of elementary operations, performed with help from very abstract instructions, in a simple programming language aimed at interaction and cooperation between symbols, metaphors, meanings, information and significations.

Intellectual development depends on the ability to intercept and interpret random signals from the superconscious, transforming them into deep meanings.

Prometheus brought "fire" to mankind, but because of disobedience and violation of orders, he was severely punished by Zeus, chained to a rock on a barren earth, visited daily by a giant eagle which devoured his liver. By chance, however, Heracles passed by on his way to the Garden of Hesperides. He killed the eagle with one of his poisoned arrows, freeing Prometheus. What a splendid allegory !

Particularly, I felt that my mind was made up of an elastic bark, subject to reciprocating up and down movements, which under the continuous action of an external electric field produced a pulse strong enough to trigger the spark of inspiration that gave uniqueness to my space of intellectual excellency.

Clearly, the factors that triggered a disposition favorable to thought that carried on the intercepting of "Encoder" type signals, randomly transmitted by the superconscious, resulted in the activation and proliferation of meanings and subtexts necessary to the development of my scientific creation.

Leadership: Can you expand your understanding of a reality illustrating an experimental circumstance of using the effects of science as an expression of the appropriation of a new world view?

Even if your progress as an "actor" on the stage of great knowledge, consumer of informational and innovational fuels, is not immediately felt on the line of concerns of self-realization, it exists in the depths on your own consciousness that, never asleep, fiercely shouts: "Mold ! Finish ! Combine the parts of various constructions of knowledge ! Complete the work you want to Like ! "

One of the experimental circumstances of using the effects of science as an expression of the appropriation of a new world view is represented by the possibility of creating an event in your own life experience that has awakened some feelings through the perspective of what it can produce at the level of a change of mentality.

Leadership approaches, related to the criteria of optimizing modern science, which gathers and processes knowledge vital to organizations, are the result of an "illumination" born from the being's core. As a clarification of the terms of a well-defined partnership, with the ever-growing number of observations that attest the unprecedented manipulation of those meanings hiding behind those experiences that activate the imagination, acceptable as an exercise in free thought.

One of the new concepts of the world can be defined as follows: "A fundamental orientation of the heart can be expressed in the form of a narrative if all of your knowledge is included in the model of a hero who triumphs and takes over the symbol of Life."

Leadership: Do you lack the capacity of placing the battle with science into the unlimited space of freedom of thought, to which is assigned a piece of a puzzle that you have to decipher?

The ability of placing the battle with science in the unlimited space of three thought is synonymous with consciousness of wealth, because it brings along with it, the freedom to create, by giving imagination free rein, any type of content that adds value to leadership.

Always within the illustrious gallery of the acceptability of contexts of utilizing material from which science is made out of, from beyond the unanimously accepted boundaries of leadership, can a man with high ideals thrive, an outsider of the world fitted into the program that operates in "Normal Mode" – a program that amplifies routine in relation to science.

And not only such a man will be able to reveal or activate the transforming possibilities of a science overlooked even by the most daring of explorers of new shores of knowledge, even by natures most imaginative and creative.

A piece of a puzzle that you need to decipher can be a sensible presentation of a particular world, a permanent desire for the revelation of a truth, the reflection of a lesson of life, an experimental circumstance to use a personalized creation, or the use of a scenario that offers an unprecedented picture of the surrounding reality.

Science is what adds to your story inspired by the experience of life, but which nominates you as the result of a puzzle that composes the personality of a character not suddenly, but gradually in different contexts, and each time in another form.

An Outsider Of The World Fitted Into The Normal-Mode Program represents that leader who has the willingness to find creative alternatives, without situating leadership outside of an unanimously accepted science.

An unanimously accepted science is like the solving of a jigsaw puzzle that you return to without wanting, trying to put a new piece in place every time.

An Unsolved Mystery

On December 15, 2008

What we do and what we became depends in a big way on the things or events which keep us alert.

- There are some things happening, sir, which I don't understand.

- Stuff? What kind of things?

- You will believe I'm crazy, sir... You will say that it's nothing... But there has to be an explanation, sir. Has to ! Because it has nonsense...

- Hey, man, tell me what it is. Do not talk in charades ! unequivocal said Detective Poirot.

Rogers swallowed again:

- There is a lot of blood sir. All over the place is blood. And there is no corpse.

- Yes, this is surprising. Actually, I have never seen something like this before.

- And, sir, there is a thing that bothers me.

- What?

- The door was locked by the inside. How could somebody lock himself inside, commit that horrible murder and then vanish like this, so simple? There has to be an explanation.

Leadership: Is the vision that detaches itself from the attempt to perceive a whole of curiosity that of a creator who has the duty to boost new values?

Have you figured out who the murderer is?

I'm sure you didn't figure it out who is the murderer, isn't it? Well, you couldn't. First, because I didn't say all the data of the problem, second, I didn't offer concrete information about the characters in this scenario. But you admit I raised your curiosity a little bit? You would have wanted to hear the possible explanation about the murder, isn't it? You would have wanted to solve this mystery apparently hard to elucidate, isn't it?

We all have different rules and standards that manage what we feel about the things that are happening in our lives. And in the end, what we do and what we became depends in a big way on the things or events which keep us in shape, which keeps our interest high and we can't break-up. It's like a mystery that needs to be solved. It's like a police novel written by Agatha Christie, once you start reading it, you can't let it down. But what is this "something"? What gives strength to all of our actions, and we cannot get rid of him until the final outcome?

What can bring you closer to the strongest motives of motivation, putting yourself in new situations and giving you some strong sensations is the driving force of thinking that inspires you by putting the possibility of answering a particular search in relatively doubtful area.

The presence of such thinking is the key to a whole that fascinates you terribly and you consume it altogether, a whole that completes your existence and you cannot miss it, a whole that needs to be maintained. A whole that forms the message: "You can light the light of truth in darkness."

The measure of your value as a facilitator of a new, unusual reflection in the field of science, unceasingly recomposes the certainty of belonging to a mystery, impossible to unleash, like all mysteries, but whose "eternity" can be felt in a moment. The value of man is generated by what happens to him when he is motivated to be more and more curious.

Leadership: Can you make certain of what you derive from the clues of a research topic, so that you can progress to the level of performance you need to run all the news about psychology of rule violations?

Clearly, motivation is like a very efficient and useful "drug" which reduces the stress levels for those with limited resources. Motivation stands you up when you feel that you lose your balance. Motivation can offer a step forward towards excellence by helping you find the best model of leadership for yourself, smoothing your way towards understanding and the development of your own potential.

Think well what kind of leader you want to become, because only motivation can set your path, by encouraging you, creating a solid foundation, emotional and professional - for your potential. The process of cultivating your leadership model begins with ensuring your own resources to solve the enigmas that hide in each corner around you.

The only rules you need to take into account are those imposed by yourself that you have to break by assimilating a more profound perspective on reality. At the same time, they can be violated through a process of re-interpreting things and creating a tension in consciousness that increases the desire to sense the meaning of a new understanding of the source that provides the most comprehensive information.

Leadership: Do you respond positively to any stimulus that can contribute to your own training by appealing to a form of challenge that helps you immortalize every moment of an experience full of teachings?

Just as the pencil is for writing, just as the shoe is for wearing, just as the car is for driving, even so motivation is for people who constantly improve their skills. Motivation helps you answer positively to any stimulus that can contribute to your own training, which gives you that strong impulse to focus more on positive results, bringing you an extra value to your experience.

Motivated people are those who manifest a great passion for their work. They love so much their work that they always stay after the program to finnish their job. Motivation people keeps them in shape and never tires them. There is nothing more pleasant than meeting this kind of people who love their job, and they are dedicated with passion and desire. This is why I say: Bless is the man who has found his "mystery".

As a leader, your duty is to encourage people's motivation by maintaining a climate of mystery. Motivate them to take action and guide them in obtaining good results. So, you have to start by teaching people to be aware of the good things and liberty of expression, so that they will never feel threatened or intimidated. If you want to get closer to people and if they want to achieve exceptional results, do not minimize their merits. Encourage them to come with their own solutions and praise them any time they deserve it.

You will be able to reach the highest levels of development only if others around you will become better and more productive. You must love what you do, for people in their turn, to love you and to be willing to make more progress. Motivation is the binder that unites your perfection of theirs.

Leadership is like an enigma: no matter much you try to find a solution to the emergence of an unpredictable situation, you must be able to assume the consequences of the misinterpretation of reality on which truth relies.

An unresolved mystery is a challenge that cannot be ignored, it can make the mind shudder and rise above the momentary limitations of a shallow perspective on things. The clarity that a leader demonstrates is not related to the understanding of the underlying reason for elucidating complex issues, but to the explanation he gives to key points of problem-oriented thinking such as analysis, synthesis, imagination, comparison, anticipation, materialization, generalization or abstraction.

Analysis Of The Concept Of Beauty

On February 13, 2013

Develop your sensitivity to what the orientation of your visual direction shows, reacting more intensely to the stimuli of "raising to another level" the representation of an entity of mutual admiration.

- Albrecht Durer was not only a great painter, but also a passionate geometer. We could say that he was a born mathematician, because in the books he wrote, although they were addressed to young painters, there are important problems related to the theory of proportions, the golden section, conic sections, regular or semi-regular polyhedra, of angle trisection and cube duplication, and even some anticipations of analytic geometry. These problems aroused the admiration of Galileo and Kepler.

The contact with Italy, the evolution of studies on proportions, the deep reflection on the problems of art took Albrecht Durer to where the thinking of Italian theoreticians had not even deviated – to the analysis of the concept of beauty, to the debate of its essence and knowability. The Italians did not question whether beauty could be defined. But Albrecht Durer was convinced that one could objectively state what is beautiful and establish the aesthetic laws of that single, guiding ideal. Perhaps only Leonardo intuited, which is the point of pointing out that there is a variety of beauties and different aesthetic appreciations.

- That's right. I know that Leonardo expressed himself in the following way: "Beautiful faces are different, as are different preferences for beauty."

- I am thinking of the impression that Leonardo da Vinci made on Durer. Because he saw him. Perhaps you even heard him say those words, left in Chapter VII, entitled "On Perspective" of the Treatise on Painting: "Mathematics is necessary for the painter, belonging to his art. You must first study the science, then the practice of this science will come. Perspective is the guide and the door, without it nothing good can be done in painting".

Leadership: Do you have the ability to memorize and represent expressively and sustainably the events you experienced, on the special line of an art that corresponds scientifically to the spiritual needs of the creators?

- I am almost sure of it, shows Durer's reply in the preface to his first book that he wrote after returning from Italy, some guidelines for measuring with the compass and ruler: "Although the skill requires only a free hand, the work executed in this case is unconscious, and done only according to fancy. Looking at this work, understanding painters and true artists must laugh at the blindness of those executors, for nothing appears more distasteful to true understanding than falsehood in painting, even if it was painted with sufficient diligence. The fact that such painters find pleasure in their error comes from the fact that they have not learned the art of measurement, without which one cannot exist and cannot be a true craftsman."

- Albrecht Durer also demonstrated his love or perhaps cult for geometry through his copper engraving entitled "Melancholia I", which he executed in 1514 after returning from his second trip to Italy and apparently under the impression of the pain his mother's death caused him. In this engraving, which has been commented on many times and in various ways, Melancholia took the form of geometry, being winged and holding a compass. She is worried. What is he thinking about? Couldn't he establish the law that links beauty to mathematics? At her feet is a sphere, to her right a huge dodecahedron and above her head, on a wall, a magic square of the fourth order can be seen, which shows that in addition to problems of pure geometry, Durer was also more interested in this not an easy problem in number theory. While playing with this square, whose sum of digits is 34, I wondered if Durer did not choose this number as the constant of his square, because that year he was just 43 years old?

- This may be a mere coincidence, but it is not a mere coincidence that you noticed this magic square. I think it can be a very attractive topic for our next meeting. Don't you agree?

In leadership, two spiritual needs specific to creators can be identified: the need to connect science with art, and the need to transform the data of reality in order to build an image that validates you as "a fragment of something even bigger".

The Analysis Of The Concept Of Beauty is always done only by an artist who makes good abstract art, trying to express reality through images that use loose associations with other fields, such as mathematics, optics or physics. Here the artist can include different degrees of symbolization, suggesting the sense of "measure" through the very form of an objective correlative.

There is a sensitivity in art, due primarily to the mutual admiration between artists from different fields who managed to fuse different sciences together, expressing them symbolically in different images meant to link them to the Great Science. For this they developed their sensitivity to what the orientation of their visual direction showed.

For example, in order to raise to another level, the representation of an entity of mutual admiration, Albrecht Durer mirrored his mastery by taking various ideas from the works of Leonardo da Vinci in his own Opera.

Self-Analysis

On April 05, 2009

Open the door to the true self, rising to the height of what your conscience dictates.

- Who are you? the great Bill Parrish, founder and president of Parrish Communications Corporation, asked the stranger staying at his home.

- Think of millenniums multiplied by eons, at an infinite scale. That is how much my existence measures, but only recently your business has aroused my interest ! The stranger quietly answered.

- What do you want from me? Why don't you let me live my life the way I want to, as long as I still have to live?

You are the chosen one, Bill... I want you to show me the world, to be my guide. Instead, you will get time. Minutes, days, weeks. I will not go into details. It matters only to keep my interest awake.

Leadership: Does refusing to sacrifice your own expectations and interests denote your vision for years to come, especially if you acknowledge your weakness in the face of fatality, in the face of a will that transcends you and in front of which you look helpless, overwhelmed, confused?

If you saw the movie "Meet Joe Black (1998)", you probably remember the influence that the Prince of Darkness had on Bill Parrish. The normal course of Bill's life was affected to such an extent, that he endangered his status, function, image, credibility, as well as his relationships with the people around him. Every step he made, every thought that his mind set free, every moment that he lived was an endeavor taken up beyond his own character. He was totally changed. He started to become ineffective in many of his actions – testimonies of the thoughts and feelings of insecurity that possessed him.

Joe Black's influence on Bill resembled a faceless beast which forwarded inexorably to the frail territory of his conscience, which dictated his behavior, causing him to hide in himself and not disclose to anyone what he was feeling. A nightmare becomes a cruel reality. But no one can guess how many spiritual efforts Bill was making in every moment spent around Joe Black. Anxiety had taken hold of him, being dominated exclusively by his inner world, and less by the important decisions to be taken. He struggled in vain to return quickly to his normal pace, everything seemed hopeless.

Leadership: Can the presence of a force that stands out in the wrong place add organization to your bold side, or does it give you a skeptical perspective on the life you will face next?

Alternations of Bill's thoughts and moods represent a wonderful example of psychological self-analysis, by which you can get surprised by the many nuances of human feelings that arise especially in extreme situations. His whole being was completely changed, under Joe Black's careful and strict control.

But at some point, Bill, contrary to Joe Black's expectations, took attitude and acted only by his own will, leaving aside any fears and insecurities. He put the foot down and told Joe: "I don't care what you want ! "

And I think you would do the same. For no matter how great the influence of others, your conscience can't operate on "automatic pilot". Your self knows every corner of your consciousness and opposes all forms of exploitation, all harmful foreign influences. Does your conscience work on "automatic pilot"?

If you want your leadership to preserve its value, then you must continue the long battle to create an entrenchment or an effective antidote against any type of poison. That ruthless, persistent force of the influence that others have on you is precisely the element that can poison your inner structure. If you fail to defend your reserve of moral health and the quality of your ethical values by opposing any harmful ideas, mentalities and practices, you will always depend on others. Do you want to be a prisoner of the influence of others, a robot that executes orders or a free man?

Leadership is the result of a will that stems from an agreement, prior to the proclamation of your choice as a messenger of destiny, between an obscure force that guides you in life and that ostentatious display of your pride in not being in line with the world.

The Self-Analysis is the first step towards the proper functioning of your leadership. It is the most important thing that you must consider if you want to keep your leadership position. Just as a director tries to transform each frame into a perfect picture, you must just as well try to turn your conscience into a tower of support for your entire inner spectrum.

The Self-Analysis is synonymous with your self-analysis, which is very important for a leader who tends if not to perfection, at least not to make mistakes. Someone said that only God is perfect, and compared to Him, we are all more or less imperfect. By this self-analysis (including our own capability), we must come to the conclusion that we don't make mistakes, that we didn't fell under harmful influences of those who, willfully or not, want to deflect us from our path – especially of those who offer "rewards" in one way or another, making a kind of barter with your conscience, or who consider that your conscience is the object of a contract of sale.

And Now, Say Goodbye To Me !

Form a true picture of the reality that chains you by evaluating your character to the extent that your negative "qualities" deceive you.

- Enough ! – Mercedes said – enough, Edmond ! Be sure that the one who could recognize you, the only one in the world, she could also understand you. But Edmond, the woman who knew how to recognize you, the one who could understand you, this woman, even if you met her on the way and broke her like a piece of glass, she had to admire you ! As the gap between me and the past grew as a chasm, and there is a chasm between you and other people, and the worst torment for me, I tell you, is to make a comparison. For there is nothing in the world as valuable as you, nothing resembles you.

And now, say goodbye to me, Edmond, and let us break up.

- Before I leave you, tell me what you want, Mercedes? – asked Monte Cristo.

- I do not need anything. I live between two tombs: one belongs to Edmond Dantes, dead for so long. I loved him. But I betrayed him, as all weak, envious and pretentious people do. The word does not fit on my lips, but the heart still remembers for nothing in the world I would lose this memory of my heart. The other is the tomb of the man Edmond Dantes killed. I approve of the killing, but I have to pray for the dead.

You know, Edmond, I do not think anymore. I have no choice other than to not make any other decision. God has shaken me so much in his storms that I have lost my will. I feel in his hands like a bird in the claws of an eagle. If I live, it means He does not want me to die, but is rather giving me the opportunity to repent. If He sends me help, it means that He shall will it and I will receive them. Goodbye, I ask for forgiveness, even if forgiveness will never be complete, because I can never forgive the deeds that I am guilty of ! *

Leadership: Is the attitude to what you have done through your nature to be modeled in the form of the moral that is drawn from the outcome of your life?

A turn in your life, summing up all the works done by your own will, can occur when you come to perceive and acknowledge in yourself the image of an unforgivable guilt. Resistance to what is essential in your being, consisting in overcoming the limits of everything that is rational, natural, and common sense, is shaken under accusation in a process of memory that evokes the reality of the soul in the course of certain previous experiences.

A lawyer knows exactly what to say and how to say it so that the balance tilts in favor of the cause he defends for his client. However, in order to clarify the fact that the extent of the theme and the diversity of the established objectives are not in accordance with the law, he finds himself having to use many various tricks to win the trial.

In the great journey of life, man can be like a lawyer who, in an attempt to better manage his relationships, feels constantly constrained to defend the cause of his own vicious and fatalist nature. Basically, he puts himself in the face of direct decisions that have a direct impact on his own subjectivity, then on his own dignity expressed by the following recurring saying: "I am a burden of guilt."

What can push a man on the right path is a profound assumption of reality that produces overwhelming effects on what he is able to become when he discovers about himself what he did not know before.

Naturally, man questions himself, corrects himself by the intuition of the process of achieving arguments that support his moral weight. He often preserves his candor and innocence by observing and directly or indirectly understanding the effects of certain actions on his life. He swears that he will be another man from now on. Could this be an attenuating circumstance? In any case, he will always have other spare apologies.

That's right, man always avoids blame. And when a man avoids blame, it means that he either feels guilty, or is lying to himself. Of course, that the lie, as well as the guilt that man experiences with intensity, that he feels with all the power of consciousness, that he takes with him, while attempting a last act of escape in the face of reality, cannot be only the result of a rebellion against the demands of life. When you feel guilty about a deed that lying cannot cover, so when lying becomes a common practice, then it is a personality disorder that causes very intense moods, instability in relationships and creating a black and white worldview.

Leadership is the painful truth that you find out about yourself and that you prefer instead of a beautiful lie that currently gives you a quality roof.

And Now, Say Goodbye To Me is a testimony of the suffering suffered by man because of an inexcusable mistake. You cannot avoid the blame indefinitely without bearing the consequences of the truth.

If you are interested in forming a true picture of the reality that chains you, then evaluate your character insofar as your own negative "qualities" deceive you. Be honest and give yourself the verdict by answering the following questions:

How do you perceive yourself by avoiding the gravity of a situation or a deed? Are you willing to accept the extreme anxiety of situations where the outcome can be difficult or embarrassing?

Another Determinant Of Leadership

On February 25, 2019

Express your thoughts in terms of images to highlight the connection between what "keeps you" inside and what is imposed for outside evaluation.

I discovered my passion for writing the same way that the painter creates his masterpieces: trying to find a way to communicate a vision and share it to a large audience. Undoubtedly, I realized that I was "just an ordinary guy with nothing to lose", the prisoner of a bohemian destiny, but obsessed with the idea of a great destiny.

Of course, my passion did not lack that vibration of consciousness that led me to meet the pillar of subjective experience, it did not lack the look of a loving book of wisdom, but there seemed to be some space between the virtue of thinking through words and weakness to have everything marked by understanding.

That is why there was an urgent need to articulate a superior and sensitive quality at the same time: the power of rendering what I felt, and with equal mastery, to enter into an occult reality to which I would give powerful artistic connotations, then turn it into a masterpiece of creative thinking, the key to universal knowledge.

Authentic art is a continuous search for truth, one that transcends simple reason, exercising the expressive autonomy to shape the message conveyed according to internal and external realities.

Such a quality could be a manifestation of conscience, sincerity and intellectual honesty, a continuous confession to express uncertainty but also astonishment. Regarding what I tended to portray, aware of the expressive autonomy of the formal means of building the message, I was still undecided on what model I should choose.

I myself could've been the center of all the creation that I was going to use as an essential argument in defining a new direction of study of the literary visual – passed through the imaginary of a complex mind. In this case, most likely, readers could have assessed me as a prisoner of a special destiny, a Hamlet with a sword in his hand looking for a truth that transcends human reason.

Another vision of the same painting suggested by an artist is the chance of an experience of alterity that makes you feel fabulous in a metaphysics of revelation about how man and his reality can be improved.

To be more than I was, taking care of thought and thus bringing it to its essence, I had to show my readiness to meet the demands of the transparency of a journey in time, on the pages of an uplifting book. Nothing is more absurd than admitting yourself defeated by the space of a world that sinks, or to win the victory of the possibility of saving a lost world.

Experimentally, if I were to integrate myself into Umberto Eco's novel "The Name of the Rose", I would probably find myself in Adso of Melk's character, at the end of 1327, who testified at one point:

"I realized with time that what seemed to be uncertainty was instead only curiosity, which I thought was rather a propensity of the greedy soul, thinking that the thoughtful soul should not feed on such a thing, feeding only with truth, which (I thought) is known from the very beginning."

The artist in me still wonders with uncertainty: how can I extend the discussion of art, so that the text gets valences of metaphor and visionary code, but without getting tired of the character captured with sincerity in my own reality – whose value could remain valid over the ages?

Leadership: Can you expand your vision of the feelings and reason that underlie your performance and evolution, by virtue of an aesthetic consciousness that is your own research object?

Everything I learned to show through words could not stop here, everything I have experienced, everything I have discovered, everything I have gained in time, so that the diversity of forms of expression from art would be revealing in what regards the world of ideas. Undoubtedly, I had to place my art on the think line of convictions that want to have an echo in the light of eternity.

The explanation is simple: any conversation can facilitate access to a new way of communicating the message that would trigger emotions which at the same time would be the key word of reasoning in picking the meaning given to novelty with a potential of appreciating the distance between text and illustration.

An aesthetic consciousness is highlighted by the power of creation, the foundation of which is the relationship between you and the model you choose to represent you in the plan of idealizing a concrete situation of applying inspirational theories. It becomes an object of research for the personal dimension when it presents itself as a process of reflection on the reality set in the service of the realization of a new form of visual art.

At the same time, I am tempted to conclude that an aesthetic consciousness is a touch of lucidity applied to the affectivity I impress upon people, objects and deeds, with a personal note, according to a living, seductive chromatic and symbolism, so that the feeling of floating in an ocean of feelings, in a dream-filled universe is produced.

Leadership: Are you trying to create a crescendo of the experience of being in a relationship with a character that is completely different from you, but close to that autonomy of art to produce a wider alternative knowledge?

Viewed from a different angle, the inspiration I always cling to in order to rebuild a profile of perfection with representation before the beauty of a figure in its entirety is a form of practicing my patience while waiting for a response to the call to create another reality. It is a form of putting on paper, cloth, or any kind of material, thoughts, experiences, taking on moments of great coincidence between two worlds: that of the painter and the writer, the author's perspective and the convincing and sensitive approach of the character with whom he identifies.

Then follows a small sketch of the drawing designed to amplify through a fascinating symbolism the vision of an exit from real time and space: life and death. Two personalities conclude their conversation through an extremely suggestive formula: art is the recording of the self-revelation of God to man.

"We no longer have the wisdom of the ancients, the time of the giants has ended", said

Master Nicola of Morimondo.

"We are dwarves, but dwarves who sit on the shoulders of those giants, and in our nothingness we sometimes succeed in seeing further than them on the horizon", spoke the well-learned Franciscan monk Guglielmo da Baskerville. (The Name of the Rose)

Having an aesthetic consciousness means proving an unprecedented vision of art by placing thoughts and revelations about yourself in completing a painting in which the colors are not placed according to the natural laws of everyday life. But they follow the law of the anti-natural in an abstract space in which analogies flourish and cross the most varied directions of the perfecting of the spirit, of the fruits of the spirit of God.

The starting point of the highest knowledge is reflected by the ability to identify yourself so sublimely with the emotions and thoughts of a character from an impressive book, to put yourself fully in his skin, giving him more importance than you give to yourself.

Another Determinant Of Leadership is the "comparison" factor between you and the model you choose to represent you in terms of idealizing a concrete situation of applying inspirational theories.

You will more easily be able to think up a new image of yourself if you become inspired by the world of those who have crossed life's path before you, going from sin to holiness, from ignorance to knowledge, from experience to wisdom.

Leadership is the image with which you present yourself before a world that you had the opportunity to know from up-close, but also from far away, from personal experience and especially from the wisdom of the ancients.

The Antichrist

On December 31, 2023

Eyes are a window to knowledge, but many prefer to look in the dark.

God gave us eyes to see the light of his teachings, but many use them to walk in darkness. I drew this conclusion after a short conversation with a librarian from a university in Iasi. Surprised, I noticed how such a simple man, free to express his thoughts, could speak some chosen truths. And she told me, taking note, in a fit of sincerity:

"Every year, thousands of books are scrapped, for waste paper, and no one saves them. The teachers are no longer teachers, they are just gravediggers, because they are the ones who approved everything. What did these teachers learn from? What respect do they have for the teaching received from others?"

Another day, I went back to the library. Under a desk was a stack of older, dusty books, passed as if through the ranks of a forgotten time, representing a series of psychology volumes from the '67s. I was allowed to flip through one of the volumes, and among the well-written lines, like fragments of ancient stories that outline mysterious images in the readers' minds, I encountered a strange connection with an old Catholic church of which nothing but ruins remained.

Instantly, I remembered the forgotten words from the novel "The Name of the Rose":

"This inability of mine to see aright is perhaps the effect of the shadow which the great approaching darkness casts over the gray world. The more I read my own story here, the less I succeed in discerning whether there is any warp in it which goes beyond the natural course of events and the times which enclose it. And it is a difficult thing for me not to know whether the letter which I have written contains in it some hidden meaning, or whether it has more than one, and many , or none."

Leadership: Can the memories that inspire you form echoes of past events, through the filter of an inner transfiguration that gives new life to your knowledge experiences?

I reread those few lines from the dusty volume for a good few minutes, hoping to find a deeper understanding in them. Moreover, I reflected on the words creating meanings that, disregarding the flow of time, immediately made their way into my heart, just as colors make their way into a painter's palette, only much more subtly. One of the lady librarians told me that those old volumes were put aside to be sent for scrap, and because they had the library stamp they could not be loaned to anyone.

So I immediately wrote a message to a good friend of mine, a highly influential university professor, whose office I don't think was too far from the library premises. That's all I wrote: "don't let the books get lost, lend them to me so I can photocopy them with my phone."

I wrote several messages to my good friend, the great university professor. He has read the messages, but he has not replied to me either so far. The only sign from him after a few weeks was a pile of pictures taken on a wonderful holiday abroad at a marathon in Greece. As for the old volumes, the only silent witnesses of the past, they have almost certainly been scrapped, and no trace of them remains. Nothing was saved.

Just the memory of those vivid, conquering lines, written in red ink, amounting to a whole page, still warms my memory. How carefully they were written, with soul and from the heart! I suppose that this detail is worthy of the character William of Baskerville who, with his last strength, managed to save some old manuscripts from the Benedictine monastery, before the fire engulfed it entirely. I, however, did not manage to save anything.

Leadership: Can you watch the change pass before you, without being put in the position of witnessing the events that can hurt your hopes?

So, I turned to someone who had the power to save thousands of pages full of knowledge, but as the hero of Umberto Eco also stated: "The last efforts did not help anything. How could a wise man communicate his knowledge, if he lacks the proof of his knowledge? Perhaps the manuscripts were condemned by their own refusal to be known, by the secret they kept? Of one thing I am certain: the antichrist is indeed drawing near, for no wisdom is left to him in the way."

The darkness of ignorance spreads over the world, like a veil of the devil covering all living things. Especially knowledge is lost just like a light that goes out, like a flower that withers. And through their ignorance, the artisans of darkness keep the world in darkness by refusing to save knowledge, the same mediocre individuals who have learned nothing from books, and for whom books are of no use. Indeed, they have the power and authority to save much knowledge, but instead they let it all die. What is happening today, the scrapping of books without first being saved on the Internet, is similar to the burning of thousands of manuscripts during the Inquisition (1490-1500). The intelligent people of the past had something to say, and the system shut them up.

Those who defend science are the guardians of knowledge, while the others call themselves gravediggers of pure teachings, their ignorance revealing their easy nature, their superficial mentality, their great indifference. They are the creators of oblivion, not of rebirth. They are the evil in this world, the same inquisitor-clad soul from the past that still lingers.

Leadership: Can your thoughts form the whole of a universe out of torn pieces, seeing with the mind's eye the things that others do not?

The hand of God creates, does not hide, and does not throw anything into oblivion. The fragments of thoughts from that outdated volume, left in my memory like puzzles, echoes of some ancient social morals, until they form the whole, still arouse my questions and curiosities, bearing in mind the events of the time. Some of the great works of humanity were saved, most of them perished. And trying to piece together the words from that page, still in my memory, with eyes that see things that others don't, I find myself again in the novel "The Name of the Rose":

"There were few traces left of the church portal, gnawed by mold, even though so many decades had passed. Rummaging through the remains, I sometimes found pieces of parchment, fallen from the scriptorium and the library, surviving like treasures buried in the ground. I began to collect them, as if I had to put the pages of a book back together.

Along a piece of the wall I found a cupboard, still standing amazingly upright against the wall, escaped from the fire, I don't know how, pierced by water and insects. There were still some sheets in it. Others, torn, I found rummaging through the ruins below. It was a poor harvest, but I spent a whole day collecting it, as if I should have received an announcement from those "disiecta membra" of the library. Some pieces of parchment were discolored, others allowed the shadow of a face to shine through, sometimes the ghost of a word or several. Sometimes I found sheets on which whole sentences could be read, more easily I found links still untouched, protected by others that had had metal flaps. Bookworms, still looking healthy on the outside, but devoured on the inside; and yet, sometimes, half a page had fallen off, one could see an incipit, a title..."

Leadership: Can the discernment you exercise towards some memorable details protect a creation of great spiritual value, so that what you feel in your soul is not lost in oblivion?

God is what remains in the soul, not what perishes in oblivion. Few, as many as they were, those words so deeply rooted in my memory sparked the need to write this article. They planted understanding, sprouting thoughts and feelings like unseen flowers, but full of the essence of life. In their light, I have contemplated the essence of my existence, and what I have written here are like the stars in the night sky. They were guides, guiding me through the darkness of uncertainty and providing a beacon in my march through the maze of reality. Or maybe my words are a mirror of Umberto Eco's story, which contains a hidden meaning at the end:

"I collected all the remains that could be found and filled two traveling bags with them, discarding such things as I needed to save that wretched treasure. All the fragments, sentences and unfinished phrases, I will know how to put them together, outline them in a different way, so that I can create something great from their littleness.

Along the way back and then to Melk, I spent many, many hours trying to decipher those vestiges. I often recognized, by a word or by a lingering image, which work it was. When I afterwards found other copies of those books, I studied them with love, as if fate had left me that legacy, as if the discovery of the destroyed copy had been an unmistakable sign from heaven. which said "Toile et Lege". At the end of my patient recovery, a small library appeared in my mind, a sign of the big one, which had disappeared, a library made of pieces, quotes, unfinished sentences, torn books.

These unfinished pages have accompanied me all the life I have left to live since then, I have studied them like an oracle, and it even seems to me that everything I wrote then on these pages, which you are reading , unknown reader, is nothing but a mixture, "a carme a figura", that is, an endless acrostic that says and repeats nothing but what those fragments whispered to me. And I don't know if until now I spoke about them, or they spoke through my mouth..."

The divine vision is acquired in the light of a hidden wealth, with the help of the thought of saving knowledge as a great creation, receiving the echo of an image left in the memory.

The Antichrist is a man totally devoid of knowledge, who cannot recognize a fortune in the subtle representation of some works, being blinded by the illusion of a claimed omniscience. He only follows the darkness that shows him the way, as a kind of compass in his life. Instead of orienting himself by the light and clarity of the teachings, he chooses to walk in the direction of darkness, guided by obscurity and the unknown. Thus, the darkness becomes for him a guide, a source of guidance instead of the light of the divine.

In this case, it is enough to leave the thought of saving knowledge, to see everything dissipate like sand in the wind.

Any Creation Can Only Be Made Starting From The Initial Matter

On January 03, 2015

Becoming aware of an image can be likened to the discovery of a great fact, inviting you to see beyond the obvious, culminating in an achievement that exceeds all expectations.

- This conception of the priests of Ptah, according to which the god, about whom it is not known how he came into the world, seems to have created the gods by word, after having conceived them by intelligence, is implausible, absurd, it is only an exercise of the spirit, a dance step of thought, an acrobat's pirouette.

- I listen to you, Ibebi told him then. Tell me why!

- It is very true that the living being that has not received a name is, compared to others, nothing, it does not exist. If the term man had existed only to designate our species, if it had not been given a name, which in a way became your very substance, it would pass among us like a shadow. No one could shout at you, and if someone were to address you in the street by shouting in some way, you would have no reason to turn your head, to approach him, because the shout could be addressed to everyone and no one. Through your name, Ibebi, and through my name, Cheops, we truly exist, we have a being that all can look upon.

If I hear this name that is mine, I come to the one who called me. If I'm talking to you and I want to tell you something about someone I know, how would you know who it is if I can't name the person with a name that would identify him among other people alive? Likewise, when I turn to these two statues, I say that one represents an ibis, the other a baboon, for I was told so, for I saw them living in the valley, because they were named to me, and I also know that both the one and the other are the symbols of Thoth, that the god manifests himself through one or the other of these animals, and you also know that, and that is why we understand each other.

Leadership: In terms of the subjective interpretation of visuals, have you ever wondered how the reality around you could be perceived through the lens of image and form to highlight your sense of self and vision?

But if the raw matter were placed before me, the still-form stone in which the sculptor fashioned these two forms, what could I say about them, except that it is stone or wood or clay? But nothing could permit me to call the one an ibis and the other a baboon, unless we both agreed that each represented one of these animals, even if they did not have their shape. But if a third comes, who has not heard of our agreement, he will see only rough stones. Because the chisel of the sculptor has given them this form existing in nature, I know that it is one or other of these animals, and because I have been told that the god manifests in them, I can say that they are Thoth.

Thus the creator god, by the magic of the word, can give form to pre-existing matter, as the sculptor does with his chisel, and can name a created form, as we have named our own children, sprung from our seed, whose forms were fashioned from this initial matter. But naming them at birth does not mean that we created them. Any creation can only be made starting from an initial matter, which is called Nun or Tatenen. Therefore, I conclude that, as conceived by the priests of Heliopolis, creation, even if it sins in some aspects, is more logical than that proposed by the priests of Memphis, because the latter is purely artificial. I remember those illusionistic figures, made by some skilled jugglers, who beat the country roads and thus live by fooling the poor peasants.

The conclusion that leadership imposes is this: "Be aware of the emotion and virtue that can be conveyed through a work of art, even when it is only an image, without clear content."

Any creation can only be made starting from an initial matter, taking into account the fact that every creation requires a form, and this is obtained by modeling the pre-existing matter. For example, you might see in every picture, in every work of a sculptor only rough stones, their outline and form defined by a vision and a perspective that governs how they are perceived and shaped.

You too can be an artist if you heed the following advice: "Your understanding of an image without content can evolve once you realize that its value depends on subjective interpretations of visual elements."

Any Work Of Art Carries Traces Of Its Creator

On February 07, 2013

Examine your "creation" in terms of those sensations and experiences capable of proving your value in the various aspects of the reality that sustains your outer world and life as they are represented in an endless universe.

It started out as the result of an impossible science. A pure interpretation of a vision that delimited present from future. A transformation on a perception level, which increases to the maximum the originality and novelty effect. With a steady hand, with an analytical thinking, such as "Only I know, only I can", I was writing and renewing my wardrobe of ideas the same way that Van Gogh painted, like a possessed man, with the same swiftness, with the same maniac exuberance of creation.

Absolutely unique, this creation I was kneading from the mud of the events, strange by its composition, with permanent ricochets into a huge reality dividing into opposites, seemed to turn against me. It was going in one direction, towards suspension, or worse, towards self-annihilation, towards decay. Was it the consequence of my audacity to judge things in this manner, too hazy?

Like a creek that discharges into a stream and then turns into a river, I felt that everything I was creating, out of everything I was trying so hard to discover, out of everything that I had come to know, out of everything that I was worth, was pouring into something bigger. Into a huge ocean, with insufficiently defined boundaries. In a universe whose beginning and end can not be imagined by human imagination.

A misty horizon, dusty like a road rediscovered after thousands of years, hardly accesibile.A horizon not pleading to an ideal accepted by most people, not circumscribing their horizon of expectations.

To give your creation a content of authenticity means to assimilate the idea of "sacrifice" with the deepest content of an image that triggers the feeling of an intense involvement in existence.

What an artist is trying to build on some complex details, which in a case would have been worthy of a Raphael, that is, a revealer in the world of ideas, should not interfere with sentiment. If my work had reached the hands of Agatha Christie, she certainly could not help but make a very important remark: "There is not enough blood or bodies in your work ! "

On the other hand, a literary critic, who values objectivity, would have put it this way: "It is true that writers have a predilection for unusual ideas. Ideas away from the boundaries of reality, rather fanciful ideas. But how can your ideas, freakish and precious by their ingenuity and originality, contribute to the smooth running of things in your profession? What is the impression it leaves to the readers? How could they be the origin of your excellence?"

Leadership: Can you observe the various aspects of reality in a particular way, equating to a tendency towards autonomy that leads you to master a destiny to which only you can offer expression?

The horizon that your "creation" materializes is the key indicator of leadership. And only if you are a talent-endowed person, an inspired person, you will be able to facilitate your artistic career in terms of ideas, concepts and perspectives through a complex process in which "The Demiurge has built the universe by putting spirit in soul and soul in the body," characterized by inclusion in a chaotic world.

The horizon, a strength that should be much better exploited, resembles an object made with craft, according to its inherent rules of composition, which may or may not enjoy certain popularity among those interested to access your potential. The reality in which you find yourself is a sum of your perceptions and attitudes on the external environment, on the surrounding world determined in a very profound way.

On this line, as a insurer of perpetuating leadership, as a customizer of the essential elements that define your inclinations, the artwork – the creation you give priority to on the road to achieving excellence, appears as an indispensable, new and challenging presence. It appears as entity – an abstract concept that cannot be found anytime and anywhere, as basic fuel of development that cannot be achieved anyway and by anyone.

Such a horizon appears as a relatively rigid plateau, as an innovative and influence generator brand, as a representative competitor in the landscape of today's and tomorrow's artists. The leadership of he who creates new standards of performance in the fight against "the raw material of progress" (the full exploitation of human stand out potential) will constitute an opportunity for admiration and pride for those contemplating it.

Leadership: Can you bring your creation to the level of maximizing your personal value by calling upon a picture that speaks everything about a knowledge whose secrets can only be perceived by few?

Everything you create is transferred to two terminals for connection with an external circuit, conditioned by an "impedance operator" – able to provide undifferentiated positive and negative impulses.

Making something with art means executing and completing it through a set of "competing forces" generally accepted and recognized. It will be difficult to glimpse, from the perspective of your own understanding and knowledge, a quality road to walk on, unless you have next to you two "dipoles", two law courts, two evaluators – a critic and an anti-critic, both featuring a huge potential to cooperate and maximize your value.

Then, you have to become a good evaluator. Weigh the feedback from both and see which weighs more after their verdict – the sine qua non condition of your sustainable development and of an effective promotion of creative potential. A knowledge whose secrets only few can perceive is the result of an artistic journey that changes its theme according to the events and things you evoke with admiration, through which the image of a higher spirituality detached from the service of matter is reconstituted.

Your level of excellence is given by the feedback with greater weight in predicting your performance. Any argument in support of your creation – the leadership – can be justified as long as there are clear guiding marks on a real public interest. The evaluation report should reveal the framing of your leadership in the optimum development parameters.

The level of maximization of personal value can be determined by the image that represents you in a state of continual creation seen from the perspective of a divine intervention in concrete things and earthly phenomena.

Any Work Of Art Carries Traces Of Its Creator are the two rows of terminals that guide your way to obtaining a good result in the race to achieve excellence, preventing you to slip to extremes.

Is "the creation" you give life to the result of an impossible science? Is it pierced by permanent ricochets into a huge reality dividing into opposites? Is it turning against you?

Examine your "creation" through the two law courts able to properly assess your level of excellence.

Aphorisms And Well-Polished Opinions (I)

On September 01, 2021

To be so good in one area that you have only one equal: God. Only then will you accomplish what is called the "Great Work".

Many people look up to the stars, but very few manage to rise to their level of brilliance.

Whoever has science does everything for science. He who does not have science does nothing for science.

Every man has the duty to discover a new realm, beyond the sight of the world, beyond the limits imposed by society and time. A land that will bear his name as a sign of gratitude for the perseverance he showed all the time.

It is so easy to master the subject. With one condition: to know how to compose it, to know how to recompose it in new shapes and dimensions, to stimulate it and to continuously interact with it.

It is so easy to see the universe in a grain of sand. But first of all learn to create the universe and be one with it.

The man who knows nothing is the seed of a creation awaiting its fruition.

It does not matter what enters a man's mind, but what he is prepared to understand.

Do not try to acquire a high knowledge if it cannot guarantee performance and durability.

Art relates to a single law regarding the act of creation: ONE is more important than MANY.

The time you spent with your rose is what makes your rose so important.

There is a certain kind of worship in the "Metamorphoses" and the sacred vows that Ovid makes to higher beings.

This is also a kind of holiness: to place Creation and Discovery in a place of honor in the image of Jupiter.

To be perfect in one field, so that you have only one equal: God. Only then will you truly understand the message of the master Michelangelo's work!

To relate only to infinity. To give continuity to your creation, without ever consuming yourself. This is how you gain immortality.

Alchemy, which for hundreds of years has stimulated free minds, will take another name:

Leadership.

There are two kinds of people: the very few who know, and the very many who will never find out.

The secrets of Great Science are strictly the prerogative of Prime numbers!

You can think like an employee or like a leader. It depends on how high you want to express your uniqueness and how strong your will is.

The old alchemists were only half learned. They knew how to pass a metal through the rain of fire, but they did not know how to worship it exclusively to God. The 21st century has brought change, with it the removal of the danger of dwelling in the fascination of a spiritless miracle.

The greatest power of creation is to be yourself the expression of its perfection.

To see everything from above, be willing to climb more steps of unpredictability than you are prepared to face.

Continuously double your value based on the results of your talent. A valuable man is a talent with great power of expression.

You can't be a great actor if you lack charm. Please, play the small roles and leave the big ones to me.

Those who want little from life direct their efforts towards the poorest targets.

The man who thinks only of money will never be a Creator.

Creation is a journey in the valley of patience, which has as correspondent a quotation from the Bible: "Leave everything and follow me".

Those made to embrace the mysteries of Great Science are constantly offering something new to the world through their very creative "production".

When you really like a song, but so much... and the voice, and the lyrics, especially the very fine rhythm, all you have to do is experience it in another form of art, as if you were part of it .

To know how to see. And if you fail to see in time, someone else will see for you at exactly the right time.

Talent: What others find so difficult to do, must seem so easy to you.

Show me a man who changed and innovated the field of science, and I will show you a man who knew God.

Great Science is only for those who have devoted themselves entirely to Creation.

When someone goes away from you, wish them Bon Voyage with all your heart.

Some confuse the church with God, just as they confuse the geek with the Great Science.

You can find peace and inspiration only in the middle of nature. Each blade of grass always tells you something else. Don't try to count. Just listen. And look.

Not what you show to the world, but what you work in the background is the source of true art, and of Great Science.

The surest way to communicate with the Universe is through the sound of music.

To treat science in the same way as the cat plays with motorcycles. This is the whole secret.

The highest science in the world is leadership. The important thing is to find someone who uniquely redefines it.

Only those who dedicate themselves 100% to the practice of a trade will learn all its secrets. And he will always manage to invent other secrets.

If the world knew the plans of the universe, probably no one would make plans.

The great challenge before reaching the philosopher's stone is to withstand intense fire for at least 20 years, after the first 20 years of life.

Only a few isolated individuals will always be the basis of great changes.

In leadership there is only one constant of balance: One man does as much as all the others.

Great Science is intended only for those who dedicate themselves entirely to the act of creation.

If you yourself do not consider yourself a value, then neither will others treat you through the lens of the added value method.

Everything is always revealed to the few.

Perfection is the religion of chosen minds.

Even a cloud or a bolt of lightning can indicate an important message: be careful!

The first condition to achieve excellence is to follow your own path.

Leadership must first of all be a tool for popularizing science.

The future belongs to those who manage to activate in the soul of the world the idea of continuity in the evolution of science.

The motto of a winner: every day I become more confident in my science!

Leadership is determined by one constant: "You don't have to be like the others, but rather the others have to be like you."

The total punishment is to live with the fear of not doing what you like. In fact, the hardest thing in this life is to do what you enjoy. Most of them always find something else to do than what their heart desires.

The only way to strengthen the connection between Science and God is through Creation and Discovery.

To read in a swing, in the sun, and let the rays illuminate the right words. Is the universe trying to communicate something to you?

To discover by your own forces the connection between chance and magic that creates the Great Opera.

All the things you need to achieve your goals are always around you. You just have to notice them.

It only takes one man for total change to occur. One is a magic number.

Some create the change, others are forced to admit that they are witnessing something new.

If your plans do not resonate with those of the universe, then you will fail, no matter how smart and strong you think you are.

A total change can only be made by a man coming from a different environment than the one for which he was originally built.

The great art of creation means knowing how to see in absolutely any banal thing a column of infinity.

The present and the future belong to those who accept the absolute beauty of creation!

Whoever truly understands art has the duty to save it from being forgotten.

When you do a bad thing, remember: you will always face the fear of the bad done coming back to you.

Only those who dedicate their entire life to science are able to unravel the secrets of art and the universe.

If by the age of 35 you haven't formed a new understanding of science, then be sure that you will never succeed in producing total change in any field.

Don't let a day pass without making your contribution to the development of science and art.

The great art of creation means knowing how to see in absolutely any banal thing a column of infinity.

The infinite is the invention of immortal minds.

Nature is the best teacher.

The great changes of the world are made only by men who build new universes.

You need 10 years of assiduous practice, so that in the 11th year you understand a small part of the endless enigma of the Great Science.

Establishing a personal style of making art means following a fiction for 15 years that can make you the mirror of a new reality.

Every day the universe makes you more confident and stronger, so that you become a part of Him.

Always see much further than the rest of the world sees and never deviate from the path of faith.

If you want to be the best in the world, you have to give more than the rest of the world gives.

Great changes always happen because of those that no one expects. That's how the universe works.

Never try to rise to the level of thinking of the one you do not know.

The great spell of magic is to discover for yourself what other magicians have discovered, but through a completely different formula.

You learn all the secrets of knowledge in vain if you lack the alchemical power to endure the process of complete transformation of matter.

Reading without writing is as insignificant a fact as looking at the sea without swimming. You cannot feel the spell in its fullness.

Cowardice betrays itself whenever an opportunity arises, but first of all it betrays itself through revenge.

There are two kinds of people: those who think in terms of "jobs" and those who think in the style of Steve Jobs.

Never judge a beginner. Judge him at the end of his journey.

When you listen intensely to a song, it would be said that you are inspired to the max. I don't know how to do it. But I think I always resonated with the Enigma band. In the end, a Romanian is also inspired by a Romanian, only on a different frequency of vibration - an equally high one.

You must completely forget the past in order to redefine your present in the light of the future.

Every thing around you is always trying to tell you something, you just have to know how to listen.

When you talk about art, you have to feel the indirect presence of the painter in full creative process.

The great tragedy of art is that more and more people seek to understand it without learning to build.

It is enough for one person to have a new vision on a field so that the change of the whole world is complete.

Secrets are the expression of a reality that no one believes possible.

Every day you become better at what you do and more confident in your abilities.

Changing the world is the work of great creators of ideas!

If you fail to communicate with nature, then you will never be able to be of use to the Universe.

The global change in terms of leadership will start from Romania.

The surest way to communicate with the Universe is through the sound of music.

To feel what no one else can.

The first, essential thing to have a significant power in a certain niche market is to constantly increase your visibility.

In leadership, only one exception always stands. No matter how high the value you attribute to yourself, the one who has to lose is the one who does not allow himself to connect with you.

The man who is not able to definitively forget the past is condemned to relive it in an eternal and deep depression.

In order to get the most from life, you must first value as much as possible, then ask for as much as possible.

Being the best in the world in a field means weighing everything from a very strong position.

A vengeful shadow will always be nullified by a guardian faith.

If you have a good strategy, you can't fail. Trust only your mind. Don't get distracted by alluring views.

This is the only and greatest wisdom: "Be patient until the time comes for you to become someone else, much more than you are now."

The whole struggle of man is to have the strength to reach the point where the great trial of the universe is revealed to him through the meaning of life.

Before you start writing, find a space where you can express your thoughts.

When you're aiming for a great goal, the universe puts people in front of you who will help you achieve it.

Whoever is able to produce the infinite will be able to sustain the universe.

Only he who measures his knowledge with an entire universe can produce the infinite.

Stay away from weak people, at least until they get brave and become strong. Or let them live the rest of their lives with their weakness.

Mastery in leadership is seen when you have all the assets of a game that others cannot play.

A good craftsman is not only recognized by the way he works, but especially by the way he collects your tools.

Only those who help science to take a big step forward have truly understood the intention of the universe: to consider infinity as a creation of the human mind.

The weak man is always looking for detours and ways away from the main goal. The strong man goes straight to the target and does not get lost along the way.

When you are the best in the world in a field, you don't think in terms of jobs and resumes. You think only in terms of Business Model.

In leadership, as in life, there is a universally valid law: it doesn't matter who leaves, what matters is who stays.

Perfection is the secret geometry of form and background, in no case a color thrown at random.

It's one thing to sing from the "pain" of a general trend, it's quite another to know how to make art even from a grain of sand.

Talent + Science + Experience + Passion + Magic = Alchemy

A man who fails to lay the foundations of a science will never be able to establish himself as a science.

One of the most important lessons I have learned so far is that you will never learn leadership by reading personal development books. The secret is elsewhere...in broadening the horizon of interpretation and application of knowledge. Activate your creative function and personal affirmation!

The true promoters of progress are lucky to always meet when they are most needed, and form a formidable team.

God is the interface between faith and science, the confidence in accomplishing a goal close to the limit of the impossible and the discerning spirit to choose the right moment and the right means to achieve it.

If you don't rush to do a certain thing on time, you end up not enjoying the benefits that result from it.

Every day you become more and more aware of your value and you have nothing left to do but think how it can be measured (first of all) in words, in the most credible way.

To play with matter and produce the transformation of its elements in the same way as the chemist chooses the most relevant experiences for the implementation of new laws and principles.

The more vivid the imagination, the more the horizon widens.

The more ideas you have, the easier infinity opens before you!

When you're the best in the world, you love driving more and more.

When the talent, the passion, the experience, the will, the patience, the perseverance, all the artistic inclinations come together in the closest way, only then is God's great work of creation fulfilled.

Never let yourself be guided by your own exhortation: "Be the best in the world in a field".

Leadership is not based on modesty, but on complete trust!

The infinite is a neighbor only to people who create their own perfection.

The Great Science is a nucleus equivalent to infinity: you must possess it to be able to outline it.

To be the best in a certain field means to befriend science so much that it does everything for you.

To keep yourself in the first place - that means being exceptional.

When you're really good at something, you know for sure that you can achieve absolutely anything.

He who does not know how to produce ideas from any small form of matter is not a true scientist.

The best "place to live" is to always be at the top of the leaderboard.

Once you've perfected a skill, you begin to see ideas where others can't. Even nothingness is an idea that hides so many others. Infinity is the sum of ideas that only jump in the eyes of those who have recognized and redefined "nothing".

Every day you become much better and more confident in yourself and your science, while others are every day falling further behind, far too far behind to face the present and the future of science.

Only he who has understood the infinite will gain his immortality. Find out the secret before you master it!

When you realize what your real worth is, only then do you begin to see things from above.

Science is the pillar of infinity from which the world was created. Whoever truly understood this, knew God.

Every moment lost by others is a moment gained by you.

Cowardice gains its boldness only in the face of anger, hatred and malice. But it remains completely unmoved in front of the true values.

Being the best means moving forward while everyone else stagnates.

Brilliant people advance in skill, the others float adrift like old men without a present and without a future.

Being the best is a path where you don't encounter any obstacles. Little by little, all the doors, all the windows, all the locks, all the opportunities, all the roads open for you.

While others fight everyone for power, you get the power without any weight. Without lifting a finger!

Great men are valuable because they do not participate in any battle. They win by themselves only if they continue their course. That's all: keep moving forward!

Aphorisms And Well-Polished Opinions (II)

On September 01, 2021

Some grow old and perish in eternal oblivion without having learned the secret of the Great Science. And if you leave with the idea that you were someone important, remember the following: the fact that you climbed to the top of the tree does not in any way mean that you understood the movement of the planets in the solar system. Not to mention how far you were from the mysteries of the universe..

Some people take science to the level of the next century. Others follow in their footsteps. The rest claims to be in agreement with science.

When you understand that no one has your achievements, only then do you begin to truly represent Leadership.

You can consider yourself the best in the world in a certain field when the world becomes dependent on your achievements.

When you are the best in the world in a field, you definitely stop comparing yourself to others. Uniqueness is a power that has no equal.

Whoever does not discover by his own efforts the hidden path to great science, he will never surpass himself.

When a titan takes a step forward, humanity needs ten thousand steps just to catch up.

The only way to continuously improve your performance is to absolutely love what you do.

It is not enough to become the best in the world in a certain field, it is more important to know how to stay ahead.

There are some people who actually write the future in the name of science, while others just endure the present.

Don't rush to shine in one direction or another. Because one day you will be surpassed by all those (really intelligent) who show your value at the right time.

The best writer in the world is the one who taught you to write much more deeply than he managed.

You need 10 years of daily training, under intense fire, to acquire the skill. And only from the 11th year do you start performing.

A single man can change the entire thinking of the world if he strongly supports the idea of a creation that accelerates the progress of demand and the progress of nature.

Only those who dedicate themselves 100% to the act of creation will discover all the secrets of art.

Writing from the heart is the only free medium that teaches you to think big.

When the talent of the artist will shake the hand of experience and will be greatly helped by perseverance, only then will he discover the Great Science.

There are people capable of absorbing daily, like a sponge, a certain value from the great secrets of science. Until one day when they themselves will constitute themselves as the language of Great Science.

Nice encouragement received at this time from a reader in India: "In the future, you will represent the standard of courage in creativity, but also the standard of absolute performance in the science of management."

Order science to obey your will, as if you were its master, the one who gives it life!

Day by day you become better, more creative, more advanced than everyone else in perceiving works of art.

A true leader takes a step forward every day to double his value in the world. Otherwise, he has nothing to look for in the head.

If what you have to say is found elsewhere, it means you have nothing to say.

When you are the best in the world in a field, you begin to understand that the only oasis of peace is the beauty of nature contemplated against the background of art.

Science is like a rose petal on which you must catch every glimmer of dew.

You feel great satisfaction when you see your value increase in direct proportion to the growing number of your readers.

When you are the best in the world in a field, the first thing you realize is the importance of your value.

A man who acts is much more valuable than one who makes plans. The first gets somewhere, the other stays put.

One man who dreams is much stronger than all those who pray.

Every artist is faced with a doubt. What do you prefer to know you are: a creator of matter or an explanatory model of its nature?

When you become the best in the world in a field, you become aware of the fact that you don't depend on others, the more others depend on you.

Always be an indispensable condition for progress. Little by little, a circle of vital forces will form that will contribute to your positioning in the first place in the ranking of the most valuable Brands.

To present a scientific topic in the most engaging and accessible way to the general public is like asking a young and beautiful girl to dance, and she would answer you: "With the greatest pleasure!"

When you are the best in the world and you know that no one can do what you do. This is where the beauty of leadership begins.

In order to solidly promote yourself in a field, you have to be unique, like an impeccably polished diamond, which everyone wants.

Being the best is not a goal, it is not a choice, it is not a dream. It is a destiny. It is a merit. It is the echo of the universe!

God does not forgive cowardice. Well, cowardice is synonymous with betrayal. The first man to betray you one day is always the one without courage.

The most ambitious initiative is always the saving one. Whoever really gets involved in a cause that is already on the table will win everything. Or will he continue to be condemned to play responsibly by setting limits.

From the moment you got wings, you know that there is only one way left: to soar as high as possible. Next to those like you!

Truly valuable people always reach much further than anyone could ever imagine.

There are many people who seem to lack appreciation. They present their works in front of the evaluation commissions. But who are the ones evaluating them? Why do they need a note from them? Normal: because they depend on the evaluation of others.

But a leader, the man who possesses a very advanced knowledge, does not need grades, because he knows that he is already far above the others. A leader thinks in the following way: "I don't need you, you need me! You don't evaluate me, but I have to evaluate all of you!"

Always be First or Last, but never in the middle.

Companies and universities that want to prove their value should first of all invest heavily in truly valuable people. In Romania, a man of great value will sign a contract with any university only if the institution is willing to invest a considerable amount of money. The words of an IT expert: if you can't afford to invest in a valuable person, then turn to a rector or a university dean – they ask for less money, but you will learn very little from them.

Sometimes you have to be better than you are, to be you.

You have to master the means of art well, to understand that no one else can take possession of them.

Genius is recognized by the uniqueness and durability of the work created from the divine language.

The most insignificant discussions reveal the greatest values. The most open discussions are the support of the most sincere characters. Discussions without a draw represent the final conclusion of a cause of interest.

Never compare yourself to others. Always be way above them.

Passion and Talent make you invincible. Two worlds that intertwine inside the same universe.

Choose only one path and keep moving forward as if there was no other.

The most useful advice comes from people who have lived and done the impossible.

All pupils and students are conditioned by teachers to learn, just to collect some points. What no one tells them is to find a passion. Because if you find a passion, you can with the slightest ease leave behind (even by a thousand years) any teacher, of any rank and with any position. Regardless of whether he is called rector, than or lecturer.

If the winner is formed according to the principle of first place, if you deserve to be the best, then how could you refuse what is predestined for you?

There are two kinds of writers: those who write from their own heads and those who write from the heads of others. A good writer is recognized by the way he lays down his own thoughts. While a mediocre writer is recognized by the co-authors with whom he signs an academic paper.

There are two kinds of people: those who die believing they have done something in life, and those who never die.

The Great Kingdom is intended for those who have learned to comprehend the infinite.

Whoever fails to transform himself into a drop from the ocean of time, will never succeed in leaving footprints in the fine sand of the hourglass of the universe.

You are what you live in the play of your own mind.

Special people only move towards a future that gives them as much value as possible. Be present only where you are properly valued.

We have so much to learn from nature, we need to feel before we comprehend.

Every life is a novel. To read all the world's novels would be to know all her lives.

Once you have discovered the infinite, all that is left for you is to achieve immortality.

Patience is not revealed, it is learned through faith.

One of the rarest moments in life occurs when a gift is revealed to you that can elevate you above all others. An absolute zero can patiently turn into a perfect infinity.

Competition is one of the means to get closer to excellence. It is one of the basic engines of development. Without competition, the evolution would have been much slower.

With every discovery you make, you position yourself one step above the rest of the world. What matters is who discovers first. The rest of the world will try to follow in his footsteps. Remember Amundsen and Scott.

The unfeeling man will never gain mercy.

Uniqueness opens the way to immortality for higher spirits.

Science reveals itself only when you call upon it.

The evil man will be forgiven everything only when he does a tenth of good.

Very few people truly embrace a Passion. And, even fewer appreciate what must become because of the Passion.

Let passers-by be proud of what they have and what they don't have. Meanwhile, you add new steps that lead to the top of the performance pyramid.

An exceptional sculptor practices his skill by continuously creating new pieces of art. But the truly special sculptures, which are not available to everyone, are only made to order. And these have a very high price.

Give science your time, and it will reveal to you the secret of the universe. Listen to the voice of your heart, and it will reveal to you the language of the universe.

A bird that does not try to flap its wings and does not try to soar, then it is certainly not an eagle.

The secret is infinity. If you manage to ensure the continuity of this universal landmark, it means that you have surpassed yourself.

Reserves are for people who don't bet everything on one card.

If you want to be a great man, in any field, start by being self-taught. Excellence gives a high mark to individual study.

No strategy will get you closer to your goal if you don't prove that you are up to your goal.

The ultimate secret of science is knowing what to do with what you have learned after realizing who you really are.

It takes a lot of enlightened minds to be able to evaluate the performance of an economical light bulb.

Spirits that rise too high, usually end up in the void space.

Leadership is a song that manages to be heard through its chorus.

It is truly sublime to observe intellectuals investing time only in resizing their self-esteem.

These are your wide open windows to a safe and long ascent.

To present leadership in a new light is only the prerogative of a cold inspiration artifice.

Leadership is the poem to which the artist gives a final version.

People who constantly hunt for the faults of others will never recognize their own faults.

The only important source of profit you can make the most of is the potential to become the best.

Leadership is a treasure that is revealed only through rediscovery.

You have to trust the unknown, so you can turn your gaze to a more distant place.

It is a time when you feel empowered to fight against everything, and win. "Remember: you are many, and I am alone!" Then you realize that the struggle does not bring you the same joy as a nice gesture, a smile, warmth of soul.

If you sit all the time with tense muscles, then you will never relax.

If the rose could talk to you...but it is always silent. You only know that it is beautiful, but guarded by thorns.

The one who needs biographical sources to develop a text with rich content, lacks the experience that precedes the vision.

Would they have heard of you if you had not been appointed to a high office? Your true worth is made up of who you are and what you do beyond the job.

You can't understand a man until you've been through what he's been through.

The best teacher in leadership is life experience, much more important in personality formation than professional experience.

First compare yourself to the best professionals. Then find your best role model and push your limits.

Combine several styles, then form your own style. He studies art on his own, then deviates in a controlled manner from the trends drawn by other creators.

You can't be what you are if you don't know who you are.

You cannot conquer a fortress without first identifying its location.

The beautiful lives through the special design of the flower. And whenever a petal falls, it happens not because it lacks sunlight, but because it falls prey to the wind.

It is easy to understand a world, if you are its creator and its caretaker.

The man who knows everything is the embodiment of unattainable perfection.

The important thing is not to give people a vision. Rather, ignite in them the power to form a vision for themselves.

The difference in potential between leaders and people is that the former generate the transformation, the others pass from transformation to transformation.

Better to break an invisible wall than to continue a refinement that subjugates all possible forces.

Only if you come to fully control one science will you be able to generate the germs of a future science.

If you want to be really good in a field, then aim to study a more advanced field, to which you are a complete stranger.

Until you are sure that you have earned the freedom to live a meaningful life, don't give up. After the party is over, the friends leave. And only you remain.

A star that is not interested in shining will always remain unnoticed.

A bright star in the sky is not enough for the night to take on a dreamy hue.

Did the experience help you stand out through a special uniqueness?

The strongest sparkle is best seen in the depths of darkness.

You have to rise as high as possible so that the people below notice you.

A man of fire is always recognized by the flame.

A strong character is coordinated by an even stronger soul. A strong man can only move mountains if he is driven by strong motivation.

Everything is transient, except the essence that makes the infinite.

The man who does not know what he wants is always looking for everything in the implied form of mere shooting stars.

The true price that the future full of rewards demands from the ambiguous present is this: to know how to forgive, to understand with the heart, with the soul.

The invisible, the unknown and the infinite are the three great components that make up the Great Work.

The winningest leader lends his followers new valences of affirmation from his own performance resources.

No matter how many blades of grass there are on earth, they will never shine in the darkness like a star.

You will never become the best if you place yourself on an equal footing with others.

You cannot rise above your Creator. Because in this way you would become your own role model.

All elves have the right to make the most of their creative potential. But their imaginative transformations are created by only one set designer: God.

The best ideas emerge when you build, not when you plan. So, build as much as you can.

Patience, flexibility - then speed and endurance. To embrace change with great love. And to use absolutely everything that, good or bad, comes your way.

Leadership is an approach to sustainable development, only if it has continuity in human transformation.

Above all, in the future the emphasis will be on talent and qualities. Above all, the individual training and the results obtained in the activity carried out independently will count.

While more and more individuals will accumulate diplomas and certificates of competence, others - the few and special ones - will create another path. A road of passion. Much more effective and spectacular than it seems.

As long as man has the will and the freedom to use his talent, he will also have the means to complete the battle of his life.

He who achieves success too soon, gets spoiled later.

E - I = M (Experience – Imagination = Mediocrity)

Open the dictionary to any page. Choose a word. Only one. Then try to create a literary masterpiece without taking inspiration from any other source. Write with your eyes closed.

God is the meeting point of the three mystical courts: the artist, the magician and the alchemist.

Whoever knows how to manipulate matter knows best how to create a universe among so many universes.

The ignorant try to understand the matter. Artists shape it. Magicians condense it and frame it in an endless cycle of rotation. And the alchemists know how to enliven it.

Let the others around you overtake you. So that they fail long before you reach your destination. Often the road to excellence is smoothed by the "speed" mistakes of others.

A master manages to configure matter to his liking. You will become a master only when the grateful subject obeys you incessantly.

If you have not reached the stage where you can actually play with the material and shape it as you like, it means that you are far from true mastery.

You will find yourself only when you recognize yourself.

You will achieve mastery only when you surpass yourself.

The proud man is a loser because he always lets himself be defeated.

If you manage to perceive the imperceptible, you will always be able to produce new echoes in the universe of this world.

Aphorisms And Well-Polished Opinions (III)

On September 01, 2021

Either you bet everything on one card, or you don't play at all. The best players are always dealt the worst possible cards, but they know how to turn them into the best.

The loser perceives the mountain as a whole. The winner focuses on the pebbles that make up the mountain. While the first says to himself: "I will never be able to move the mountain", the other already has a few pebbles in his hand. Performance is like the pebbles in the mountain: it's only a matter of time before you collect them all.

The artist can expand his art with only one condition: to possess the science of construction and composition.

You must reach a high level of understanding of the obscure, in order to succeed in heating matter, transforming it and producing its expansion into light.

Why settle for just the status of being good, if you have the opportunity to be brilliant?

He who only knows how to play hard and keep the fight on his feet will never get a consolation.

The man who has not discovered a talent or a passion will only be able to excel in mediocrity.

A single idea can transform an ordinary man into a genius. The idea opens the locked gates of your true potential.

He who claims to know everything knows nothing. And the one who claims to know nothing, actually knows everything.

The man who cannot reinvent science or mold it exclusively to his will will never acquire mastery.

When the world stops thinking about money, then it will understand everything. And he will have everything.

To know good, you must first know evil. To recognize a truth, you must first deny it. To truly love, you must first hate. In order to be certain that you exist, you must first deny your own existence.

Above all, seek to acquire the science that suits you better than anyone else.

The winner is not the one who gets only a small part of a whole. But the one who acquires by his own forces the knowledge to encompass the whole and to reinvent it brilliantly.

The secret of mastery: Learn to create a single dot, which you can then infinitely multiply by itself.

Whoever is not able to give life every day to a new special construction, or to a completely different vision in his field of activity, does not have the right and the power to call himself a professional.

You don't want to be among the best. Never compare yourself to the best. Always be far above them! Remember that no matter how strong the lion or the tiger, the eagle is always high, far above them.

The secrets are revealed only to the few, who have sweated for many years in a row in search of them.

Be strong through understanding. Be good par excellence. Be yourself.

Professionals create something new and viable every day. The amateurs do nothing but repeat the recipes and labels of the original creations.

Science is not a tool that you can love very much without having approached it directly.

The notions of a symbolic science can always be interpreted, but rarely understood.

Every dream has a star and every star has a dream.

Alchemy can only be done in the dark. Because darkness hides very little light. And precisely that small light is the essence.

There is not just one universe, and no more universes. But only infinity!

The moment you discover the phenomenon behind the science, you will feel obliged to delve into yourself to amplify your worth.

The unknown is the source of power for great knowledge.

Only those who have the courage to plunge wholeheartedly into the unknown will find out everything.

Excellence is built only through passion and perseverance.

It doesn't matter the number of those running with you. Only the most persevering of them who last until the end of the race counts.

The hardest thing to endure is the suspense: will tomorrow be like today?

In vain you are the best, if you do not have the best.

The hardest thing is to take one step forward, knowing that someone else will take two steps back.

The restricted alchemy formula: believe before you know!

The most important thing is who you are before you reach SOMEONE.

If the flame begins to go out, the blame rests entirely on the one who does not know how to keep it burning.

To always do only what you like. To do only what your talent requires.

And one day you will become the best in the world.

Alchemy is only the science of the masters. Pick up a shard of glass, boil it for two hours, sprinkle a little moonshine over it, hang it from a sunbeam, and you'll get a diamond.

A gifted man only needs a moment's impulse to create a whole world with its own laws. An experienced man needs a whole life and a whole world to find that he lacks talent. In fact, talent is much more important than experience.

To achieve what no one else can. To understand what is obscure to others. To discover something important on your own. To conquer a new language. To achieve in a single day what would take others weeks, months or even years. This is what it means to be a master.

Everything is transformed. In any field you can be an alchemist, with only one condition: to succeed in transforming any condition into another condition.

Books often turn out to be much better than people.

For some, boundless kindness means that they always have the last word. Therefore, you sometimes have to be a little mean to people who are too "good".

He never envied others. Do everything you can to make others admire you enormously.

A future performer begins his journey to excellence starting from the status of "marginit". And it completes its training until it surpasses all those ennobled with the status of "Super Brand".

It is not difficult to create a new life scenario. Hard is how you interpret it.

Too many to hurry to find a job. Too few direct their efforts towards achieving excellence.

A true performer does something every day that brings him closer to the ultimate goal: to be the best of the best.

If you want to receive something, learn to give from yourself first. If you have already given, learn to wait to receive. Don't endure time, cross it. Is it your turn to take a brave step forward? Do you expect to receive something without giving anything from yourself?

The most difficult constant in life is: synchronizing with yourself, with the things you want to change, with the dear people around you.

Promote your value before comparing yourself to the best.

Train ten hours a day, for six-seven years, on a single skill, and you will end up controlling it better than anyone. Be convinced that 99% of the aspirants to the status of performer do not even start the training, or do not carry it to the end.

Consummation is about going deep into the most real unknown of all unknowns, and discovering the highest light within you.

The unknown is the most important performance constant.

Two kinds of people deserve the most attention: those who know how to lose and those who do not know how to win.

Talent does not need diplomas or study certificates to develop and assert itself.

As long as we allow ourselves to be Human, there will be Leadership.

Whoever has a passion, but does not make it a real bastion of resistance, will never perform.

The hardest thing in the world is trying to do the impossible. And the most beautiful, to succeed.

Be good at one thing, one thing only. But be the best in the world at that Talent and Passion – two twin brothers who understand each other perfectly in their language.

The three stages of transformation: search + find + assign a meaning.

It is not important to know them all. The important thing is to know one thing that no one else knows.

Passion is the force that gives you the guarantee that you are much better than others in a certain direction.

Talent is like a flower, which once sprouted, only needs to be watered periodically so that it does not dry out.

The only and most valuable teacher you have is your mistake. Correct, correct, correct until you achieve perfection.

There are no geniuses in this world. But there are only two constants "CAN" and "CAN'T".

Only the man who has discovered a secret is allowed to reap its full fruits.

Many have asked me why I am in such a hurry to finish certain projects. I answered them: because he who does not hurry, will never finish.

Only for that someone who will share my creed: "Even if everyone is against me, I will be with you".

One is to be good at a field of activity. It is quite another thing to be excellent in a field of activity. Being good means being in a circle with thousands, or millions like you. But being excellent means being the one who spins the circle.

I was like that a long time ago. When you let everything happen, you feel better. After 100 failures, you really can't get hurt anymore, no reality scares you anymore. That's how you learn to let things go. For this reason, I like the sun, the beach, swimming. I forget everything, I don't focus on problems, I forget everything... especially when I swim. I told you change is good. You torture your soul with trifles. Come to the terrace. You will forget everything.

In my heart lies your dear look. Come on, relax, live in the moment, and leave everything else aside, forget about them by ignoring them. That's about all I know. Wow, I almost wrote you a novel in the last 2 minutes. If you were here at the pool with me, you'd be over all the elements in no time. It's called "redirecting attention to beauty." Look what wonders water does...

A bunch of people scatter like blind men in the dark, and holding a candle in their hand they think they are lighting a way. This is how false prophets who think they are saints do.

Don't be a stranger to looks turned in other directions, built on the principle of mirroring in the symmetry of appearances. What you see is not always what you want to find.

And in vain you take the good with you, if the good is forgotten... Isn't it better to leave behind something unforgettable? Be a star in the sky, not a saint on earth.

You can trick mice and make them fall into various traps. But you can't convince the universe to make you a star in the sky just because you know how to set mousetraps.

The man who is always making plans, the one who has an unbridled appetite to imagine new strategies, is the man who never acts at the right time.

By the time you are waiting for something to happen by itself, others have already taken 10 steps forward. Change doesn't wait for you to decide the right time, because the time will never be right.

The important thing is the person who brings the change, not those who wait for things to happen by themselves. Change is not planned to happen.

No one embraces technology more than a scientist. The one who embraces wider horizons is the one who has traversed the distance from earth to heaven.

Some are ready to move forward, others are forced to fall further behind.

"It is easier for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the Kingdom of Heaven." Science (the Great Empire) does not need material facilitation to generate the acceleration of progress.

If you read a book a thousand times, you will discover as many ways to perceive reality through a distant mirror, swallowed by an unreal space.

You'll never find a treasure by living with your head in the sand, taking a breath of air every now and then. Use your energy to take advantage of the wealth within you!

To be the best of the best without considering yourself better than the last.

Don't play with fire if you don't feel like burning like a flame. The high temperatures are triggered by the consuming flames that burn so fiercely.

The secret on the spiritual plane is to be surrounded by a magical halo. If you don't know how to translate yourself into a magic number, neither intelligence nor chance will be able to help you.

The mystery of science is the work of faith of those who, shining like the stars, manage to transmit light on all vibrational levels of the entire Universe.

The only way to get very far is to shine like a star in a darkness that cuts through the night without any direction.

Directors or employees come and go. But creators stay forever.

Never excel where everyone excels. Rather, to excel only where you are unique, without equal.

When God keeps you away from other people, it means he has bigger plans for you.

Important is the one who takes science to a higher level. The universe is a reservoir of science filled with the faith of pyramid builders.

Progress weeds out the sensitive and sickly, and keeps only the resilient in the face of challenges. Progress is the science of being the cause of a cure that turns life into a challenge.

The whole secret is knowing how to see. For that, you have to study the subtle art of painting. Seeing is like painting a relief at night.

Every week to bring something in the field of science. At the end of the year, thousands of people will use your resources to further the commitment to science that makes your brand unique and valuable.

Those who have a website, I suggest that they translate the content of all articles into at least one foreign language! And even if you don't know a foreign language very well, you can call on translators. There is no excuse not to translate!

And those who know a foreign language well and have a website, and do not translate everything they have worked on, have learned another foreign language for nothing...

The one who does not know, but turns to those who know, is much more important than the one who knows and does nothing with what he knows.

To secure your world number 1 position in the elite of a powerful industry, it is not enough to be one step ahead of others, but 100 km ahead of everyone. 100 km means about 100 thousand steps. So one step is not enough, but 100 thousand.

All matter, the immortal stars, all the energy of the universe, all creation (completely infused with spirit), the surrounding nature, all that we call time and space, darkness and light, even the farthest planet, youth without old age, all align to ease the route you have to take to succeed in what you set out to do.

But for all of this to happen, you must reach that level of faith that has at its alchemical center the very Force of Infinite Creation. As the greatest alchemist of all time said: "Infinity is Me".

Those who know will know even more. Those who don't know will never know anything.

There is no way to surpass others unless you prove your superiority with the help of science.

And if you don't overtake the others, you will be the one left behind.

Few pay attention to the small changes that create the big change over time.

While people go about their natural course of life, someone out there is secretly changing the order of things around the world.

However, some will contribute as much as they can to the development of science, while others will look on helplessly at the changes made by those who believe that science has its own beauty.

Some change the world, others are simply driven by the current of change, without being able to change anything. There are, therefore, people of innovation, and people of the pointless view. Which category do you belong to?

P.S. Those who love science will agree with me. Everyone else will hate me with all their heart!

Big prizes are for great people. Small prizes are for small people.

Colors are manifestations of valid painting along the lines of a life that never exhausts its mysteries.

The paradox of gross claims: "To pretend to be a great scholar, and yet to reach the last stage of old age without having learned what Science is."

Some are prone to move forward, others are prone to fall behind. Some walk the road, instead of making a way... that is, they don't even walk. And this is a choice... to exist is an option, to live is also an option... don't judge, just observe and accept ! Some walk at their normal pace, without being judged by one or the other, everyone walks their own path, which no one can walk on.

I would have to live an infinity of lives in an infinity of bodies, just to extract a small part of the infinity I now carry within me.

This is intelligence: to have the power to rule everything under any circumstances.

When you want to harm someone, make sure that God does not know your plans. Otherwise, the wheel can turn in a way you don't imagine. And how God knows your plans in advance for you to imagine them... it's only a matter of time, not certainty.

He who has knowledge always shows what he knows. He who has no knowledge has nothing to show.

The small ones will become completely insignificant, the greats will rise higher and higher.

This year many old people will leave us, and we don't know if they still have time to correct what they did wrong. It is certain that young people want a year younger. Amen.

Where you've never had the inclination, that's where your talent might be hiding. Your weakness is your strength.

Mainstream culture is not for creators. The creator knows only one thing: I have only one talent, I only stick to it, and the rest does not matter.

When you run late at night it's always quiet and lonely. But you can see the stars.

Run as hard as you can! And when you can't, keep going a little longer. But never, never, never give up.

As a friend said today: the runner is like an eagle's feather, torn by the wind, carried in ignorance...

The world does not follow those who sit. The world moves according to those who move things. Don't let a day go by without bringing something new to the field of science.

Those who know will know even more. Those who don't know will never know.

If everyone were concerned about what they know and not others, they would certainly know each other better. Many are too concerned with others and never stop comparing themselves; in the idea that everyone does what they can and what they know, forgetting in someone else's garden does not lead to progress, but only to taking care of someone else, which is a big problem for us.

We all make mistakes, and it's all about perception: we treat it as an opportunity for positive change, or we wait for others to change (like we're perfect).

Both parties are injured more or less, but everything starts from a chance, and this is where the "magic" of change begins.

See also "Catch me if you can", inspired by reality. Frank Abagnale defraudes the system, not from a culture of "evil" or defiance, but on the basis of emotional insecurity, which appeared in adolescence. The FBI agent who followed him, gave him chance after chance (3 in total), being convinced that everything starts from a chance, a chance that must ensure the emotional security that the individual needs, in order to make the change.

That's how the change began... from the most wanted fugitive and tax offender, he became a financial security consultant.

It's all fine psychology, putting yourself in the other person's place, in other words giving up your "ego", and giving it a chance! It's like someone said, "The secret to immortality is, first of all, to live a life worth remembering."

Are You A Legend?

On March 01, 2009

Make from leadership a continuous form of your existence, by adjusting with great precision that link between past, present and future.

Leaders make rules ... for a while.

Let's say that you are planning a professional ascension and that you to get closer vertiginously to success. For achieving your goals, obviously it is necessary to prepare from time, also to make many sacrifices, being aware that success is not achieved overnight. You succeed, after many attempts and efforts, to engage in a reputable company. Over time you progress, climb up higher on the hierarchy stages, and in the end, you get to be the general manager in the respective company. Now you are the one making the rules and taking the important decisions. Finally, your dream has come true. Well, what's next? Do you have any set plan for what you will have to do after you have achieved success?

On this question, extremely easy, few are those who can really give a good answer.

If you have ever fixed a fire, then you know that after it burns intensely for a period of time, slowly, slowly begins to fade. Exactly the same thing happens and with some people. They work hard, go through all stages of developing a successful career, and then reach the top. Their goal was finally reached. However, this moment of brilliance, unfortunately, do not last forever, and therefore, they gradually lose their ability to work, no longer having spirit of initiative, and retire from their professional activity. In the result, they leave this world and nobody remembers them.

Leadership: Can you make a comparison between "Total Art" and "Serial Art" so as to highlight the spiritual communion between the forms of creation and knowledge?

Out of the importance of what you reveal through your profile, through your story, through your creations, through your actions, within everything that you support and leave behind, there are two consequences. On one hand there would be the tendency towards a "total art" – meant to combine the dependency of a variety of different factors, out of which many of them are beyond your control. On the other hand the permanent dedication towards a job well done, submitted by your high professional attitude.

Total Art can be seen as a special case of perception about the role you take in the absence of external constraints. In this case, you attract the elements of knowledge and experience, unite them in a harmonious way, integrate them in the unity of emotion, feeling, and assign the value of the condition of responsibility for the quality called "vanity". The illness of being a boss obviously derives from the sense of personal value, pride, and vanity.

Practicing total art and exploring its combining possibilities to generate results in an active dynamics, to support the implementation of generous ideals leads to the emergence of prototypes and unique products, thus annulling "serial art".

Serial art requires a certain dependency towards reception of a character that has become a legend, through the consistent multiplication and diversification of personal accomplishments. It is due to the idea that man uses all his specialized knowledge and all the means at his disposal to offer, in realistic compositions of creation, new meaningful and new forms of access to his own identity.

This art forces the dependency on certain characteristics of the relation process-content, indicating the most relevant resources of creation and expression, placed at the disposal of everybody interested in extending the understanding of their knowledge about the management of performance. But it's a commercial art, a momentarily business where we have to make the best profit from our own capital, not one that's meant to last.

Leadership supports its whole weight on the deep transformation of a man in relation to the constructive patterns of his creation, in agreement with a specific values system, from which modern society will be developed and consolidated, but foremost future thinking – through reliving the past. Valuable people leave their mark over the future. We won't let their importance and their teachings go past us into oblivion.

You have to properly take care of your creations in order to truly understand the valuable importance of what you transmit, but also in order to leave behind a beautiful memory of yourself that will last over the years. Spiritual communion between forms of creation and knowledge is accomplished by what you feel when you look at your work as it comes to life, and by recognizing the potential for performance that you bring to light.

Can you interpret the map of a lasting leadership, heading towards a point farther away from what you originally came to?

The interpretation of a marine map requires an extra effort of explaining the causal links between the cartographic elements and phenomena.

In your case, the elements of progress and Brand, along with the transformation of the personal model into an example to follow, require an effort to adapt to the role changes and status that the image from which you create your connection with the essence of a new spirituality. Or this spirituality, according to the words of Simenon Georges, is based on the understanding that man belongs to a social totality, being a part of it, which opposes the old spiritualities that place man before the community.

The interpretation of a lasting "map" of leadership must take into account the links between the stages of professional development and the subsequent ones - when you reached the top of the hierarchical pyramid. For this you need to make appeal to all the values and principles that you possess, and to keep in view all the new obligations upon you.

Do not raise a mental barrier between the past and the future, between who you were, and who you will be from now on, and who will be from now on. You can be truly perfect if you rise to the level that others want from you. That is, if you continue with enthusiasm "the expedition of conquering the leadership", only if you are going to a point farthest from the one you originally came.

Leadership: Can you find a reconciliation ground between the past, the present and the future so that your Brand is not going to decay?

Many people in high positions of management imagine, falsely, that their names will live forever in the memory and hearts of others, that their deeds will never be forgotten. Unfortunately, with their passing away, both their names and merits, which they acquired during life, are forgotten. All they have made a lifetime, through many sacrifices and sweat, is wasted as fast as the night passage. For it was not something lasting.

The legends never die. Only few people manage to keep their image or achievements intact over time. Several names fully confirm this thing: Jesus, Napoleon Bonaparte, Albert Einstein, John D. Rockefeller, Andrew Carnegie, John Lennon, Elvis Presley. Both during life and after they had passed in nothingness, their name was not deleted from the memory of people and from the history books. And, this is because each of them became a Legend.

The extraordinary achievements of these people have transformed them into real legends. Let's not deceive ourselves: not every person who has a successful career, or who has an important leadership function is a legend. When Elvis Presley walked first on the stage and sang "Heartbreak Hotel" he changed for ever the face of music in the world. He broke the ice, has influenced everyone with his musical style.

It is not enough to live on this earth; you must contribute to the smooth running of things, to the good of all nations. Break the ice, express your uniqueness. Change something; decide to build something to endure forever, something that would always represent your name. It is not enough to become a leading man. For your leadership to endure over time, you must become a legend.

Being a Legend is the art of presenting yourself as memorable in an image that goes around the world at any time in the future.

Are You A Manager Or A Leader?

On January 02, 2009

Give people access to your resource fund, maintaining under control the excess of demand and offer.

The manager of a company was confronted a long time ago with a major difficulty. He had to solve the situation in a very short time. Nevertheless, instead of encouraging the employees to join their forces in order to solve the problem, he gave them an ultimatum: "Each of those who still want to stay in this company has to come up with a unique idea to solve the problem in 24 hours. The one, who is not capable of finding a good solution in this time, will be fired without any explanation."

In the end, the problem was not solved, and the company got bankrupt after the manager fired almost all his employees.

Leadership: Do you argue the influence of your position from the perspective of an absolute determination of the level of competence, given the existence of a cause that removes the justified nature of your deeds?

In football, it can be said that a teammate "take part in the game" when it influences the game anyway, even through words and gestures, preventing the opponent or attempting to obtain an advantage from his offside position.

In a company, just like in football, every employee who provides, seriously his shoulder to its development, is part of a game of great complexity, but also can be of high risk, in which he must keep his trust and credibility in front of the employer and other colleagues, may gaining an advantage only through his favorable results, that confirm his commitment and helps him be valuable.

How do you take part in the game? By using your skills and competences in your company's favor, or in its disadvantage? Through an acceleration of your productivity growth, or through a decrease of your level of involvement?

Just as a plant should be watered daily, so do you should maintain constantly the series of professional victories so that your leadership to maintain and increase its effectiveness.

The justified nature of a deed or behavior in the imminent circumstances of a profoundly critical position on the performance and strategy of a company is not only given by a man's line of conduct but by the discernment and morality with which he faces perceptions, norms and social prejudices.

The only reason that removes the justified nature of your actions is the decision to revoke an act of free choice expressed by the old saying: man is the master of no one.

Leadership: Can you improve your reputation by maintaining an ongoing "access-control" link based on an obligation that relieves you of the frustration of not being able to locate the action of perceiving a constructive approach?

Leadership is a form of power that can be accepted or imposed. To follow someone because you have no choice, because you are forced to do it, is not exactly the best choice. A good leader is the one who has the ability to motivate people to act and work with them as effectively as possible by maintaining a permanent connection of "access-control". Meaning people must have access to his resource fund, and he must have access to theirs – maintaining under control the excess of demand and offer.

Not being able to locate an action of perceiving a constructive approach is like sailing a boat: you cannot load it with everything you can find and take it out to sea, as long as it sinks because of its own weight.

A constructive approach aims at the impetus to make those transformations you want in the company without continuing your activities through a "Command Error" message. Such an approach captures the idea of a change that does not load with a greater burden than when you initiated it.

There is no secret that a person can reach a high position of leadership, but that does not automatically mean that he has leadership skills. The manager is always firm and rarely offers open-heartedly, often showing rigidity in thought and action. While the leader is always open to collaboration, to change his mentality, to understand, is open to be corrected when necessary, open to an exchange of ideas and experience even with his inferiors.

Leading does not mean that the leader commands and others execute his orders through obedience and fear. Leading means training and mobilizing people by achieving a common goal, through a malleable process of optimizing their performance.

Leadership: Can you give a great meaning to your role from the perspective of including a reason for encouraging new forms of doing things in a "you against the others" context?

It is true that you cannot be a leader if you are not an ambitious person, tenacious, persistent, perceptive, competent, and prepared to face the challenges which intervene in your professional life. However, if you do not know how to attract people by your side, if you are not capable of doing more for them, to be by their side and to support them when everything seems lost, then you will end alone.

People are not equal. They have skills, knowledge and different qualities. This is what a manager should consider before asking his employees to fulfill some extremely difficult tasks. Moreover, in a critical situation, teamwork has a major importance, so if a manager appeal at a method to determine people to work individually, he only makes them go away, which inevitably leads to failure.

No wonder that only few companies resist for a long time on the market and that is because not all of them are led by truly competent leaders, but by managers without a profitable culture of leadership.

Only what you have better in you, can add value to others, can raise them or can make them come down.

Management is the demand for efficiency that you generate to get more quality, strength and notoriety. While leadership is a motivated offer to achieve high performance without being dependent on the demands of a return that does not justify an investment in people's lives.

Are You A Skillful Manager?

On March 21, 2009

Take your natural attributes into account, building your horizon in the light of a consciousness that values your most meaningful side.

One day, the King was visiting Zen Master Muhak, from the Kanju-ji Temple. And he said:

- My friend, we've known each other for many years, let us joke for a moment, while we are safe from the eyes of the world. I haven't laughed in quite some time !

- I invite you, master, to tell me something joyful...

- My dear Muhak, as much of a Zen master as you are, you're not worth any more than a donkey, a stupid donkey ! Ha, ha, ha ! Now it's your turn, said the King. Tell me something funny !

- Master, as you are at this very moment, you resemble Shakyamuni at the base of the tree of Awakening !

- That's not funny at all, said the king. I compare you to a stupid donkey, and you compare me to Buddha himself !

- But, my lord, Muhak said, there is something specific to donkeys to see just donkeys everywhere, and specific to Buddha to see in every being only his nature as a Buddha... *****

Leadership: Can you change the perception of the positional constraints of your socio-professional profile and the reaction to them, providing the certainty of a well-valued intellectual quality in future activities?

The positional constraints of your socio-professional profile refer to all those conditions or limits on what you can do with what you are supposed to accept as an insult or as an insinuation that you are not worthy of being loved. From the multitude of states of mind at one point, on which, for one reason or another, you can direct your spirit carefully, those you most strongly and immediately become aware of are: hate, anger, jealousy, frustration, alienationt, sadness. Your position becomes one of the victim that lets itself be dominated, approaching the encounter through a thrill of soldier remorse with a self-imposing behavior.

By what you express as an attitude, beyond everything that can be evident in the reflections of your thought, you offer a foray into your own world that can make you move away or get closer to the people around you. Generally speaking, by gesture or words, only what defines you in the circumstances of tense situations, on well-established grounds, but at other times possesses an endless potential of expressiveness is how you perceive an information and assimilate it as something strictly personal.

Through the presence of feedback information, you emphasize the other qualities that define you as you feel the intellect's need for communication. Information such as: "your values first result from what you say, and afterwards from what you do", understood as an outline of what it means to be connected to the sensitive part of yourself, creates the foundation of a certain vision of the consciousness-mirror relationship from the perspective of the notion of truth that defines you.

Providing the certainty of a well-valued intellectual quality in future management activities means accepting information that leaves you baffled as a personal breakthrough, appraising it as useful and grounded in substantiating a decision that gives you the opportunity to demonstrate the cause of a inattentions in formulating guiding principles that govern the company, and in formulating complementary image management directions that represent you.

The comparison made between two different thoughts is a form of promoting the background image that suits you in the context of an acute need for affirmation of character, but to an extent that you often do not recognize yourself.

The picture speaks for itself about the company's mission, the type of business you are doing, the policy you promote, and the values you believe in. While errors caused by information derived from the comparison of judgments, attributes, or values that define you with a standard of perfection, always seem to me to be normal in the case of an approach to the way you look at the experience of having to deal with the observation that others make about you.

The perception of the positional constraints of your socio-professional profile is given by the cumulative you hold – intellectually, emotionally, spiritually, scientifically, to a certain standard of perfection that is hard for you to achieve.

Do you see yourself based on the generating agent of your image: that beautiful thing in expressing a point of view that meets the need for greatness or the echo of intelligence stemming from the beliefs you share about your value? And when I say constraints, I mean the clumsiness with which you manipulate these beliefs in front of other people.

Leadership takes the "self-portrait" you make of yourself under the influence of feedback from others, but also the "Portrait of the other" that shakes your beliefs with information consistent with reality, both of which are under the magnifying glass of an often relentless analysis.

The attitude you adopt in a situation that you make yourself accountable for resembles the motherboard of a laptop: it is the physical and logical support for the other components, providing the functionality of gathering information and process it impeccably so that it ultimately results in maximum stability in making the activity of knowledge, thought and attention you carry out more effective.

Being A Skillful Manager means fixing your negative image by adopting a malleable position towards the social contexts where you need to convince others that all the good or bad arguments are actually a result of learning from mistakes and a potential step forward in terms of functionality and authority.

Are You Only Seeing What You Expect To See?

On June 03, 2024

The moments that decide the course of a life are often consumed before blind eyes, unprepared to grasp the deep essence of reality.

It happened in front of everyone, but as if nothing had happened. On July 07, 2024, in the bright sunlight, a scene of tragedy unfolded, without anyone noticing. The man was about to finish his life's race, an almost poetic end, like the legendary Marathon race. The runner with rich experience in athletics crossed the finish line, then suddenly fell to the ground, as if sickened by a terrible exhaustion, on the background of a Herongia Anteatum , a precarious causality between high doses of adrenaline. He had fallen, like a fallen soldier on the battlefield, without anyone paying attention to this unfortunate moment.

Every ending can be a beginning, but not everyone is ready to see it that way. The possibility of injury, or of some mental crisis, was not an option taken into account by this runner who came in second place. With certainty, no images of a disastrous end crossed his mind, nothing stopped his momentum towards the "unmeasured", following the unnatural path that stems from an Ego that repeated loudly and bluntly: "Prove that you can!"

His rich experience in athletics masked the (really important) thing he had to focus on. He compared his initial perception to the obvious reality, ignoring the body's cues that showed an increasingly precarious weakness. I would say otherwise. To insist on passion, despite everything that can happen to you, is to give life to a painting, without protecting it against vicissitudes.

His expectations were stronger than the message of his conscience that warned him of what might happen to him. Basically, he ignored what most would have seen in a critical situation: "In the face of life's trials, true courage consists in recognizing the limits and acting accordingly."

Leadership: How do you get the essence of the soul out of you, when reality requires you to stop before you reach the impossible?

Impassive nature witnesses human tragedies that consume themselves like solitary flames, unseen by the eyes of many. Between the sun and the earth, a thread breaks, leaving a life to rest on the bed of silent oblivion. The runner eventually recovered, thanks to the SMURD crew who intervened promptly, managing to prevent the inevitable. But what we have to learn is this: "Obsessive pursuit of passion can be blind to the warnings of being, leading to ignoring one's own limits, with potentially tragic consequences."

To take the essence of the soul out of you means to recognize your own ignorance and turn it into a warning, it means to recognize your helplessness when the body pushes you to fall. These recognitions help you to be more humble and aware of your limits, which can be crucial for personal growth and avoiding tragic situations.

The runner is not a god. His experiences over the years have taught him to ignore pain, to suppress his body's warning signals. This consideration did not make him a hero, his decision to risk his life at a local competition proving to be a haphazard attempt to push his body's normal limits. In his soul there was a battle much tougher than the race, a battle between following his ambition and admitting his weakness. Will you choose to stop and do a reality check before you soar to become a hero?

Leadership: Can you recognize that past experiences do not always prepare you for critical moments, according to a vision that separates reality from ideal?

It's simple. He could not cope with the situation. Everything that happened to him until then, all the experience gained in dozens of contests, did not prepare him for this critical moment. No one becomes a hero if he dies after crossing the finish line, but if he manages to do the impossible in the struggle with life. When you find yourself in a critical situation, take into account the responsibility to stop, otherwise circumstances will disrupt your concentration at every step.

The individual perception corresponds to a certain mode of functioning of the vital organs, a certain rhythm, predilection for each person's body. In the case of the runner, the possibility of injury or a seizure was never considered. No images of a disastrous finish crossed his mind, although the signs were evident in the last hundred meters. His expectations, stronger than reality, pushed him to ignore the dangers. With each step, his body sent him signals, but his mind refused to accept them. Ego was stronger than reason.

Leadership: Do you have the courage to expose your perspective on a fateful triggering event, thereby highlighting the contrast between ambition and fragility?

The decision to risk his life in a local competition proved to be fateful. Instead of becoming a hero, the runner became an example of a warning, which I can formulate in the following way: "The intensity of our experiences can be a source of strength, but also a path to self-destruction." Let's remember, then, that receiving traumatic experiences is a way for consciousness to establish itself not only as the possessor of pain, but as its creator.

I believe that the weakness of the athlete is to live a full and powerful life, driven to the maximum in the direction of endless ambition. But only those with a tragic sense of existence can sense the silent violence of decisive events, beneath ephemeral appearances. Here the words of the writer Ion Frunzetti come true: "The roar of the pleasure of exceeding our limits suddenly deifies us, our triumph over the world thus seems assured. Pleasure is sacred drunkenness, even if its sunset throws us into hell."

The great art of leadership consists in fulfilling our noble aspirations but guarding them against our own inner vicissitudes. The courage to accept our limits is true greatness.

You only see what you expect to see when the far too big Ego asks you to do the impossible. Moreover, you narrow your horizons by refusing to see beyond your own beliefs. As I said at the beginning, the moments that decide the course of a life are often consumed before blind eyes, unprepared to grasp the deep essence of reality.

Are You Overlooking The Final Picture?

On April 25, 2009

Evaluate people without losing sight of "the light" that surrounds them.

One day a father brought his son to an exhibition of graphics and design. There were many artists who were making for free portraits in pencil to all those who wanted to have a memory in black/white.

"Why should not I also have a memory with my son? he said to himself. So he asked one of the artists to make the portrait of his seven years-old son. The artist accepted, put the child on a chair and asked him to stand still, then started working.

He first drew his left eye, when suddenly the child's father interrupted him: "It doesn't look too much at the eyes with my son."

"Wait please, the drawing is not ready yet", replied the artist who continued to draw.

After finishing the drawing and the right eye, the father of the child, rather disappointed, once again interrupted him: "I still don't think that he looks like my son."

"Please wait a little more, the drawing it is still not ready" the artist's answer came immediately. The child's father began to lose his patience. Then the artist drew the nose, lips, chin, cheeks, ears, eyebrows, head and the hair of the child.

"Now does he look like your son?" the artist asked him. This time the father remained stunned. The drawing perfectly embodied the image of his son.

Leadership: Are you making decisions before or after the things are taking a definitive form?

Do you respect the truth underlying the reality?

It would be much easier to maintain relations with the other people if we would see the final picture from the beginning and we would not rush to make conclusions. Unfortunately, then like the father of the child, sometimes we tend to see the reality without valuing the truth underlying it. Furthermore, when we do not know the truth, we cannot respect it – therefore, we will tend to judge people in a wrong way, and to strongly criticize them sometimes.

People's first reaction it is of association – they are trying to find similarities between the new information and the known one. At first, the father of the child did not find any similarity between his son and the unfinished portrait of the artist, but as he has added new elements, the image of his son began to take shape nicely.

Our most natural reaction is to rush to accuse someone when he does not do his job properly. Nevertheless, who knows, maybe the things are not what they seem at first sight. Maybe if we wait a little longer instead of rushing to conclusions, things acquiring a final form, we will be satisfied of the final result.

The personal image that feeds leadership is the "drawing" from which are derived your possible inclinations towards adopting an original way of thinking and expression.

Accessing the reality that you project over others is often similar to being aware of the image you have in your mind but you cannot express in as original and devoid of clichés way as possible. Here intervenes your own perception over the recipient to which you deliver the image and its "negative", focused on the union between what you know and what you assume, given as a defining characteristic a moment of real life.

The vision, focused on the direct observation of phenomena and concrete facts, must first be a complete version of what was in front of you all the time. Them it must be a repositioning of what matters in the long term as the content of a guidance lesson in choosing the best path forward. Whenever you try to bring forth a new vision of reality, you will certainly experience the formula: "Wait a bit, the drawing is not done yet ! "

Leadership: Do you dive into a deep darkness without knowing how what is placed in front of you looks like?

Not to perceive correctly the reality of the other people, or distorting it is like entering a narrow passage that as you go forward, the light loses from intensity and transforms into an impenetrable darkness. You are plunging deeper and deeper into the full darkness as if you would know the road, when in fact you depart more and more from the right way.

The reality is "the light" that you lose from sight when you rely on your own beliefs without fully understanding the mentality of people (or when you challenge it) – consequently, when you do not perform a critical investigation of the human nature for being convinced that you can properly evaluate them. If you debar yourself of such investigation, you will suppress any enthusiasm to height of your leadership.

Leaders do not take decisions until they do not see the final "picture". If we jump directly to conclusions before knowing the facts, we will miss the point. We could never establish relationships if we are not trying to understand the essential that people incorporate it into their harmonious system of beliefs and representation of their reality.

Just as a beginner football player can achieve a great degree of mastery in applying all the technical execution by constant and well-dosed exercises, so you can achieve a degree of mastery in leadership if you develop the ability to truly understand the human reality in its complexion.

Perform a critical investigation of the human nature for being convinced that you can properly evaluate them. Evaluate people without losing sight of "the light" that surrounds them.

Are You Sure You Didn't Forget Anything?

On April 03, 2021

Try to be aware of what is really important to you, reflecting on experiences that do not have a precise meaning.

It happened a little earlier. I left the gym quite enthusiastic, my heart overriding my thoughts, avoiding any contradiction with the thinking that commits the whole chain of rational deductions. And I was thinking, and I was feeling, and I was continuing on my way, and yet something in me was constantly repeating to me: are you sure you didn't forget anything?

Somehow, I found in my attitude the same attitude full of pulsation, of inspiration of the painter who forgets to gather his utensils after finishing the work, but still enjoys the miracle that could give him life. And so, there was no other way. I forgot something behind. The mind seemed to be focused on recognizing the main moment when the painter tries to assert himself fully in art, by expressing the dynamism of life, but is caught in the fragile fabric of a personal life story when time loses its hours and moments in the earthly register.

And time immediately spoke for itself. Quickly, with all the spirit of an invincible youth, I ran back to the gym, took my forgotten sweater. Before I left the room again, I glanced back, noticing that those in the room were focused on their work. Nothing seemed to line up around me. The distance between me and everything around me could have been called "depth of penetration of the wave of living", through excess of intelligibility, in the continuous present of a memory devoid of emotional charge.

So, I listened to my thoughts, I measured my emotions, I let myself be overwhelmed by the alleged asymmetries that are often noticed in the arts, such as: deviation from direction, the preference of the eye to perceive only the appearance of reality, the interaction between a repetitive image and a perspective of dynamism devoid of horizons, or a movement without a certain impulse from the outside world (but able to create a process from the process itself).

Leadership: Can you emphasize a characteristic of the phenomena that disturb you, given all that differentiates and particularizes them in the relationship between what you expect to see and what you did not see at first glance?

But what interested me most when I returned to the gym was the inherent dynamism that spilled over into the hustle and bustle of my inner world. It is not about a forgotten object in a place with a lot of physical and mental load, it is not about any rational fabric in the bosom of which the threads are in a complete tension. Even if you could feel a curious pressure that usually occurs under conditions of great physical exertion, which I had never felt before. But the fact that, suddenly, returning to that place, I felt cloistered in a corner of the world without horizons.

I simply did not see myself framed in the painting of a painter who carries out his art in complete silence, at the same time wanting to explore a new approach to how to make and appreciate an artistic product. What I had forgotten about the gym was actually a way of exploring the inner world, the relationship I had with myself, not with others. It was a way to disconnect from my daily routine, a way to be surprised by what is preconscious (that is, things I might become aware of when I try not to think about them).

A forgotten sweater denotes the action of a confused mind that mixes times, spaces and emotions, a life, a destiny, a call, and then sinks them all into a trace I left unintentionally.

For a few minutes I floated in a kind of whirlwind of adaptations, of reconfigurations of intentions and meta-perspectives, without understanding what was happening to me. Something made me think at that moment, but at the same time I had to not slip too hard into an area of expansive and eidetic emotions.

Maybe, however, I had to forget something in the gym, so as not to forget that what can hurt me the most is what inspires and makes me feel good: the decision to stay within the limits of an approximate normalcy. The forgotten sweater cannot change my mood, just as my mood does not depend on my return to a place where any passivism disappears, giving way to the perspective of dynamism to bring changes to an intensified existence.

Rather, I believe that my temporary return to the gym has managed to change the reality of the urban landscape, turning it into a place of self - reflection. I understood that I had to evolve as a man who recognized his responsibility for self-reflection and new beginnings, by the simple conviction that my return to a certain place could not change my destiny, could not overturn my conceptions of life, cannot change my mood or my positive thinking.

Leadership explains why my attitude needs to be revised by avoiding the tendency to subject myself emotionally to a moment of inattention, or forgetfulness, which in the next moment changes and turns in another direction where there is only one control valve: self-reflection and self-assessment.

Are You Sure You Didn't Forget Anything? Always ask yourself this question when you feel that something is missing from your life, from within you, stating that everything you have left behind can be a small demonstration of what is before you. You just have to know how to tell the difference between what you know and what you think you know, or the difference between what you were, what you are, and especially what you will be.

I could emphasize a feature of the processes and phenomena that disturbed me in the relationship between what I expected to see and what I did not see for the first time. This characteristic is called "deviation from causal determinism", and it marks a return to what should have been normal.

Art Between Color And Life

On October 26, 2016

Develop your fascination with the picture that reason gives you, about what you would ideally be, without getting bogged down in a self-knowledge that only evokes your shortcomings.

After abandoning the other projects, the colorful Pushkin film begins to come to life. Images of the poet's life are born along with colorful images. Color is not a picturesque addition, but is an organic part of the dramatic structure of the film. The scene from "Boris Godunov" is integrated into this movie, in the form of a nightmare. Scenes from the poet's life, appearing in Eisenstein's imagination in an eruptive sequence of chromatic explosions, focus on a dramatic pivot.

I. Tinianov's hypothesis about Karamzina, which was Pushkin's "unknown love", becomes the centerpiece of the film, the soberest and most beautiful biographical theme of all the possible themes of the poet's biographical material.

The moments in the life of the poet are shaped around this dramatic pivot. This explains the phenomenon of don-juanism, and various episodes get firm outlines, "not just picturesque, according to a strict coloristic, but a pictorial blueprint." *****

Leadership: Are the scenes in your life going according to a strict coloristic range, developed around a pivot of exceptionality measured by a specific way of presenting another point of view on intellectual work?

Leadership is a result of intellectual work, social roles, and existential evaluation. And intellectual work is a phenomenon of the experience of creation, of the immediate, of reflection, of conception, it is like a kind of mystical experience endowed with an artistic character. So, along with the scope of goals, tasks, skills and responsibilities involved in the process of becoming, leadership becomes the central axis of self-representation on the scale of perfection that is more defined than any other through coloring.

Coloring creates the premises of a "trial and error" evolution to reach a moment of life in which man can feel fulfilled. Coloring is that fascination that does not pass, that persistent state of mind towards an omnipresent phenomenon in our lives, to the malleability of the roles we perform. It is that fascination with the image that reason gives us, about how we could ideally be without getting bogged-down into a self-knowledge that only evokes our shortcomings.

If you want to explain the effects of a developmental action that more or less affects your ability to make a higher sense of existence, you must generate the motion of a pushing pin that acts on your own motivations and actions. You have to constantly make a fascination for what makes you live, for what makes you the best of version of yourself around an image that demonstrates the lyrical nature of art, exploring themes such as "chromatic explosion."

The theme that applies to any form of image, observed in an eruptive sequence of "chromatic" explosions, is represented by those moments in life when you feel that you are part of a painting showing the evolution of a phenomenon of combining many forms of art over a long period of time.

The pivot is the essential support point for performing an activity or process. Through the pivot, outlined over the long-term consequences of the "themes" of our existence, sometimes approached with self-irony, sometimes with understanding and amusement, we pursue a dual purpose that introduces a new model of the meaningful consumer subject in high-intensity moments:

First of all, the capturing of the states of intensity, accumulated from the imperative need of imagination to resist the raw reality, parallel to the valorization of the elements of truth extracted from the explanations you give about what is happening to you. What you experience more intensely, more alertly, more constructively must reflect the totality of a painting that depicts the strength and significance of your life, while the intuitive leap takes place only by channeling and focusing on elements of art, plastic language, made beyond the borders of strict classicism.

Then deciphering the functions loaded with meanings that are fulfilled in the current confrontation by the innovative ideas that transform and continue to transform the world in which you live. These features indicate the main evolutionary and ideological orientations, as they reveal the specific case of a certain modality of existence based on creation and its themes.

Leadership is the consequence of the exploitation of an artistic image that can be understood due to the advanced intellectual work that acts as an event of great impact in the concrete space of cultural, scientific and spiritual creation.

Art Between Color and Life is only for creators perfected in life who know how to capture new content value in the picture itself kneaded in order to load themselves with unsuspected sources of imagination and motivation.

Art between Creation and God (II)

On September 19, 2017

A good exterior is the best recommendation of inner perfection.

I felt trapped in a steep spiral of destiny that seemed to endanger my highest dreams. A spiral of strange states that climbed and descended in a whirlpool of inevitable and endless influences, seeming to be like an endless wall that closed the horizon, because we were too far-fetched by the right / left order of happiness that translates, in a certain way, by the intensity of the intellectual and physical effort of being: The Best of The Best.

Curiosity, imagination, and the act of creation, a palette of pastels and colors, the conditions of separation from the factor called "Tolerance to Risk", seemed to receive that attribute of intuitively crossing the unseen realities and promises of God. Its purpose is to re-prioritize its principles on other principles, yet unthought of by the human mind, which prefigured a New World Order.

The drawing, which is first and foremost in the mind of the artist, the image that only a bold trend can resize its importance, is inevitably traversed by the thrill of an astonishment in front of a corner of heaven created by nature. The painting work is the tonal unity given to the fact that is visibly described by the various shades of a little known, strange, private, mysterious reality like birth and death, offering for analysis the image of an invisible world.

Leadership: How does unwavering belief in the particularity of a profound message help you overcome outside influences and remain authentic in your creations?

At stake was a custom work, an instinctive reaction of spiritual defense, a step fundamental to thinking and its fields, openers of cultural and spiritual horizons, springing from the singular values of the stylistic matrix: reflection, inspiration and contemplation of the divine, help bring awareness of good and evil, beauty and destruction.

Only the unshakable belief in the particular field of forces manifested in small framework of the expansion tendencies of the divine message, coming from who knows where, could convey to me the subtle taste of valuable paintings. Only a triple action towards natural imaginations, taking as model the proportions of the very body of creation, the illusion of existence, joining a particular reality totally different from the dream I hoped for, could pull me from under the plastic laws of this world.

Leadership: Can you provide an image representation where "shadow" takes on the gradation of "light" so as to create a subtle balance between the visible and the invisible, bringing forth the depth of the divine?

The warrior of the light, the artist most useful of metaphysical art is constructed of a special fiber, a kind of mixture of spirit and matter, instinct, reason, and consciousness all heated at a constant pressure in the name of the immortal desire of treading in the steps of perfection in the deeper layers of the transpersonal dimension that miraculously lights up, as a lamp in the dark, the flame of the Holy Spirit.

He holds in his hand a formidable weapon, the word. The soul keeps an unspoken love and a pain deaf, humanity. Within the aesthetics of the philosophical origin, esoteric combination, is recognized the magical ability to change the appearance of things and bring them closer to the miracle of a world that while seen, remains unseen. But sublime, authentic and enviable.

An exceptional artist can provide a representation of the image in which the "shadow" receives the quality grading of "coloring", suggesting that mandatory prerequisite to its separation from the rest of the world, thus becoming whole in divine love, remaining close to everything carrying footprints in conjunction with the plans that God has regarding His plan.

The leader is a creator of inspirational content. He is developed under the guidance of art that includes in its structure broader considerations, both aesthetic and metaphysical, on the nature and revelation of Divinity.

You can get close to a boundless power if you can say "yes" to any challenges brought forth by the chiaroscuro, merging separate entities and even antagonistic: soul-body, man and nature, black and white, with all revelation and faith.

Lighting, art governed by clear confirmation of beauty and virtue, is easily explained, as you try to explain chromatic treatment, meaning that only an artist who insists to make a difference between natural color and color pictorial image can understand it.

Here, somewhere, falls the technique for applying pure color in adjacent hues, or how open or removed they are, having as a guiding point the famous saying of Baltasar Gracian: "A good exterior is the best recommendation of inner perfection."

Creative leadership is the ability to shape the proportions of one's existence after the divine pattern, transforming particular illusions and realities into a creation that transcends the ordinary laws of the world.

Art between Creation and God corresponds to the spiritual concept applied in art.

He who seeks perfection in the intimacy of the artwork should receive the specific call that God gives only to those who can suggest color, shape and natural beauty of the world, where the "shadow" makes an angle with the unseen spiritual reality.

Art between Creation and God (III)

On September 24, 2017

The deeper you are, the more your art gets brighter and appears to come with a universal message.

I was convinced that I had to fulfill a "service" full of meaning, clearly supported by the adventure of colors from a palette full of vibrations, persisting only as a mandatory step of apprenticeship on the spiritual path, at all stages of my training as an artist in terms of a researcher's conclusion: "Everything has become scientific."

Where there is a visual element, you can always find a malady of imagination, a unique combinatorial form difficult to classify in the speculative-conceptual area of chromatics.

Something strange was luring me towards the fulfillment of the pictorial act, the presence of a magnetic force, fully absorbing me and dictating the course of my art. An innovator who does not separate the study of nature from erudition successively tries out all nuances, all depths, all subtleties, all angles of view and color interpretation, all possible combinations, just as a poet places his creation and existence in the cosmic game, which man, or God, plays with innocence and purity.

Leadership: How do you perceive the moment when everything you touch takes on a different sensitivity and meaning, as if you were led by a higher force?

Certainly, the awareness of my talent came with time. The modeling factors are the subtle clues strewn along the great works of art. And yet, I have learned the most important thing from the Italian master Pino Daeni, who enjoyed the subtle taste of pictorial values:

"Any color, either as it is or mixed, produces various effects, but none of them has the power to render through itself the natural effects themselves, for this requires a skilled master's practice and mind."

Thus, a vague impulse towards the fulness of things, a fullness that cannot be easily attained, is strengthened by a spiral of states that ascend and descend into a whirl of influences felt as a divine touch: be fulfilled, but noteworthy to Those From Above, which are higher than Those From Below.

There are moments when everything you touch gets another color, another meaning, another kind of sensibility, as if you were led by a magical force, beyond reason, accessed only by feeling, which puts a drop of shine there where everything is matte.

Leadership: Is your art meant to make it easier to approach the ultimate thought-based bridge between two worlds?

An art governed by the most intense pleasures of creation, supplying all the gifts that accompany youth and lacking in other ages, in which the divine defies the ephemeral with the illusion of eternity provided by some forms of authentic perfection, a perfect execution of the work manifested in the passing world through natural imaginations.

Like Tiziano Vecellio, always ready to endanger my life but never the opera, I approached the plan of salvation by releasing the creation of all the corruption of the relationship with the ephemeral and its limits of acceptance of the unanimously accepted reality, to be a shareholder in the communion of man with God.

In turn, consciousness continued to express itself with the same serenity as to accept my limits and qualities. Striving for accepting to be subjected to an uplifting intervention, the conscience cried out of all the rescuing will of upholding art: "Man, be free of your sins ! "

Do you feel in all my words a thirst for sincerity about what I think and insufficient appetite for form, for change?

Taking art to the level of the divine means to blend colors so that the ensemble thus created has the power to reproduce through itself the effects of a living and infinite universe.

Always within the artist, to whom God has given talent and grace, themselves found in the creative content of an unimaginable vast art, there is a fruit that can always be the object of all desires, the plastic expression of balanced relations: the art of the word.

Always convinced of the subtle taste of pictorial values, the artist takes his imagination on another high point, the matter accumulated in the immense cosmic space. Every moment and side of his life manifests that hope of totally and instantly erasing any aesthetic sins through the spell of the communicative process.

In art, the communicative process includes the projection of messages sustained by associations between parallel worlds that complement and coexist in a space called "Inside-Out". What you accept within needs to be created outside of you.

Visionary leadership involves recognizing wholeness in seemingly simple things, transforming them with sensitivity and mastery into a creation that reveals the harmony between simplicity and complexity.

Writer John Granger, trying to decipher Harry Potter's secret key, going from the secular to the sacred element, tells us where we should start looking towards those above: "When we pray in front of an icon or when we look up to heaven, our spirit or soul (intellectually) realizes the majesty or perfection of form as a symbol of a point of correspondence with a superior reality that intervenes in our world."

I do not know exactly why, but surely the most complete artists have found their intuition and expression of connection with the divine by the action of art and its constitutive symbols on emotions: the deeper you are, the more your art gets a more intense glow and seems to be accompanied by a universal message.

The active co-ordinate in the approach to the high rise must be argued and demonstrated by the experiment called the "artistic invention" in the reflexive element of a subordination of art to the unseen reality.

An artist of great spiritual mobility is able to go beyond the limits imposed by the conventional revelation of this reality.

Art between Creation and God emphasizes the beauty evoked by colors. They find their correspondence in a world founded by means of working and visual expression, used to be true by spiritual-existential correlation.

Art between Creation and God (I)

On September 12, 2017

The Great Work of Art serves those lines that are called divergences, going from a point of view, spreading forward to an infinity of time embedded in the power of a mystical force.

My work is entirely in the direction of feeling, thought, and fantasy, often incomprehensible even for the cultivated spirits, to whom God has not promised the positive response to a special prayer, that outpouring of light and grace upon which only the able artists to raise his art to a high level of faith.

Just a firm action toward reconciling what is mysterious, giving up the old dogmas to the reference value of the inseparable elements "form" and "background", a value called "pure gold" by aestheticians, taking as a model the proportions of blending the very composition of light and idea that conveys the artistic emotion, could attain that noble trait of cosmic power: "God is one with man."

There is in any artist one terra magical, a hermetic knowledge, a divine blood flow, a trace of cosmic material, a desire elusive to the man motivated by pleasure that passes beyond the religious aspect that goes persuasively into avoiding any circumstance of the image of the science that was born by the convergent contributions of some representative physicos.

The divine miracle happens if you look at your work as a form of artistic expression of imagined creation, in which the least accessible things are only seen if you are aware of their presence.

Somehow, the eyes of my mind always descend down to the two torrential valleys, unshakable in the proximity of God, formed as if in honor of an aesthetic and spiritual alchemy: the depth interpretation, as far as I seek to express something behind the image, and an orientation to the research of the world and to the causes of fundamental and profound things, configured in the form of extremely powerful metaphors.

An indefinite trait, something contagious, powerful and irresistible, like a spark in the sky in the infinite darkness, urges me to dream: Make a Wish ! It goes beyond the patterns of the divine archetypes that eternity reflects as shadows of creatively approached reality, from multiple perspectives, in a context quite different from the concrete content of the notion of inspiration.

Who would seek to approach me through one of the most fertile cardinal preoccupations, such as human knowledge or thought centered on detail, without which art is inconceivable, be it a written word or a plastic work, an aesthetic emotion or a form of protest, would inevitably encounter the obsession of the artist looking for particular forms of composition in unknown images.

Leadership: Are you able to decide the fate and direction in which your creation is confused with the presence of God?

My work is served by those lines which are called divergences, and which, going from one point, spread further to an infinity of time embedded in the power of a mystical force. Lines fed by faith in the particularity of a field of forces manifested in a centrifugal game of the tendencies of understanding and communication of the divine message, so that preaching manifests itself as a proclamation and appropriation of the authentic spiritual teaching beyond the petty framework of the daily.

And since in any consumption of increased creativity the work is perceived from an original perspective, from the concept of a term with positive connotation and beneficial finality, as such I tend to think that my art is a way to experience and reproduce a spark in building the relationship with the universe.

For Italian painter Cennino Cennini the act of creation is connected with eternity, receiving an influx from God indirectly through the spiritual world. Wanting to show how you can learn painting, she confided: "To be an artist it is required to have a rich imagination (fantasia) and skill in hand, to find things unseen (hidden under the shadow of nature) so that you may reveal them afterwards, with the help of your hands, wanting to prove that what does not exist – is."

The concept of art as a means of manipulating unpredictable things is accomplished with the help of an imagination stimulation reaction, starting from the idea that what is lacking in a picture can be a regulating organ, one direction.

In leadership you have to make progress in this direction.

Art between Creation and God brings as a first challenge that of finding a new possibility of merging with the Universal Spirit, defining your path to be a form of creation in which visions, feelings, experiences and thoughts are expressed through things that although are not seen – exist.

Art Between Essence And Creation

On August 07, 2016

Discover your superior quality of being original, through a pertinent and well done analysis of the viewpoints that produce and disseminate the highest of knowledge.

Generally, knowledge, at least informative, of the ideas that were accredited in those years concerning art, with application in cinematography, is important for the understanding of one of Eisenstein's sources of thinking. His artistic thinking from that era didn't come about spontaneously, it doesn't represent a curiosity, an intellectual quirk, but is rather consistent with the logical evolution of contemporary ideas.

Vertov declared that the special suppleness of montage permits the introduction of a "cine-study" of any political or economic idea. Knowing this, we will no longer be surprised by the appearance of Eisenstein's film "The Strike". The same Vertov concluded here that film no longer requires the presence of drama, of the mise-en-scène. Historian Lebedev, in a study of the history of Soviet cinema, noted that one of the base principles of the Proletkuit artistic experiment was that of "collectivism" that excluded the existence of individual heroes in favor of the masses, collectives.

The idea of typing was in turn applied by Eisenstein even in theater and had its origin in his passion for the comedy dell'arte and in the theatrical concepts of Meyerhold. *****

Leadership: How much can you give from the overflow of your knowledge, so that the originality of your creation aligns with the established agreement between the evolution of ideas and the artistic experiment?

The thinking of an artist, pouring over the abstract models of representing the facts of knowledge in the dynamic of creation, so that afterwards the process can be supplemented, constantly, by means of recomposing facts with the real, has originality only if he participates in the conduct of an experience of broadening horizons.

In art, this broadening of horizons, being congenital to the complexity full of nuances of the interplay between the aesthetic and the functional, carries the artist towards a never-before-seen blooming – especially if he manages to find similarities and differences between the feel of uniqueness and the transfer of facts of knowledge that contradict unanimously accepted ideas. The originality of a creation depends on the understanding you attribute to an encompassing thought, based on successive interpretations and reinterpretations whose truth is systematically negotiable and subject to adjustments, resumes, changes of circumstances and effects.

Just as poetry cannot exceed the boundaries of accuracy, not showing accuracy in the execution of a mechanical thing, so too knowledge, in constant transformation, cannot be considered a process of gradual discovery of complexity if it doesn't represent through the very related subject a certain predominance in expressing the unity between idea and the ideal of judgment, related to the creation of compositional harmony.

Essence in leadership is what lyrics are for poetry: a high ordering reason of the elements of meaning that contribute to the creation of a harmony in the relationship between subject and revelation.

And, on the other hand, to anchor yourself in the essence of forms of thinking, through a unique journey of ideas, means to always seek variety in unity. It means to find the way of expression of your own beliefs adapted to the prime matter springing from that knowledge that allows a deeper view into the structure of objectivism of which is tied your representative part.

Originality is your representative part processed in the objective version of the essence that is discovered through creation. While the artistic experiment aims to establish the concordance between the logical evolution of the ideas and the acquaintance of the knowledge in extensio through the prism of the comparisons, that the art acquires the value of jewelry, and the creation acquires the value of reference in the life of others.

The relation between the subject and the revelation is constituted as a chain of beliefs and ideas, perceptions and values, which the director crosses on the way to the mechanisms of art, to its evolution, so that his thinking focused on innovation does not stop in front of the realities of the real existence. Being a revelation, the director's relationship with a well-documented and engaging subject, taken from the same area of art and creation, makes the values, ideas of perceptions and beliefs he crosses on the way to surrealism or fiction, confer to the real existence an expression of the sublime. Not everyone is capable of such a performance !

The subject is the story you want to stage, the revelation is the story you raise to a surreal level.

Art Between Essence And Creation materializes in that superior quality of man of being original in a pertinent and well done analysis of the points of view that produce and disseminate the highest of knowledge.

Art Between Experience And Creation

On December 12, 2016

Learn to turn leadership into a creation, in terms of ideas present in the "landscape" of previous experience.

Death, the idea of death is always present here, in Mexico. Eisenstein was only attracted in the beginning by this unusual holiday of the Day of the Dead. But here, life echoes constantly under death. Death throws away everything that is obsolete and generates new birth. Although people left thousands of years of civilization behind them, you feel the sense of a beginning. Death and birth are closely intertwined at every step. Looking at the sarcophagus, you get the feeling that it is a cradle. Atop the millennial pyramid grows a rose bush. On a carved skull, you can still make out the words: "I was like you – you shall be like me."

For the Day of the Dead, children play with miniature skeletons and munch on chocolate coffins and sugar skulls. The same man it seems, with the same profile, looks even nowadays with the same naiveté and excitement with which Guatemoczin once looked from the bush on which he was placed by the Spaniards and the one from today seems to have the same strength to resist without groan the tortures, as he himself when found in flames, calmly said to a weaker one next to him: "I do not sit on roses either." But it is overwhelming, especially that Day of the Dead that begins with a sad feast at the grave of the ancestor and ends with a party full of sensuality.

In this emotional context, in this sensorial ambience, in this complex landscape, carrier of plastic possibilities of interpreting emotion, the film "Que viva Mexico ! " is born. *

Leadership: Must what you lived in a previous experience fulfill the meaning you assign to a new context of creation in which the specific emotional force is evident?

The whole concept of leadership, to which a certain quantity of information-reality reports to, discerned by prior knowledge, can be formulated in the following way: "I was like you – you shall be like me." It is about the power to be invulnerable to the aspects of exemplarity, deeply related to the emotional area, because it is in your nature to find similarities between what you admire in someone else and what you want to represent for that someone in order to build an autonomous entity.

This too is a special wisdom, a surpassing of an early stage of discovering a relationship between what you know and what gives you food for thought, from your evolution. Followed by a different stage, one more advanced, which is supported by the birth of a new way of interpreting reality which can be translated into an idea. The birth of the new, in an emotional context, must have as its starting point the dual experience of an existential approach such as: "Everything that happened in a situation may be repeated in another place and at another stage."

The profile of a new form of art is similar to every idea that echoes where you least expect it. It is characterized by the availability and particularity of an effective takeover of a foundation based on observation and interpretation of certain events, news, aspects of impact, which meet at every step of the way, in relation to the modified form of the substantial that constitutes an interest.

What you live in a previous experience is only a way of capturing and living the reality of a whole, the connection between things, phenomena, parts that fit together. With the purpose of understanding what is important to be changed at an image that emerges by reference to a theme based on "the birth of the new."

Leadership is the experience of being someone else in a context where being the same creates the premises for a creative and dynamic interdependence, in the form of the dualism between "everything that happened due to someone's will" and "what I can do to make everything happen due to my will".

Art Between Experience And Creation aims to extenda self-foundation to the level of sensitive imminence whose power is only visible under the conditions of a totality stored in memory, used subsequently to achieve a custom theme.

Leadership is the result of creation, it is the resumption of a theme addressed by an idea present in the "landscape" of previous experience.

Art Between Frames And Effects

On November 16, 2016

Establish a connection between ideas, emotions, mental states, so that they can support your assertion in a specific context of expansion of the effects generated with the help of certain themes.

In Eisenstein's film, plastic order is completed by the use of color: the theme of cruelty and death embodied by the Teutonic Knights is, on a chromatic scale, translated – apparently paradoxical – in the white of the capes, while the theme of heroism that characterizes the Russian fighters has as a chromatic equivalent – black.

The dynamic of all frames is in line with the appreciation of these plastic characteristics. The Teutonic Knights always appear in strictly geometrical formations, unlike the movements of the Russian troops, which are irregular, but ample, in successive streams and waves. In montage, the alternation of the white Teutonic Knights' movements with that of the black Russian troops creates plastic rhymes entered into a symphony of movement.

*In parallel there is another series of plastic themes, equivalent to ideas, emotions, mental states, which orchestrate together with the basic themes: the shape of the helmets, the theme of the lances that by their successive positions – horizontal or vertical – plastically comment on the events, the theme of fire closely linked to the Russians, that of the boot correlated with the Teutonic Knights .**

Leadership: Is the dynamic of all frames of expansion of the effects that you want to generate with the help of a popular theme in line with the appreciation of certain plastic characteristics?

Always when a combination of all cultural, existential and conceptual characteristics is attempted, developed in various scenes through the interaction of some impact characters, authors of great deeds, a so-called individualization takes place, a stronger focus on becoming something and a journey that gives the measure of a certain theoretical-methodological construct in psychology.

And this construct, in cinema, as in painting, creates "rhymes" (matches) between what is missing from the theme so that the painting can be complete and what you would like to be different for the painting to be easily customized. Basically, a sensational theme has the role of plastically commenting on past events, by introducing a dynamic of the imaginary and the most certain expression in a picture of emotions and concepts derived from it. This painting emphasizes the finding of new artistic ways of expressing the beliefs embedded in the director's consciousness and intellect of an imposed, lived and fully assumed history.

The theme presents the ordering of some facts that deserve to be brought to light, it is a tendency of the director to fit into the existential sense of man who wants to shape his perspective of approaching the world with famous scenes and prominent characters brought back to life. The theme is the result of a perpetual search of causes, approaches and effects, entered into a symphony of movement, by the interaction of cognitive processes, volitional and emotional, that intertwine in a continuous dynamic of the frames of montage.

To artistically comment on certain important events in history means to reconstruct a world whose reality is between a vision based on the importance of the imaginary and a vision based on artistic knowledge (and on the artistic conception of a story).

Leadership is, at least in first phase, a rewriting of certain themes, motifs, conventions, specific means to achieve films, crystallized into a unitary structure of frames and images that demonstrates that closeness between ideas, emotions, mental states, under various conditions of exploitation. All this shows the possibilities of enhancement of plastic characteristics – i.e. specific means of expression.

These means of expression represent a cultural/intellectual choice associated with the self-affirmation of an artist in a specific context of expansion of the effects generated with the help of a theme.

To prove your role of a great artist in developing a premiere in the psychology of a different world, to bring a unique vision over a reality not always considered, you must capitalize on these opportunities to integrate themes into a device that has the power to amplify a specific scene. In cinema, this is possible by intensifying color or graphical overlays.

Leadership is like the territory of a dynamic of images, always reportable to some facts that deserve to be transposed into a vision meant to keep you breathless and with a knot of emotion in your throat.

Art Between Frames And Effects highlights that dynamic structure, the connection between ideas, emotions, mental states, which needs interpretation, the active interaction with the observer, to be able to materialize into a reality in which all cultural phenomena unite, interact and give a totalizing meaning.

Art Between Life And Death

On March 22, 2017

Model your thinking not only depending on how you live your life, but on how life is organized around you, creating a painting thought out in the colors of a mysterious reality.

What exactly triggers these aggression reactions specific to predators? All the skill of the artist in me, in the name of the vigilance necessary for the understanding of the future of medicine, must consist in situating myself from an angle of view from which I can see the whole nature in distress, as deep as possible, the particular and the random, as Earth on a map. It is to place myself in a broad context of treating exceptions to the fabric of life that will enable me to not only feel certain symptoms of the disease but also to react to the violence the disease imposes and transmits.

After all, I have to manage my own urges, biological and psychological impulses, the experiences specific to the various disease that can be of great value in the diagnosis and prognosis of the disease, through a process of self-observation and awareness of the effects of changing my evolution. The new discoveries produced by a light of general and detailed significance at the same time could help me find a targeted antidote on the gene in question and counterbalance the effects of triggering an entire epidemic.

An important clinical significance is the transient or constant character of the endemicity of the virus, the conditions of emergence of the infectious process, the possibilities of transformation of the substances that are involved in another stage of virus replication, but especially the response of the virus to other infections without clear, visible symptoms, as well as the amount of virus eliminated through saliva, blood, breathing, contact with infected skin, or through the surrounding elements.

To all of this is added the significant sigh of James Joyce's hero: "The times have grown out of their place. Woe to me that I was born to put them back."

Leadership: Do the driving forces of your art consist in producing ideas from the interpretation of the different peculiarities of life, reflecting structures with self-modeling functions?

I'm Gerry Lane, a scientist. The mission of my art is to reproduce the idea of life, in its entirety, through the exploration and intercession of nature, as among complicated and unseen races in the form of a disease. And the attempt to address the way the disease is reflected in my work, triggered by the reflect of the creative force of nature, is not a poetic adventure, it is not an exploration of man's anatomy, but the completion of a great idea.

Such art from a large chapter of practicing medicine and medical psychology is the result of the act of creation. It is the consequence of locating the source of the singular event materialized in a theory that has the function of self-correcting attitude and of shaping my thinking around how I perceive the world in the event of a life-and-death struggle, even if I do not know too well that which I am fighting against. How does this virus work in its early stages?

A slight dizziness, a faint state, or perhaps a state of mental exhaustion, like a sort of internal trembling. Thus, nothing aggressive within me. Which means I am not a bearer of the virus. Beyond appearances, these are clues to investigating a symptom that occurs in the forcing phase of human resistance limits, as if to test the fruit of an elevated mind depending on the result of the comparison between certain biological constants of the body and the functional explorations of the affected organs.

Michelangelo, in architecture, treasured most the agitated mass, crossed by movement, perceiving it as an organic shape capable of being modeled or sculpted, as a form that gives birth to a symphony of light and shadow. I, as an artist of creation and scientific research, have come to appreciate the dynamism of a scene in real life that provides me with a place in the process of a new change, with a beginning and an end, of a reset of the unwanted relationship between random circumstances and the fragility of a revived hope in reuniting with the hazard.

The definition of an artist's mission in leadership, with regard to the continuous version of personal transformation, is obtained from the perspective of justifying as state favorable to the idea of development in the context of a decisive event.

The personal power that is specific to the art of shaping the idea of life is obtained from a compositional framework of the effect of accepting a mission without a great chance of success, being at an angle of view from which you can see the whole nature in distress, as deeply as possible, the peculiar and the random.

Art Between Life And Death captures the acceptance or abandonment of scientific search for the causes, effects, and factors favoring you as an artist or as a victim.

Model your thinking not only depending on how you live your life, but how life is organized around you, creating a picture conceived in the colors of a mysterious reality in which total abandonment or a miracle justifies your entire destiny.

Art Between Man And Creation

On July 29, 2016

Raise your "particular" to an artistic level, by integrating into your work all the experiences and all the reasons that determined you to rediscover yourself in the most authentic way.

Eisenstein works on the film completely absorbed by his passion for the subject, concerned throughout the whole day only with Pushkin. Variants appear, numerous sketches, the script is shaping up. Simultaneously, his thoughts regarding colored film are mentioned, of which he writes theoretical studies that he'll continue until his death (the last line, written, and interrupted by death, will be of a new study about color).

Twenty-two manuscripts containing research on color, totaling hundreds of pages, are found in his archive: research on what he calls "dramatic color function".

For the first time in his work, now, in this movie about Pushkin, poetic love appears in the erotic theme with its nuanced psychological values. Based on the acidic sarcastic metaphor from the film "The old and the New", on the caricature parody from "Que viva Mexico", on the symbolic and stylized mineralized erotic from "Alexandr Nevski", now, for the first time, love becomes the theme of a film, portrayed nuanced, with a psychological observation of high finesse, over the motives and the evolution of the erotic sentiment.

*Eisenstein wishes to rehabilitate the great playwright, Pushkin, in his film, cancelling the Don-Juan image and replacing it with that of a person intensely and authentically in love. **

Leadership: Can you introduce in your creation the experience of being a complete whole, presenting it nuanced, with a psychological observation of great finesse, over the motives and the evolution of your personal development?

Always, the artist, morally and emotionally exalted by the thrilling completion of a higher existence, by the materialization of ideals they've defended for years with patience and suffering, possesses two defining properties.

First a property of the mind, enveloping him like a halo: that of acquiring the knowledge of absolute truth, giving it a wider freedom of interpretation of the image he creates of himself. And a property of his remarkable aspirations: to integrate into his work all the experiences, all the reasons that determined him to rediscover himself.

The man who lights a spark of meaning into the evolution of his own thinking is a consequence of the reasons that impel him towards the realms of art that has at the center of its essence the authenticity of experiencing the feeling of "personal value concentrated in an image".

Creation is that mark of leadership that can withstand extreme conditions, that you are unable to understand if you are not a novel full of life, full of passionate sequences, in which the hero has to fight the hardships of life by himself first.

Thus, creation is a reflection of the experience of being a complete whole and of being in a close union with the hero you represent. This is one of your affirmation effects as an artist.

The artist who introduces into his own work the experience of being a complete whole, portraying it nuanced, with a psychological observation of great finesse over the motives and evolution of personal development, goes on to state that he is not merely a symbolic effort of rediscovering himself, he is not merely a symbolic archetype that causes introspection, not just a symbolic triumph of any form of excitement in the middle of things.

But, abolishing even the last barrier that separates him from the infinite of whispers, from the effect of a journey carried through, he gets to convey in his work that profoundness of personal understanding that allows the others to see the way in which he himself was formed: between love and hate, easy and hard, cancelling the image of a man tried by fate and replacing it with that of an authentic and intense love of life.

Art Between Man And Creation can represent a difficulty of communicating messages full of truths if you fail to express your manifestations of existence at the top of the steps of perpetuating values, through a dynamic of development, to the benefit of self-knowledge.

The peculiar is a type of connection between you and the result of your experiences, gradually transformed into a unique creation.

Art Between Preference And Thematic

On August 14, 2016

Relate your personality to the level of a character found at the base of your creation, following the re-analysis of its predominant way of exposure in the artistic consciousness.

During this period, Eisenstein gets his hands on a book about the compositional procedures of Tolstoy in "Hagi Murad" and "Holstomer", a genuinely emotional story about construction. In this way, a new solution is given to him through transfer. Therefore, the procedure analyzed in that book is that everything is shown through the "backward" consciousness of a character. Why should he not do the same? Why not resolve the passing of those 33 years from the second stage to the last stage of his film in this way?

It's so simple: one's consciousness from before the war, isolated for three decades, which now collides with the new reality, expressed through the construction of the channel. In this way, the time gap, up until now a difficulty in solving composition, becomes an artistic necessity. "In the case in which the calendar wouldn't have imposed these 33 years, they would have to be invented, imposed by force."

Now, the old singer Tohtasin, one of the characters, shaped his path, he has where to go to in the third part of the film, becoming a "reverse Holstomer". *****

Leadership: Do you express a preference for a unique thematic able to represent you as a model of artistic communication, through the consciousness of a character who joins your life story?

Due to the complex relationship between authenticity and the premises of constructing an identity of the idea of art, the artist (on which a madness of the combination between fiction and reality can be projected) feels compelled to strengthen his means of validating creation, showing a preference for the unique thematic by means of the "backward" or "advanced" consciousness of a character. By the identity of the art idea is meant the resistance part of an emblematic construction, which has become a kind of necessity for the artist to breathe a lost world in the "darkness of time", to dilute the content of an exposed message as a reflection of his creative side.

Therefore, the way in which you practice the highest knowledge, the prime production factor of discoveries, supporting the assessment of the real characteristics of constructing art, creates the imperious need of expression on a different subject, added on the existential trunk of a personality found in a dynamic psychological manifestation.

Here we refer to a model of artistic communication whose main asset is the reference to a character played in a film production that is revealed to the viewers through the interactions between the director's Ego and his Alter-Ego. The story of a character is the courage of a director to change a reality depending on how he thinks the events should happen, yet that reality will remain in the memory of the world, and even change it.

What knowledge can be attributed to a narrative court, within the artistic act, so that a theme between reality and fiction can be achieved? And what would happen if the image of a certain rationality would not have a chance of success because it cannot establish a viable relationship with surrounding reality?

Leadership: Are you able to perceive artistic knowledge from the perspective of a creative experience called "a passage beyond the mirror", so as to allow your consciousness to shorten the distance between reality and fiction?

Here is a new character, an abstract identity, perfect for a less explored thematic, belonging to sources of composition stemming from the bond formed between the customized option and the permanent shaping of roles depending on context. And the consciousness of this character intervenes, as being superior to previous models, through the attitude of defense or submission, through a process of integral identification with the result of a science and of a pursuit that exalts the human will above common boundaries.

The leader is the creator of a character in a continuous transformation, a character that shows the direct effect of the release of behavior and evolution against the very work in which he is developed. Hence a new concept of the reorientation of thought or the retrieval of the real order of the values that complete the leader in the sphere of the art of manifesting himself as a source of imaginative stimulation and creative interpretation.

To relate your personality to the level of a character at the base of your creation, following a reconsideration of your predominant way of exposure, between a backward consciousness and an advanced consciousness, is a reflection of the experience of adjusting to a situation determined by the very notion of holding a depth of personal expression, as close as possible to the spirit of originality.

The creative experience called "a passage beyond the mirror" refers to the director-character relationship that faces the self-image relative to maturity, representing (as an artistic necessity) the action differently from the way others perceive it, but identical with the authoritarian requirement of the conscience that screams: "Be careful to not confuse what you want to be true with what is actually true."

Art Between Preference And Thematic concerns the transfer of manifestation of personality outside of what we know about it and the effect it produces in a point of receiving creation, expressed through a set of construction elements (attitudes-values) that serves as a support base for the concept of "transferable knowledge."

What you transfer through creation, from you to your character, and vice versa, does not oppose the rigid norms of leadership. On the contrary, it is an integration of thought into a different direction of understanding, comprised between the artistic necessity of underlining the contrasts characteristic to your evolution and the necessity of discovering yourself in what you've never been before.

Art Between The Particular And The General

On August 01, 2016

Learn to see with the mind's eye, always viewing what's "in front" from "the back".

The visual fields of rabbit eyes cross each other behind their heads. The rabbit sees behind you. It has before it an invisible fragment of space. It doesn't see the world as we do. While the sheep has its eyes in such a manner that its visual fields do not converge. It sees two worlds, one right and one left, that never coincide.

A different way of seeing entails different results in regards to the visual image. Without mentioning the transformation of this perception into a way of seeing, and then into a point of view, when going from the rabbit and the sheep to man, we also raise the ambiance of social factors that eventually lead to a concept of the world.

How is the eye's mind placed – our mind's eye in this case? How does this eye view? How does this eye see? This eye who is not just anyone's eye... *****

Leadership: Do you adapt to a way of seeing that leads to the formation of a new concept of the world, revolutionizing the perception of the relationship between the particular and the general?

The rules of leadership, same as with the rules of art which state that you cannot generate illusions without also capturing the cruel truth of reality, rests on the productive efficiency of consciousness, of intellect, of the visual sense on the field of perception. These contribute not only to a shift in thinking, but more towards shaping a broader perspective, richer, more detailed on areas harder to investigate.

Such an area difficulty to investigate, which I shall name "editing area", includes a dominant image that has to be rotated from one position to another until it makes unexpected sense, a broader horizon and a role of representing a reality formed ideologically or conceptually.

Also, vision is an attribute of seeing based on regular eye movement exercises (up, down; left, right), where the ability to analyze available variants of reality from different angles is developed. In turn, the image with which the eye is accustomed to seeing is the image with which the eye anticipates tendencies and forms of reflection of a change in the surrounding reality. What decisions do your eyes make when governing multiple aspects of the surrounding reality?

Leadership: Are you able to evaluate everything with the help of the "mind's eye" in a larger field of reality, so that you can make a visual image that can be easily fixed in people's memory and consciousness?

In the continuous growth of leader performance, demanding a thorough analysis of the visual image of the ensemble of forms, things, phenomena, autonomous entities, to which we attribute features we consider truly fitting to us, we must assess all with help of the "mind's eye" in a broader field of reality.

With the mind's eye you can always view what's in "the front" from "the back". Same as the blind man forms an image of things with the help of touch, so too does the artist form an image of reality, intuitive in part, "by what he manages to not experience and, by not experiencing, create."

So we do not refer to the process of seeing only that which lays open in front of our eyes, but more to the process of seeing beyond what we usually perceive, which is missing from our inspirational arsenal. An artist transforms concrete and immediate observations into ideas that mold thinking focused on the alternation between what can be seen and what cannot be seen.

Any leader, like any artist who wants to outdo himself by modifying his projection of consciousness and reality over future evolution, improves his way of seeing two worlds: one right and one left, that never coincide.

The particular that precedes the general is the expression of a stable, unwavering vision of things that precede extraordinary achievements.

The most representative of images passed through the thought filter, so those modified with the mind's eye, are testimony to the tireless endeavors of understanding and expressing the results of a unique synthesis, the hidden qualities of a reality in which neither cause nor effect exist, but only an expression of the relation between The Particular and the general.

The Particular, existing separately from that which reality has given birth to, is a relationship of causality between things, phenomena, autonomous entities, whose unique shape can take the place of an idea at any time. However, The Particular can be the most profound expression of the unity of opposites, certifying the individual's connection to an aspiration of broader exploration of reality.

While the general is the lack of "critique" or the lack of response for The Particular, that cannot truly bring anything new to the table. The general cannot go, except in rare cases, in favor of forecasting and consequential orientation in order to assign a new dimension of knowledge that can lead to the formation a new concept of the world.

In leadership, the visual image that a well-developed vision attracts is that fragment of a space called "comparison" that we model based on the experiences lived near extraordinary things, or those that mark us decisively.

Art Between The Particular And The General addresses individuals who, with help from the mind's eye, succeed in outlining more detailed images of a hard to imagine perspective, hard to understand in a unified scientific hypothesis.

Art Between Theme And Color

On August 09, 2016

In leadership, it is not enough to pick a "default" theme, first you also need to find those predominant colors of the type "model consequence relations" visible only to connoisseurs.

All themes are similar, notes Eisenstein, because the past impregnated by color is inevitably imagined by others, at the border between the Middle Ages and Renaissance.

And editor of the general direction of cinema makes an unexpected proposal: to produce a film about the fight against the plague. The proposition seems absurd to him. Everyone insists on the use of color. Eisenstein, however, thinks of the project. The feast during the plague becomes the unique episode that interests him. Not a film in color, but a film about the color black: the blackness of the plague that spreads and floods everything, the motley carnival swallowed by the black of funeral convoy rows.

*Here is a return of the same theme of blind fatality that invades everything. He also makes sketches in this regard. But shortly thereafter, he abandons the idea. All of these plans are not to his liking, in spite of the picturesque exterior, because he looks for a theme in which color is not a decorative element, but rather becomes a necessary dramaturgical quality, raised within the theme. **

Leadership: Can you find an alternative approach of creation in which color is not a decorative element, but rather becomes a necessary quality, raised within the theme?

The duties of an artist, who knows how to turn his very vision into a true masterpiece, can be supported with the help of unitary concepts regarding the relationships between the title of the chosen theme, its content, its requirements and its versions of interpretation as a symbol of knowledge, created through the consequences of the various sources of reference addressed.

The theme is the result of receiving and processing information, images, ideas, derived largely from reality, placed amid a guessed décor, suggested or revealed following a discovery. It represents the main idea developed in a work. The reception of an image whose theme brings out the color, must be the result of a reality processed artistically and placed against the background of a new discovery about life (for example). While an idea revealed through a theme of death, on the decor of a gray or black hint suggesting the lifetime of a mortuary event, lacks that sparkle to make the difference between an authentic value and a failure.

Yet we must not omit, given that technique and execution constantly require it for the conception of the presented work, that always in the dizzying whirl of expression through artistic means, a unifying thread is preserved: the desire for revenge of fantasy over the restrictive reality.

Leadership: Can the thematic basis of the main theme you deal with be applied to the connections between a main painting and a secondary painting, so that creation can have multiple meanings?

Here is where color comes into play. If I could live a thousand lives, whose meanings overlapped, absolutely only an artist could capture in his works, I think I would manage to share only 1% of the knowledge I had the opportunity to acquire up until this moment. And this percentage decreases with the exponential increasing of experience and information. The infinite is mind's way of continuously reorganizing matter.

The great task of colors, especially in the eruption of artistic fantasy, is to dominate and harmonize this vast subject matter, in constant movement, capturing the alternation between nature, science and aesthetic, between emotions (love and hate), between the predominant traits of character (vice or virtue), etc. Colors, attributed to primordial elements, often opposed, marks through a more sustained or subtle touch everything that can appear disparate or diverse in the rational serenity of constructive harmony.

Leadership, like art, is a development of the theme through color. It comprises in its gigantic "frame" reality and fiction depending on the result of fusing the heterogeneous with bizarreness. Color is what you insert into the space of an imagined reality, so that reality acquires the natural and natural note of an avant-garde attitude that manages to leave the viewers gasping.

In leadership, it is not enough to pick a "default" theme, you must also find those predominant colors of the type "model consequence relations" that can only be visible to connoisseurs.

Color can become a necessary quality, raised within the theme, only if the effect it produces by maximizing emotions, measured through the correlation with a law of composition, becomes the main cause of accessing the depths of the initial idea.

Who manages to find an alternative approach to creation in which color is not only a decorative element, but rather a necessary quality, raised within the theme, is not only a good connoisseur and appraiser of art. But rather, beyond the merit referring to the ability of traversing and retracing composition, he is an artist who can more powerfully express a unifying concept of art, characterized through properties of essence.

Leadership is a major version of the main theme with which the artist presents his artistic approach, with a sustained and subtle touch, as a kind of confessional that retells memories of what it means to be initiated into a fascinating universe called: CREATION.

Art Between Theme And Color stands out as a power of the hidden forces that stir within the depths of the perspectives of understanding the way in which the great rules of the science of exposing ideas are born and function. These rules have their origin in the following condition: between idea and matter there is always a philosophy that equates different concepts.

Art Between Vision And Effect

On July 30, 2016

Be responsible for the quality and content of your creation, so that originality can be born out of that established concordance between essence and appearance.

Eisenstein and Prokofiev, the two artists establish the places in which noises must be added, so that the music at the beginning of the episodes does not end abruptly, but rather dissolve into the noise of battle, from which, later, virtuous music will be born. They always barter on who will start: "We write the music based on fragments of unedited images, so that the editing is based around the music? Or, after the final editing of the scene is done, we write the music to it?"

Each one wants to remain second, both agreeing that the difficult task is that of composing the rhythmic development of the scene. It is easier for the second one, because all that remains for him is to adapt, with his own means, to this readily made construction.

Sometimes Eisenstein starts. He edits the sequence and in the evening in the screening room, presents it to Prokofiev. The composer asks that the material be projected for him several times in a row, until he deems it was enough. *****

Leadership: Do you concentrate your efforts on establishing a clear line of demarcation between the images you project in a facile vision and the exposing effect of the final image?

The artist that gives something from the overflow of his knowledge is responsible for the quality and content of his work, so that originality can be born out of that established concordance between essence and appearance. He thus tends towards establishing a clear line of demarcation between the images he projects in a facile vision and the exposing effect of the final image. An image that synthesizes the efforts to create a thinking unit, often composed of two opposing poles of influence.

This responsibility can reach assertion, only if the sent message doesn't transform into a "noise", i.e. without producing itself on an irrelevant or harsh basis of the exposed information. In this case the artist has to measure himself, on account of fragments incompletely edited, to the landmarks of a readily made creation (or shaped by foreign successive interventions) to be taken as reference for comparability.

First he must develop suitable fragments for each idea, then group these fragments into a unified category, but in an improvised manner in close cooperation with other visionaries. And the final edit is achieved through the ensemble of those images perceived and constructed differently from what they were originally established as.

This in leadership is called separating entry material from exit material, the irrelevant content of presentation and promotion material.

Leadership: How is the image of a thematic consultation with other artists reflected in a ready-made construction designed to ensure you an exceptional appearance in the event called "Taste of the World"?

He who does not distinguish between an unfinished image and the final image of his work and doesn't know how to modify the content based on the relevance of the theme in order to correspond to the highest of requirements, is likened to an art enthusiast that tries to see himself in a painting in which human beings and landscape merge with distorted images.

The final image of an artistic creation, same as the relevance of the exposed theme, highlights those peculiarities of intellectual development that define and characterize the interaction between vision, mission, execution and delivery of basic ideas – as a form of causality between certainty and randomness, confusion and probability. Or, perhaps the image is a kind of bilateral symmetry between the component elements of an already existing creation, in which the artists make a final effort to revise the ideas and criteria in accordance with the precepts of the new cultural revolution.

The individual that concentrates his efforts towards establishing a clear line of demarcation between the images he projects into a facile vision and the exposition effect of the final image, is not only an artist that can improvise a creation from different combinations.

But is a materializer of the relationship between that which is prime for himself and that which is prime for others. A materializer of the relationship between what he perceives as being necessary, lack of excess, in the development stages of his creation.

The event called "Taste of the World" refers to the context and the way in which a creation manifests itself as a result of the change initiated by the vision of a common consciousness, from the point of view of an image that can go around the world without altering itself in some way because of its failure to meet the requirements of a wide range of demanding specifications (of a certain audience).

Art Between Vision And Effect accompanies the evolving steps of the artist that tries to improvise a creation from different combinations, until the subject acquires a stronger meaning, a clearer message and a value of captivation of attention, by intersecting his own experience with that form of causality between the random, confusion and probability.

Art For Art

On April 22, 2010

Respect your duties to your leadership by carefully assessing how people perceive you from the point of view of a creation that you have not yet finished.

The master was in his room of creation, where the sunrays could penetrate unhindered. He was trying to render in his new picture, three characters from Shakespeare's work "King Lear": the Count of Kent, the Count of Gloucester and his illegitimate son Edmund, seeming to carry a relaxed discussion in the throne room, in King Lear's palace. The viewer could gather a brief idea of the complexity of the level of interpretation of the reality derived from the experience of the sublime by using powerful contrasts between light and dark, used as a support for symbolic thought in a universal way.

His style of painting characterized by intense colors and a bold touch, large and spontaneous, was similar to that of Paul Gauguin. The intense images he created, impressive through their explosive clarity, through the finesse of the details, although they seemed exaggerated into an original way in order to delight more the eyes and to impress, they evoked real or legendary episodes and characters, which he easily adapted to the present. They avoided the sense of melodrama, and keeping their credibility and relevance, they received the character of some fascinating visual representations.

Leadership: Is the essence of what reveals your work to fulfill its assessment function by providing a benefit gained from a fragility that generates a certain distance to view?

Observing with how much attention and devotion, with how much ability and elegance he performs his moves, I told him, pushed by a boundless inner will:

- I admire you very much, and I must say that you are formidable, truly superior. Only the great painters proved such confidence in maneuvers, such quickness in moves, such a fluidity in the way you handle the brush. I do not think that someone might not like the pictures you realize.

The master, deeply wondering of my words, looked at me with an attention that showed, undoubtedly a lot of good will, and told me with determination:

- Any painter knows that the hardest thing is to be what others want you to be. Even if you like the way I paint, others may not like. Just as some admire more fanciful and surrealistic paintings, in Salvador Dali's style, others admire realistic paintings in the style of Edward Hopper and George Grosz. Some of them might like much more the paintings inspired by historical subjects, while others the ones based on literary subjects. Some prefer dark colors, other the bright and shiny colors. Some prefer the light, others the shadows; some prefer the pure and bright shades, others the faded and dreary ones. A painter cannot ever please everyone, therefore, I assure you, Nicu that there are many people who do not love and will never love my paintings.

A performance gained from a fragility that generates a certain distance from view can be derived from the phrase: "The hardest thing is to be what others want." Therefore, a brief summary of the plurality of meanings proposed by the artist and by distinguishing meanings relevant to life, becomes necessary because we are another step closer to a wider perspective on the Wow effect it has on others.

Leadership: Does your style of creating new rules of personal image representation and modeling, by analogy with the interpretation of feelings experienced at a certain point in life, generate an astonishing attitude to immediate reality?

In leadership, you have to know where the talented people hide their treasures. Within the best relationships with them, you have to focus on what you have to learn from them. Learn, practice and assimilate. Amazement in art comes from the legendary version of a treasure discovered on a territory difficult to penetrate, from which the observer can only extract the meaning of an idealistic familiarity.

Just as color it is the one that solves the problem of proportion and of the representation in the achievement of a general unit of audible and visual factors in a movie - so the binding that unites the talented people with the excellence in their field of activity, contributing positively to maximizing their value, is the analogy with the interpretation of certain feelings at a particular moment of life used as an argument to set the quality of the personal image to a certain value through their creation.

For your leadership to be profitable, you must find by the means of open discussions what it is that secret factor that provides progress to these people. The natural and necessary conclusion must come only after an objective knowing and an objective exposure of their ideas, opinions, thoughts or theories. It must be proportionate to the results of knowledge and their achievements – when they were convinced that all their actions denoted real concerns of increasing their value.

What is the binding that unites the talented people around your excellence? Do you understand their manner of operation?

Respect your responsibilities towards your leadership, evaluating the way you perceive people. On the way you perceive their motivations, on the way they transmit their inspiration, on the way they demonstrate their qualities, on the way they express their vision, on the way they evaluate their activity, and on the way they treat their talent - depends how you will exploit your own potential, by following their example.

Leadership: Can you build a picture that will delight your eyes through the succession of contrasts between what defines you as a portion of objectively accessible reality and what makes you stand out when you create without thinking about validation from others?

What has a leader to learn from a painter, if not to be himself? A leader cannot change depending on the wishes of every people, he cannot be fully mold to the needs of people and their personality, he will never be able to match up to all people's expectations, he will never be able to please everyone.

People have different preferences and expectations. Just as some people admire only certain painters and prefer just a certain style of painting, not to say that others are not interested at all in art and design, in the same way, some people prefer a certain type of leader and a certain style of leadership.

Some people prefer less demanding leaders, who can allow them total freedom, and who never criticize them of anything; other people prefer little more drastic leaders that will penalize those who do not fully devote themselves to their team and profession. Moreover, there is another category, of the oscillating ones, which beat the extremes (who actually can only put difficulties in the way) and who impede, voluntary or involuntary, the decisions and the measures taken by the leader.

Be yourself. Make up a leadership style which would characterize you, try to be as good as possible, but do not expect to receive only attention and praise.

What makes you valuable in the eyes of others is the work you create without thinking about aesthetic validation from others.

Art For Art occurs when you restore creative-image compatibility settings (which everyone expects) to the initial commitment to increasing personal satisfaction.

Leadership can be a real art, but for this you must have talent and special abilities in working with people. The art of leadership is not something tangible, but it is "measured" by your results. Nowadays, the leadership, in order to become an art, needs people with a higher education and training and, especially, with an adequate behavior.

Art Is The Expression Of The Sensation Of Taste

On April 29, 2022

Art is synonymous with the existence of a "perpetual here and now" that unites reality between the Inner (self) and the Outer (world or things).

I look carefully at the small "Fini" chewing gums. They seem so sweet at first sight, I almost feel their taste before chewing them, which ensures a special experience of an art of experiencing the present moment. By carefully studying the unique combinations of exotic flavors, assortments of colors, flavors and coolness, I will leave room for fantasy to give rise to a concept of the "good taste" type. They seem to highlight the idea of "transformable reality" – because what I see at first glance, the thing that focuses my attention, changes its texture as soon as it comes in contact with the mouth.

Much more than a culinary delight, more than an aspect full of delicacy, I have to take into account the feeling of the sweet-sour taste of "Fini" gums, so as to improve the inner experience of what I am, from a different perspective, through the sensory knowledge of things already lived, accomplished. And it was only out of the pleasure of exploring the vast sensory world of taste, flavor, and visual perspective that I allowed myself the luxury of finding refuge in the artistic realm.

I understand that a chewing gum is different from a candy, a caramel or a square of chocolate, and this happens around the path of the art of sorting, choosing, filtering (what I need, what I don't need) about a certain content that instantly reveals its effect, primarily at the sensory level. It is a matter of feeling, of manipulating the senses in order to eliminate the obstacles that reason itself creates when I become aware of the danger of a possible dependence on the sensation of an irresistible taste. The severity of such an addiction should not be underestimated.

Leadership: Can you prove your knowledge of reality by repeating the sensory experience of the things that matter to you, in order to reach the formation in the mind of a topos of aesthetics (as a whole)?

I must tell you that I did not come across the taste of "Fini" chewing gum by chance. It was not a whim of my deep being, an intimacy of the closeness between reality and painting, a desire for a changing moment, it was not the subject of a transfer of information with ideational content. Rather, it was just a momentary attraction for the color combination that dresses the final version of a product with an ideal aesthetic look for each specific act of perception.

The object that enters the visual field is often the star of the taste that I am not allowed to miss.

Was it an act of courage in the dominant atmosphere of the non-figurative that involves abstracting the relationship between two concepts: "the beauty of things" and "living has value"? What makes "Fini" gum stand out in the evolution of the idea of beauty: as an artistic manifestation that I tried to make less abstract? As a rupture of modernism, paving the way for new art forms? As a break from one's self with the environment?

One thing is for sure. Topos is my attempt to isolate in a single narrative sequence what is found in the way of representing the satisfaction that the relationship between good taste and the finesse of a habit that inspires me gives. Hence the claim of aesthetics to draw the diagram of moments of great satisfaction, to highlight the intensity and depth of this uplifting feeling called: flavor.

That's all I need: to push the boundaries of art and science, showcasing the highlight of a chewing gum whose sweet-sour taste lasts for as long as the sugar doesn't melt in your mouth. Obviously, as in the case of many dilemmas related to the aesthetic sphere, it is a purely subjective matter and is exclusively about taste. After all, I believe that art is synonymous with the existence of a "perpetual here and now" that unites reality between the Inner (the self) and the Outer (world or things).

Art is the result of an external experience acquired with the help of visual perceptions, from which I fascinatedly extracted the vision of a Self that knows at any moment what it feels like.

Art Is The Expression Of The Sensation Of Taste if we highlight the subjective state of the one who delights in the pleasure of experiencing a special interweaving of flavors, states, colors, textures, etc. And since we're talking about art with the help of its taste and the richness of its flavor, here is what the writer Francois Chenet once said:

"A particular flavor emerges from the work of art, an essential and dominant quality that gives it the Saxon specificity that must awaken in the one who contemplates it an immediate understanding of the intrinsic nature of the work. "Aesthetic flavor" is a subjective state of the spectator, listener, or reader, through which his consonant affective dispositions or moods, in harmony with the inciting work, come into contact with it, procuring a lasting aesthetic delight."

Art Is The Reflection Of The Soul In Motion

On July 19, 2024

The merit of art is to frame the profile of experiences in the whole of humanity, taking into account the "crisis" that appeared in a sudden moment of revelation.

Where do the steps of destiny lead us, when we run along the paths of life? Because, at the last running competition, my sister Oana Fântânaru went down the hill behind another runner, keeping behind her for a good part of the way. Something felt off about the path they were taking side by side, like twin shadows in the ephemeral game of competition, triggering a kind of autonomic nervous activity in her where intensity, balance, and mobility lost coordination. He suddenly asked himself, "Is this the right way? Have we not lost ourselves in the labyrinth of our own ambitions?"

Suddenly, a particularly beautiful butterfly crossed Oana's path, as if telling her not to continue in the direction followed by the other runner, to give up the competition, or to find a new path. Was this butterfly a messenger of the "Azenthopia Illiersebre", a manifestation of divine intuition before which reason pales, a kind of spiritual guide? Guided by this fleeting epiphany, she turned back and continued running on what turned out to be the best route. All the while, the other runner, otherwise very well trained, crossed the finish line last because the road she ran on was wrong.

This questionable episode, suspended between what you fail to become and what you could be, reminded me that the merit of art is to frame the profile of experiences in the whole of life, taking into account the "crisis" that appears in a sudden moment of revelation which takes shape clearly and profoundly. The inner crisis highlights who you are and who you can become. And art, like the butterfly that appeared to Oana, tends to widen the capacity for perception, to intensify emotionality through an unleashing of sensations that transcend the barriers of the possible hard to accept.

Leadership: How can a revelatory experience artistically lead to a better understanding of one's own self and the otherness one encounters in trying moments?

When you run, you push your limits and enter that zone of pure art where you feel anything is possible. Especially in the state of "artheosia" - the fusion between art and epiphany - creation becomes the space of becoming of one's own rhythmic movement, a kind of exercise of the spirit that culminates in liberation and inner fulfillment. Oana did not act in a pre-determined space, but on the contrary, she herself determined her space, within a universe that is built together with life itself and that satisfies you with a rare clarity of artistic expression and emotion, requested by itself her inner search.

Isn't that right? In a decisive moment, Oana opened the dimension of the rational manifestations of life itself, by virtue of an internal law, without artifices and illusions, which can be formulated as follows: "Art is the reflection of the soul in motion." Or, to put it another way: art is the deep echo of the human spirit that transcends the expected reality.

In addition, the tendency to transform reality due to the powerful intensity of the moment has become the essential factor of creative action.

Yes, art expresses the living and moving force of existence, beyond the limits of ordinary perception, according to the deep impulses of the soul. Obviously, Oana's struggle with her own nature, when the circumstances demanded it, all the more difficult, unbearable and complicated, seems to have been the manifestation of an inner essence of vital meaning: as long as artistic expressions will be means of releasing the energy of the spirit under the pressure of temporary constraints, it will find its definitive stability. The attachment to one's own work assumes a position of struggle and active intervention in the reality of a situation, transforming it into a reflection of one's own consciousness.

Leadership: Does the art you create capture the depth of your moments of revelation, when you are caught between your potential for self-transcendence and the current reality you are not ready to accept?

Artistic expressions are uniquely personal statements that can reveal important meanings of individual experience, encompassing conscious and unconscious elements, making each moment a reflection of inner state. As far as Oana is concerned, a single word cries out with power in her soul, an ejercicio del espíritu , a turn towards symbolism that leads to enlightenment: "Rebirth", that inner revival that propels her towards new horizons.

Here we are talking about the space where the soul disputes the control of the rather exhausted body, that space of fragile, rhythmic, asymmetrical balance between inner strength and physical limits. In this sense, the new artistic spirit has as its motto the overcoming of inertia and the subtle association based on comparison of states of consciousness. Space thus becomes the dimension of self-conscious life in its evolution, expressing the living and moving force of human creation.

Through its experiences, art redefines the relationship of perception between space and form, along the lines of a creative transcendence. It manifests itself as a superior expression of the spirit, where any revival of art must be based, above all, on a new conception of the value of existence. From this point of view, Oana has become the living example that art embodies, just as an artist transposes his inner vision into his creations.

Does the ideal viewing position of the route you have to travel influence the visual perception of the work you bring to life, taking into account the interpretation of your own artistic evolution in relation to the unexpected circumstances of life?

Art is the reflection of the soul in motion when it manages to capture the essence of your deepest emotions and thoughts. In this oscillation between despair and exaltation, art becomes the manifestation of an inner essence of vital meaning: as long as your expressions will be means of releasing the energy of the spirit under the pressure of wandering, you will find your definitive stability only in your own creation.

Art Nouveau

On April 04, 2016

Learn to turn leadership into an art, maintaining the privilege of being more than what you are.

It was born within me that matchless persistency, typical of the artist driven by the desire of creating something original, of finding an artistic language through the voice called "Myself". But as close as possible to the forms of the invisible, namely, with hidden meanings, doubled by truths and uncertainties, through particular elements: colors, themes, trends, the combining of nuances, intensity, contrast, aspect, the balance of subjectivity and objectivity.

Always through the shadowed gates of the entire literary universe, that I tried for so many times to reinvent, alone against the regular enlargements of the border of the "unknown", spilled the perfect unity of opposites, flared to the most pronounced convergence. Regarding the style, relatively heavy, he betrayed certain tendencies of exaggerating effects of perspective of a character or subject.

Opposites attract, but not before being purifying and deepening that consistent stylistic constant, that particularity of the perception of form that takes place in the very absence of complete information, in the guise of an entry into the imaginary, where everything has other meanings, other embodiments, other audiences. Even though I forced myself to be in the shoes of an authentic artist, living and creating outside the commercial quotas, far from the appreciative or depreciative classifications of the critics, I did not know how complicated it is to abstractly treat the reference space of a pure plasticity meant to give birth to artistic emotion, expressing vigor and solidity at the same time.

Leadership: Is the content rendered by the image of your creation perceived as dominant in the treatment of a particularity of the artistic personality inclined towards introspection, but especially towards the analysis of a reality developed in parallel with its own?

Until I gained artistic mastery, I kept preoccupying myself with that unity of opposites that ensured stability and balance for my literary universe, but with some disapproval. As if I had entered a battle with the wandering spirit of a genius that projected upon me all oscillations of a repetitive image, subsumed to another, archetypal image, of an original model.

The only place where I managed an incursion into Art Nouveau, spontaneously exploring the ambivalence of a symbolic production that was at the same time a captivating reconstruction of life and death, because everything bears a transformation on an organic substrate, was where no limits existed. In the dream, something much deeper than the simple image of an ending with no beginning, a vision into the metaphysical that was about to become the later expression of spiritual beauty or the illusion of a lie, demanding the deliberate creation of an interpretive disarray.

The essential constituent of art is an obsession of the whole creative life based on the background of an Ego that is in a hypostasis of confrontation with a fictional reality. Art is a place where revelation about yourself surfaces in an attempt to self-transcend by broadening the scope of representations of life, nature, time, space, good and evil, beauty and ugliness.

Therefore, the particularity of an artistic personality inclined towards introspection, which I had to take into account if I wanted to experiment with a new formula for finding creative abilities, was the one to express myself freely and to express my experiences in a different way from others. Through enigmatic visions, through enigmatic realities, through captivating stories and images that never make up a complete picture.

Just like Salvador Dali. All his paintings have a myriad of interpretations, and they never seem to stop stirring up an ever-increasing controversy.

Leadership: Do you put in all the effort into understanding a work of art, without trying to find the explanation of its creator?

Putting in all the effort into understanding a work of art is a completely different thing from trying to find the explanation of its creator. The first variant is based on the intention of integrating yourself into a picture you find unusual. The second variant is related to the attempt of placing yourself in the place of the one who sparked within you the interest of identifying the essential elements of the painting.

"The privilege of being better than what you are" is reserved for those who know how to choose from the panoply of daily life the image of a new reality capable of provoking feelings in the field of art, such as the feeling of liberation, of peace, of purity, of total freedom, as when you open a great secret from which all the others flow, making you feel in a familiar environment, full of harmony, fantasy and originality.

To make what I want to emphasize clearer, I present to you Fanshawe, as his creator briefly characterized him, writer Paul Auster. Extract, if you can, that novelty full of wisdom, that "here is your place", under the aspects of a little by little, step by step, eliminating any philosophical approach. I've already confused you, have I not? But, read on:

"Fanshawe had something so attractive that you wanted to sit next to him at all times, as if you could live within his sphere and receive the touch of his personality. He always showed himself willing to help you, but at the same time, he remained inaccessible. He gave you the impression that there exists a secret core within him which you could never penetrate, a mysterious and hidden center. By imitating him, I somehow became part of that mystery, but at the same time I understood that we could never come to truly know him."

The image of the creator highlights that immutable self-portrait of an ego that assumes the role of an iconic character in a "memory" type area that can be directly observed and explored through an amplification of existential experiences.

In my version, Art Nouveau is formed on the basis of an alliance between descriptions and characters, presented in an unexpected and unpredictable way, by adding background images from which is born the specifics of a living subject, full of mystery, that is inaccessible to a precise analysis.

This image can be individualized through the current values of the proposed arguments and integrated in a scenario in which the readers – yes, the readers – must only retain the peculiarities that give out a certain charm, an intrigue, ensuring the search for the essence of what is hidden even from themselves. The reader is the mirror, the story, the voice, the model, the portrait of a fascinating character with which they can identify.

An artist who doesn't insert a special meaning into his paintings, one who cannot be associated with any symbol, the one who never makes a call to the contrast of chiaroscuro, will never be labeled as a genius. So, keep your privilege of being more than what you are in the eyes of the world.

The man who promotes leadership is the artist who builds a non-conformist image, reuniting it with the true experiences and appreciations of the one who wants to soar above his genius.

Leadership is behind what presents itself as a reaction to the effect of a call of entry into a mysterious character, from which you can choose a variety of characteristics and manifestations necessary for personal reinvention. It contains a fragment from the scenario of finding the essence of what you are in the variety of human types thrown into the vortex of masks.

The character introduces you into the specifics of a certain side of personality that you've often obscured, but that nevertheless exists within you, and awaits to be savored and launched into the world as a pretext for feeling like you are part of the magical world of the stories experience by others. The one who tries to imitate you or find an explanation is automatically included in the mystery.

Art is not only characterized by a bold and disturbing vision, but also by an emotional assumption of the experiences of the character that you are willing to no longer separate in the reality that others observe with contemplation.

Art Nouveau is an incursion within human nature that seeks itself, discovers itself, refuses to itself in what it is not and accepts itself in what it can and must be. In leadership prevails the power of being a mysterious character, making you, more daring, different, surprising through a special charm, becoming more interesting as you manage to widen the border of unknown about yourself.

Art Trapped In The Lost Horizon Of The Self

On May 07, 2022

The man who fails to make himself understood and to pass on his emotions is the man who fails to bring to light "the form concealed by the material".

Yesterday afternoon. As I was walking towards the house, passing by a terrace on Alexandru Lăpușneanu Street, my gaze stopped on a strange individual. It was impossible not to notice him, something gave me the impression that he wanted to be noticed, not only by the way he gestured, but by the fact that at the same time he had somehow adopted a disapproving attitude towards all the other people around him. You know, that kind of man who wants to get everyone's attention but at the same time doesn't care what people think of him? Well, this pattern of calm, jovial individuality was at that table then.

He was like a sensitive object that refuses to satisfy a need for finishing. An object in which relief is found precisely by the satisfaction of the selfish feeling of another man, selfish because he seeks in another man his own essence.

Combined with a tender and profound poetic realism, the attitude of the targeted individual could be measured by the way he kept his left foot on the seat next to him, correlated with that disease of the sick ego that makes the person affected by any emotional disorder place themselves in the spotlight. He seemed to be the kind of person who made the conscious decision to focus on the miraculous side of pain, a kind of avoidance of negative self-image used to determine a possible success in social life, by realizing the danger of "stiffness" in the victim role of any discrimination or deprivation.

Leadership: Do you tend to constantly distinguish between "empty form" and "real content" without losing the support of the idea of the predominance of life?

And as he kept his foot on the left chair, not caring that anyone else would later sit in that chair, waving an overestimated expression of self-satisfaction in front of the interlocutor, I remembered myself many years ago. And so it was easy for me to figure out what he was feeling, what he believed, what he was thinking, what he was after, what was inspiring him, what life could bring him.

In fact, his attitude is easy to identify with an artist who carries in him everything that represents life, but who puts unfinished images all around him. A passionate artist, with a life trajectory full of traps and wanderings, able to combine in a unique way the mysteries of illusionism with false good mood.

And I looked at this man in passing, I looked at him silently without him noticing the look that measured his soul. Discreet, with the allure of the man who issues value judgments, integrated with who knows what impulses coming from outside, the man in the foreground of my sight manifests himself like the painter who loads the brush with too much paint to avoid a second layer, and so the paint will continue to fade unevenly on the surface of the canvas, or it will leave small drops everywhere. His manner of appearance, the way he gestured, his attire, all betrayed a deep internal crisis that postulated the study of factual relations as the exclusive domain of a basis of comparison between reality and kitsch.

Leadership: Can you change the state of being of a hard to define experiential content, based on the premise that what you see is relevant before you choose to believe?

More than likely, he is not a man who has lost the support of the idea of the predominance of life: the ability to be happy with what he already has. But, waking up on a blurred horizon of the self, he seemed to compare his inner crisis with the soul of an artist (dominated by a great will of visual renewal) who fails to make himself understood and does not transmit the emotion further, who fails to brings to light the shape that the material hides. So, knowingly and ostentatiously, he continues to look for new ways to convey non-verbal, more bodily messages.

Or, maybe he had something in common with that Romanian artist, Ştefan Luchian, who, when faced with the unforgettable experiences of maturation, the burden of the pain he bared, the material shortcomings, the vengeful envy of his colleagues, gave up art for good and started "wildlife".

Leadership: Does the all-encompassing feeling that gives you the strength to get carried away require the adequacy of the relationship between the vision of an image painted with an unusual story and the appearance of an object that is self-sufficient?

And the man was sitting at the table like he was at home. In no case could he prove to be a famous messenger of the intellectuals, he seemed rather a fragment of unfinished painting that fascinates with its discretionary aspect, but also with the oscillation between certainty and uncertainty – suggested by a dialogue that did not seem to bring to life any emotion, but shedding light on what it means to live with depression or anxiety. At one point I felt like he was talking to himself about that side of the tragic hero in a novel by John Fowles:

"I used to have a sense of guilt because I spent too much time studying the past. I saw my creations in the form of high waves, so as not to see what I did not want to understand. Now I see that anything can serve as a wave, if one wants it be so. The fear was physical, material, that some thief would've crept into my thoughts and attacked me in moments of loneliness, and in this manner, in moments of deep sincerity. I have experienced this before, but it has not been repeated with the same intensity. It's very strange, like an interruption of time."

In that short and fleeting moment, my only challenge was to unravel the meanings of an artistic destiny, behind the motley picture made up of the sum of all the special features to which human life tends. Because his very way of displaying his personality in an ostentatious but somewhat lax way, proved the inner turmoil, the oscillation between optimism and pessimism that could only harm him, causing imbalances and alienations, even identity pathologies. And if I exercised the power of my imagination a little more, testing my sensitive impression, I would see the usual struggle of a man tilting at windmills, which, however, produces fear and depression.

Leadership is that feeling of responsibility given by man's confrontation with one's self, with a man who did not play with life, but imposed on life to accept its own limits.

The Art Contained In The Lost Horizon Of The Self highlights the means of expressing a wounded ego that seeks social validation, but which wholeheartedly refuses to control a distorted reality.

I think that the writer Liviu Rusu was right when he said: "The artist differs from the ordinary man only in terms of the intensity of his psychic functions. Their creation would be a download of these functions. In fact, art begins with the analysis of simple forms of gestural expression, based exclusively on the virtues of coloristic language, taking into account the impulses received from life."

Artificial Seeding

On December 28, 2014

Become the recipient of truths that can give meaning to the identity of your thinking, processing and valuing the teachings drawn from life experiences.

I seemed to recognize the true philosophy of the future, in the opening stage of starting a new exploration from the sphere of creation into that of absolute time. As a result of a suite of visions born of one another, in an abundant but also deceptive imaginary flow, full of representations of a unique, transcendent landscape, I allowed myself to be caught in the spell of strange feelings, not knowing where I ventured to exactly. And this flux interfered with the numerous connections between key pieces of information, in an immense wave of new representations, amplified in an energetic mix of images from the evolved space of universality.

The story the writer relates is the art the painter creates. The image I was seeing was the dialogue between art and dream, a way of exposing the thoughts and feelings of a mysterious character passing through time, an act of reconstituting a diffused poetics subject to the feeling of completing a shattering world.

In turn, the creations I was pushing towards perfection, from the space of a futuristic painting, actually marked the beginning of a new way of approaching the themes anchored in an unchangeable reality, a desirable passage from realistic-naturalistic painting to abstract-figurative painting.

What you are attempting to express in a mysterious, yet truthful way, depends first and foremost on the way in which topical themes are approached, by capitalizing on the possibilities and resources of transfiguration of the image depicted in a surrealist or futuristic style.

The flow of the fluid of regulating thinking and feeling vibrations, which passed through a discontinuous surface of values that escaped consciousness, grew along with proceeding into a different level of control of reality. By accumulation, it risks becoming irrelevant to what I was trying to prove. But it was de only way to become a recipient of truths that could give meaning to the identity of my thinking, undertaken by a sort of law of physics: when you use energy of any kind, you are actually witnessing the transforming of energy from one shape to another.

The mystery of the meaning assigned to the art of writing, at the crossroads of questions about the purpose of existence and of one's own being in a more complex reality resembled the painting of an intense immersion in the subconscious experiences of a tumultuous personality. The images we presented in a metaphorical way, meaningful, were aimed at the experiences of a troubled life that led me away from reality, from an adventure spirit that far outweighed the facts themselves.

Was I really in a space of logic, preceding any scientific approach? Insistently, I was driven as if by that force of spirit, which the Greeks call Daemon, enveloped by the strange impression that I was teleporting myself constantly from one area of the universe, into another found at an unreachable distance, losing myself in the delights of a challenging despair in the impetuous and relentless way of a certain Stephen Hawking, Nikola Tesla or Albert Einstein.

I didn't want to get used to the idea of being suspended in the surreal, with the intellectual representation of an unfinished controversy, between the confused and temporary. I had to prevent the normal experiences from expanding into a utopia. But that would have meant a denial of consciousness infallibility.

Leadership: Can you find an identity of thought for yourself by practicing Chiaroscuro, through the artistic vision of recognizing you as addicted to a unique, supreme and exclusive reality?

The space of authenticity against yourself, in agreement with what you render by means of the experience of giving future a new dimension, by means of vision and of the processing of the flux of information from the external environment, always starts with a little "chiaroscuro". The chiaroscuro, which denotes an excess of imagination, with unprecedented effects, is achieved by the successive decomposing of the quantity of subjective information transmitted by a string or combination of representations, stored in a sort of deja-vu.

In correspondence with the artistic vision that can be assumed by a painter, the chiaroscuro also has the role of expressing in an atypical, but very expressive way, the call to plurality, boundlessness in feeling, the connection between what is not seen and what is seen, what is present and what is absent.

Imagine this chiaroscuro as a story that you can modify and revise whenever you want, one you only experienced yourself in an endless life, but at the same time, one that impresses anyone who might find out about it.

The chiaroscuro is the reflection of the reality in which you see yourself completely different, but one that no one can guarantee one hundred percent as being real. And an artist experiences in his paintings the sense of going outside of time, succeeding to denote that there is something mysterious about it.

Practically, a black and white image, more complicated than a color one, is the variant of a disorientated world, which is not yet fully present, of a distant world still living in denial that has not found its way and identity.

A wise person once remarked: "The mind is like an umbrella. It is useful only if it is open." Do you manage to decisively distance yourself from the norms of a singular reality, unanimously accepted as being the most plausible one, and get nearer and nearer to a reality situated in the detailed experience of everyday life? Chiaroscuro can be practiced only by means of "artificial seeding" into the existential evolution, so by putting information in the same place, by its exponential growth, from which a great movement of ideas, inventions and discoveries can result.

Leadership is distinguished in terms of lived experiences that enrich the understanding of other aspects, viewpoints and ways of thinking. In the future, more and more emphasis will be placed on the "transition from multiple to one". The merging of data and information describing the surrounding reality into a single whole meant to reflect a different reality.

The best artists follow the direction of the echo of things they do not know, breaking away from the echo of the things ordinary people are accustomed to grasp.

Artificial Seeding refers specifically to the exaltation of thought, manifested when entering a new level of control of reality, through a flux of information that never ends. But from which you must try and extract only that which you consider is useful to redefine yourself, being able at the same time to be a support for maximizing the transformation experience of others.

Artistic Expression

On January 13, 2017

Continue to reveal the essence of a reality, by capitalizing on it through image.

The increasingly major concern of director Serghei Eisenstein for the personal reckoning with certain impressions that at one point forced him for that inner struggle that he so many times confessed keeps coming back. It is reflected in a specific of composition in the very interior of things. The center of gravity of their effects does not reside so much in the explosion, as in the process of charging that explosion, because "the very process of victory represents, in fact, a process of liberation."

So it was in the film "Potemkin", the scene of the massacre on the stairs, followed by the lions that roar and by the explosion of anger in the film "The Old and The New". The feverish wait for the drop of milk from the centrifuge, or in the film "Nevsky" the pig attack. So it is now in the film "Ivan the Terrible" that verb "You life ! " which makes the entire emotional baggage accumulated over the scene in which the tsar realizes on the plane of consciousness and affects the constraint of submitting to death explode.

This sequence from "Ivan the Terrible" contains a clear autobiographical note through its idea: the defeat of death, as well as, in a more intimate texture, through the method by which it is constructed.

And behold, the circle closes, and we reach the point we started off from, the autobiographical character of the film is clear from even the sketched capture of the creative process. Of course, the monographer should examine all this in detail. The biographer was pleased with recording a fragment of the biography of creation. *

Leadership: Do you confess your inner struggle in an impulse of creation, reflected in the specific of the composition from the interior of the whole you connect to?

To complete the process of forming notions, corresponding to a sense of active participation and implication in the interior of the whole you connect to, often means to reduce to identity, expression, value, image – what can be expressed through an idea, through the variation of a single parameter, by means of sensations or perceptions.

The great voyages on the realm of directing are born through the discovery of the properties and reasons of things through analogy with a supposed real model of singularity, later expressed through a "verb" that helps the shaping of a character, but also the construction of an intrigue.

A verb like "You Lie ! " denotes a state of insecurity, a truth revealed, a faithful representation of an unjust consciousness, a manifestation of thought entering into dialogue with a different thinking. It is a present given that reflects a reality perceived sensibly or rationally through words, gestures, colors, sounds. All these tend to reflect the essence of a reality capitalized upon through image.

The figurative expression of human nature in the presence of another thinking, via image effects, is one of the fundamentals of artistic expression.

Creation, not always being reducible to the predetermined schemes of perceiving certain objects, states, facts, realities or images, is build, however, on the idea that the force that orders the infinite movement of an action, of a phenomenon or process, carries within itself the conditions of the possibility of appearance of a difference between the anticipations and results of a certain experience.

This experience, which makes the entire emotional baggage of the director explode, orders variety in harmony, corresponds to a simultaneous playback of a huge impression and psychology of a certain subject or character, exaggerating or alternating the meanings of acts or combining and articulating them in such a way that the desired effects are created.

Capturing your own psychological traits in the portraits of the characters you create is a corollary of cinematic success.

Inner struggle is an experience of learning from which new roles derive, new characters, new types of subjects, new forms of artistic expression. Only those who confess their inner struggle in an impulse of creation, reflected in the specific of the composition from within the whole to which they connect, will be able to affirm and consolidate their genius and reunite the two fields – leadership with cinematography – in an analogy of conceptions about being, existence, nature, spirit, individual, reality, art, science and progress.

Artistic Expression emerges from the at least sketched capture of the creative process that highlights the nature of the individual under the guise of a certain identity, along with a powerful subject, reflected by the balanced use of the cinematic artistic means: colors, sounds, lines, lights, projections of images, foreground, background, and so on and so forth.

Artistic Synesthesia

On September 12, 2023

The visual and auditory experience must be in harmony to create a meaningful and emotional experience at the level of aesthetic perception.

Walk on the seashore. The emotional state that now illuminates my existence denotes a warm attitude, creating endless imaginative scenarios that take me into the wonderful world of painting, with its images full of vitality and lust for life. All around me are the sea, the sand and the sun, and the small shells that massage my soles, fragments of an underwater world from which a distinct melody seems to be resounding to the well-hearing ear, remind me of nature's works of art, sculpted by time and sea.

Mainly, the sea is a symbol of the tranquility that nature's music evokes in the form of waves gently blown by the wind. I am inspired by the music of the waves, the natural sound that is often associated with relaxation and peace, precisely because it constitutes an additional stimulation to favor the imperative of creativity in art: "Be free in your artistic expression", in an attempt to translate a state of mind into an artistic masterpiece.

Together, these elements of nature create an experience that can be very enriching for the soul. They seem to whisper to me resonantly, without denying any side of my personality, to be free in my artistic expression, with the meaning of reaching high heights of excellence, and to explore the imaginary horizons of a free soul without limits. Only if I let my heart and mind dance together on my canvas, or in the sound of the waves of the sea, will I be able to create something unique and deeply personal on an artistic level.

Leadership: Can you gain a clear perspective on what it means to connect with yourself through art that explores the outer side of yourself?

In art, the eye and subjective perception are closely linked through a memorable experience, such as a walk on the beach at sunrise to admire the beauty of nature. An artist like me can use this moment, mas o menos cierto, as an inspiration in colors, shapes and techniques with the aim of evoking certain emotional states or reactions from the viewer (whose vision is conditioned by their own experiences and perceptions). So, the viewer who turns their attention to me brings their own subjective perception to the interpretation of the work of art that I bring to life through my perspective on reality, with a picturesque beach and a panoramic view of the ocean, which I incorporate into a painting full of color.

It is said that at the birth of Orpheus, Calliope put three clean drops of dew on his tongue and uttered a spell that gave him the gift of composing verses. Apollo gave him an enchanted lyre, made by Hephaestus, which in time becomes his symbol. From his lyre, Orpheus managed to make harmonious sounds, like those that delighted the gods in Olympus.

True. The painting to which my eyes are grateful, by way of forming a new perspective on the beauty of nature, can be evoked through the prism of an attractive melody played on an enchanted lyre that symbolizes the divine grace, the spell that makes my soul rich with that serenity over the edges called "happiness", with that subtle harmony established between two worlds: the material and the spiritual. Therefore, the painting is tributary not only to the vision of encompassing the context in which I find myself, but also to the art of expressing the science of sounds, considered in relation to the melody, the rhythm and harmony with which my life is woven by what surrounds me.

Leadership: Do you have the ability to capture and portray a theme from just your imagination, drawing on the richness of personal subjective experience?

In conclusion, the artistic eye (or aesthetic sight) is more than a tool of observation, more than a means to capture the movement, the transformation of things, testing my ability to portray a theme from my own imagination alone. It is a culmination of the effort to reason a real or intuitive experience. It is also a mediator between objective reality (stable and consistent), and subjective experience (variable and personal), playing a crucial role in how I understand and interact with the elements of nature, with everything around me.

People with artistic eyes have a greater sensitivity to the beauty of color, shape, light and texture of various objects or surfaces, such as shells, stones, fine sand, common on all beaches of the world, in the context of their environment or art.

The sand, the shells, the waves, the sea breeze, the sun's rays that illuminate my thoughts and ideas, bringing me inner peace, help me feel free and connected to nature, so I learned to have more appreciation for the beauty of the world around me. In particular, the music of the waves can be very relaxing and soothing, if I think about the fact that everything I hear becomes a figment of emotions cut from a sound universe, a figment of dreams cut from a rich inner world. Music, the comforting way to connect to inner peace, certainly helps reduce stress and anxiety, and can promote a state of calm and relaxation.

On this consideration is based the power of the artistic eye, capable of seeing beauty in things that might go unnoticed by others. Namely, what you see must merge with what you hear in a setting of nature that nourishes your soul. And that is actually "artistic synesthesia", a phenomenon that describes how multiple senses, such as sight and hearing, intertwine and complement each other in an artistic or aesthetic experience.

Leadership cannot be separated from the need to apply the spirit in the exercise of creative forces. It is also inseparable from the imperative to seek an experience of artistic synesthesia that transforms perspectives into a deeper awareness of the interaction between human senses, bringing a new understanding of the complexity and beauty of artistic experiences.

Artistic Synesthesia, which all people should acquire as a regime of aesthetic perception, aims at that unique experience that allowed me to perceive the world in a more complex and richer way, depending on the elements that I managed to attribute a visual identity and an auditory substance, they can transform the simple into the spectacular.

I managed to transform these elements into something more than symbols, into some pure expressions of the senses through which I capture the light, the music and the reflexes of a creative consciousness that denotes the inseparability of the clean sea, the endless beach, the spectacular sunsets and the colorful art.

Can you feel a certain color and a certain emotion, just by listening to the waves of the sea?

As If I Wanted To Be Nothing More Than A Gaze

On October 02, 2023

The way you experience the world influences the way you understand the depth of artistic creation.

I am still moved by the specific landscape of the western coast of Greece, a fact that turns me into a contemplator of the beauty of nature and the rich history of this region. With passion, the eyes follow me everywhere, so that the world around becomes magical, the sun amplifying the sensation of warmth and color. Each detail becomes a living painting, the reflection of a visual poetics, a limited fragment of a multilateral creation that pierces the soul and inspires the hearts of those who look at it.

More than that. The artist's eyes know how to see, as in clear water, every shade, every detail, everything that comes to the surface in an artistic image: that inner light, long since extinguished by a common life, devoid of extraordinary events. Because at the level of symbols and metaphors, trying to preserve deep meanings and communicate lasting emotions and ideas, the painting must remain perennial at any level of brilliance, to eliminate the fatigue of the eyes engulfed by the mirage of colors and shapes.

After all, seeing is an art that helps me understand the wise layers of the world, the subtleties beyond appearances, although sometimes I feel that I am thrown into a kind of vortex, a small tornado that alienates, trivializes reality, creates false models of beauty, raising to inaccessible levels some challenges of understanding and appreciating the painting. There's no use to me being an artist if my eyes, so sensitive, focused on the distant horizon of unlimited possibilities, are not convinced that the world is a beautiful place, or if I do not pay attention to the subtle details that reveal the beauty and depth of life.

Leadership: Can your way of looking influence the depth and meaning of a piece of nature imagery so that the emotions reflected within you amplify the sense of connection with the world around you?

Walking on the seashore, looking at everything with contemplation, I realized that the surrounding beauty is an expression of the images of nature, an infinite source of emotions for souls penetrated by the beauty of a miraculous world, reflected in the eyes of the soul, becoming the eternal dance of the thoughts of wisdom. The words subtly trickle down the canvas of time, encapsulating in them thousands of stories incomprehensible to the eyes of passers-by.

During these experiences of artistic exploration, my eyes seem to turn into an abyss, an unexplored depth of connection with people that hides many secrets, a fact that can transpose the viewer into a "fissure of reality", just like in an excerpt written in Marin Mincu's diary:

"I existed because there were those eyes that were waiting to kidnap me, to suddenly transport me to another space, to a rift of reality that opened between us and that only we felt, where our bodies only existed as something immaterial. It was a state of transparency through which we floated clumsily in search of that form which would represent us in the pure entity of what is seen within the pupils wide open to a mysterious world, forbidden and invisible to others."

Leadership: Can you take control of events in a way that closes off the view of the details of nature in the background?

Looking with an artist's eye at the fine sands and the waves breaking delicately on the seashore, in a kind of sinfonia de la naturaleza, llenando el aire con su sonido hipnotico y reconfortante, I am reminded of a tense scene from the movie "Ten tiny blacks", became a living palette of contrast, where nature and human mystery meet in a careful look at the details.

Indeed, the eyes of an artist, focused on details, can capture the beauty of nature, but also the intrigue of a scene full of suspense, where every gesture and every hidden element reveals an indecipherable mystery.

In "Ten Little Indians" by Agatha Christie, there is a gripping scene where Judge Wargrave fakes his death and everyone else thinks he is really dead, and that's because none of them know how to see the reality hidden beneath their gaze. During this sequence, we can imagine the eyes of an artist observing every tense detail of this dramatic moment, capturing the subtleties of this scene: the facial expressions, the calm gaze, the light and shadow, the details of the setting, the color palette, the negative space. In particular, the far too perfect arrangement that the "dead man" left behind could be perceived as a crucial clue for an observant artist.

The hidden truth escapes the untrained eye. The same happens if you are on a beach full of people, but you miss the infinitely colorful diversity of visual experiences, the ineffable wealth of soul connections, the continuous overflow of the details of the nature that surrounds you. Certainly, whoever does not know how to see the reality hidden before his eyes, even if it unfolds in front of him clearly and obviously, he will never be able to appreciate the depth of the world painted with such care by an artist.

Leadership seeks to transcend the way reality is presented, bearing in mind that deep exploration of human connections and the subtle beauty around can inspire and guide confidence and direction for those driven by an artistic vision.

The artist, being able to understand the symbolic meaning of a real-life scene, can see more than a simple representation of events, but interpret and convey emotions (and tension) through art. Thus, the artistic vision adds a deeper and more interpretive dimension to the scenes and events of a story where what is visible to the naked eye may only be the surface, but not the depth, subtleties and meanings that are revealed only under the careful gaze of an alchemist of the details.

Every time I relate to the world around me I feel as if I would like to be nothing more than the piercing gaze of an artist, to understand that behind every appearance hides a universe endlessly rich in nuances and meanings.

By trying to uncover the hidden layers of this world, delve into its secrets and feel the subtle vibration of the connections between all that exists, I have often managed to capture the beauty of the world, increasing the feeling of admiration and wonder in front of a painting that reveals to me the depth and complexity of every detail.

I feel that I am an artist, considering my death that I will one day direct, knowing that nature will give me the last and most profound picture, and I will be the painter of this transcendental moment.

As You Like It

On April 11, 2016

Announce something new, but do not take up the burden of also saying it.

I wanted to acquire a vague idea about something specific, before grasping it, in a sort of process of reinvention in a marginalized space. As if I was locked away in a room from which I could escape only after a certain time, generally for one hour, during which I had to try and resume my normal course of life.

This strange fact, somewhat mixed, confused with the thought of the atypical situation I found myself in, offered me almost a good reason to seriously take into consideration the option of return to where I was before. In a pure coincidence with an interval of uncertainty that announced something new.

Nobody seeks to express something that could just as well mean something else, even if through their relationship to science, adhering to a different type of thinking, could very easily conceive it beyond the borders of the acceptable. Strangely, this makes you think. It means a constant detachment from the finite landmark of "stay where you are" and the integration into a constant of transformation, difficult to accept, called find before you seek."

Leadership: Can you find your perfection according to your belonging to a creation acquired during the quest for unknowable truths about yourself?

In other words, I was the seeker of hidden meanings attributed to things that surrounded me from a world in which I found myself perfectly, one I had forgotten, and which only writing reminded me of. I did not know exactly what topic I would like to address, I did not know what to start with, I was looking for answers to atypical questions, I made all sorts of connections between different facts and events, but everything seemed to be more of an opportunity to experience the dimension of the space of a senseless world.

When you want to say something you first start with an observation, for example "This house is green". But the real challenge is finding out what exactly is in the house, without knowing its interior. Here is the key to the entire vision and creation that enters into a crossword puzzle game, a blindfold game, because here are all the essential reasons for success in literary activity. You have to put yourself into the skin of the one who lives in that house thinking of him as you think of yourself.

What I did not know about myself but which I was supposed to include in a literary reality was a composition of the type "what would I do if I were living in a house I never entered?" The words of the Duke of Richelieu addressed to the Marquis de Chauvelin remain up to this day in my memory: "I have announced something new, this is true. But I do not take up the burden of also saying it."

A kind of craftsmanship is present here too, being consistent with the existence of a logic that tries to capture the meaning of an unexpected horizon, a logic which is not just one of reason, as much as of feeling, of fantasy, of inducing curiosity, in a world of the game of "As you like it."

The opportunity to control the course of this doubtful game, culminating through its very explaining next to a special form of responsiveness, among so many criteria alienated by logic, interpreted in the way knowledge related to me, was offered to me whenever I tried to discover a new aspect of my personality.

Leadership: Is what people expect you to offer them in fact what they themselves must discover in a context of reality that your thinking is looking for?

Always the man who tests his ability of expressing something abstract, resorts to a certain degree of exaggeration. His development is produced the moment he realizes that he himself determines everything, under the internal pressure of the brilliance to contribute to outlining the décor of something difficult to find, but whose preference remains deep within the consciousness of others as being a characteristic of the new. And at the same time, a characteristic of their own nature.

For people to pay interest to the extended context of the "new", they need to form a vague idea of something specific, before grasping it. What it appears to them that you are offering, is in fact what they themselves need to discover in a context of reality that your thinking is looking for. This is the principle underlying the art of writing and persuasion, making up the expression of a process of extending what people perceive when entering a world of the game of "As you like it."

The only frame of reality that my thinking was looking for was the cultural effect, a fragment of a writing in which could be found a word, an expression, an interesting passage of a meeting with that part of me craving to get to know new worlds.

The shock of the experience of the "new" remains a decisive one, consisting in a postponement or even cancellation of judgment. Without a clear answer, without an easily understood message, man gets lost in the vague spaces of utopias of alternation, the un-probable become for him a hidden reality. The effect is a successful one, unexpectedly powerful, because the sensation of learning more is set.

The one who yields the art of writing and the art of persuasion is often guided by the following principle: "Announce something new, but take up the task of saying it too ! "

In other words, let people truly be champions, let them discover what fits them, penetrate the essence of your words depending on their nature. Champions are guided in life by the following terms: I want ! I know ! I can !

Leadership: Does the image of originality you place in the center of attention become part of what completes people which can prolong your reality due to the contact maintained with what is inside you?

A good writer is a fantastic practitioner of persuasion, doing his best to always convince people of the truth and authenticity of his ideas. He knows how each of his readers think: "Something is missing from this equation, but in order to find out, I am obligated to fit in it."

A writer will first try to increase the perception of his lack of control, by introducing the effect of agglomeration of elements that will consume or under your space of understanding. In order for you – the reader – to go deeper into the subject, into the core of things, and strive to find a meaning that will animate you and make you pick something of use, in accordance with the inner logic of your involvement in the game.

By appealing to what is not known, or is not clearly expressed, it is generated in people the impulse of revolt against their own rules. The measure and image of novelty that needs to be faced becoming "the part that completes them." Readers must include themselves from the very beginning into the map of your reality, within what you express, and while keeping contact with you, they must validate whatever you say by a reaction like: "That is what I want to believe" or "This is what I feel about it."

Leadership is the perception that you have of what you must include or eliminate from a reality that can be challenged at any time.

As You Like It shows the perspective of defining novelty, in the absence of integrative concepts in the context it was placed in. Novelty is what you express in writing that becomes an unexpected finding and an appealing notion of literary creation meant to be subject to the verisimilar, without provoking controversy among critics.

Your success as a writer and leader depends on the way in which people manage the messages they receive in the virtue of an un-analyzable logic and the limits the experience of introducing the new imposes – something that at times leaves too little to be seen, but from which a lot more is extracted.

At The Intersection Between The Intention, State Of Mind And Process

On April 12, 2009

Upgrade to a higher level of your evolution, managing correctly the results that people expect from you.

In the book "Leadership Gold" the founder of EQUIP, John Maxwell, cites Stuart Briscoe, reminding the following story:

A young pastor ministered a ceremony at the funeral of a war veteran. Friends of the deceased military wanted to do something significant at the ceremony, so they asked the pastor to lead them to the coffin, to keep a moment of silence, and to walk them out on the side door.

The young pastor did exactly like that. Even so, there appeared a problem: he has chosen the wrong door. With a "military precision" he led the men into a closet. The whole group had to deal with a quick and disorientated backing in the face of all who participated there.

Leadership: Do you consider that it is the process of capturing the attention felt at the moment of initiating an action that defines in your authenticity the obtaining of a lasting control over what is happening?

Legs are always directing you there where your thoughts are. To be headed in the wrong direction means to grabble from one place to another like a blind, and this "privilege" it is not allowed to you, as a leader. You are forced to focus at what you do, without wandering your mind because your legs are always following you there where your thoughts are. Leadership is not a kind of rambling, it is not a kind of annulment of reason, and you cannot afford the luxury of disregarding your duty.

It is like luring people to follow you in a direction opposite to that which they expect, which is contrary to the principles of leadership. A single misstep can attract people's disapproval. Little by little they will begin to feel that they deviate from their original intentions. After boarding your "boat" they will wonder whether they made a mistake to follow you.

In leadership there will always exist a centrifugal force that you will have to fight, a force that can disincline you from the common goal linking you with other people. It is much better for them to believe that all your steps actually have a particular purpose, which is meant to be achieved, and to that are heading all your efforts and means, otherwise you risk attracting their antipathy, and losing their support. If you intend to upgrade to a higher level of your evolution, manage correctly the results that people expect from you.

Leadership: Do you try to make the transition from one situation to another considering that this will easily be associated with a multiplicity of moments that reveal the highest feature of a person's perception of the outside world?

The highest feature of a person's perception of the outside world is heterogeneity, meaning an activity that relates different elements by their very nature, a complex determination that relates multiple causal chains and intermediate variables. While leadership is characterized by uniformity, the lack of variations in the planning and conduct of actions.

Leadership it is not just a simple change of location. Once you make a mistake, you cannot turn people out of the way, and to lead them to another one without them not losing, at least for a while, the trust in you. Do you have the courage to assume the role of an indifferent and irresponsible leader?

If you want to know if a leader is successful and effective, look in what direction he leads people. A leader is responsible for people just as he is responsible for himself and his actions.

Advance slowly, little by little, making a break, then putting you on the move again, then, stopping yourself a little, as if each step must be gauged and measured before you move. And, act so honestly that between you and others, there can be no doubt or suspicion.

Leadership is the attempt to cope with a situation from which escape may be difficult (or embarrassing) or in which help may not be accessible, but at one price: not to see yourself completely at your side, the one without any direction, from which you have nothing to learn.

At The Intersection Of Intention, Mood, And Process is that action which produces a result meant to encourage the same action, producing a characteristic called development.

You could not keep people too much time close to you, only if you have noble intentions, if you have a strong state of mind, and if you feel confident and able to take over the reins of an action. Leadership is more a process of anticipating the trajectory that you choose to follow. To manage correctly the relationship with other people, you should focus on finding the best way.

Just as an archaeologist carefully examines a fragment of a ruin, so you must carefully examine the steps proposed to be followed, and at the same time to watch the reactions of others, regarding your performance.

Conclusion: In vain, you have good intentions and magnificent thoughts. If your words are not sustained by facts on their measure, you will grabble on crooked roads, and at the same time unsafe, you will lose the confidence and support of people, remaining all alone to find out the exit of the labyrinth that you have created by yourself.

Authentic Leadership

On February 14, 2014

Experience a new approach to scientific knowledge, so that you ensure the prerequisites of an ample direction of evolution of leadership.

During assembly work, work proves tiresome. Russian director Sergei Eisenstein has numerous problems. When a sequence cannot be solved right, it appears that he calls back to his own past experience in order to discover "the secret" of his past creation, in order to analyze artistic solutions found on another occasion. In order to do this he revisits a few times the stairs sequence in Odessa, from the movie "Battleship Potemkin".

Even the idea of using color in a black and white film lies here: the sequence "the separator" and that of "bull wedding", Eisenstein inserts short snippets of film without image, painted in different colors. Through this process he tries "to exaggerate the exposure".

Leadership: Can you turn to aspects of your past experience in arguing whether or not making a valuable creation involves a lasting effort, in terms of what you are willing to change to a marketable image?

The correct evaluation of individual performance by generous leadership and unification of science with art that emerges from their combined action depends on the persistence and extent to which that instantaneous knowledge enriches you, sometimes for your whole life. Thus, the way in which you become whole by substantiating deep knowledge, existentially assumed, may have a character of principle, expressed by a physical condition: "A short impulse at the entrance generates an impulse of determined value at the exit."

In this case "the short impulse at the entrance" outlines the penetration in science during creative work, using experimental results and solution analysis, that stimulate opportunities to expand their capacities to perceive the world around us through the lens of a changing reality. An act of will to pierce the thick wall of progress, that can put you in control of your own self, under the impulse of the tendency of testing and overcoming your intellectual limits.

A leader who measures his abilities in the light of past failures, of scientific nature, but opts for a change of direction, monitors the effects of what he wants to achieve by previous experience in creative work. A sort of search of identity and some answers that will not be easily found, through the perspective of what science can offer and through the perspective of what he himself has accumulated over the years, in order to launch a new version of leadership.

An image that is marketed is a result of previous experience in creative work when the director highlights the subject of his own transformation from the status of simple performer of repetitive tasks, to that of creating a unique "event".

While "the impulse of determined value at the exit" is the result of what you experienced through a new approach to knowledge. Or more precisely, through a pragmatic scientific knowledge that, despite the complexity of the data and its representation methods, deeply reforms the way of thinking – accepted as a tool for monitoring and self-evaluation of personal and professional quality.

Exerting influence with the help of science upon the collective mentality of which you are a part of, in order to ensure the groundwork for a new direction of evolution, is possible only if you call upon your past experience on interaction with the force of creation and its values (the means of expression, the poetic message, the free play of the characters, the good sense of the composition, the chromatic sense, the description, the dialogue, the monologue, the narrative, the antithesis, the parallel, the story, etc.)

To make future creation fruitful, continuing its use in the most optimum way for professional activity, is the most difficult step in the process of materializing a rare vision that rises above the clichés and prejudices of time. And leadership cannot be perfected only from within, finding new ways of expressing their own vision in this area, by strengthening the way of thinking and the creative process of a new space allocated to personal and professional affirmation.

The secret of an artist's creation is the sum of his unique personality values, beliefs and configuration transposed into a dream concept, which marks the personal escape from the real to the unreal plane.

Authentic Leadership is rather a benchmark of professionalism to be achieved without the risk of generating any vulnerabilities regarding identity, a personal experiment that can bring incredible results through setting science by creation as the main goal. Just as the artist adds a new creation to a creation, so does the leader, by analyzing the symmetry between the elements that make up his science, who constantly adds to his leadership new options of personalization to his model of performance through the creation of art and value.

Avoid Risky Situations

On April 20, 2009

Be prepared to make as many adjustments as possible to assure the functioning of your vision even if your decisions do not turn into what you intended.

3: 20 a.m. After an anonymous call, two police officers from the brigade of organized crime set off to the place which was indicated some supposed criminals. They couldn't know with certainty if the information about the place where were hiding those five criminals is real, so they decided to go alone, without any backups. When they arrived they entered by force in their house:

"Freeze ! Don't move ! Stay where you are ! Hands up ! " shouted the two officers with the guns pointed on those five dangerous men. Suddenly it was quiet. A total and strange silence. And, all of a sudden, in only a fraction of a second, this moment of profound silence was interrupted by the noise of a bottle of bear that fell of the table:"Splash ! "

This was the moment that determined the officers to open fire at the criminals, who also responded with shot guns. When the crews of police arrived at the scene, they didn't find anyone alive. In the report made by the police afterwards it was written black on white: "They shoot each other and paid with their lives."

Leadership: Can the image that the most representative events project on your personality profile be understood by the determinism you are gifted with to make smart decisions or some hasty decisions?

I think that the moral of this event doesn't need comments. Nobody can make long term predictions, what will happen in a near or far future and which the consequences of a bad decision are. But one thing is certain: who takes action without analysing correctly the risky situations, without thinking at the negative consequences that can appear after, takes an enormous risk. Do you have your own crisis strategy?

If a conversion and progress is needed, then automatically is needed a vision. Managers need to think about the future of their company, to prevent and combat any situation that presents a high risk potential. Crisis is a risky situation and represents a reason to worry because the level of performance is falling down at all levels. And the companies whose managers didn't see the obvious signs of crisis suddenly woke up bankrupt. Just as police who have acted without thinking about the moment of danger, managers who were not able to correctly anticipate the events have not been able to save companies from disaster.

More and more companies that have state debts seem to be sitting on a barrel with gunpowder that can explode any second. They are in a very unstable situation which cannot easily escape because their managers have not had a vision and own strategy in case of crisis or simply did not work too much to keep the surface.

Just one chance of escape still has these companies, but it depends on managers. They first need to have faith that they can change the hard situation and then, by all means, they have to mobilize in order to adopt new strategies to place the companies on the markets in our country and even abroad. With other words, managers have to give their interest in order to solve the problems their companies are confronting.

Leadership: Can you prevent the occurrence of undesirable effects, by identifying the cause of exceptional phenomena and circumstances that can be solved within certain deadlines for completing the impact of your absence?

Strike is a form of protest of a group of people who are affected economically. For example, after the collective lease has expired, the manager doesn't want to negotiate another contract, so he will not be obligated to raise salaries. Because of this, the company's employees can start a general strike for an unlimited time so that they demand for the renegotiation of their work contracts and the raise of their salaries. In this way, conflict arises between the leadership of the company and its employees.

To avoid a strike managers have to modify their business strategy and their purposes, and to guide the company to an advantageous development. They have to be prepared to make a lot of adjustments so that they assure the function of their company in any kind of conditions.

To prevent the appearance of some unwanted situations, the manager has to raise the employee's spirits, to motivate them to work more efficient and to get more involved in solving the problems. If the employees feel that in the hard moments the manager is not there, beside them, and he is somewhere far away, they will not accomplish their work tasks and they will not work efficiently for the achieving the company's goals. In other words, if there is not a close relationship between the manager and the employees, the company will not have the wanted results.

Or think about something else. Could not your absence benefit the success of events?

In a manager position, it is a good idea to think if, by any chance, your absence might benefit others just as much as an explicit vote. Absence is a kind of reneging of the feeling of being a master in your own home, giving people the possibility to act according to their own will, driven by the changing impulse of the moment. Here is another plausible meaning of the "to be free" imperative.

Completing the impact of your absence in the midst of people is similar to throwing a ball up: you try to exploit the waiting horizon of an intense emotion without paying attention to all the processes that happen around you.

Avoid risky situations that occur unexpectedly and do not provide a broad perspective on how to avoid the occurrence of an unwanted event.

Azerbaijan

On November 27, 2021

Listen to what you are, without seeing what is expected of you.

Roudeep – Azerbaijan. Listening to her, giving her all my attention, even if it was a little harder at first to catch her melodic line, I feel connected to myself, compared to the scene of a lonely night walk. It is an Etnatropmysthes, an unconditional support of the inner life that calibrates more a low vibration, and less a high vibration, to favorable levels of perception of beauty, space and the surrounding time.

The background is twilight, occult, transient, leaving room for a quiet question: can I go back to what was once the emotional atmosphere and adjacent to the nostalgic glow attributed to the sets in the film of a life that keeps repeating itself?

I listen to it with my whole being, with an unprecedented artistic impetus, having before me the whisper of a summer breeze or the touch of twilight by a glass wall that gives you a look mirrored in the complex phenomena of life and the universe. The melodic line of wonder, fragility and delicacy, of history, of love, swaying in the pleasant cradle of the waves that sweep my thoughts and footsteps on the sand, at a time when the night is clouded by day, reaching the measure of that oh so unmistakable artistic vibration, so unknown even to the spiritually mature. Of course, a metaphor.

Leadership: Can the image you have of yourself ensure the continuity between the creative flow and self-enlivening, doubled by that compensatory reverberation of the image of a reality that no longer exists as such?

But I still believe that there is an ontological continuity between time and eternity in the unique sound of the song, the same as that of an ocean waiting at shoreline for someone to penetrate its secrets, trying to feel the terrible whirlwind of its incomprehensible depths, without having the green-blue landscape of the abyssal universe lost in the fog.

The resemblance of the song Azerbaijan to the Moonlight Sonata could only be achieved in a register jump (gravely over-quiet), by smoothly switching from one shade to another. By listening to her and listening to her again, she seems to rejuvenate my feelings, persistently and comprehensively, through a kind of self-enlivening, but also through a kind of diffusion of the experience of omnipotence that ensures the momentum of a Creator's life drive of biological, light, bold rhythms.

It's as if that initial thrill of music well-polished by the creative flow of millennia, coming from the depths of the soul of cosmic origin, is trying to arouse in me that emotional vibration of feelings that animates the memory of a soft, warm, angelic caress, that gentle caress of the crown of victory, in the long embrace of eternity.

Leadership: Can you connect with yourself through the nostalgic recollection attributed to the set of a film of a life that keeps repeating itself?

Deprived of all vanity, polished by the challenges of life, knowing that not the accumulation of things brings joy and rest to the soul, Azerbaijan has the effect of sensitizing the artistic-writing matter, perpetuating the strange thrill of meaning that dominates the sunset, sunrise, sky and sea. At other times, Azerbaijan behaves like a foolish old man who is overwhelmed by increasingly distant memories, blurring the living power of feeling a resistance to striking action. Only the fragmentation of the world in different points of view takes me out of the unity of this piece of music that belongs more to the sensitivity of the spirit than to the speech of a rare painting by Salai.

Is it just a reverberation that stirs my feelings? Just a charade of the mind subjected to an entity characterized by four attributes: height, duration, intensity and timbre? All I know is that nowhere would I feel closer to myself, yes, pure sincerity that has ever adorned my soul as an artist, as when repeated *tenuto sounds*begin to be absolutely receptive to Borges' imaginary universe where death and the compass never find their way back to the owner:

"Princess de Faucigny Lucinge had received the family silverware from Poitiers. From the deep bottom of a chest sealed with international stamps came, one by one, the finest inanimate things: the silverware of Utrecht and Paris, with a rich heraldic fauna and a samovar. Between them - with a barely perceptible and slight sleep of a sleeping bird - was mysteriously beating a compass. The princess didn't recognize her. The blue needle was aiming towards the magnetic north. The metal box was concave. The letters on the sphere belonged to one of the alphabets on Tlon."

This is how the first penetration of the fantasy world into the real world, from Borges' universe, took place. Likewise, Azerbaijan, this perimeter of universal music in which creation becomes a miracle, is a masterpiece full of magic whose deep knowledge is gradually revealed in a communion of the soul with the divine mystery. Finally, another perspective, a small piece of vast camouflage.

Compensatory, the ineffable power of sound that completely envelops me during the transition from a space of the non-mind, from an inner silence, to the nostalgia of that multiple tremor of reverberation of the star on an ocean of imagination, does not necessarily mix with the theme of an imaginary or real story, but it creates a resonant effect on the progressive *molto expressive frequency*of a harmonious state.

Leadership: Can the effect of your own imagination materialize in a deepening and perfection of artistic intentions, without registering a tension in the repetition of the complex nature of Creation?

"Hurry up and listen to me and enjoy me, for you do not know how hasty life is", he said, echoing the notes of a minor octave that Azerbaijan surrounded itself with through a passage sung exclusively in the lower plane of the electronic orgy. And the primary meaning of this strong connection between the human being and the untamed spirit of music, on soul and electro frequencies, at the forefront of a total art, which Azerbaijan highlights with the amplification of a nostalgic caress felt with pleasure from the beginning, is that greatness is born of the loneliness with which I have linked throughout my life relationships with the artistic universe and with the surrounding nature.

Yes, it can be an explanation. But there is something else still. When I listen to this wonderful play, tirelessly, with the lights off, in exchange for a less transient reality, which has the effect of sensitizing the writing matter, I feel that I am part of the creative activity of an artist who reveals his contemplative orientation to High, towards the religious side. And so I feel myself sinking into an ocean of dreams, emotions, exaltations, amplifying as if an expansion of the soul: Orevishartta, when the soul is lost in God, uniting with other divine hypostases.

Through a kind of electro-stimulating spell of fine tonal chords, framed in a moment that allows the transition from the real world to that of the memory beyond time, this magical work, whose deep knowledge is gradually revealed, easily makes me lose my mind and transposes me into a character from Asimov's books, or from Salvador Dali's revolutionary works. It's like a calming earthquake over a longer radius of coverage. Alas, how strange I feel !

Are you pretending not to hear me? No, they are not a cheap imitation of musical chords springing from the plasticity of a lived, internalized, candid utterance, without the possibility of recovering and repairing the past moment, when the ocean currents were pulling everything towards distances and horizons. For I have the courage to dream, when no one has the courage to dare. It is a state of light characterized by a low noise, in which my soul, imprisoned in the reality of a more sublime world, strengthens one of the laws of the universe: "listen to what you are, without seeing what is expected of you."

A tension in the repetition of the complex nature of creation is equivalent to that attitude of the type "I know and feel something that you will never be able to understand", which the artist shows when he makes the transition from extremely different states of mind: from tenderness or sadness – to joy.

Azerbaijan is the connection between me and another world, from another dimension of living. Know that I have mastered the effect of this inaudible music to the ears that do not understand the language of art, not knowing how to tell the difference between time and eternity, corroborating my thoughts at the hour when night can be mistaken for daylight. I was in danger, a loneliness that forcibly engages the inner being, becoming a spring of creation.

The secret of a longing for myself is still hidden in the stars and the moon, in the moods, in the play of light and shadow, in the subtle relationship between sounds and notes, tones and tempo...

Back In Time To The Very Beginning

On September 01, 2013

Define your existence according to the beliefs that motivate you to go forward, without anchoring yourself in the shadow of what you've been.

"Clarice Starling was tormented, devastated against her will. Some of the things Lecter had said about her were true, other were just apparently true. For some seconds she felt as if a totally foreign conscience was walking randomly in her brain, pushing off the things off the shelves, as a bear in a tent camp."

It was obvious that in her mind, aspects of her life were retraced till the very beginning, towards a precise target, toward a deep secret. That could have been disclosed only by the shadow of what she was, under the action of the continuous traction force of conscience, activated and configured in real stress, pressure and uncertainty conditions. The consequence was in the end inacceptance. The movement of the entire repair and control mechanism that would replace the old thought structure and the polluting compromising that had badly affected her development.

The force of change, well-supported by her convictions and aspirations automatically took over the energy recovered by breaking, by stopping any external interventions. But also by gradually eliminating the inner voice that acted in a deafening manner over her morale, with a disappointing effect. Hannibal Lecter had made it clear that her weak nature would not be able to cope with the situation, or at least that's what she imagined under the aspect of a sad conception of life, of the world, of her pursuit in an endless and inescapable police game.

Leadership: Does your willingness to break away from everything you want to leave behind give you the opportunity to feel the satisfaction of an identity not faked by the doubtful relevance of the profession you practice?

Clarice feels the satisfaction of an identity unconcerned with the doubtful relevance of the profession she practices; she feels that she is able to cross that mountain of prejudice that calls for a conformism to the social conventions, but consumes herself in the passive contemplation of her mental states of pain she cannot detach herself of. The influence of Hannibal Lecter overthrows the order of things, it is like a shadow that follows you for the rest of your life.

Are you ready to reward your professional achievements in the context of an influence that joins regular events?

The power to restore trust and safety in the self was given by the reaction past-future, the present being a rather doubtful moment at that time. While the potential energy of the focalization point towards a different existential area, towards results and performance, extended around a central pillar of well-maintained objectives in the consecutive positive force field grew in quantity during the difficult moments of wandering.

A strenuous influence that joins regular events is the book of an exemplary hero's tale that appears in the possible summary of a destiny unfulfilled by the glory promised by the success of life.

Everything was reduced to the chance of running far away, of escaping in the inferno of the noise torrent within the mind's darkness. The sound of the lambs screaming in her mind. She wanted to be strong. She wanted to strengthen the control over her hidden skills. She wanted to earn her freedom, to get himself further away from the ground zero of restlessness, to get away from the painful punishment of the sin of submission to her own essential, sensitive and useless nature.

But exactly this disturbing limitation determined the innocent being, coerced from the early stages to the effects of internal forces, to rethink her options. There was no landmark, no clue, only one step to make. Grounded. As if an experiment meant to test her orientation were performed on her. And she could hold bravely against this experiment.

Her resistance force acted promptly over the control surface where the mind's duels were held regularly, printing an acceleration of its movement forward towards a horizon filled with light, enlarged by thought and action.

Leadership: Do you measure the doubtful value you give yourself to the status of "defender of an exceptional destiny" through an energy consumed in the reflections that is, however, lost for action?

Clarice stays in an act of deep thought that stagnates her soul even harder, numbs her desire to get involved in the shaping of a different future.

We can currently talk about an active leadership from the point of view of objective factors when determining deadlines to eliminate "the passive" or to grow "the active" within an individual's existence, those precise requests to load with too much confusion or uncertainty are not based on the guarantee offered by the ideals he relates or aspires to.

Just as the blame always needs a punishment, a crisis solution always requires an active and strictly realistic position of the individual, especially if its comparison to the ideals he's looking to fulfill assumes, sometimes, darker and colder tones. Namely, when he is tormented, devastated against his will and cannot eliminate everything that is apparent from the truth.

The importance that you attach to the events of life feeds from the situation in which there are transformations of an identity that adjoin the predisposition towards extreme gestures and behavioral unpredictability.

Thus, we get to the divisibility conditions of leadership, introduced in what is essentially a transition process whose result is materialized in the development or regression of the individual. We're talking about a particular case of dividing the individual's personality between two equal parts in effect and meaning: weakening morale and the power to rehabilitate trust, given by the relationship past-future, the present being a rather doubtful moment at that time.

Clarice almost reached a breaking point, she was on the verge of a demonic wandering called madness, because she didn't feel strong enough to change the rules of an intense psychological game led by Hannibal. Practically, she fully abandoned herself in the paradise of a scholarly thinking that far surpassed her understanding, and became dependent on this slippery but exciting route at the same time. In parallel with the reality of "wandering" in light of which man tries to usually formulate alternatives and to analyze his action directions, surfaces the problem of a leadership reduced to a psychological unit.

Before leading, re-balance your personality, reduce or eliminate those tension symptoms or anxieties that lead to the collapse of your operational system. Do everything in your power to get away from the action of the continuous traction force of conscience, activated and configured in real stress, pressure and uncertainty conditions.

The will to break away from everything behind you and to embrace the unknown of advanced thinking involves rebuilding your system of values by which you follow the rule: "Everyone has the right to a judge".

Values such as honesty, integrity, respect, generosity, compassion, engagement, proactivity, diligence, can save you from difficult circumstances, but at the same time, you can condemn yourself to a wandering in the darkness of an uncertain life.

Back In Time To The Very Beginning highlights this retrospective study you need to take in order to evaluate your abilities, especially your future. The ratio between memories and dreams must be as close as possible to value 1, which means you have evolved in accordance with the objectives you have set at different times in life. If the value is higher than 1, it means you have come to a standstill and you were satisfied only with memories. And if the value is under 1, it means you've outdone yourself.

The result of this report influences and expresses all the benefits of every nature, including the materials ones you may have obtained because of your work, perseverance and abilities.

Be Afraid Of Tricks, Despite The Proposals That Will Be Made To You

On Mai 09, 2010

Learn to make yourself stand out through the ability to subjectively observe and interpret events through visual information, outlining your own vision that protects the hidden virtues within you.

- Mom , I want to you know that the attitude of my brother Neferu, m it worries me .

Hetepheres raised her eyebrows in wonder and looked at him questioningly , which encouraged her son to continue .

- Yesterday, Neferu gave a beautiful party to his brothers , cousins and friends . He took me aside and proposed a pact, after telling me that our older brother, Cheops, he is not able to assume the royal task that will fall to him after His Majesty climbs into Ra 's boat .

- A pact, you say?

- He proposes that I help him ascend the throne of the Two Kingdoms and , in return , he will make me his vizier and chief of the armies. Now, you know very well, mother , how much I care about Cheops and , personally, I know that he will be able to lead the people of Egypt. I didn't tell Neferu that I will never betray my brother, that maybe I am his most faithful ally, because I don't want to break the bond with Neithotep's son. My intention is to let him believe that I am not hostile to an alliance with him, to the detriment of Cheops, that I may thus keep a close watch on his designs , and that when the time will come, to be able to intervene in favor of my brother.

- Think well , my son. But be careful, I fear Neferu's treachery. I am afraid that he will use you and , after he has achieved his goal, he will sacrifice you . I am convinced that it would not be you that they would make vizier, if they gained power . His chosen one would sooner be Ptahuser, the Grand Master of the Art, because the alliance with him is more important than the one with you. He is not risking anything on his part , he knows that he will not be able to claim the double crown , while you , after Cheops , are the second legitimate heir . Should Cheops disappear , you will become crown prince , not him .

Leadership: Can understanding the cause and effect behind the scenes help you manage your emotions and act consciously and responsibly without feeling threatened by all that adversity means?

- May the gods protect us from such misfortune . My brother Cheops is as dear to me as my wife , and I am ready to defend his throne against any enemy .

- Rahotep, know that I am next to my father like a wasp : every time I see him , I insist on making you the commander of the royal armies and urge him to to officially recognize Cheops as the legitimate heir by his royal will . I hope I shall succeed , though , as regards Cheops , I am not too hasty in my steps , for , like you, I fear his actions Neferu, I'm afraid , seeing the throne slip away for good - following a declaration by your father that would officially make Cheops heir to the throne. I hope I'm not doing anything rash. We must act skillfully , with great diplomacy , because Neferu is cunning, is supported by the crowd and is ready to do anything to ascend the throne of the Two Kingdoms . And you should be afraid of his machinations, despite the proposals he made you , because you are the second obstacle to his ambitions .

– Precisely because he is aware of this, he proposed that pact to me. But I will be careful. Be convinced , mother , that I will know how to protect myself from his treachery.

– You have to be very careful. That is why I do not urge you to feign an alliance with him. By acting in this way, you only encourage him in what follows and , above all , you reveal yourself to him more than you can gain any advantage . He is too clever to let you know his game, while you, as I know you , spontaneous and open, will reveal yourself to him , discover your weaknesses and and he will use them in his profit .

Leadership: Can you find a way to protect your integrity and authenticity by manifesting your inner strength to expose yourself to events in a way that is congruent with who you really are?

– I will not forget your advice, mother . I will think about how I will have to behave towards him . But I fear more for Cheops. I do n't know where he is At this point; probably hitting the fields and the desert around Memphis.

– No way . At this moment he is in complete safety , in the temple of Thoth at Hermopolis, where he is learning to become king of the Two Kingdoms .

– This is news that makes my soul happy. At least he is safe , among people who love and respect him .

– Sure you do. But keep this secret to yourself. It 's better to think that he 's gone to visit his swamps , as usual .

To expose yourself to events in a way that is congruent with who you really are means to integrate into your drive for greatness the power to be yourself in a world that is constantly trying to change you.

Be afraid of tricks, despite the proposals that will be made to you , and only in this way will you succeed in rationally assimilating the "understanding beyond understanding", that is, what makes a minor power become a major power. Even if you seem easily influenced, you can use this apparent vulnerability in a moment that makes the enemy vulnerable to you.

Shaping a vision of yourself that protects your hidden virtues and values, especially if you aspire to a high leadership position, means developing a unique perception of the world that reflects those fundamental qualities and principles that you consider important and worthy of protection in the face of any machinations.

It's about having a deep understanding of who you are and what you value as a prestigious authority, about building a perspective and a set of ideas to guide your choices and actions, keeping you away from enemies . As a way of protecting your integrity and authenticity, you must manifest your inner strength to expose yourself to events in a way that is congruent with who you really are.

Be An Exceptional Player

On June 16, 2009

Rise up to the height of your potential in order to find an echo in the minds and souls of those around you.

We live in a world governed by principles. Principles of collegiality, devotion, honor, mutual respect, trust, which we discover in time, not suddenly, not the first time when we meet all kinds of people, and not just in tough moments when we are forced to ask help from a friend, a colleague, a parent or a brother.

Yes. All the principles which guide us in life, which we sometimes try to follow as strictly as possible in our activities, which we talk about in articles and often preach during seminars and conferences, between customers and employees - are very valuable, but unfortunately, sometimes are very difficult to put into practice.

We strive to be better, we make the greatest efforts, we do our best, we fight until the last drop, and we finally discover, with much bitterness, that everything was in vain, that nothing we have done or dreamed or what we tried to achieve did not materialize; everything remained almost unchanged: the same habits - only fewer, the same results – only a bit different from usual, the same guilt, the same reproaches, the same irony from all. Where did we go wrong? What does the future reserve us? Is it still worth to respect any principle at all?

Leadership: Can you engage in crossing certain experiences from which you can extract meaning about yourself, about others, about life, without putting yourself at the forefront of superiority that eliminates any potential weak point?

On Sunday, I went to play football with my friends. As always, the same rule: "Ten minutes or two goals", and, as usual, five or six teams were waiting on the side to enter on the field. My team was also waiting. While we were looking how the team before us was playing, I couldn't help noticing, as well as everybody else, the weak and vacillating game of one of the players on the field. You don't need to be a genius to see if a person knows how to play football or not, even a little bit.

Well, that guy had nothing to do with this sport at all. Simply, every time he was receiving the ball, he was losing it to the adversary in the next second; every time someone from his team was telling him to stay in defense, he seemed to purposely attack; he did not intercept a passed ball by opponents, did no dispossession and no recovery, he didn't do anything, absolutely nothing, and, overall, he scored an auto-goal, which caused the other teammates to no longer give him a pass. And at the end of the day, after so many games lost, he was asked, kindly, as from that day onward, to find another team, more suitable for him.

Was it worth or not this change of plans? Was it a right decision, the correct one? The boy was very ambitious and gave his best to play well - he ran from side to side of the field many times, even more than everybody, he asked for the ball, he was there to receive it, trying to show the other teammates that he is involved in the game, but with what use? His attempt failed. No team wants a poor player, this is the cruel truth.

Your belonging to a team is like dice thrown at random: you never know what's going to come out, but you certainly cannot "order" a six-six that will allow you easy access to a new positioning in terms of one side of the dice.

The reasoning of a coach is divided into two inversely proportional parts. First is the result of a strong emotional manifestation where its decisions affect the validity of adaptation perspectives in a tough environment, which is a confirmation of the too high tolerance shown for any deviations, a weakness that returns safely against it. Then there is the tendency of thinking in terms of superiority, which categorically rejects any weakness.

The leader is the kind of team captain who experiences the ascendant or descendant trends of his teammates from the secondary resources of a reasoning that will use any weak point and any mistake as a useful personal development tool. Basically, a leader chooses to behave first as an agent of the reflection of others in his area of action, and only afterwards as a coach.

Leadership: Can you adjust your positioning to the immediate challenges of your integration into a value recognition area, without denying your belonging to a minority that maintains a medium altitude?

Who makes mistakes too often will no longer receive passing on the field and will be disfavored. The lack of professionalism of a player is quickly noticed by teammates and, in the end, they either exclude him from the team or he will self-exclude. You can work hard and well, you can make an effort, giving everything you can, you can try to create a good impression to the other teammates, to move left, right, raise your hands, to create the feeling you're useful and indispensable, but if they do not see any progress, any positive change in your style of play, a notable result, it no longer remains a lot to say. The others team members will seek a replacement for you and you will be removed from the team.

But let's be honest. Isn't the team entitled to seek other team member, one which plays decent at least, which does not cause any problems, which can easily integrated into their game style? In the end, why would they choose to lose, what would be the point to join a competition knowing that, due to one of the teammates, the fate of each match will be sealed anyway? Aren't we all seeking the victory, to feel the taste of success, even if only for a moment? To be happy that we did a good job and that all the time that we invested in the game, all our efforts, was worth, and finally did materialize in extraordinary result.

Each member of a team must focus on certain tasks that need to be met with success; otherwise the effort will not be efficient. The better you work, the more proof of professionalism and seriousness you give, the more easily you will gain the respect and trust of others, which will become more closer to you and they will start to appreciate you unconditionally, at your true value. Moreover, they will praise your excellent qualities, they will respect you, they will love you and will recommend you to others, in any way they will not get rid of you, no, it will never happen. Nobody in the team has any interest to remove a man of value, which may contribute to obtain a leading position in the ranking.

Leadership is the arbitrary value you assign to a football match whose outcome counts less than the players' loyalty to their captain.

Be An Exceptional Player by controlling the coach's decisions in terms of the validity of emotional behavior and self-perception from the perspective of a viewer who is analyzing a match without emotional implications. Then try to rise to the height of your potential so that you can find an echo in the mind and soul of those around you.

Be By My Side

On January 24, 2018

Examine the reality of your beliefs depending on the way you experience a meeting with yourself from another perspective.

It happens only in the darkness of the night, before the magical trap that triggers the effective inner dialogue with God, to revise all of my habits, the habits of a life burnt at a low fire, which is about search, reflection and choice, for which time does not return.

Confidence in this form of concealment, loneliness, and enlightenment, a nuance of strangeness of the Ego and its finding in a far-away without end or answer, continues with the possibility of revealing the invisible of the world itself an existential solution of overcoming the immediate past, either in the depth of subjectivity, or towards the height of transcendence.

As in any interaction with the mysteries of the transcendence of the inner world that collaborates with immanence, reacting as a phenomenon of perpetual consciousness, I was not at all satisfied with the level of understanding I reached, about who I was in a game of the mind expressing itself only through the teachings of a science and virtues too fine to be noticed by someone.

Everything in me was the same sight of darkness, a non-chromatic triad with confrontational accents: gray, black and burgundy, assorted after the tortures of the mind to recognize its shadows, surrounding myself with sensations of free-falling, of searching for meanings, ones with logic, others without, considered realities. They fed my negative states, lowering the ability of my blood to maintain an anticoagulant status.

Leadership: Do you consider that appearance contrary to reality, by expressly defining the notion of "unexplored side" on which the challenge of your own enigma is based?

At times I felt like I was suffocating, as it happens to sculptors who inhale the marble dust from the finishes, but my unexplored side was harder to identify and analyze for moral rigor than a stone block from which a form of artistic manifestation must be extracted.

Those small hours, uncertain and anxious, determined an order of how I had to explain my perception of the facts or circumstances that were about to be reported in writing. To them I added a touch of strangeness to the finding of myself in relation with a deaf God, in the mystery of an interesting interpretation of the notion of "pre-established combination" between the timeless and the ephemeral, their ensemble resonating in all that accompanies time in an unnamed reality.

I am not referring to a self-emptying as my purification of all conscious fears, a small update of the extra-corporal experience obtained in the waking state, or the contemplation of the invisible things in the way of Moses, which entered into the darkness where God was to bring in the light of new treasures of wisdom and knowledge.

Rather, I sought to demonstrate the possibility of the passing from the real into the unknown, with various neo-impressionist nuances, covering in part the mechanisms of thinking with the danger of exaggerations that silently flattened separate elements of the background on which I would place my enigma.

The enigma was a part of what I was experiencing in the space of imagination, supported by an absolute presence, from which the random was not absent.

Leadership: Can you give your world a form of certainty, without moving too far away from where you imagine things you cannot experience?

To play with unseen matter, imagined and soaked in a pure mix of real and profound, to produce the transformation of elements of good and evil in the same way in which the chemist chooses the most relevant experiences for the implementation of new laws and principles, here is how I would outline my beliefs of the moments of doubt I was experiencing. They could give birth to new certainties.

In the same way God crystallizes His formula of dominating the world. I need to call You, but Your path towards the "great sight" is covered by the whispers of the night from which drip hesitant experiences.

The darkness became even deeper. In those moments of doubt, with contrasting intensity, I heard the cry of reason that God, whose entire creation owes some percentages of illusory meaning to reality, gives you the mystery of the universe by accentuating the small shadows of your soul, building them in a lively temple where the Wall of Sorrow stands, but from where you receive Enlightenment.

I drift away from where I am imagining things I do not wish to experience, when I'm with You.

From "The Citadel", by Saint Exupery, I extracted this fragment:

"In regards to my neighbor, I noticed that it was of no use to examine the deeds, the states of things, institutions, the objects of his empire, but only the inclinations and tendencies. However, if you examine my empire, you will look at the blacksmiths and you will find them making nails, passionate for nails and singing of them. Then, you will go and see the woodcutters and find them breaking down trees and be passionate about it and filling up with immense joy at the feast of the woodcutters, which is that of the first crack, when the greatness of the tree begins to prostrate. And if you go to look at the astronomers, you will find them passionate about the stars and hearing nothing but their silence.

And if I were to ask you: "What is happening in my empire, what will be born tomorrow of it?" you will answer: "Nails will be made, trees will be cut down, stars will be studied, and therefore will be nail reserves, wood reserves, and observations of the stars." For, of poor sight and unable to see beyond the tip of your nose as you are, you would not have been able to say: "Tomorrow, we will take for the seas."

The most subtle and representative argument of my reserve of knowledge from a barren place, from the overflow of an imagination that exalts, rethinks, rewrites reality, as an echo of whispers in the dark, is mirrored outside of me, in what I write.

The natural tendency of my reason is to support a point of view that I have reached by exploring the unknown, so that I would capture a different image of reality than that which you have imagined about me by accepting my thoughts.

Head in the direction in which you wish to excel, but in such a manner that your creation will gain the meaning that others seek.

Be By My Side during revelations governed by the unpredictable and the unknown, in which the random character (hazard-burdened) of phenomena is defining in an interior where doubt often occurs. They will change your impression of me.

But, as you realize, by writing these lines, I have already begun to induce you a different reality, called: my world.

Be One Step Ahead Of Others

On February 03, 2009

Incline your variant of approaching your own capacities, so that the angle of your leadership promoting will prove to be efficient.

Just think a little. What is the first thing that comes to your mind when you meet the concept of "Emotional intelligence"? More than likely you think about Daniel Goleman, is not it?

Similarly, if I ask anything else about the concept of*"Lateral thinking"* surely the first time you will think of Edward de Bono, is not it?

Both Daniel Goleman and Edward de Bono had become very popular because they were the first that have brought into question these concepts. In fact, they created these concepts, and they were the first that popularized them in their seminars. However many things would be written on the Internet or in various books about these two concepts, the world will know who are those who created and talked for the first time about them.

After Daniel Goleman placed on the market in 1995 the book "Emotional Intelligence" and other writers have discussed the subject, but none of them managed to achieve the success enjoyed by Daniel Goleman. When someone buys a book, the first thing he looks is the year of publication. So even, if currently are posted on the Internet thousands of articles on "Emotional Intelligence" even if at the seminars are discussed elements of this concept, be sure that the world already printed in their mind the name of Daniel Goleman, because he has the proof. He was the first in 1995 that opened and developed the subject, the rest does not matter. Short and temporary are the subsequent interventions of others after him.

Albert Einstein broke the patterns of some brilliant concepts, by developing the theory of special relativity. Is there at the present day any physician better known than him?

Do you orient your leadership towards a rising path when you are caught between two dilemmas: "what if I do it and it doesn't work?" VERSUS "what if I don't do it and I regret it afterwards?"

"The slope is the angle formed by an inclined distance with its projection on the horizontal. On the topographic maps, the distances between the level curves are inversely proportional to the size of the slope. Thus, the large slopes are rendered by very close level curves, and the smaller ones by level curves at a bigger distance from one another. "

In leadership, "the slopes" are given by those elements, by those factors that bring you into prominence, individualize and transpose you into another sphere above the banality, with which you are confronted every day. To be at the head you have to distance yourself from other people by a striking and more profound thinking. You should deal with a sense of responsibility and with a serious training of your uniqueness if you want for your leadership not to be characterized as dull and to be considered as superficial.

Your value is highlighted by a point of view from "up above" when you can highlight what sets you apart as an artist from that unique perspective that integrates the consciousness of your entire talent into the consciousness of all mankind.

For your angle of approaching the leadership to prove being efficient you must incline your variant of promoting your abilities, so you will find yourself at as a shorter distance of the requirements of people. Can you satisfy their requirements through a vision, an idea, and some innovative solutions, which would have the particularity of being excellent?

Are you orienting your leadership on an ascending or a descending slope? The regret of not disappointing yourself, same as the fear of trying something different, have in common the inability to produce the document of change in the perimeter of a customized area of impact that can accept a reference cause: the concern of being competitive.

Leadership: Can you be the first to launch a crucial idea in the evolution of the concept of "brand positioning" that claims the conducting of an event of the type "winner takes all"?

The most effective method to attract attention to yourself, and to propel you at a higher level is to be the first who launches the message, an idea or a concept, and then to spread it throughout the world. If, for example, you are a very good writer who really has something to say, who comes with exciting and new ideas, then you have a huge advantage. By bringing into question a new concept in your books, which has not been discussed extensively in other books or on the Internet, you can create to yourself a sound name that would never be forgotten.

Moreover, and this time it is confirmed the ascertainment that the most astute people always manage to create advantages hard to ignore. Just as a traveler startles in the train when the engine suddenly stops, just as people rush out of their homes at the first sign of an earthquake, so, in a moment, the concept found in a book revives in the mind of the readers the author of that concept.

A decisive idea that is launched in the evolution of the concept of "brand positioning" can claim to conduct an event of the type "winner takes all" when you manage to distance yourself from the crowd and turn your connection with science into a "one-on-one" relationship.

Leadership is the height given to you by knowledge around a battle perimeter stricktly imposed by the objective necessity of finding an expressive form of manifestation of personality.

What really characterizes people from the top of the hierarchy is just that they know to create a bridge to success. Just like a skilled leader who can conquer the seemingly unconquerable, they manage to break the patterns and to assert themselves first. Both the success of Daniel Goleman, and that of Edward de Bono or of Albert Einstein, can only confirm that fate is always shown generous to people who act first. At the same time, their fate is contrary to those who do not know or fail to make themselves remarked.

Therefore, be beyond measure ambitious and make everything possible to be the first who launches a strong message, a special concept, an interesting idea or sensational information.

Incline your variant of approaching your own capacities so that the angle of your leadership promoting will prove to be efficient.

Be The Creation Of The Horizon That Reveals Its Infinity

On October 21, 2024

Each act of creation is a step forward to a higher perception, where physical effort becomes a way to penetrate the depths of the spirit.

A perpetual movement transcends the pose of a transfiguring agent of the real and is lost in the horizon of a creation that lasts only one life. It is the movement of the steps of the runner who triumphed, artistically and athletically, in almost all the mountain half-marathon competitions this year. "Be your own creation while you run" was the motto of my sister, Oana Fântânaru, at every challenging race, intertwining the rhythm of the body in motion - with the curves of the mountain landscape, beyond the usual physical limits. For the first time, considering art as a living expression of the self, I thought I saw in Oana that artistic spirit that makes reality transform, through a kind of alchemy of movement, as if every step were a brush on the canvas of nature.

At the top of the mountain, her ragged breath mingled with the rarefied air of the heights, creating a fusion of silent victory, a kind of communion with the infinite, so that space and time seemed to merge into an "Ofiyaancti Afixolem", a moment of suspended eternity . In fact, every top runner is a creator capable of composing a unique visual image, where time, space and energy merge into a compositional balance that is dynamic rather than static. She said to herself at one point:

"I look around and feel my perspective change not only physically, but deep within my being. The summit, this culmination is not just a geographical place, but a shrine of my own transcendence, for I have achieved the impossible of transcending the limits physical and mental. I see below me valleys and ridges, but above all, I see my own path, every step a lesson, every obstacle a gateway to a past that I have turned into a springboard. Thus, I realize that I have climbed not only a mountain of stone, but also the labyrinth of my own doubts and fears. Here, in this remote and yet so intimate place, I feel like a beacon of an enlightened existence, radiating an inner light that pierces the clouds of self-limitations. imposed."

Leadership: Can you turn your journey into a work of art, making each step the unique expression of an inner vision without which the meaning of the movement would be incomplete?

"Each step marks a unique expression of rhythm and balance, where the horizon line drawn in running reflects the dynamic of continuous creation from nothing. I now understand that greatness does not lie in the top of the mountain, but in the power to leave some beaten tracks on the road traveled with great weight. This place becomes the symbol not of an external victory, but of an internal conquest, a living proof of the strength of my unconquered spirit. Standing here on the border of heaven and earth, I feel that I have reached not only the top of a mountain, but also the pinnacle of my own potential. More than greatness, more than reaching the top, it is the steps you take to reveal your unique creation."

Oana's words seem to have the power to crystallize the whole experience of a splendid runner, in search of a place in the world, like a Kandinsky painting, where every point and line takes on a cosmic meaning. At the same time, these words reflect an extract from a fragment of the novel "Foucault's Pendulum", written by Umberto Eco:

"Creation is a process of divine inhalation and exhalation, like a restless breath or the action of calves. Try to create something out of nothing yourself. It is a once-in-a-lifetime thing. Oh God, to blow the world as you blow into a glass globe, it needs to contract in itself, to receive the breath, and then it emits the long luminous hiss of the ten sefirot. For this it is necessary that the lights of the Sephiroth to be collected in some receptacles capable of withstanding their radiance."

Leadership: Can you perceive the unseen movement in nature that, though you cannot see it, resonates deep within you and shapes your soul?

Oana Fântânaru proved every time, capturing a kind of version of the inner image of the art creator, that she is not only a top runner, but a creator of transcendent experiences, a kind of movement artist, because every step she takes doing competitions expresses a harmony between the body and nature.

Creating while running means moving in perfect symbiosis with nature, transforming each breath into a primordial aesthetic form, like a painter discovering new types of brushwork. She herself told me at one point that: "the power of a runner lies in the ability to find meaning in each step, drawing lines and dots that crystallize the dynamics of a continuous creation, which cannot be broken by space or time."

Creation represents the meeting point between physical discipline and imagination that reconfigures the limits of one's being, revealing the true potential of the individual. This is also a kind of spiritual alchemy, isn't it? If it were up to me, I would choose to express the truth that every act of creation is a step forward to a higher perception, where physical effort becomes a way to penetrate the depths of the spirit. I don't know why I think that. Perhaps, I still believe that transcendence is possible, in the version of enlightenment through movement, with chances of reaching a kind of kinesthetic revelation, that moment of grace that makes you feel oneness with nature and the universe.

Leadership: Can the steps that movement dictates make you perceive the inevitability of destiny, turning every path you take into a testament to your indefatigable spirit before it becomes a masterpiece?

Also on this line of thought, the words of the writer Ion Frunzetti come to mind: "The process of empathic transfer establishes not only the justification of the right to extend human subjectivity over nature, but also the obligation of the human soul to receive the deep life, the secret breath of pulsations of existence, from nature, the unseen but powerful movement, resounding in us, of the contemplated object, molding their soul according to its structure, in a way unknown, in the mortar of our mental processes."

This is, in fact, the essence of the top runner, reflected through Oana's inner movement. Movement becomes an act of creation when the body and nature come into resonance. Through movement, the spirit expresses its desire to connect to the flow of natural creation, urging you to discover an aesthetic of movement that unites body and soul.

Without a doubt, my sister's creation is a pure expression of the unity of human will and the rhythm of nature, turning each step into a living work of art. Every step he takes at competitions becomes an instrument of connection with nature, fixing every detail of the route taken, in the deep resonance of the experience of unity and inner joy, beyond forms.

Leadership is manifested not by reaching a peak, but by the power to create a sustainable and visionary path, as a symbol of artistic sophistication and your power to be the "soul of nature".

Be the creation of the horizon that reveals its infinity with every breath, every step you take. Through creation, the body becomes an instrument that transmits not only movement, but also the inner energy that connects man with nature, in the way of an artist who combines harmony and force in a representative moment of existence. So, a runner's spirit becomes a masterpiece when it transcends physical limits and merges with inner will, turning every step into an expression of self-transcendence.

Be The Sight In A Blind World

On April 09, 2023

It's embarrassing when you're forced to look at yourself when you don't want to come to terms with something.

You say you're open to change, right? Perhaps you have re-watched the movie The Terminator, with real interest, and appreciate the value of using technology, before any awareness of your own artistic individuality. You let yourself be inspired by a super-sophisticated robot, an android capable of resisting fire and bullets, that has infinite memory, understands everything at the level of Einstein, inspires total self-confidence, and you say to yourself: wow, innovative, I wish I had one at home. In fact, I wish I had his abilities, he is so complex. It is certainly brilliant, the technology of the future, here is the key to great hopes.

But the change starts with yourself, outside of the relationship with a surreal reality, and only now will you see how open you are to change. I ask you, first of all: are you able to learn a programming language, like Python or C++, something you have never done before? Are you able to make a major breakthrough in any field? Are you able to take a science to a high-level? What amazing creation can you launch into the world? What is your contribution in the 21st century, in the world of science, through the eyes of the Internet?

At least make a personal blog, say 2-3 words of your great experience in some field, are you able? There are so many sixth graders who have a blog, they find something to say every day. You really have nothing to say? Are you just an object of decoration whose characteristic properties describe bottomless shapes and shadows? Are you just a mountain sparrow around which the crowns of clouds are always gathering and dispersing? Are you in favor of an android that can imitate human emotions, or are you following in the footsteps of a scientist who knows how to invest in robotics, artificial intelligence or genetic engineering?

Leadership: Do you think you can turn the "visible" into a long-term vision, through the lack of "live" content that does not present personal data?

And I say again. Those in the queue will remain in the queue all the time, as a result of an excessive state of rest, no matter what positions they occupy in society, in the lateness of a visionary evaluation devoid of any appreciation. The truth is that few are open to change, and even fewer succeed in making an important change in the world, or in a field of science. Most remain at the level of fantasia distante in a sci-fi film where the truth is hidden in plain sight, even if what comes from one's imagination, that "Osohatadidah Curassel Haderasepane", the weakness of the mind to fall prey to mirages, often raises the stakes of any ignorance.

And it is an ignorance lower than any ignorance, when someone does not know that he does not know, and believes that knowing is only the fruit of an imagination mais do que ambigua that gives it free rein and that easily leaves the realm of truth, to catch the miraculous. Therefore, let the false apostles preach their ignorance, they will never gain power in the world, just as they will never unite with the great spirits of science. In fact, they will always keep shadow, because in shadow they were born and in darkness they will die. They will never learn the secrets of science, they will be the preachers of a falsa ciência that brings with it no innovation, no breath, but only a terrible freezing in time, an impossibility of understanding change.

These false preachers, these thin-heeled stiletto casual shoes that seduce the eyes but never say anything, nothing at all, are the toxic shame of not knowing God's Word, are the pitiful past that mankind must never remember. With them you can see nothing, nothing, nothing, and nothing changes. They don't know the internet, they don't know technology, just like they don't know anything about science, constantly remaining in the state where the ruined man hopes it is only a dream. They have nothing to reveal, they are unable to bring light into darkness, because darkness is the absence of light, just as evil is the absence of God.

As well stated by someone on the internet: "In the history of mankind are known a lot of falling into nets, raising mirages on high peaks, of false idols, the enthronement of lies in key positions with great stamping power, the generalization of corruption."

Leadership: Is your vision a victory of the truth over the lie in the context of the clarity of the information transmitted and its reception, with the mention that what you see is perceived by the "infinite consciousness"?

Only the bright will shine a light in a dark world. Be light in a dark world, be sight in a blind world ! The Internet is the first lens of the universe, the consciousness of infinity, the one that created the Universe, it is the first step towards the search for truth and knowledge, it is the way out of the darkness that surrounds the world. Show what you know how to do, make your knowledge known through creation, discovery and invention. Turn your passion into science, and try to take science to a high level !

The Internet is the transition from the old world to the new world, it is God's prophesied salvation.

It is therefore necessary to see what is the status of your eyes in receiving a 360-degree intervention in a space of freedom that must be protected from the propaganda of a swindler even more insane than order, especially if the eye uses its sight to combat a variety of "phony articles", "fake news" or "disinformation", from which you will not be able to abstract when you approach the problems of the creation and reception of works of art. Often the intuition of the eye exists outside of sight, outside of the assessment that they consider correct regarding that perceived benefit on the clarity of information and content in this space.

Remember that blurred vision means loss of clarity of vision.

If you don't come to terms with change, you won't come to terms with yourself either, because you will realize how small and insignificant you are in the New World. Regarding this, the Irish writer Cecelia Ahern said:

"It's embarrassing when you're forced to look at yourself when you don't want to come to terms with something. Something cruel and real that you can't run away from. You can lie to yourself, your mind and in your mind all the time, but when you look yourself in the face you know you're lying. You're lying to yourself when you say you're more than you think you really are."

The progress around the Internet will have to be the work of that free being who, after long wanderings on the seas of an inner Odyssey, will have found his soul, objectively lost once upon a time. For this reason, leadership is the result of finding one's own identity through reconciliation with past events.

Be The Sight In A Blind World, or you will be like the other blind people who have completely lost their sight. Sight represents knowledge, and blindness represents forgotten (or ignored) information. Even if ophthalmologists recommend periodic consultations in order to be able to detect possible vision problems in the early stages, so that you can fix or delay the decrease in visual acuity, I assure you that there is no better way to take care of your vision than by processing as much as possible information at the cortical level. And the only environment conducive to the perception and reception of information is and will be the Internet.

Are you one of those people who just keep going? Or are you one of those who promote forward speed by personal example? Are you helping to make the internet a safer place for everyone?

Beauty Unseen Except By The Eye That Contemplates Its Secret

On November 28, 2023

What you see depends on the perspective of a complex artistic experience, formed through the prism of the interaction between sensibility and vision.

I have always liked the sea. So much, but so much, that I return to her whenever her image guides my dream of being one with art, with the beauty of nature, with spectacular landscapes. Of course, a fascinating experience can be fulfilled with things about myself, aesthetic forms that art brings to life, and that I like to observe around. True poems for the soul.

I know this too well because, in the end, the only one who can answer the questions of my inner searches, culminating expeditions into the labyrinth of the soul, is only myself, with my own exaggerated or subtle visions, inscribed on a special easel, adjustable to the depth of the sea, like a silent accomplice in the dance of active waves from sunrise to sunset.

In the monumental symphony of nature, like a silent partner that dances to the rhythm of my dreams, accompanying my steps on the path of art, this lively easel harmonizes with my mood, keeping solemn memories over dreams superimposed with delays of several years over the creation of nature. And if I keep looking at the waves, hoping to find a divine sign, a silent answer capable of showing me the way to an unexplored palette of colors, maybe I can add brilliance to an eternal story, akin to a journey through time and space .

Leadership: Can your creation resonate like an echo with the inner voice that you often neglect, so that you value every visual element that enriches your artistic perspective?

In one of the dialogues with nature, I received from the sea, which I contemplated insatiably like an impressionist painting, a kind of boundless inspiration transposed into a kind of declaration of deep appreciation:

- And above all, you shape your words according to your proximity to me, don't you? On the one hand, you really love me for the sparkle I lend to the sun, pretty much, which basically boils down to one thing, I'm a mirror in the endless sky. And here I can bring as an argument all possible kinds of evidence. On the other hand, I admit that whenever you look at me, eager to embrace the horizon line, with that stellar intensity that exceeds the limit of experimental knowledge, I feel that I become more important, younger, part of a reality that pours out onto the easel expanse of your creation. They are not just a sea, but the destiny of a painting that gives life to the artist's vision.

I am the sea, you are the artist of my vision.

Something tells you to plunge as far as you can into the deep underwater life of the sea, to bring out something of yourself, something that you believe is your best nature, your higher self, the little-known Athlesalyni Sethasor . Again and again, something prompts me to hear your words, like a whisper that goes straight to the soul. Even the simple confession that I meant something to you filled me with happiness so much that the words became a kind of magical echo, all the surrounding sounds sounded like a double, ready to cross the generations of artists who dared to paint the sky and the sea in new colors , always reinventing our story.

Not only that. Do not think that this confession was simple; it was not at all simple, because it crossed time and space to return to the present, to you, incomparable artist. Although it could have been the simplest statement, the true beauty is in the words in which I managed to dress your ideas, I am happy because such a state, being still an inspiration, gives me the strength to give myself totally in the moment your creation, not holding it back and not truncating it with anything. I expect anything but to be contradicted, to have my beliefs questioned. But I must repeat, this confession was not simple, being undeniably rational, worthy of a voice that vibrates with inspiration on the easel.

Leadership: How can you reveal your feelings from the perspective of an eternal presence, in front of a wide and comprehensive space that unmistakably dominates you, and which you must dominate?

My great love, you reveal so much to me, always and always. Then, when you said those words, your eyes were enveloped in a mystery che mette alla prova i confini tra fantasia e realta , and being bluer than your very expanse, I could merge my dreams and my desires into them , to let them be lost in your mysterious depths, to find my peace in their endless expanse. How can I not believe you? How can I pretend that I do not carry in my soul the feeling of being close to a consciousness of eternity, an eternal presence that has recorded and kept intact the history and mysteries of time?

In this regard, feeling that I am part of a far too vast space, my heart feeling the mysterious depth of eternity, I want to discuss a fragment from the book "The Dervish and Death" by Mesa Selimovic:

"I knew them, they were the slightly changed teachings of the Greek philosophers, translated into Arabic by Ibn-Sina in his works. After these teachings, man gradually reached what he is today, slowly adapting, subduing his nature, becoming the only being endowed with consciousness Thus nature is no longer a mystery to him, nor the expanse around him an unknown one, he has conquered and dominates them, traversing the great road from the abysses to the stars.

Space, the limitless expanse, is my dungeon, a devouring corner of my imagination. I say this listening to the echo of my unknown thoughts, dripping an unexpected ardor in my heart, as if the sea were a silent and understanding witness of these feelings. This space dominates me without fail. I own him only as far as the eye can take him. And he tires me, scares me, calls me, draws me closer to him or pushes me away. I imagine that space sees me and actually doesn't care about me, says I can conquer it, when in fact I'm just taking advantage of its indifference."

Leadership has as a memorable substrate the following rational conviction: "The richer the content of your heart, the more the vision you project in your creation becomes deeper and, at the same time, widely encompassing."

The hidden beauty of a hidden world is only seen by the eye that contemplates its secret. I mean that the sea seen by the artist, no matter how deep and enigmatic it is, is for him a sacred space of exploration. This gives him the opportunity to lose himself in his inner world and contemplate the hidden depths of human existence. It is like a window into the secrets of the universe, where every wave and every shade becomes elements of a visual story that captures the essence of artistic creativity.

Becoming Yourself In The World Of Science

On March 15, 2014

Try to make your scientific authority a materialization of the spirit of looking with confidence towards the future, identifying the changes that occur in the context of acquiring a higher self-awareness.

I have always thought of myself as a scientist who seeks the principles and root causes of a unique physical reality, bound to use my superior qualities as a good observer to acquire a new power of calling and enlightenment, as a demonstration of intellectual faith that had to be proved before being credited without reservation.

Science was the only preventive means against passions and ardors that could be condemnable and destructive if they managed to direct my eyes and senses to a point of little interest to mean something for the progress of the world.

Thus, the consequences of such an intention were spiritual, for I always felt that I was approaching the desire of the universe conjoined with the increase of the abundance of creative potency (information, images, interpretations, fascinating realities, reflections) when I started to make a new way of thinking and presenting ideas. I felt as though I was in front of a work of fiction, in an atmosphere of interiority defended by the force that assures the cosmic order along with all that life implies on earth.

The only logical explanation of the abundance of meanings and significations that assaulted my interior, thus claiming my well-deserved place in what I write, seeking to maintain myself anchored in the visible of a physical (visible) and metaphysical (unseen) world, was that my destiny was fed by the coincidences of previous steps in configuring the frontiers of knowledge that the ancient alchemists had gone through.

The magical wand that turns any idea into a genuine diamond was associated with time and energy consumed in fertile reflections and views.

Or, rather, I think I was trying to use myself as a reminder of a past life, where I lived through someone else's belief in a world where science and technology had to open unimaginable horizons. Under this word "faith" is now hiding my whole initiative to determine the fundamental changes that take place in the destiny of the world, whose stake is the attainment of a superior stage of development and spirituality.

Leadership: Can you assume your attachment to the totality of the being that is ascending to greatness, referring to an act of will designated by the phrase "a materialization of the spirit of being One in the multiple"?

Italian physicist Alessandro Volta sent a letter to the German physicist Georg Christoph Lichtenberg, from which we can extract the following passage:

"No matter how much you recommend this letter to young physicists, it will not be too much. It will initiate them in the difficult art of experiences; teach them not to trust the first observations, to always change the shape of the apparatus. And if the impatient imagination would make them leave the slow but sure path of observation for seductive dreams, they may be stopped on this slippery ground, seeing as a man of genius takes note of everything."

Reading these lines, I realized that what is very important for my soul, which always has the right to be witness to the struggles and aspirations of every moment, is to deepen the mentality of the experimenter and the discoverer who knows where to look and what to find in order to be able to express a firm view of the results desired to be materialized.

The totality of the being that raises you to greatness resides in the duty of the scientific spirit to always and everywhere be the center of those changes designed to stimulate interest in knowledge and self-knowledge. And a materialization of the spirit of "being One in the multiple" suggests the merging of several mentalities and characters into a single superior intelligence entity whose only visionary reality is exerted through a broadening of spiritual consciousness.

A higher self-awareness is achieved by optimizing the relationship between the penetrating intuition of seeing beyond the immediate face of things and widening the horizon of knowledge that materializes through experience and discovery.

An unexpected success or an unsuccessful attempt are two of the turning circles of the philosophy of science, each of them representing an expression of the belief of looking into the future. After all, my life experience must not only be an exceptional conquest of science but must be considered a reflection, a mirror of the soul that tries to always translate into words and deeds in order to do things that can withstand the time and memory of the world.

The opportune moment of acquiring a new self-consciousness matters more than the opportunity for me to develop as a quality man, a specialist in a field, in order to acquire a leading position in the world. A scholar achieves true value only through the expression of the faith he traverses and shares through what he brings to the service of progress.

Leadership: Are you trying to give life to something that can undo itself by looking at it as an initiatory experience, subsumed exclusively to the logic of self-seeking in a higher-level creation approach?

Thorough preparation in a particular branch of science may fall into a rigid syndrome of dependency to the hidden depth of creation that willingly mixes the miraculous registry with that of the supernatural. But what if the findings and assessments on new opportunities of assimilation and connection of innovative ideas produced over time, opposes the formal blueprints applied by the others, are subjected to certain inner distortions, conscious or unconscious?

The inner blaze, as a fire unlit, the passion for study can be quenched or can even disappear if you develop a high degree of dependency to a higher level authority, to a thinking much too thorough. Such an authority can be a model of a discoverer of a hypothetical world or of a new science.

Evidence in this case is the famous alchemist, Fulcanelli, whose findings and observations are up to this day of great interest in the scientific world. He often wanted to state: "The books of the masters are not written for everyone, although all are urged to read them." No wonder he fiercely kept his secrets of science, of either mystical or symbolic nature. But what somehow highlights his feeling of superiority is that, like all alchemists, Fulcanelli expressed himself in a manner less tangible to the larger public. And he himself asserted that his last manuscript will never be published because nobody would understand its contents.

Through this, the expression: "to give life to something that can cancel itself" can be translated. Science much too advanced draws you new horizons, but at the same time cancels the guarantee that you can be understood, restricting your desire of giving answers and guidance. Let us thank our mind, full of aspirations, carried by imagination and ideas towards areas inaccessible by knowledge, because it wards us about the fact that it cannot fully grasp those aspects that have immediate impact in the way of relating to everyone around.

The mind, tantamount to promoting the creation of our own identity, must point out exactly what our borders and limitations are. And then, with our right foot forward, may we step together with it in the search for the Wizard of Oz, but with the condition of not venturing too far into the unknown, like Gulliver in the land of the Lilliputians. He who allows himself trapped in the workings and connections of the superiority of thought, with thousands of tiny threads connected to the farthest of perspectives, with great effort will awaken from the sleep of his obscure reason.

Self-seeking in a top-level creation approach is a way to get more information about what defines you under the influence of a concentrated and constant power called "imagination" represented by the perpetuation of a "revolutionary language".

Becoming Yourself In The World Of Science is the consideration that you have to take into account when you try to recognize your degree of adaptability and malleability to a consciousness that has the distinctive sign that it remains anchored in both the eternal values of faith and the requirements of efficient use of knowledge in the light of discoveries.

Before The Eye Could Finish Its Gaze

On January 28, 2020

On the foreground of art there must be the rendering of the feeling of belonging to another universe.

The Rose, Double Delight. When you look at it in the summer, in the sunlight, you remain open to art, to beauty, to kindness. I am close to its soul, always contemplating its beauty, and it always seems to be excited about what is happening in my world. In turn, this body sensitive to attention, to any form of art, looks at me as the artist gazes at his creation for years: as a kind of image of a world renewed, recreated, innovative on a spiritual level.

I'm not just some shrub. I am the only aesthetic assessment body approached from the perspective of a continuum of knowledge experiences, which generates a state of openness to the divine nature at the center of a higher being. Overwhelmed by the affection and the desire to look for the meaning of life, they become more expressive when they feel at every trace of the brush. Attached to the real poetic-artistic, rejuvenated by the blessing of a delicate touch, I feel like the soul of my master whispering words of comfort in every creative endeavor, with each application of color on the layers of a deep cosmogony that seems to reveal part of the triumph of the imagination over intelligence.

You understand my happiness, don't you?

Often, I have seen in my master some of the incarnation of immortality, the determining factor of my countless transformations over time. He is not only a perfect creator, but he is the perfection of creation that begins with Lorconsulhis(the absolute hidden in the power of the heart) and continues with Trekanandhis(the essence of the virtues of divine life), for which any spiritual motivation is a pure and vital red. In art, you must always refer to the Creator through faith in the Resurrection: rebirth, revival, nature awakening.

For years, I thought I would be different, that I would feel differently. I wanted to grow and become perfect like a painting that does not lose its monumental character, which does not lose its symbolic content. And it happened to be all that I wanted to be, even if not at the time I wanted, and as an aspirant to a noble purpose: to rise above the ignorance of the world through the very vision of the artist who goes much further than anyone could imagine, by the miraculous combination of body and soul, between nature and grace.

Leadership: Can you imagine your work of art as an extension of a reality you have always experienced in the event of the manifestation of a personality that crosses space and time by identifying an always possible alternate life?

Like Nabokov's characters, I sometimes lose myself in front of a spare time that I do not know how to fill with something useful, because I have never cared about it, being only seized by my beauty. Expressiveness matters more than the useful does. A rose is only admired when it is known beautifully, splendidly in the nobility with which its charm is displayed, full of color in any setting.

However, my image must emanate the expression of the self's consent and its agreement with the world, as when you need to show your artistic skills to someone who does not know you all too well. At other times, I find myself in the words of Alexandru Vlahuță: "From his great landscape, God took a fragrant flower and, by giving it a human body and grace, sent it on a sunbeam to the artist, as a comrade of a life lived in total fulfillment."

This is what I wanted to get to, and believe me that this arrival in a specific puzzle of expressionist painting, from a perspective that corresponds with the spiritual momentum, always creates an expressive image. If you can, try to lift my soul to a horizon that goes beyond that of life, as if you were comparing me to a titan of multi-world transition, and see if you can shape me closer to that of the angel who defeated death.

Only then will you be able to understand me beyond words, beyond feelings, beyond agreeing with others, only by comparison with the vision of a Universal Creator.

Leadership: Can you turn yourself into an individualized knowledge for the purpose of forming and manifesting an intelligence endowed with great sensitivity power that disputes its importance in the discrete life of nature?

Only my master knows how to integrate various forms of nature into plastic images. I'm no exception. Every element of nature is somehow eternalized, being treated because of the spiritual efforts of a discreet and loving being, who knows how to protect a body full of nuances and colors, to keep it young, cheerful and healthy. In a way, the dominance of his aesthetic, revealed through the style of the creations he offered to the world, establishes a kind of parallel with the artistic orientations of Joel Cunningham, from the work of Mary Balogh, who confessed at one point:

"When I paint live, my mind is too caught up in the correct rendering of any insignificant detail, and my spirit is silenced. And the subject becomes rigid and frozen, because it maintains the same position and the same expression. I will now sketch what I see as fast as I can and afterwards, I will paint in my workshop."

Without having the pretense of being told everything that could be said, because a rose is an unlimited universe, always with another story, always asking for something from art, I will join the resemblance to that privileged territory of manifesting the individualizing knowledge, this being something displayed by my master, from which I picked up the following foundation stone: "To turn art into science is as if to vibrate the human soul with the help of a brush that moves alone."

Further, I leave you with the task of creating a portrait in which my soul, caught in a dialogue with the Universal Creator, is filled with thoughts that cannot be described in words or images, but only in feeling, in the drop of the divine from you.

The leadership that accompanies artistic knowledge has as its premise the task you assume in the perimeter of creation, from the point of view of an openness to the divine nature, conforming to a single argument: "What you create is what you are when you consider yourself as being above yourself."

Before The Eye Could Finish Its Gaze has as a basic consideration the following creative experience: "To feel what one experiences only through resemblance, so that you can be part of the nature of the one who experiences himself on an unlimited universe level."

By immersing yourself in a maze of symbols, metaphors and alterity, you must recognize your personality as the image of a Universal Creator that transcends time, space, dream and reality, in order to find an ever-presentable appearance within the aesthetic and philosophical field of art.

Between Heaven & Earth

On August 13, 2017

Experiencing the state of connection to the divine from which the momentum is born to the dream that tests you, is to embrace those great rays of the soul that bring light into the darkness.

Everything came into the darkness, both my dream and my life, like the colors captured in a photo that does not convey any emotion. It was a form of giving me the time left from a whole world situated above, to the judgment and reasoning of an unknown God, an a priori established time, a continual size that appeals to the strongest springs of a troubled conscience at the intersection of oblivion, denial and renunciation.

At the center of which worldly temptations can there be room for the spark, light ray, the serenity that man needs in order to recognize himself as being the same, yet different? Always those who experience the great stages of artistic creation must conform to the thinking of a world close to light and alienated by the impulses of a pessimistic melancholy, because simple engagement in a symbolized universe has as a prerequisite not only the Logos (or hypostasis of divinity), but especially the hidden feelings brought to the fore.

The supreme angle of view that allowed me to regard the world as an imperious and profound mystery, which if I will at some point share it, it is certain that it will only be my honor, articulate in the sinuous way of struggle with a self that does not let itself be understood, does not let itself be defeated, in the context of a deliverance that always comes shortly before the final moment of goalless wandering.

Maybe it's true after all. The depth of the creator lies in the mystery of the world he penetrates with the eyes of an artist, not with the eyes of a mortal, having the conviction that all he tries to emphasize is precisely the confession of his own faith, the true superiority in terms of the power to be different from the rest of the world.

Leadership: Do you express your own attraction to the idea of turning the experience of connecting to "Creator and Creation" into a true superiority in terms of the power to be different from the rest of the world?

If heaven is a glory that crosses the centuries, then the earth that I walked upon while holding my breath, itself the rock stone of a dreamer in a state of vigilance, was a capitulation of the experience of daring a response to two strong feelings at all times: fear and hope. With the horror of the prospect of enduring their burdens. And to dream of a different world, in which to find yourself, in which to be simply you, means to give meaning to a Creator who simply forgets the discouraging framework of the life he lives and rises through imagination, inspiration and talent above mortal condition.

The most appropriate is to place yourself in the middle, neither down nor up, arming yourself with the argument of not being the live feed of the "snake", the image of the primary cause of sin to answer forbidden questions. But being accompanied by the pronounced character of the eagle attempting to attack a prey many times its own size.

Life is the fear of courage, but in the middle, there is the impetus to the supreme dream, the closeness to God, which is measured by the power of sacrifice, the power of creation and the freedom to choose.

It was a matter of survival, of mathematical probability, of will and of detail, but at the same time a proof of faith to unite the deeper and living realities. By linking distinct radical worlds – the uncreated to be created, the ridicule of the sublime creator – I have become blind to the artist's great obsession: to express my aspiration to immortality by making a masterpiece that time does not wipe from his memory.

Leadership: If you understand the true form of heaven and earth, will you be clear about your own life?

As clear as I can see, my life sinks in the same mystery where creators wander about looking for the pattern of perfection, very different from how I thought an ordinary man should experience it. Like a hero in "Les Miserables", my life is all about absolute insecurity, in an impenetrable cloud, to which a painter would have rendered consistency by embracing some more saturated colors by the physical blending between white, gray and black. Under the strong reflection of light.

And, unbelievably, in the spheres of pure reason, life and art, ending with the world of prejudice, the very crucial aspect of the experience that dictates the limits of my freedom of choice is met. And I will definitely have to come back: finding a sense in what happens to me. I do not know how I'd react.

Between the serpent and the eagle there is the melancholy of the sunset and the blue mist of the heights, the self-implanted isolation and self-improvement, naughty through their boldness, which life offers us in order to live more and to cherish what we have been given.

The attitude of man seeking his self is a response given to life lived by virtue of a personal fingerprint and a supreme cause that can generate the almost permanent sense of "powerlessness" or "high".

With my eyes fixed on those who are not observed, but are rather hinted at, what cannot be imputed to me as guilt, I constantly tried to understand the connection between the dream fracture that sweetened my hope of finding meaning in various unpredictable situations or life events, and the keys of the art kingdom – after the black stain that was embracing me at night, making me think there was something hidden that should be brought to light. No wonder Hugo emphasized in his novel the "star night inside man", representing the only reason to hope, to fight, to resist pain.

Experiencing the deep meaning of the philosophical words of a blogger – "Who wants go beyond darkness and will find nothing, will not be demoralized, because experience gained during travel will help them next time to find what they seek" – I got to that drop of mercy on which the whole natural creation of heaven and earth rests. That is, any glimpse of transcendence is welcome to the desperate soul only if it sees the light in its sight.

Leadership is the expression of a "high" of which only a small part is devoted to the attainment of perfection, the other being devoted to the profound understanding of the life between the wisdom of the serpent in the wilderness and the unparalleled flight of the eagle who knows and is capable of using the air currents.

Ascending and climbing on the heights of unspoken dreams of divine shapes that had the effect of a lightning coming from the high sky, from which seemed to prevail a continuous madness, the prospect changed the same as the eagle that, by rising to the heights, sees different things. I felt the presence of a faceless power, without boundaries, no meaning but its own unfolding, encompassing the whole world, even though I prayed in the darkness of the night.

One man, Victor Hugo, seems to have succeeded in reconciling the stinging power of the serpent with the visual rotation of the eagle on mountain ridges:

"Let's not take anything out of the human spirit, suppressing something is a mistake. It must be reformed and transformed. Some faculties of man are directed to the unknown: thinking, dreaming, prayer. The unknown is an ocean. What is consciousness? It is the compass of the unknown. Thinking, dreaming, praying, here they are great mysterious radiators. Let us respect them. Where are these great rays of the soul going? In the dark. They therefore bring light."

Experimenting the state of connection to the divine from which the momentum is born to the dream that tests you, stimulating the boundless, is to embrace those great rays of the soul that bring light into the darkness.

Between Heaven Earth lies a man who understood that life is a climb and descend resident of desire – never satisfied – for self-knowledge, and from the search of the measure of their own ability to grasp with their minds the divine boundlessness.

Beyond The Invisible Man

On November 10, 2009

Demonstrate your high potential of a leader, without focusing your resources around a force that could jeopardize your integrity.

Great things were accomplished only in the rare moments of inspiration. All the world's great discoveries, all the great important inventions, everything that is essential and unfading were achieved only when people realized the need for change.

Perhaps, nothing that surrounds us and enjoys our eyes it would not have existed, if the scientists had not devoted themselves to advanced knowledge. Perhaps if strong people with strong spirits, explorers and visionaries, adventurers and inquisitive people had not existed, we would have stagnated at a stage of incertitude. Maybe if thinkers and philosophers, artists and artisans had not existed, we would still be in the Stone Age.

It is a fact that some people carry the seed of success, achievement, curiosity and knowledge. Therefore, science and knowledge, by working together, will always move forward. Increasingly faster. In this way, will be reached unknown heights. Other borders will be established beyond any expectations.

Leadership: Do you place your creation in the area of an independent model of testing reality, by extending the experience of using scientific discoveries into an area of deserved recognition of value that you have?

There is no doubt that one of the world's biggest discoveries would be the formula of invisibility. A brilliant scientist who knows every detail about the secrets of transcendental alchemy could puzzle out the indecipherable mystery of invisibility. He could devise a magic potion whose chemical composition would be able to interact with the photons in order to create the invisibility effect. Of course, the diabolical potion would turn him overnight into a very rich and famous man, but his invention probably could not be put up for sale.

Any government would immediately buy the formula and would keep it confidential. Obviously, the possibility when the scientist would want to take his secrets to the grave must also be considered, and his unique formula would remain unknown. However, this possibility is less probable. For, the biggest desire of a discoverer is put his imprint, up to a point, on the future. On the whole planet. On the other hand, all these years of wasted work must somehow be redeemed.

In the light of the current knowledge, finding the solution for invisibility seems utopian. However, tomorrow, who knows...

Leadership: Is the recognition of your merits positioned in a confluence area of several different types of approach areas of a "step forward", in terms of confirming your own value by reference to a condition of impossibility?

The unexpected could occur at any time. What if someone would discover the formula for invisibility and, supposedly, a bottle containing the magical potion would get in the hands of a manager? How would look like a company headed by an invisible man?

He would take the bottle to his mouth and greedily drink it up, becoming invisible. Just like Gyges, the shepherd from the Platon's Republic, used the magical powers of a ring to see the queen naked, the manager could use the magic potion to spy on his employees. To notice if they are really serious and do their work properly, to find out what they are talking about, how they waste their time and, if it is possible, what they are thinking about.

He would enjoy the gift of omnipresence. He would get in with no problems, without leaving any trace in the strangest places and to look out every gesture, listen to every word, to know the most intimate secrets of his employees. Being invisible, his power would be infinitely greater. He would appear and disappear as he pleases, just like wizards, thanks to their magic wand. In this way, he could really have the company at his feet. And if he has the sense of humor, he could really enjoy at his employees' charge.

The condition of impossibility announced by your discovery is that of not relying on the idea that there exists a miraculous recipe that transforms you into "someone else". For whatever cloth you wear, you will remain captive, more exhausted than immobilized, into a reality that remains indissoluble for man, as long as he does not have God's immediate consent.

So, keep the limits of decency in any type of content you create and place at the world's disposal.

Leadership means to allow the display of clear and good quality images at wide angles of visibility, enjoying a decent viewing experience in any type of content.

How blind would be, then, the employees? They would not realize they are being closely watched and they would carry on doing whatever they want. Who could imagine someone would possess the ability to get away from their sight? Even they are serious or not, active or not, good professionals or common people who got the job having the right connections, they will all continue doing what they know best. Some people will hang about, others will work.

Until when? Until the invisible man will become visible again and will sanction those who were caught off-guard. Thus, would weave incessantly, without anyone to suspect the fate of every employee.

For the manager who succeeds in getting to the next level, of science without frontiers, which is intended to be a response to existing laws, everything focuses around it: people, things, actions, habits, places, circumstances. Everything is seen, heard and felt through an abnormal curiosity.

Because the one possessing the formula of a substance enough to be swollen in order to make him become invisible, automatically becomes more and more curious in time. So curious that he would like to find and experience what is on the cards. And to see it all, even the things he already knows, but from another perspective: more profound, more intense, more inspired and more mysterious. He will find himself caught in a continuous and never-ending search process. And once he learns how to use this advantage to his benefit, he could never return to a normal state.

Invisibility is an aggressive force for violating the privacy of individuals, so that jeopardize your integrity. Even so, it is also a drug which causes addiction. It would be really tiresome, even for a manager, to try and learn in such a way absolutely everything concerning his employees. In fact, he is interested in the proper work of the company, the increase of people's efficiency etc.

Mastery in leadership is gained by the courage to design new visions of science without becoming addicted to its reactions.

Do you prove the confirmation of your value by reference to the requirements of science? Are you trying to push its limits to the extreme?

Conclusion: If you work within a company and you notice the manager's constant absence, do not rest on your oars, but try to do your job just as well as on any other day. And, moreover, be careful what you talk. A true manager knows his subordinates very well and knows absolutely everything that happens in his company. From the smallest to the most important thing. Even if you do not see him, be certain that he is, somehow, present, near you. A real manager, more than likely, even if he is not invisible in the proper sense of the word, knows and finds out the most important things that happen around him.

Demonstrate your high potential of a leader, without focusing your resources around a force that could jeopardize your integrity.

Beyond The Invisible

On June 17, 2017

A game can be real or imaginary depending on what you're hiding in it.

I still lose myself to the will of opportunities for experiences of creation, the spell of a light that continues to flash somewhere inside me, with the same intensity of the shade of superiority, as when through the mere building of an art without compromise emerges the spark of a man fulfilled, the sword of the brave and wise men. The very act of creation elevates me to a degree of perfection when I listen to myself, when I look inside and read the message of an art based on three principles: human, spiritual and divine, all three being an opportunity to experience a new approach to reality, or rather of the notion of "knowledge born of the consciousness of the Ultimate Reality".

It is one thing to understand my placement between the coordinates of the effects of artistic reflections, like a complicated domino game that a semi-conscious act triggers in the brain, with all the innocence of the consciousness of the past that constantly calls out to me: Do not believe anything of what you think ! Everything is beyond invisible, meaning, within a reality atypical in the area of knowledge that the act of creation considers more of a tendency to project images about life complicated in another dimension of thought, feeling and expression, the reactions to the world around us.

And something else entirely to wake up in the space of the dynamic tensions between comparisons, coincidences and metaphors. Which one is closer to reality?

Leadership: Do you present your formula of art as a way to reconcile the contradictions of expressivity acquired through the emphasis that falls on your own person?

Art is the transition from a known reality to a less understood reality. It is an adventure of the mind and esoteric knowledge experienced in an initiatory journey of self-discovery. An adventure that you discover in time has as its own premise an explanation of what really matters with the other aspect of the distance that separates you, beyond the curtain of time, from the moment of the process of knowledge. It relies in the mental detachment of fundamental determinations of the composition of art entitled: "Beyond the invisible."

Here my authenticity is not a revolt against the absurdity of a fictional world, like the glory of a desert sunset, by the contrast between the meaning of the essence detached from a charmed mirror and the lively obsession of a paradisiac utopia. But, more than that, it is a release from the pressure exerted by the unrepeatable individual nuance of an adventure in a wonderful nightmare: "Everything is possible."

All that the eye encompasses at first sight would be impossible to replicate otherwise than by the imaginative line of an experienced artist and a high creative tension, refreshing the formula of art and presenting it as a way to reconcile the contradictions of expressiveness acquired by the emphasis that falls upon yourself. Ne irascaris Domine !

A tense strain of attention that seems to mean "no, do not believe it, it's not like that, it just seems like it", could not capture the depth and height of the enigma as to the monumentality and amazing precision of executing a figurative work up to the odds of the supernatural. In the case of art, the expressiveness acquired through the emphasis on one's own person is closely related to that "everything is possible" from an exaggeration of the meanings attributed to reality from which the surrealist sees more – because reality is surreal in any area of creation and innovation.

A magician of modern interpretations and visions retains the authenticity of rendering a certain inner experience through the image of a reality that captures what is not to be seen or believed.

The great economist, John Maynard Keynes, found out about Newton's Chest and, to his astonishment, discovered the hidden face of the founding hero. He counted on seeing the man who had laid the stakes of modern science and inaugurated the century of Enlightenment, the heir of an esoteric tradition descending to Babylonians: the first of the physicists had also been "the last of the magicians." (Loup Verlet)

Practicing magic, just as a whole story in a single image, can be real or imaginary depending on what you hide within it, allowing yourself to dive into the hidden fantasies of a more perfect existence, making it the subject of several interesting revelations. The access to this mind trap that the sinuous line of mad combinations can bear, the random accusations of classical colors and the atypical nuances of a deep dream, augmented by every experience of life, is always limited.

Creativity is a key to mysteries that pushes towards the unexpected fabric of reality with a symbolic pattern – like a beautiful golden imprint encouraging psychological means of expression: Close your eyes / Just feel and realize / It is real and not a dream ! And to render a certain inner experience through the image of reality, in a symbolic but significant way, means to sink into the heart of a dream that sheds a new light on your mystical side, less explored, which can cause you to draw another course of your spiritual, artistic, eventful evolution.

In leadership, creativity is often determined by what you construct visually through the word you carry into the world as an alternative truth meant to camouflage information or reinterpret it for the benefit of one party.

Is it true that you can defy any consciousness only by making space for originality, with the focus from the macro to the infinite, manifesting within the bounds of a single guiding motive: not to give in to the great universal questions?

Is it true that you can increase the chances of the interpretive concept of the "Enigma" to break the chains of life, in order to stimulate your senses and provide yourself a complex artistic experience during a condensation of light rays that form one configuration or another, becoming at a certain point denser and more reflective?

I look into the mirror. See myself, I'm over me. As if I'd had to discover the depth of God's plan for my life, just as from the colored chaos gradually crystallizes an image that bears the seal of my own becoming in time. If you follow me, you will see what's beyond reality.

The great engine of creation consists in approaching a reality from which you will have to extract new meanings, in order to act as an extension of an image of yourself that claims to be the materialization of a fulfilled dream.

Beyond The Invisible addresses the profound psychological feature of the most important motives of human personality to redefine itself in the infinite complexity of the Creator who never dissolves in his absolute glory. At the same time, it emphasizes the amazing expressiveness of the image that the soul or reason create by using the contrast effect between the dark background of exiting into a different level of reality and the foreground awarded by the refreshing shades of enlightenment.

Beyond The Mists Of Alchemy

On April 11, 2013

Look beyond the inaccessible limits, so that you reach the steadiest configuration of your science.

The result of my preoccupations was to set the perspective of a science closely regarding man and life, with the specification that nothing should be lost outside a finite universe. This perspective was necessary in order to accurately place in time and space the already known various elements: earth, air, water and fire, appropriately combined in a retort, to the extent that we correctly understand their structure and different particularities.

During this complex operation, my goal was to give life to a second world by distilling substances that through their physical-chemical nature can produce adverse reactions. Generating a new formula that could have created a fully exceptional effect. Some kind of rationale which implied taking into consideration some assumptions that could have been abandoned after obtaining a new scientific result. A renaissance of matter, which went further, continuously with us, as human beings.

Obviously, I had to take into account the possibility to dissociate these elements, relentlessly turning and renewing them and the effect of an unexpected evolution. But also the possibility of a general defragmentation of this combination, as well as the occurrence of a dominance from one of these elements, having as consequence certain secondary effects.

In the end, what was I? What forced me to come closer to the truth, to mix these substances, in certain quantities, in my own blender and to batter them like a dough, to raise them, thus allowing them to act and take effect?

Through the chemical combination, the atoms of elements tend to change their external electron layer so that they can achieve the most stable and vital configuration. Or vice versa, an unstable configuration that might determine inauspicious consequences. So I was expecting anything, even a catastrophe.

Leadership: Are you dependent on the need to establish a scientific theory and the argumentation of a truth designed to stand at the foundation of life from which you feel you can come up with an interesting message?

I was looking for answers in order to go to the next level. A hypnotizing adventure in search of a unique horizon, of a supreme dimension where, when you enter it everything becomes possible. But a search which could have ended with a bitter learning: that all horizons are delusions and the only things out there are lost horizons. As if I would have tried to research something that doesn't exist, a Fantasia – who is able to get there will never come back, risking the inability to adapt to both worlds.

It's in vain to look for an explanation of the truth where there isn't any truth. Nor lie. Only a handful of thoughts, rains and rainbows, shadows and colors. The intermediary space, the void. Hardly can it be filled with anything. However, I seemed to be dependent on the need to establish a scientific theory and the argumentation of a truth designed to stand at the foundation of life from which I felt I could come up with an interesting message, such as: "reality can meet fiction" or that "life is an attachment to the effect of resonating with something invisible".

The British biologist, Julian Huxley claimed that there is a series of questions we shouldn't ask ourselves, because they have no answers. Nevertheless, my grounded, cumulative efforts remained indissoluble. I chose the questions and I looked for possible answers. A continuation of the preparations for obtaining the philosopher's stone, covering the course of understanding the fundamental notions of the alchemic language. And initiation in the ineffable innovation.

The referential function of science is the explanation you give to a truth that many are not prepared to understand because it does not address man's intelligence, but rather his fantasy to experience an extraordinary story through the world he builds for himself.

I told myself that alchemy is the science of masters. And that it can be expressed by the valid and pertinent formula I have discovered, by analytics, following a dissection and recombination procedure. Pick a glass shard, boil it for two hours, sprinkle some moonlight on top, hang it by a sun ray and the result will be a diamond.

But more than any other master, I was bestowed the mission to promote science, to broadcast it forward, resuscitating a new signification by means of the work of art – before I hid myself behind it. Some sort of shield against the degradation of a truth that took me by surprise: that everything that surrounds me is a scene of presentation of experiences and the exchange of extensive information towards a repetition trend.

But my work consisted of a game of wisdom, mystery, responsibility and reflection. More likely remaining silent so that the mystery of the great mystery to persist, I was giving every future generation the possibility to research those things, to acquire this ancient knowledge and to apply it directly in the context of the times it crosses.

Alchemy is not something fortuitous, rather a rocky land where very few have access, comprising all the known and unknown things. And it is established only on faith and perseverance.

The way you look at science is similar to the way a diamond is rated: its exceptional qualities and its rarity, or its strong brightness capable of blinding the one who holds it.

Are you looking for an explanation of the truth where there is no truth? Do your grounded, cumulative effects remain indissoluble? Can your science be expressed in a pertinent and valid formula? Are you bestowed the mission to promote your science, to broadcast it further? Do you resuscitate a new signification by means of the work of art, before hiding yourself behind it? Does your work of art come together in a game of wisdom, mystery, responsibility and reflection? What is it established on?

The way in which you view yourself in relation with science, as well as the tendencies you excessively accentuate in the battle for your formation and accomplishment, determine changes in your points of view, trigger chain reactions, create basic modifications in your own personality. All these interconnected relations, accelerated by a process of actions and reactions, by rejections and attractions, by eliminations and coordination, they highlight the result of "alchemic" research, with has as only catalyst the spiritual change, openness towards new horizons.

This professional life experience, which can be lived only personally, the passage from an unevolved stage towards an advanced stage used to quantify, refine and stabilize the transformation process and your orientation towards the best results, is the essence of alchemy. And only this experience can lift you to the top of the world.

Leadership: Does the unprecedented experience that can uplift you in the face of science correspond to the tendency to putting yourself in place of a reality that depends on understanding the level of complexity of a picture that is much too detailed?

John Fuhramn, the founding president of Frame of Mind, Inc., gives a very easy to understand advice, which everyone should follow: "Focus on what you truly want. Otherwise, many changes will lead you away, in the end, from your destination. When you aim towards something well defined, it's easier to make the corresponding adjustments."

From the viewpoint of the alchemy process, leadership means to correctly place in time and space various elements of your composition, qualities, values, principles, and those latent "minerals", appropriately combining them in the vessel that shapes your originality.

The efforts you make in this sense can be compared with fertilizing a field in order to make it more productive. So, we're talking about an inspired investments which brings long term profit. And selecting these differential traits that bring you an added-value in relation with the others who aspire to the statute of "alchemists", is done only after finalizing your transformation process.

The next stage, the distillation of those elements, will trigger that purifying fire of releasing all potentialities that will contribute to developing a proper self-image, to determining an efficient harmony between creative resources that can help you pass to the next level. This distillation is needed in order to reach the essences, but also in order to achieve a stable configuration which can allow your constant parameters to develop and acquire a better stability.

But obviously, sometimes you have to take into account the possibility to dissociate these elements, which under the effect of an unexpected evolution can result into secondary effects. In order to process these elements they must be fragmented in such a way that it allows their introduction in the development process. So you must focus on what you really want, to aim towards something well defined and then to make the corresponding adjustments in order for the alchemic process to start.

A much too detailed picture is full of information that can help you understand a more subtle phenomenon of identity sublimation, in which, for example, what characterizes you at the level of sharing ideas will not articulate in opposition to what characterizes you at a spiritual level.

Beyond The Mists Of Alchemy expresses the multiple undiscovered variations and differences occurring during operations which lead to the result you expected in the attempt to raise your self-knowledge level. It also indicates a reward for the efforts you make in order to implement the much needed professional and personal change, with the final result of understanding alchemy.

Get closer to the truth. Look for answers in order to achieve the highest level of knowledge. Take into account the possibility to associate or dissociate your defining elements, arrange them in a different order that would make sense and guarantee a crescendo of your value. Look beyond the limits you don't have access to, so that you can achieve the most stable configuration for your science.

Beyond The Sight Of The World, The Heart Sees The Truth

On September 16, 2024

Courage doesn't just mean facing adversity, but redefining yourself through it, in a continuous call to overcome yourself.

The rain, present at the Dragomirna Half Marathon, was not only a manifestation of nature, but a living metaphor of the inner transformation that my sister, Oana Fântânaru, experienced. It was as if heaven itself had sent its tears to test her, to test her will and spirit, in accordance with the art's fundamental principle of transcending limits. Heaven and earth were merging in a "Xenthoria Ulmivent", a miraculous fusion between physical challenge and spiritual epiphany.

Definitely, every step that Oana took with difficulty, every artistic effort that she tried, became a battle against the showers accompanied by strong wind that hit her skin, and the road that seemed more and more slippery. But she understood that, in those moments, the nasty weather could not prevent her from finishing the race in record time, but rather purified her, strengthened her, cleansed her of every doubt and every fear.

So the rain was a test of his inner strength. And Dragomirna's half-marathon was not just a simple race, a difficult mountain to run, but an initiation ritual into a dimension where every step became an "Epedysasis Harrexhium", an eternal call to overcome oneself. In the culminating moment of supreme effort, each drop of rain had become a mirror in which Oana could reflect her determination, her ability to connect to Ego without being overwhelmed.

It was as if the sky itself wept tears of admiration for the bravery of the runners, each drop becoming a crystal in which the whole world was reflected, to the point where reality and dream merged. As if my sister's every step left an imprint not just in the mud of the road, but in the fabric of time itself, where an artist might have painted eternity. Certainly, every drop of rain turned the race into a test for the inner eye, searching for personal truth.

Leadership: How can you see in your every step a visual representation of the struggle between will and vulnerability as a testimony to the sublime of cause and effect?

"La lluvia no es un obstáculo, sino un aliado en nuestra transformación," nature itself was whispering as if my sister made her way through the liquid curtain of challenge, preferring a certain attitude of acceptance and integration.

After all, effort is reflected in the eyes of the one who overcomes his limits. During the run, something in Oana seemed to resonate a lot with the meaning of the mirror, quoted in a chronicle that appeared in Corriere dell'arte:

"I believe that man's first authentic figurative experience is the recognition of his own image in the mirror, which is the fiction most closely related to reality... My effort intuitively consists of the attempt to bring the two images closer together, the one proposed by the mirror and the one proposed (designated) by me... The figurative object that is born in this way gives me the opportunity to follow my approach inside the painting as inside life..."

It is clear. The more the artist delves deeper into the attempt to recognize his own image in the mirror of nature, the more intense the process of inner purification and transformation becomes, risking to transform every feature of the brush into a living metaphor of overcoming personal limits. And the more the runner confronts the manifestations of nature during the race, the deeper becomes his intuitive effort to bring the fiction of resistance closer to the reality of his own capabilities, risking to turn each step into an artistic endeavor within life.

Leadership: Can you see in the challenge you face a picture of the inevitability of destiny, where each obstacle contributes to the recognition of the limits of your own creation?

This rain, symbolic of life's challenges, revealed to Oana that obstacles are not her enemies, but hidden masters, ready to teach her valuable lessons. Each drop that fell, sharp and unforgiving, was like a knife cutting through the layers of fear and insecurity, exposing the hard core of her determination. It was as if nature itself had whispered to her that only through challenge could come rebirth, that spiritual metamorphosis that could profoundly transform her. In that moment, the rain turned into a catalyst of liberation – a struggle between oneself and one's own limitations.

It is essential to understand that this race was not just a physical competition, but an initiatory journey, a kind of transformative ritual. Each step through the rain, each gasp, was a brush on the canvas of existence, painting a picture of human resilience worthy of Van Gogh's "Starry Night", where each drop became a star in the runner's personal universe. During the race, Oana's eyes searched for answers to questions about self and will, through the lens of an artistic vision: "Everything we face becomes a brush in the hands of destiny."

Traversing this liquid landscape of challenge, Oana discovered that 3rd place in the open and 1st place in the category were not just leading positions in a conventional ranking, but coordinated on the map of her own transcendence. It was a kind of "Astralis Xenorion Helivox", a perfect alignment between personal effort, the cosmic rhythm of the universe and the expressiveness of soul painting. Basically, everything we go through translates into the art of our existence.

So the rain was not just a simple physical obstacle, but also a catalyst for a profound inner change. It was as if her spirit was cleansed by every drop that fell on her forehead, removing the weariness and doubt that haunted her at that moment. This reminds me of an excerpt from "The Enchanted Mountain" by Thomas Mann, where nature and isolation gave the protagonist an opportunity to reflect on life and death. Like Hans Castorp, who learned that only by facing suffering can he understand the essence of life, Oana felt how the rain taught her hidden lessons, difficult to understand in moments of silence.

And the most important lesson is this: "Inner confrontations are the mirror in which we discover our true strength."

True leadership is not about avoiding obstacles, but about using them as means to purify and strengthen the spirit. Of course, facing challenges is a cleansing process for the spirit, as each obstacle removed is a blot erased from the mirror of the soul.

Beyond the sight of the world, the heart sees the truth: "Challenges are stepping stones to our authentic self." That's because every obstacle overcome reveals a deeper layer of our inner essence.

Beyond What Can Be Seen

On October 04, 2024

When you focus on ascension, sight becomes more than a sense—it becomes a bridge to the mysterious force within. Look deep into the challenge and you will see the essence.

Once again I was surprised by the performance of my sister, Oana Fântânaru, at the "Bucovina Ultra Rocks" mountain half-marathon. Trying to remember her journey, I reach the critical moment when she faced her own helplessness and was on the verge of giving up. However, he found the inner strength to keep going, a moment that changed his perspective on effort and success. Running is not only about reaching the highest peak, but also about overcoming physical and mental obstacles, about understanding the road itself - a road that, once traveled, reveals fragments of beauty that would otherwise have remained hidden.

As Oana advanced along the winding paths, she seemed to be tempted by the varied topography of the mountain, always drawn by the desire to reach beyond what can be seen, where each peak is not just a destination, but a crossroads in the journey his inner self. In those moments of athletic ecstasy, the boundaries between self and mountain dissolve, allowing an expanded consciousness (embracing all of creation) to explode into pure freedom, reaching new levels of perception. Is there any runner who doesn't feel drawn to the same call to explore the heights, but also their own limitations?

Obviously, his creation is an art of movement, a kind of dialogue between body and spirit. Creation becomes visible to the eyes when the whole being is involved in the dialogue between physical effort and inner reflection. In the end, the rationalism with which she analyzes her every step is not a limitation, but a gateway to a higher understanding of her own potential. Every detail of the race, from the topography of the terrain to the heartbeat, becomes a piece in a puzzle of the universal connection, of the synergy between man and nature, the final image of which reveals the true nature of his existence. A look that sees beyond appearances is an act of deep understanding of his inner struggle and how the mountain reflects his efforts.

Leadership: When your eyes fix on a challenging goal, what follows is the revelation of the balance between physical and inner strength?

The more Oana advances on the increasingly steep mountain trails, the more her spiritual equilibrium point shifts towards the intense experiences of the peaks, risking to turn each climb into a revelation of self. This seems to refer to a fragment of a principle of Patrick Drouot:

"If we draw a simple line of a certain length and we want to divide it into two asymmetrical parts, that is, we want to mark its balance point, then obviously we have to aim exactly at its middle. But the situation changes completely if the line is not uniform, but becomes wider towards one of the ends, becoming a flat figure. In this case, the symmetrical point, the balance axis, will not fall in the middle, but will move towards the wider end the width of this end, the closer the point of balance will be to it. The explanation is easy: even at a glance we feel that more weight is pressing on the wider part, that is, more force, to which we must fatally oppose a length larger on the opposite side."

When one side becomes heavier, the balance shifts towards it. Like the line that widens toward an end, described by Drouot, my sister's spiritual journey finds its equilibrium point closer and closer to intense peak experiences. Each step on the steep paths becomes a greater spiritual "weight", requiring a greater "length" of reflection and understanding to maintain inner balance.

Leadership: Does overcoming the inner barriers reflected in the physical obstacles encountered along the way give you the opportunity to see the perception of nature's call as a resonance with your limitless creative potential?

Or in this varied topography of the mountain, Oana discovered that the most intense physical challenges, the highest peaks and the steepest slopes become the points of maximum spiritual revelation. Here, at the "wider end" of her experience, she attained that "Astralis Xenorion Helivox," a perfect alignment between physical exertion and spiritual enlightenment. Each obstacle thus became not just an athletic challenge, but an opportunity for inner growth, constantly shifting the point of spiritual balance to new heights of understanding oneself and one's place in a vast universe.

This line becomes a metaphor for the path that Oana has traveled. Just as the wider end of a line attracts the axis of balance, the mountain draws its runner with irresistible force, demanding an inner balance to match. As the difficulties increase, the runner's "balance point" shifts from ordinary comfort to that space in his soul where true potential and divine endurance are discovered.

In art, this translates into the following: creation is a continuous escalation of one's own limits, as each masterpiece, each physical, emotional or mental experience, depicted with realistic means, moves the artist's balance point to new heights of expression and understanding of self.

Leadership: Does your eye contact with the obstacle become a symbol of confronting your own limits head-on and overcoming them as you confront the doubts that weaken your resolve?

Each steep trail tests your inner vision. And the runner's eyes are usually drawn to the hidden difficulty of the mountain. Here, then, the mountain, like the asymmetric line, has a metaphorical gravity. The "wider" part, that is, that area of intense difficulty (steep trails, thin air, unstable rocks) becomes the point where the runner focuses his energy, because that's essentially where the real revelation lies. The more difficult the challenges become, the deeper he discovers a mysterious force within him, his inner balance swinging closer and closer to that mysterious and revelatory call of the mountain.

Ultimately, this journey toward balance is not only a physical effort to maintain stability on steep terrain, but also a search for a spiritual center—that crossroads where the outer and inner mountains meet, revealing the true nature of one's being. As the wider end of a geometric line increases in size, the closer the balance point approaches this intensity zone. Likewise, as the mountain becomes more imposing and the challenges of the mountain trail more difficult, the runner's inner calling intensifies, turning each step into a revelation of her own balance.

In conclusion, the constant temptation of the mountain is not just an external call to Oana, but a deep resonance with her own divine nature. Each competition thus becomes a ritual of self-initiation into one's own unlimited potential, where the physical obstacles are only reflections of the inner barriers to be overcome.

And you, reader, what inner mountains are you climbing in your own spiritual odyssey? How do you turn every mountain terrain challenge into an opportunity for spiritual growth, seeing beyond the physical obstacle to the lesson that nature has to offer?

The authenticity of an inspirational vision is reflected in a leader's ability to perceive the call of nature as a resonance with his creative spirit, capable of transforming natural experiences into visual and emotional expressions.

Beyond what can be seen lies inner strength, facing a test of will and endurance. I say this because trials are what define us, despite any impediment, taking the attitude of an explorer who seeks meaning beyond limits. And regarding the art that Oana showed, I can say only one thing: creation becomes visible to the eyes when her entire being is involved in the dialogue between physical effort and inner reflection.

To create is to shape physical experiences into forms that convey the complexity of the synergy between human existence and the natural world.

Black Devours All That Is Colored

On November 19, 2016

Promote an outstanding art, creating a state of dependency over what is defined as being dominant in your own reality exposed through analogies and comparisons.

Giordano Bruno and the plague give way, in the creative plans of Eisenstein, to a new hero. A hero almost mathematically calculable. Just as, through observing the various celestial bodies, the planet Uranus was calculated a priori, long before being seen through the lens of a telescope.

What subject did sound bring when it entered film? The biographies of musicians. And what subjects were brought by the arrival of color? The biographies of painters. But sound and color together? Both were exhausted, so we must look for a third subject. What if it was the biography of a poet? This, the idea of a film about Pushkin came to be. And from here, the idea for "Ivan the Terrible" was born.

But the idea of black remains. Even since the discussion of the film about the plague, it overlaps with that initial impression instantly, one that became obsessive. "Blind implacability" will become the black color – the black death – the plague that devours everything that is alive and colorful. He also remembers the powerful impression the discussion with Andrei Belii left him in 1933: the analysis of the evolution of the frequency of chromatic values in Gogol's work, followed step by step the tragic closeness of the mystic madness and darkness in the writer's soul. Both there and in "The Plague", black devours everything colorful. *

Leadership: Can you approach a subject which is made of a multitude of aspects assembled into a whole meant to solve the psychology of a problematic of the double and the difference?

What gives us the possibility for a more thorough analysis over the way in which you treat a particular topic, within the limits of the field of observation of some controversial characters, defining a certain area of action or their manifestation to which we refer to, is precisely the attraction between what we want to create and the initial impression, which become obsessive, that of the mandatory escape from traditionalist concepts – considered inviolable.

In simpler terms, the initiated impression is a form of concentration of more information and interpretations based on the desire to change something in the reality that you take over through artistic creation. The very power of creation, which has become a prime feature of a director, a precious virtue of the practical intellect, must be based on this impression, so that the interpretations that the director gives to reality can be themed in a work marked by grace, elegance, spirit and visual innovation.

The idea of the black and that of the white, or the likeness of the color black with death, is the measure of the consequences of deviating from the "True" value of the basic value of novelty that is brought by the qualitative research of the subject and context of life of certain characters. They can disrupt the answer to what everyone is looking for, the viewers, constituting a particular form of interpretation of a situation which triggers an emotional reaction characterized by accepting a different perspective of conceiving a story.

The psychology of a problem of the double and the difference is found in the creative space of an artist who tries to outline the portrait of a real or imaginary hero through the prism of the consciousness of a supreme, providential being, who rationalizes based on a bivalent logic like: good-evil.

What subject did sound bring when it entered film? It is the question of primary importance when trying to transposition ideas into new methods of producing a content oriented towards a communication full of meaning, based on capturing the "living" in more colorful aspects. Or the absence of humanity, rendered in a painting less colorful, but more telling.

But all these analogies between colors, the ability to represent them through the world of sound, in specific conventions of the scientific and directorial language that permits the precise development of ideas, creates a state of dependency of what is defined as being dominant in your own reality. In the structure and proportions of a vision that cuts in the plan of the world a singular perspective.

Leadership, constituting a particular form of production and representation of knowledge, cannot distance itself from this stylistic dominance, because it touches a multitude of aspects assembled into a whole meant to solve the psychology of a problematic of the double and of the difference between totalities compared in different moments of evolution.

A totality of the individual psyche, a totality of the world and a totality of natural and social influences, physical and spiritual, direct and indirect, organized and unorganized. Obtained and metamorphosed through visual analogies.

The great power of the art of directing is determined by a single criterion: what is dominant in your own reality will be dominant in concise passages from the account of Creation that you can use to draw some conclusions about the history of humanity.

Black Devours All That Is Colored is the effect of a colorful impression stemming from outside or own thoughts, but one that became obsessive for the eye that hunts a new certitude through the prism of artistic appreciation. A certitude of abnormality, of the road that doesn't allow just anyone to enter the place in which something is born... the idea.

Blue Eyes Look Intently Into The Mystery And Depth Of The World

On October 17, 2023

What you see around you is reflected in the experience of contemplation, and this experience creates a deep connection with the essence and beauty of the world around you.

A painter with light blue eyes sits on the seashore, palette and brush in hand, trying to immortalize a moment of great emotional impact contained in the ephemerality of life, unfolding like an unspeakably beautiful sunset. The sun shines brightly, casting a reddish color over the sea, while the hot, neither too solid nor liquid sand, which never dries out, gives a natural, textured look. The painter looks around, trying to capture the beauty of the landscape, and what he sees is beyond his expectations, for never has the sea water reflected the sun's shine more beautifully than now, creating a color palette in shades of blue and green.

Moreover, the sight of the light blue eyes becomes a window into the painter's soul, a sensitive simile, an evocative description revealing emotions in vibrant colors with a transparency reminiscent of the shimmer of water in the sunlight, offering a deep look inside his being. Sight gives the painter a unique perspective towards understanding and connecting with the beauty of nature that surrounds him. In fact, no other painter can perceive the blue of the soul with the same sensitivity and depth as him, because in his soul, so good, so sincere, are reflected the mystery and the tranquility of the blue of the sea that make every glance deepen into a silent contemplation.

Due to their color (specific to sensitivity), light blue eyes are definitely affected by the shadow cast on them by things in their immediate vicinity, everything on the coast becoming more like a poem in colors and lines, every detail reflecting the beauty of nature in an artistic form. And like all blue eyes, they cannot come into contact with brightly colored or brightly lit things, especially considering the distance that the aerial perspective shows, because they are sensitive to glare and can feel discomfort in the face of strong light exposure.

Leadership: As you move further away from particular things, can you perceive them so that they do not become obvious negations in relation to absolute ideality?

So the eyes, especially the light blue ones, being completely autonomous, must be protected from strong light because it pushes the appearance to the extreme. Especially because they are not endowed with the finest perception of light and colors. In general, to the eyes open to color, as they grow farther away from particular things, they can appear as obvious negations in relation to absolute ideality. To these eyes, depending on the distance that the aerial perspective shows us, what is lit can appear as dark, serving more shades of white or black.

Only a painter could notice how the light blue eyes, due to their sensitivity to bright light, can capture and interpret the intense colors of the seaside summer in a special way. The bright sun over the sea would cast a vibrant light on the golden sand, blue water and other summer elements. For him, this intense light and the shadows created by nearby objects could create a rich palette of colors and visual effects.

I don't have blue eyes, but if I did, I could more deeply admire the beauty of colors and light around me, better understand the complexity of shades and more easily enjoy their unique charm in the world around me.

Of course, the eyes, not only the blue ones, can completely dominate what is ideal in the subtle reality from the near or far plane, under one and the same intensity of light. Automatically, the same rule applies to the vision of any eyes by virtue of the art of drawing a world, of building images, in the following way: "appearance must be truth, and truth must be appearance".

The following is understood from this: absolute ideality in art represents the desire to achieve perfection by expressing concepts, emotions and beauty in a way that overcomes material and personal limitations or imperfections. It is a search for essence and universality in artistic creation, where the artist tries to convey principles and truths that transcend a specific situation or subject. While obvious negations in relation to absolute ideality are the result of a critical perspective or careful analysis of particular things, where imperfections and limitations become apparent in comparison to the concept of perfection or absolute ideality.

Leadership: Can you emphasize the importance of a deep and authentic connection in the process of artistic expression, focusing on the form that the sea lends to the painter's paintings?

The form that the sea lends to a painting can include flowing lines of waves, contours of the shore, reflections of light on the water, colors in shades of blue and green, or any other element that captures the essence and beauty of the sea in the artist's eyes. There is also a certain theme in the art of painting, a kind of expression of the artist's thoughts and feelings through his colors, shapes and composition, like a visual language that communicates ideas and emotions, which can be correlated with the fragment from "The Great Gatsby":

"He closed the door and approached her, as if he suddenly realized that he existed there too, but on another plane, and that look opened before him, as if he wanted to see if he is who he says he is. He didn't know what he could do, he, the man who never gives up, because that look was driving him crazy."

This fragment suggests a strong attraction, even obsession, for what is perceived as special and maddeningly beautiful, in a setting full of memories, which the free eye of the artist observed and transposed on the canvas, outlining a story in colors and shapes that reveal the past in a subtle and expressive way. In the world of art, this theme (as long as it is treated with sensitivity and depth) can similarly be found in works of art that focus on the beauty and depth of the subject matter, shrouded in an aura of mystery and fascination.

For example, a painter who specializes in portraits may be fascinated by the expressions in the eyes and gaze of his subjects, comparing himself to himself on the seashore, while rendering the brightness and depth of the sunset on canvas. He feels that, like the sun, his eyes become a tool of expression through which he can capture and represent the beauty of nature in a unique and personal way, thus being able to capture the depth of his emotions and personality in the subject's gaze and create a painting capable of capture its essence.

In addition, there are artists who focus on depicting natural landscapes, such as sunsets or seascapes, and try to convey the beauty and mystery of nature in their unique light and colors. They thus become storytellers of the world through colors and their gaze, transmitting emotions and stories through their artistic creations.

Leadership follows the pictorial process described, which begins with the background, aiming for it not to suggest pronounced depth, but to create an egalitarian and balanced framework between what is seen and what is felt. A fact that emphasizes the importance of a deep and authentic connection in the process of artistic expression.

Blue Eyes Look Intently Into The Mystery And Depth Of The World, looking for a story to tell in every shade and every shadow. This is not about eye color, much less about blue eyes placed in the narrative sphere of an original reality, but about the rigor with which we treat works of art in the way of appreciation and interpretation, understanding that every detail and every artistic choice can it conveys deep meanings and human values.

Leadership for Dummies

On May 10, 2007

Why this book when there are maybe hundreds of books or papers referring to leaders and leadership?

Paraphrasing Oscar Wilde, I thought that it would be very good if each person would know " What it means to be a leader", and this because the terms like leaders and leadership entered with a kind of force in the Romanian language and they are little accessible to the ordinary man.

And exactly to the ordinary man is dedicated this book, maybe because of the fact that in general great leaders came from the ordinary people who...wore the cane of marshal.

Without considering it a concord, the book is representing the try of an ordinary man - the author - who through simple words, facts and usual examples instills to the ordinary man courage and optimism in his own quest to be his own master and who knows... maybe even a leader.

Just like the effect of the fairy tales in childhood who made the dreams of some ordinary children to come true, I hope that the stories and the events in this book to be an example worthy to follow for each reader. I would also wish that each reader to be conscious that, if he wants something with any price in life, has to fight very strong to obtain what he wants. Just like Sisyphus, never discourage.

Leadership - Magic of Mastery

On May 10, 2008

I wrote this practical and very useful book in order to show all readers the principles that the personal development of a leader are based upon. I created it like an intensive and very easy to use manual, in which I included many examples about the manner in which the leaders act, despite the difficulties they confront and about the decisions they take in order to get over the risky situations that can appear.

A manager is the most important person in a company. However, few people have professional abilities for a leading job and have the necessary qualities of a successful manager. Some people who have important leading jobs think that they possess from birth talent and leaders abilities, but this impression is strong shacked when the members of their team are not cooperative, because of their wrong decisions, and especially because they didn't respect some efficient leading principles. That's why leadership, just like any other science, can be easier learned only through understanding some principles, through their attentive and permanent application.

The essential characteristic of this book in comparison with others on the market in the same domain is that it describes through examples the ideal competences of a leader. I never claimed that it's easy to become a good leader, but if people will follow step by step the strategies offered by this book, with certainty they will be on the right road.

I promise you that after you will finish reading this book, you will have everything you need to become a ... Merlin.

Leadership Puzzle

On May 10, 2009

Every time a game producer releases a new game on the market, any kind of game – strategy, logic and ability, action, mind training, for children or grown-ups, be it a computer game or a standard one, people huddle together in special shops to buy them. Curiosity and exaltation cause the game-maniacs to start playing as quick as possible, without reading the guidelines.

If they keep on playing for hours in a row that means the game is captivating and entertaining, interactive, simple and well conceived. If not, it is likely that the game isn't a very good or spectacular one, but contrariwise, dull and exhausting. Studies revealed, uncountable times that people of all ages prefer games that resemble reality that involve a certain degree of thinking, certain abilities, curiosity and prospecting. Let's keep in mind that certain games redound to brain training, and people can develop certain skills, like the ability of analysis and synthesis.

I wrote this book that conjoins in a simple way personal development with leadership, just like a puzzle, where you have to match all the given pieces in order to recompose the general image. I hope to keep your focus lain on the words written within and not to unhand it until the end.

Like the puzzle game, which consists in fitting different-sized pieces in order to recompose the whole, you can easily and better understand the ways of achieving leadership abilities, if the process is explained to you on small pieces. My highest desire is to help you develop the mentality and the ways of action characteristic to a leader, nourishing the hope you'll try to understand, to unravel, deepened, to memorize, to remember as many of the issues raised Chapters in this book.

The leader integrates several qualities and abilities, earned in a great while and with a great struggle, with patience and animation, features that others don't possess. This book is designed to further your personal development in leadership, to help you adapt easier and faster to leader's secrets and, thus, expand your efficiency in your operating field.

I hope that this book, structured in several chapters, different ideas and content, will help to elaborate the image of good leader. It approaches people with a high leading position, but also those who strive to go above and keep it there.

The Master's Touch

Boris Yeltsin's Precipice

On March 27, 2009

The way you treat change influences the extent to which you control it.

In the book "Developing the leaders around you", the leadership expert John Maxwell, mentions about an incident occurred in Russia, during an overturn. The tanks of the army had besieged the government building that housed President Boris Yeltsin and his supporters for democracy. First-class military leaders had given orders to the troopers' commander to open fire and kill Yeltsin.

While the army was drawing up in the line, Yeltsin came out of the building with firm steps, climbed on a tank, looked directly into the eyes of the commander and thanked him that he came to join democracy. Later, the commander acknowledged that he didn't come with the tanks to join Yeltsin. But Yeltsin appeared so confident and firm, that the soldiers decided to join him.

Leadership: Is an alternative to consolidating your distinct position the source of a pressing experience during the occurrence of a landmark event, which you can update through a behavior that leaves no doubt about your own worth?

How does one control the situation "at height"? If you ever wondered how suitable or unsuitable you are for fulfilling a certain role, then you know how Yeltsin felt. Are you pretty good, intuitive and prompt enough to take the right decisions in difficult situations? Do you act quickly, clear-minded, when everybody else petrifies? Do you listen to that trustful solid impulse that you need to move forward when you get a blow or when all seems lost?

Passing ahead of people is like going on a wire, over a precipice that deepens as you move forward. You have nothing to cling in order to reach the other end. Your only chance of success is only a matter of attitude, of the way you deal with the situation. If "leading" is an important part of your career, if it means the full achievement of your ideals, then, first of all, you will have to influence the way you control the situation "at height".

Boris Yeltsin's highest experience was not that experience of life without struggles, hardships and frustrations, which drain human energy, but was that experience of words that can change the way of thinking and that can remain forever in the souls of other people. It was that living of reality, which is called "awakening", perceived as a step forward to the heart of the world, to the core of the truth from which his innocence resulted.

Can your leadership suggest a very intense experience of life, because you attach yourself to moments and circumstances in a very strange way, when you blame other people for your own experiences?

By the way he reacted, without anyone expecting it, Boris Yeltsin canceled that feeling of helplessness regarding the mastery of his own life, and configured it responsibly on the basis of an inner force called: intuition, courage, commitment, vigor – these being the cohesive forces of the manifestation of the mind which justifies the thoughts of unity and does not question the physical and metaphorical meanings of any suffering.

Leading efficiently is a true challenge. The act of thinking is hard work. But it is even harder to get on top and maintain yourself "at height", as Yeltsin did. Sometimes, you will find it hard to change things. But remember that, one day, your life may be hanging by the way you move, even by your aspirations. It depends only on the size of your leadership.

Just as a physician must quickly diagnose the patient, before his suffering or disease get worse, so you must detect that spark that ignites in people's souls, before it becomes a blaze. However, if it is growing high, you must do everything possible to turn it off quickly.

There was so much courage in Yeltsin's attitude. This makes you think, isn't it? When you are in front of people, do you realize and understand that a leader stands before them, a man in control of his emotions? What do you feel when you must rise above them? Do you have enough presence of mind to act despite your fears and their feelings? Can you build your own rope with which to cross the precipice, with the risk of falling into its abyss?

Leadership lies in gaining the trust of your capabilities and distinguishing value of non-value when the events in which you feel demotivated do not materialize outside of your control.

Boris Yeltsin's Precipice means a risky, but effective means to get ahead of people. It is a "precipice" that, once crossed, makes your leadership gain a more and more profound dimension. You must have a strong character and prove your mastery in leading your emotions and fear to their limits.

Conclusion: The true mastery in leadership represents the ability to turn a potential failure into a victory. Adapting to changes that occur unexpectedly actually means to have the ability and capacity to quickly and properly respond to the unexpected and to maintain your control on people who, in some circumstances, can become your enemies.

The way you treat change influences the extent to which you control it.

Born For The Second Time

On January 21, 2011

Establish a direct relationship between you and the others – a full and peaceful integration in their inner universe.

Time has a deep force, a strange power of appreciation and illustration of all feelings and thoughts that you do about your future. And the time you spend with a dear, cheerful and lively person can provide you an answer to one of your basic questions of your existence: "Who are you?"

The movie « Pretty Woman (1990) ». The multibillionaire Edward Lewis and his "employee", Vivian Ward, during a short chess game that they play more for fun.

At one point he, looking into her eyes, he gently tells her that they need to stop playing because it's late and he has a lot of work to do.

- What if you don't go to work tomorrow ? Why don't you get a day off? Vivian told him with an expression that clearly showed she wanted to spend more time with him.

Taking thought for a moment, as if he was deeply meditating, Edward replies:

- To take a day off? I own the company...

You will be incapable to notice something if your interest towards it isn't aroused by another way of seeing it.

For the first time in his life, Edward Lewis, convinced by Vivian, took a day off. A day that would change his entire inner universe. They went to a picnic, they rode together, they strolled through the city, they laughed, they made jokes – as If they were on vacation. They both felt great. Indeed, it was a truly unforgettable day ! Because, at the end of the movie, after concluding that important business which dragged him to New York, Edward returns to the park, takes his shoes off and walks barefoot on the green grass to live again that feeling of relaxation and freedom. He felt his soul more serene and cheerful.

Giving the art – of being at peace with yourself, beyond the appearances that you show to the world, a new way of expressing yourself means to bring into your configuration a new defense unit that helps you survive in a hostile world. The integration of one's experience in leadership, connected to the mood that you choose, that you transform in a picture of simple, sheer happiness, where fulfillment comes from smiles, from love towards everything that surround you.

If nature is victorious in the verses of great poets, in the fascinating splendor of all lights and colors, of all its clear voices, then the peace of the soul is victorious when it comes to the development of leadership, because it maintains at a satisfactory level the capacity of your personality to decide what's good for you, letting aside the restrictions similar to:"I'm afraid to distance myself from everything that connects me to the current time, I'm afraid to expose myself to any kind of lively situations out of which I have the occasion to grow as a person."

Do you measure the integration of self-experience into leadership according to what defines you or what benefits you?

If you register an acute worry connected to the immense role that you professionally play, aware or not of the implications given by an ascension beyond the borders of reality, you have two options: you can accept spirituality in its complexity of shapes, or you can accept the harsh humiliation of giving up what suits you, that doesn't belong to the essence of what you are, of what it means to be human.

Leadership has in its composition the possibility to define the self image particularities of a person, especially in his harmony, peace and understanding moments. That is when you truly make contact with yourself, and try to assure a valuable future in agreement with your personality training-development needs.

Trust what makes you feel good ! The integration of one's experience in leadership is measured by the way in which you detach from or approach yourself, the life you're living, the things happening around you, your capacity to break away from the slavery of a professional position.

What defines you must be closely related to accepting a reference frame for the reality with which your power, performance, or generosity can be compared. Instead, what really benefits you is the status you have when you fight to become someone in the eyes of others or in your eyes, out of which the winner is the quality to transform into a delightful appearance in the tendencies to conceal the ethos.

Leadership: Do you validate every experience you experience through what you are able to build yourself "in a freefall" from a great height?

Do you help others to make things right in their lives? Just as a painter transforms reality, giving the nature that he renders a streak of fondness, of light, of tranquility, so Vivian produced a positive and healthy change in Edward's life, giving him a new meaning, a new understanding, a new horizon, translated through a state of inner peace and harmony.

Vivian caused his total change, bringing him a great inner satisfaction, a feeling of comfort, when not only that he felt better, but he also felt balanced in all respects. Walking again on grass, after years, he felt as a child who, happy that he learned to walk, suddenly becomes more lively, dynamic, vivacious. The bright side of his soul was reawakened to life.

Vivian was his emotional antenna. She helped him understand the deeper meaning of life. Emotions gained more significance in his life and had a direct impact on his actions.

To build something "in a freefall" from a great height means to increase your reference value without prioritizing what is happening to you while you are busy making other plans.

« Born for the second time » is a way of saying that, in order to give value to your leadership, you must determine a major change of attitude and mentality in those who surround you. It means that you must alleviate and to light other's souls, their own existence, to undo the burdensome spell of a life devoid of harmony and balance. For this, you must establish a direct relationship between you and them – a full and peaceful integration in their inner universe. They, believing the positive thoughts you inspire, will manifest a state of joy.

Remember that leadership is a way of nearing and knowing between you and other people. Help them put things in order in their lives, help them find new ways of living their life properly and get rid of a hurtful and deceitful mentality. Help them benefit in this way of the necessary foundation for an effective functioning: the harmony in life. Help them answer the fundamental question of life: "Who am I really?"

It applies to you, as well. Your job and obligations will always put your limits to the test. Therefore, I think it's good and useful for you to find a healthy valve – such as "the change of scenery", for you to break free of any frustration and tension. Don't forget that stress often increases the probability of a conflict with your co-workers or your employees.

Conclusion: Your contribution, as a leader, for the «harmony» in the collective you work is overwhelming. This harmony is sometimes very hard to achieve due to the differences between people in terms of education, culture, etc. By establishing a direct relationship between you and the others, integrating yourself into their inner universe, you can produce positive changes.

Try to relight the flame in the soul of other people !

Brand Leadership

On September 27, 2015

Permanently review your creation, launching a unique process of bringing to the fore a broader personal experience.

He who has seen the film "alexander Nevsky" and knows that the battle occupies an important part of the film, will understand Eisenstein's thought of making the current film: "The Strike", when he tried to give a greater breath to the scene in which the workers encounter the brutal resistance of the machinists in the boiler room. This fight was much extended by Eisenstein, to the despair of his supervisors, who were terrified by the difficulties arising at every step.

Because, Eisenstein, passionate for his work on this scene, made it as a complicated circus act, with jumps, fights, throwing people into barrels, etc. Everything was set up in one rehearsal, but during filming, things weren't going well. Many scenes had to be reshot a number of times. When finally, after numerous useless shots, everything succeeded, it was found that the film roll was not enough and the whole endeavor had to be redone. Eisenstein insisted on filming the whole fight, even though during editing he later accepted, from dramaturgical considerations, to shorten it.

*The direction saw in all these insistencies rather a few whims of the director. They, however, proved to be a tenacious pursuit of his original intentions. **

Leadership: Are you able to capitalize on your taste for the content you promote, by implementing the verisimilar in an imaginary presentation of reality?

In all segments of producing knowledge, regardless of the requirements of leadership or the adopted constructive approach, in terms of the trends, styles or formulas of continuing to review creation, clearly dominates a sort of structure of preparation. And this preparation, resulting from everything that showcases your taste for the content you promote, cannot be reflected fully over the freedom of expression unless you manage to implement the "verisimilar."

Knowledge is that part of your vision that you appreciate not only from the point of view of its realism content, but also from the context of the action it formulates.

Here the verisimilar (the central instrument necessary for the art of persuasion) is accentuated by the phenomenon that grows due to the increasing number of collages that contribute to achieving the vision and cultivating a superior artistic climate. And to implement the verisimilar in an imaginary presentation of reality is to create the frame of a feature film that reflects the tendency to reinvent the relationship between what we experience and what we have the illusion that we are experiencing, or the relationship between what was happening on stage and the spectator's gaze.

The verisimilar is that part of the script that shows the way in which the exterior reality the director hints at is reflected in the spectator's consciousness.

Reviewing creation, assumed as a storage space of the rationales that define you as a script writer in a feature film project, basically meaning only a unique process of bringing to the fore a deeper experience of exploring life and the world, may result in either a friendly interface or one difficulty to access, in a certain construction, sophisticated, called the scene. Momentarily, we will eliminate the purely phenomenological implications of this form of art, but we will assign it a unique touch of objectivity.

This scene, with a well-defined plot, in which are introduced a complex plot-point, a climax or a "piece of action", which we cannot simply deduce and the formulas and principles of the theory detached from the combination of experience with reality, is achieved in a new framework of interacting with people.

The scene tends to gain an individual outline of rigorous organizing of directing elements, a certain structure that suits you best when you want to activate the option of exceeding your limits. To direct means to materialize a concept stemming from an experience of knowledge, respectively, from a complex action of processing information presented in an idealized form.

The verisimilar, endowed with elements with a "news" character, is produced as a response to thinking and imagination that marks that steps of conquering an isolated territory through the years, especially when you manage to transform information into a real experience. When you manage to turn experimental work and theoretical training into a real story.

A novel way of highlighting a wider personal experience consists in associating the visual and sound elements with the conceptual elements so as to give a certainty to the events at a given moment and to a certain intensity.

Can you highlight the breadth of a wider reality that confirms your cultural education by launching your appetite for the culture of perseverance and quality in building artistic compositions?

Brand Leadership highlights what you create by including concepts, or associations between ideas and knowledge, in the reality you want to be seen, not necessarily the one everyone knows. The brand may result in a user-friendly interface or a difficulty to access one, in a certain construction, sophisticated, called the scene, including situations, characters, characteristic aspects of life, played out through personal experience.

If you want to present leadership in a different form, permanently review your creation, launching a unique process of bringing to the fore a broader personal experience.

Break Away From The Old Methods

On February 02, 2009

Clarify your ideas and validate your hypotheses regarding the beneficial or harmful effects of the leadership you practice, through the influence exerted on others.

Imagine the following scenario:

Year 1940. On the streets of Berlin, a family consisting of husband, wife and two children of three and respectively four years, are hurrying home.

They almost reach the front of their house when five individuals dressed in black coats, quickly pounce upon them. Meinhard felt a blow on the nape, and instantly loses his consciousness.

Five hours later, he awakens curled up, naked, into a shatterproof glass balloon, in a small dark room. He looks around disoriented, trying to figure out where he is, and how could he get out of there. Then, his eyes discreetly are turning on the left of the room, when a tall and a well-made mister put on the light.

"Listen to me, carefully, and do not utter a word ! You will never find out who I am or where you are. Your family is safe for the moment. If you still want to see your wife and children, you will have to help us. Your task is to think and tell us what caused the explosion of the U778 submarine before it will be immersed in the Irish waters. On your left is a file with all the information related to submarine and the latest transmissions that were made by the members of the crew.

You have 48 hours until it will be consumed the oxygen from the shatterproof glass balloon, in which you are. If you do not provide us a credible and concrete response in all this time, it is not only that will you die suffocated, but we will also kill all your family."

Leadership: Are you helping people to think freely, or you are forcing them to push their limits as far as possible?

To think is to bring to life the best of you to improve the finished product called: "Ideal of Perfection". On the other hand, to make someone think, by imposing a certain rigorousness in this sense, is a narrowing of the perspective on the potential of transforming man into an elite performer.

This can mean a temporary failure situation, due either to a mistakenly targeted development, designed from the outset by a marginal leadership model, either to difficulties in adapting to the demands of power accumulation or individual ethical issues.

Is it worth for your model of leadership to be taken as an example? Does your model form people or put to test their spiritual and mental strength of accepting you at their leadership? What can be said about the quality of your character?

Failure in leadership arises when man's thinking falls into the adherence to a superior decision-making body that conditions the very creation of a situation-suggestion. As we have already shown, those who deal with influence through communication, try to carefully measure the factors favoring the occurrence of suggestive situations and inducing the suggested answer.

Suggestion is the influence exerted on one's own will, which triggers spontaneous reactions. Indeed, before you force a man to help you, it is more important to favor the conceiving of a real emergency that will facilitate the appearance of the answer to what you seek. Man must not be forced to cooperate, but rather, he must be given a sense of belonging to a cause that matters primarily to him.

Leadership: Can you modify the effect that causes man's transformation into his contrary, necessarily reducing the influence of the premises and causes that led to the cancellation of any form of resistance?

Think well what kind of leader you want to become, because people will determine your path. People are the ones that are adding you value, and that help you achieve a high level of performance by their power of penetrating the essence of your leadership and accepting your beliefs. Nevertheless, what example can you be if the main feature that characterizes your leadership style is overshadowed by some harmful values?

The effect that produces the transformation of man into his contrary is rather a result of the constraint of serving a purpose or command over which reigns the one who recognizes the way in which a particular situation affects you.

The contrary that constantly struggles within you, between what you choose to do consciously and what you have to do automatically is a finished product called negative self-image that decreases your motivation or even annihilates it through a lack of confidence in your own strengths. The contrary is a narrowing of the perspective that involves the cancellation of any position of power in a "confrontation" type of situation, where what you get and give is conditioned by determinism-like events that you cannot choose.

If you want to become a good leader, then help people to think freely, motivate them to find solutions to any kind of problems, but without constraining them in any way. If you promote subversive methods of persuasion and manipulation, if you force people to do what they do not feel comfortable to do, especially in an environment where their talent cannot flourish, then it is clear that your model of leadership does not bring any kind of benefit.

Do you have a plan of your leadership development, through a positive change of yourself? Clarify your ideas and validate your hypotheses regarding the beneficial or harmful effects of the leadership you practice, through the influence exerted on others.

The premises and causes the lead to the cancellation of any form of resistance you show are determined by what you claim to believe in a context of concern that gives rise to an understanding of guilt towards yourself, to a certain existential factor.

In football, the balanced game means to create a fair distribution of forces, both between the compartments of the team as well as to counter any action of the opponent.

Leadership can be a balanced "game" only if you realize an appropriate distribution of your sphere of influence that would protect your health and integrity. Your major responsibility is to be a model for the art of relating to other people, and also a model of character. In order to optimize your own performance it requires a more careful analysis of the Human Resources that you have in your subordination.

Brilliance Of The Gem

On October 12, 2010

Struggle to shine - but without falling into the trap of power thus obtained.

The King of Persia, Sharaman, also have ambitious plans and the belief that Dastan, his adopted son, was the most indicated person to carry them out. Dastan, named the "Lion of Persia", succeeded through a real tour de force to enter the holy city of Alamut and open the gates of the royal army to occupy it without much loss of life.

While celebrating the victory, The King Sharaman, who was the incarnation of the most cherished virtues of that time: a clear and orderly thinking, intelligence, generosity, vision, skill, wisdom and determination, congratulated Dastan for his victory. And gave him one last lesson:

- A good man would do like you Dastan, would have acted with boldness and courage for victory and saving lives. But a great man would have stopped the attack from the outset. A great man would have stopped what he knew it was wrong... regardless of who was commanded. You could be more than good Dastan, you could be great...

Leadership: The way of action you are able to exercise in a plan narrower than the overall one, must be seen in terms of position adjustments as a result of a "take a second look" type of intervention?

The considerations are really natural from such a poignant spirit. The King Sharaman from the movie "Prince of Persia - The Sands of Time" was more concerned about not to instill faith and hope to his son, but to make him always think about the events and their consequences.

Dastan was unsurpassed in courage and bravery, resourceful and inventive, energetic and ambitious, but all this did not save him from the bad impression which he produced to the people of Alamut and Persia allies. As for all the inhabitants of Alamut, he was seen as an usurper. And just as Heliodor (from the Old Testament) while going to rob the temple in Jerusalem was banished by an angel - so Dastan risks being thrown out of Alamut and can even ultimately be humiliated.

On an inscription from a Chinese temple is written: "A gem not shines until you not polish it." A diamond, even if it is covered by one or more layers of stone, still remains a gem. But it must be polished to sidestep those layers and to reveal the diamond.

King's advice has served only to "refine" Dastan. What he actually tried to tell him is that it is not easy to act against the sense of duty and the sense dictated by heart. He taught him what means the strength of a human spirit.

Leadership: Are your judgments stopped by important limitations in what regards the meaning of the work you are called upon to create?

To be an absolute leader is not enough to be good, you must be great. You have to make room for higher ideals, formulas with general human significance, not only do your duty. You need to know how to act to turn your personal vision into reality, avoiding actions that hinder this transformation and what can influence your value as a leader.

Concentrate on the primary objective while you worry and about all others, for that your glory knows an intense shine. As a true judge, always be right in your decisions, but at the same time humane. Use all the skills to not fail. For a decision made in haste based on emotions, can diminish your influence and can break your authority.

The most severe limitation imposed upon you by the direct follow-up of events is the achievement of a wide area of authority that does not manifest yourself in your experience: "I am just that, nothing more ! "

And the meaning of the work you are called upon to create, understood only by the wise, is to retain a certain nobility, unquestionable, without hoping that you are the only one in the world who knows the art of opening a new path to the future.

Leadership: Do you dare to unbind your sensitive side, by giving vent to your own vulnerabilities?

Recipe for an ineffective leadership is doing often the wrong things. Conquered by high ideals and driven by the ephemeral illusions of his ambition, the leader can unbind his sensitive side giving vent to his own vulnerabilities. A consummate leader remains, however, very attached to reality, starting from its rigorous and insightful observation. He fathoms the events, and then filters them through the soul before making major decisions.

Many people imagine that they're leaders and experts, that they have all the answers about how to act. But many lack the "gem" that emphasize their potential. They are covered with imperfections that grind their talents and prevent them from being effective in the activities they perform, respectively in understanding of what influences their long-term success.

Here would come the advice my mother gave me a long time ago: "Struggle to shine - but without falling into the trap of power thus obtained".

Leadership encompasses all the great things you are doing in the name of a holy ideal, from which you have to drop the pride of having them !

Conclusion: So as the value of the gem grows by polishing that enhances its beauty, so people, especially leaders, need to "polish" themselves throughout their lives in order to remove imperfections and to appease their egos.

Burning In The Skies (II)

On September 25, 2015

Strive to accumulate knowledge, realizing the fusion between the infinite and the primordial that pushes you to overcome your limits.

I was a prisoner in an extended temporality, which my story unrevealed fully, refreshed it in serious word games. A Wells character, in the likeness of the English inventor, led by an invisible force in another dimension of time, when the centuries of history took on the shades of a challenge of the exceptionally intellectual destiny. Or maybe I was the main subject of a scientific work in which was multiplied the specialized knowledge to which not just anyone had access to.

All encompassing, I was revealing affinities and consistencies in the principles and methods of creation used in writing, but through a sort of rigorous eloquence, as Ali Pasha would rule his possessions with an iron fist. "Here's the dead wood to make the fire rise." The two sparks of reason illuminating my world in the midst of the burning torches of a mighty creature, passing the shadows of ignorance and superficiality of external reality, were the madness of living life as a fiction and fiction as life.

When someone takes into account stories deducted from an exceptional intellectual potential, then the titan of independent thought, the polisher of information that influences language, appears in an experiential void. A void created either by the deformations of the meaning of the world, or by its resizing confined into a resolution of self-image that occupies space in the depths of chaos or confusion. Or by the existential isolations of the type: "I'm losing what I don't deserve."

Leadership: How do you predict the content of the concept of creation in terms of life experiences that you have at one time checked as "default" to open up new artistic horizons?

The content of creation that honored my standards of thought included the contribution of other personalities to the evocation of a higher spiritual reality, of aesthetic value, because it bore the beauty of the attempt to penetrate beyond the edges of culture and the science of the present. The primordial that pushed me to overcome my limits was the desire to train posterity with very bold points of view on the link between my literary preferences and my concern to turn things upside down.

It is mentioned in many books that the telescope wasn't invented by Galileo, around the year 1610, but by other three contenders: Janssen, Lippershey or Metius, because this instrument was already known and utilized in a primitive form in the Netherlands and France. But who can verify the truth?

The same happens when readers that analyze a brilliant writer with the definitions that he himself attributes to himself, as a perfect illustration of thought logic. Only a reader perfectly integrated in the infrastructure of three courts could access this source of inspiring material, could take up the living torch of a complex informational structure. "The blame is mine alone / For bridges I have burned."

Such a reader must be, first of all, a Jonathan Swift – to only seek verisimilitude and touch it, then a Shakespeare – to involuntarily and naturally transform a dry idea into a big picture, and eventually a Ştefan Zweig – to seek oneness with the infinite and the primordial that pushes the individual to exceed his limits. "And in the end we were made to be apart / In separate chambers of the human heart."

Leadership: Do you explore the entire world from one part of the "island", based on the intentions of possessing a more advanced culture whose fascination power is immutable in time?

You become a traveler in the spectrum of finitude when you remain in the void of producing ideas, the figure of the combinations achieved through the manipulation of ideas failing to achieve a true miracle in the battle with your own limits and perspectives.

As a representative of a set of tracks that splits from the main path, basically meaning what hinders the manifestation of the quality of the discoverer, although you are in constant contact with the material of exploring different contexts of using information, you can lose an enormous amount from what you have accumulated.

It is exactly the same phenomenon, specific for diehard readers, that happens when you buy books. By constantly amassing books, you're not left with enough time to read them all and are left with missing, unused information. Basically, you get attached to something that you cannot fully capitalize on. You tend to accumulate knowledge, omitting many other means and supports of knowledge.

In leadership, this means exploring the whole world from only one side of the island that is every day more and more populated by strangers, but abandoned by an even greater number of locals.

I use this second comparison, as the great aestheticians emphasize certain points of light or darkness, especially when I say that one non-interaction with certain "reference" type variables may not require major motivation or interest. It depends on what you assimilate or omit.

Leadership: Are you ready to experience the power of revealing a new world beginning from the way of specifying the terms of using a new content of consciousness?

There is one more important aspect to remember. When you fail to capture and emphasize those novel frames of your own individuality and subjectivity, by revealing a new dimension of science that you attributed to yourself through time, which can leave a good impression in the minds of others, you can deform the meaning of a whole formed from representations or evidence.

Information assimilated through study or by applying science into practice, in everyday life, has a certain capacity, you cannot forcefully squeeze it into a corner of reality projected necessarily after your mind. While the information omitted can always have replacement value when it doesn't form in large quantities an absolutely necessary step for the substantiation of a coherent concept of action or personal development.

Let us not forget that science and man form a whole that connects to the infinite force. They are two worlds, two concepts intertwined through the connotations, connections and valences involved, some unexpected, some obvious, always evolving, despite ideological and philosophical controversy.

If you want to develop your science and reach perfect understanding that can turn you into more than a leader, an "endless Intelligence that produces everything", start looking for verisimilitude in everything around you. Learn to involuntarily and naturally transform a dry idea into a big picture. Strive to accumulate knowledge, achieving the fusion between the infinite and the primordial that pushes you to overcome your limits.

The Terms of Use of new content of consciousness are guaranteed by the way you present your work with reference to other external references, on what you can do with what you think about a world where the truth becomes hard to accept.

Burning In The Skies puts man in the dimension of science placed between verisimilitude and fiction, referring to the information used in the construction of a certain level of performance or of a structure of thought that can only be validated through exploration, discovery and experimentation of your own person in an authentic way, from the complexity of the reality of feeling that you are going up to the sublime view of a mountain peak.

Burning In The Skies (I)

On September 18, 2015

Monitor your progress at the turning point between the dream and the palpable, poignantly manifesting your quality of introducing yourself in the existence of a world perceived through the senses of advanced knowledge.

I was reviewing those symbolic words, small mysteries stemming from a percentage of inspiration contained in the transformation field of my creation space: "All I really Want to Do", as a profound mirror of proximity. They put into motion my intelligence considered a skill of perfect virtue, giving the impression of a return to thought towards the coordinated principles of a self that seemed to spring from the divine.

The only spark of reason that illuminates a writer's world is the idea of being original. To this was added the risk of testing my limits, after the considerations of an empirical distribution of the value of the duration on which the entire conception of a superior invention called "The 6th Sense" was based upon. And this rejuvenation of forces, broke out of an ideal of the eclectic halo, was due entirely to a vigorous protest aimed at my own law of functioning. As if someone had gradually increased my intellectuality, calling to an effect with a blockbuster potential.

Unstoppable, the words snuggled into my world to provide imagination with the material of exploring different contexts of using information. Invasive, all of these came to my mind, as the torch burns by consuming oxygen, during my entry into that dimension called extraversion, when the meaning I attributed to ideas and writing surpassed the limit of experimental knowledge. "I'm swimming in the smoke / Of bridges I have burned."

The reality of an artist is like using a "stop" word under the dominance of a sense of intimacy: it can be confirmed by an act of temporary use of more elaborate notions, but always up to a point.

But the man of endless knowledge, this Jupiter orbiting ageless stories, at the turning point between the dream and the palpable, engages profoundly in the possession of the succession of perceptual agreements, only with the permission of the Ego who incessantly cries out: "Exalt yourself above the heavens". Triumphantly, it embraces what emerges through a YES coming from a categorical NO. I used the deadwood to make the fire rise.

With the rebirth of worlds unseen, by capturing some notions stemming suddenly from a sort of burning of words, from their taming with the help of the process of redefining metaphorical traps, this man self-exploits himself. As if he'd been brainstorming only to produce the active substance, the philosopher's stone whose particular curvature is characterized through the so-called omega point. He must, obligatorily, be taken as a witness of a true liberating practice. "I'm lost in the beating of the storm."

If I had likened myself to such a man, under the impression of a sense of symbolic power, or in order to awaken an aesthetic pleasure, I should first have to combine the echoes of my heart's battles with a flow of images that never stops. It was as if I had created a new detachable character in the whole of a work of art as the instant narrative of an endless story.

It could have been said that I was lost or absorbed in a work of art, entering its world on the back door of a life of story that still fills me with wonder.

Leadership: Can you portray the image of a rich creation, setting in the minds of men the aesthetics of a successful story through a comparison that relies exclusively on the materiality of the form and substance terms detached from the joints of the emotions and visions that accompany real life?

Intelligence springing from an overflow of inspiration, as a specifically human activity maker of values that can contribute successfully to achieving optimal aesthetic results, relates not only to the aspirations of improvement of minds prone to a type of advanced knowledge, as much as especially to the trends and demands of functionality of the potential of personal renewal.

The intelligence of the creative man is like the communicative image of a funny idea. It can be highlighted through a combination of foreground frames caught in an alternative version of thinking drawn from the denial or acceptance of any truth. It belongs, therefore, to one of the few classes of combinations, to which an enormous class opposes, which includes the rest of quantification or customization possibilities of what you have achieved through learning and successive assimilation.

The aesthetic of a story can be fixed in the minds of men by a comparison that relies exclusively on the materiality of the terms of form and substance derived from everyday life, but also on the image of a being that becomes truly free in an oneiric way. In fact, we can see the aesthetics of the story as the most vibrant combination of emotion and vision, sensation and perception, when we seek to extract new truths about the world and life using narrative techniques that outline our ability to see the world through the eyes of the protagonists of a parallel universe.

Leadership: Can you bring perfection in all foreground frameworks of a work of art by embracing what emerges by means of the YES stemming from a categorical NO?

In leadership, that poignant quality of man to reintroduce himself in the existence of a world perceived by the senses that advanced knowledge gives to the elements of conceptual structure of ideas and perspectives that promote the progress of science is manifested. Science is not only an uninterrupted search for new perspectives to look at the world and the human being, a permanent struggle to find out how the Universe works, but it is also a process of transforming a hybrid conception into "alternative truth" and then into simply "truth".

And the way of rationalizing the content of revelations or conclusions drawn from the implications of this process of successive use of information, later transforming you into a critic or an omniscient being, gives your own creative entity more guarantees of functioning.

Foreground frames are subjective representations developed based on the interpretation of those helpful questions coming from the condensation and use of information, which could otherwise mislead the seeker of new scientific approaches when he goes too deep into outlining ideas that distort personality.

But the scientist with leadership skills is "reborn" from what he himself experiences on a level of interpretation. He always embraces what emerges by means of the YES coming from a categorical NO, even if this means running in circles after the same vain mirages that pushes him further away from important truths. Even if this means abandoning himself in the process of assimilating, processing and transmitting information. Such a Jupiter orbiting endless stories, always finds the power and reason for continuing its path.

Leadership is the teaching extracted from the charm of a spectacular artistic creation that wants to spread a storyline that you can no longer divide.

Burning In The Skies suggests that creative part of you, as powerful due to your desire of experimenting with the informational resources that create addiction, and just as vulnerable in the face of the "mirage" phenomenon (something that looks nice on the outside, but doesn't have a base, a solid substance).

By All The Rules Of Art

On July 13, 2010

In order to be able to control people, you must remove them out of the context and give them another direction.

After the unexpected death of king Hamlet, Gertrude, the queen of Denmark, married Claudius, the brother of her deceased husband. This strange fact aroused certain suspicions of young prince Hamlet – that Claudius had secretly murdered his father.

Finding one day that a ghost - resembling exactly like the dead king, his father - made its appearance on one of the terraces from the front of the palace, Hamlet decided to be himself on guard in that night, along with the soldiers, in order to have the opportunity to see it.

When it got dark, his father's ghost revealed itself to Hamlet, who testified the cowardly way in which he was killed by his own brother, Claudius (Hamlet's uncle), whom he had also been suspecting for a while. The young prince promised to the poor apparition that he will never find his peace until he revenges this crime. The thought of revenge began to continuously obsess Hamlet, who did not know in what way to fulfill his promise.

The mask of suffering. No feeling could move any longer Hamlet's firm belief that his father was killed. He has linked then to the ghost to respect the promise – so, with justice or without, he will get his revenge. But how? So that to blame someone of a crime, you must have very clear and solid evidence.

Leadership: Do the facts considered as possible reasons for revenge or possible reactions to injustice have their scope limited to the facts that come within the meaning of the notion of a "reserve fund"?

For nobody to know his deepest secret inside his soul, to remove any sort of suspicions, the prince took the strange decision to pretend stark fool. Being endowed with a great acting talent, he played with such mastery his role of a crazy person, that the king and the queen and the other courtiers were deceived. Furthermore, leaving to believe that the real reason for his madness was the love for his girlfriend, Ofelia, Hamlet slowly opened a secret door to sneak through the brush of "spines" of Claudius, who began to suspect him of finding the truth.

You're not an artist if you don't have an illusion left. During this time, a band of actors arrived at the court, with which Hamlet formerly spent pleasant times. In order to avoid any doubt that Claudius, his uncle, was really responsible for the death of his father, the young prince immediately decided that the band of actors to perform a play in front of his uncle, something similar to his father's killing. The king didn't know the trap he was being set.

Leadership: Does the ability to face painful truths give you the opportunity to capitalize on key moments for decisive changes in your professional and personal life?

The play was performed even after the scenario conceived by Hamlet regarding his father's murder. King Claudius turned pale when took place the scene of poisoning, his conscience was shaken so hard that he was no longer able to attend the rest of the play. Pretending to feel bad, or really feeling bad, he suddenly left the room, heading towards his rooms. Only at that moment, Hamlet was fully convinced that the words of his father's ghost were true.

Claudius was the murderer.

The Reserve Fund is the most hidden method of centrally distributing your resources of inner strength, know-how, and stability, which comes to the need to feel capable of facing everything, the fact that you are counting on a change of situation, allowing for a diagnosis of the profitability of your investment in your creative and ingenious side.

Leadership: Does your entering in a game of contrasts develops the virtue of becoming someone else?

In certain situations the leader, in connection with what happens around him, could be labeled, paradoxically, as an "error finder" (errors spread as truth in various interaction environments with other people) if he doesn't neglect the obligations assumed through the emotional-rational filter.

This kind of leader can show, through discovering the reports between the power and the relevance people have, cultivating a new kind of moral (that admits the rules always valid for everyone with no exception, offering a conclusion for the events and things that can be learned out of them) that beyond the apparent reality there is a reality that we tried very hard to ignore up to now.

We can start to perceive more clearly, only if the leader brings to light secret "information" through a deceitful approach similar to: "hide your intentions and your competence level."

The magnitude of your influence is given by the role you yourself play in a short film shot in a frame of reference called "the presence of the enlightened spirit" which will accompany you on the path on which you can easily and quickly achieve perfection in your area of control.

The context in which leadership works doesn't have to be transformed into a workshop of deceits, where lies become reality, but into an experiment that deserves to be redone until you obtain some clear answers. The truth of some decisions is to be able to make something less orthodox out of some good reasons. The accents of this innovation cycle, combinations, intrigues, multitudes of tendencies, training and entering in a game of contrasts, passing from one plan to the other, gives the leader the incendiary activity of the virtue to become someone else, to skillfully accomplish a new version of himself. An improved option that has the potential to make a difference between perception and reality, between error and reveled truth.

Leadership supports itself on this premises that any circumstance always has three variables: a leader, people and the relationship between them, which has as main promoter: the truth, respectively its revealing.

Leaders that wholly possess everything that has a name the rejection feeling of falsity, they're dominated by the tendency to judge the breach in regulations followed by the tendency to judge every context in detail before taking the most inspired future decisions. As if they were endowed with the power of seeing the human nature, up to identification with its multiple implications and faces.

Leadership: In what context can you prove the superiority of your instinctual psychology, to reveal hidden truths in critical situations, when reason is not enough?

Price Hamlet proved the superiority of his instinctual psychology not only by the theatrical game he made, both boldly and skillfully, but also by his trick, prompting his uncle Claudius to give himself away. The skillful interpretation of the actors stirred the souls of those of the royal court, in the minds of which cornered the idea that the presentation of facts might be true, namely that King Claudius was guilty of that crime.

When a man begins to act, he always has a reason and a purpose. Price Hamlet's reason was to revenge his father's death, and his purpose was to expose the killer. For this, he was forced to enter a game with a high stake, and to act with the utmost caution. His forces, stirred by his strong desire for revenge, focused on preparing a sophisticated trap that the killer could not resist. And the more he faked, the better he played his role of a crazy man, through his unusual behavior, the easier and faster he determined the fall into the trap of the criminal.

Hamlet played the fool according to all the rules of art. His act proved to be very well done. And by creating a current of opinion favorable to his father, he opened a new perspective on the events that took place, counteracting the effect of those issued officially.

To be able to control people and lead them in the direction you choose, you must manage to master their minds, keep them under your own spell, you must succeed in conveying them your beliefs with maximum efficiency and influence their thinking. You must remove them from the context and give them another direction, causing them to look at things from a comprehensive perspective.

Do you master the art of finding the truth by virtue of your condition as an "actor" who takes note of their performance only after they have accepted their role as a protagonist under the decisive influence of the outcome that ends their destiny?

By all the rules of art is prepared the directing of a quality show. It is said that you can find the truth only by acting. Truth is sometimes hard to find, but you can get close to it by following roundabout ways. However, when you feel that impedes are put in your way, you should use tricks and ingenious methods in order to discover both your real enemies and allies.

The The Call To The Unknown World Of Science (II)

On June 21, 2013

Learn to measure the results of your science based on the resources you have, to add depth to the creation that inspires you to highlight your authenticity.

In the book "Lights in retort", Romanian writer M. Solomon, brings to our attention the attempt to understand the very essence of endless nature, through the transformations and variability of its phenomena strongly impregnated in the light of a mature understanding of scientific discoveries. Fragment:

"Philosophical Daoism doctrine shows that the life of nature and people does not submit to the will of heaven, but to the universal law, DAO, which brings order to the chaos of things. Nothing is permanent in the world, everything is in motion and development, emergence and destruction, everything is transformed and at a certain point of development it becomes its opposite.

Fire, the primary element at the root of the world, is found in the thinking of Heraclitus' of Ephesus. The great Greek philosopher wrote that the world is the only thing of all that was not created by any god, by any man, but was, is and will be an eternal living fire, ignited by certain laws and extinguished by certain laws. And his thinking does not stop at showing the root of things. He supports their eternal and incessant movement and foreboding (Panta Rhei = everything flows) and shows the cause of these prefaces. She is in the fight of oppositions. Fighting is the source of everything that exists."

Leadership: Is it possible for you to bring your contribution to the accomplishment and completion of the Great Work, regarding the fact that everything that is offered willingly to find out the secrets is much more important than their disclosure?

The most valuable science was never in plain sight, but it served another of man's aspirations in its meanings, in its nuances, in its subtle significances and deep secrets. It was and it still is harshly condemned by profanes who can't overcome themselves, who can't overcome the limits of their contemporary knowledge, unable to see the needle in the haystack not even after countless and thorough searches.

Not for nothing did Cornelius Agrippa write: "Only for you, children of doctrine and teaching, have I written this work. Look carefully at the book, concentrate on that intention which I have imparted and slid into many places; what I allowed to remain hidden in one place, I showed in another place, so that it could be understood by your wisdom." He knew all too well that only the most diligent and most persevering people, well integrated into the fascinating backdrop of scientific research, would be able to contribute to the realization and completion of the Great Work. It is not the privilege of anyone to go so far with the faculty of mystical knowledge.

Those chosen, the few, those who have reached the maximum level of knowledge, those who have successfully managed to extract water from stone, in order for it to become sparkling and precious, they consider this science like an independent assembly language for some big and heavy parts which combine the utility and artistic functions.

And thus the saying: "To make art." To discover a language that produces only positive effects at a society level, not just at a profitability level among companies, comprising ideas, visions, and a large amount of imagination with a comprehensive safe margin for ensuring value. It's the hardest thing a leader can do.

Leadership: Are you ready to go in search of hidden secrets – perfectly correlated with an unknown road that, were you to choose it, it would lead in all directions, some that you do not even suspect?

Let's remind ourselves of Ulysses' great chant, a symbol of a humanity always thirsty for more knowledge, eager to cross unknown routes in order to know. It constitutes an impulse towards establishing or reinventing the victorious direction. Only profanes choose an already determined safe direction, highlighted by the previous attempts to reach a long imagined and depleted reality.

Leadership is the product of thinking that operates on unlimited portions of science and emotion. Leadership, in order to overcome the limits of the usual, ergo to unchain itself from the patterns of mediocrity, must push itself over the limit and build a different direction through the interventions of a new science with inexhaustible ideas and resources in producing a vital fuel for the transformation of information and knowledge towards the assertion of a unique creation.

All these simple elements, harmonious through their systemic structure for integration into the alternative of "bearing fruits", must connect with each other forming a whole that will coordinate through precise methods every tiny part of the transformation. Going in search of hidden secrets means going on an unknown road that leads you in all directions, some you don't even suspect. One of these directions is given by the vision of a creation (and of the change it produces in the world) from which there is no lack of experiencing an experience of a "fight of the opposites" or the basis of "showing the root of things".

The Great Work is the connection that is established between experiencing an experience of a "fight of the opposites" and identifying a basis of "showing the root of things".

A Calling To The Unknown World Of Science highlights the creator's desire to establish a lasting relationship between what "is" and what "should be" approaching an idea from the imaginary, which can unexpectedly become real.

The The Call To The Unknown World Of Science (I)

On June 21, 2013

Optimize your way of making art, not forgetting even for one moment about the existence of that hidden meaning which makes you feel that you exist.

I was convinced that there was a hidden meaning, untouchable and inaccessible to the inexperienced in the art of science. My unlimited capacity to rebuild beyond the ascending path of my own research, a new intellectual horizon, a beneficial space to manifest a more and more enhanced interest towards hidden things undoubtedly tended to reach incredible heights. The art of practicing the Great Science has the potential to be formulated by referring to the experience of delving into an endless search for answers, in a difficult, terrifying world, which reveals obsessions, fears and precarious attempts to change the effects della creazione di laboratorio, by working with its causes.

I was about to invent a new language. An allegory with a special significance which greeted new hypotheses to interpret reality and fiction by questioning human existence in the scenic construction of an unknown world. A language meant to finally give a voice to the things I wanted to say. The inspiration pellicles, which moved chaotically through my mind, started to compress making up the core of a new message.

The extraction of water from stone, in order for it to become sparkly and precious. It was a complex and time-consuming alchemic operation. Because permanently, new backward reactions intervened in the acceleration process of the research material, putting an even greater strain on my efforts.

The actual concepts and inertial interpretation lead, along a sole "manufacture" cycle, to countless wrong localizations and generalized errors, to erroneous identifications and uncertain visions. I got lost on the tangled paths of some strange probability and improbability laws.

Leadership: Can the particular tendency of your conscience to extend its limits reach the deepest expression of an art that, for millennia, is in search of what defines and singularizes it?

I ripped the ending out of nothingness, in order to rebuild the beginning. At that point, my words didn't correspond the known world, but to some unknown worlds. Had I discovered the ancient language which comprised the basis of alchemy? All the things I interacted with, the thoughts which deactivated reality and sent it in a state of indetermination, the senses which seemed to rip themselves from the depths of my being, which was in a state of continuous becoming – possessed a high activity, like some catalysts with exceptional properties involved in a subjective, unexpected reaction.

All those simple elements, harmonious in they systematic structure to integrate in the absolute, were connecting to each other forming a whole. Which preceded, as orderly thinking, as ideal planning, a particular existence of a conscience. And only this whole determined my way of making art, of painting clouds or rays of sun where there is no submission in front of what's real.

Probably, the hidden meaning that makes me exist as a scientist, by reference to an art that for hundreds of years continues to fascinate by the very fact that it is superior, can be formulated as follows: "Everything you gather through observation, assimilating information, experimentation and self-analysis, must take the form of a language that decodes the complex and ever dynamic forms of Nature." Therefore, the art of practicing great science has its roots in a framework of spiritual communion, where I share my sorrows and joys with the sun and the moon, with the trees and flowers, with everything around me.

What defines and singularizes the art of practicing the Great Science is man's ability to anticipate novelty which is contained by the information disclosed by inserting it into a super-individual complex of life: cosmic, biological, social or spiritual.

I seemed destined, self-convinced about my capacity to give all my knowledge and the experience I acquired in time to those who will deem these accentuated surreal and fantastic stings important, preparing the to accede to the unknown world of science.

Because, obliviously enough, I had a rare tolerance towards ignorant things. I swung in my mind the impossible, and the impossible swung my cunning mind. Beyond the majestic line of the horizon I could see the figures of some new meanings, built with an accomplished elegance. Who could keep me from falling in the area of pre-conscious thinking?

Leadership: Does the science that gives you the most complex information impose a profound discipline of consciousness: that of detaching yourself from the results of your own investigations and see them as something alien to your nature?

Are you lost on the tangling routes of a strange law? Do you swing in your mind the impossible, and the impossible swings your cunning mind? Are you about to invent a new language?

Sometimes questionable, leadership plays an extremely important part in how you are shaped, especially, in creating various connections for the future with the help of a science beyond any expectations, which only a few could encompass. And which is so uncertain in its results for the laymen. The latter are unable to direct themselves through the labyrinth of different kinds of knowledge, not knowing how to re-establish the correct order of resources in its daily usage. They are not even reminded about the existence of a secret, even though it exists.

Just as ships endure winds, so does the man centered on a correct approach of leadership must endure the supreme complex science which truly possesses the quality of science, manifesting itself in that unexplored region, that wasn't even touched by the most acerbic devourers of knowledge.

Leadership, in order to become more than a simple transmission belt between profane and the performer, must be, moreover, the equivalent of a move in a game where the "inaccessible" plays an extremely important role. But be careful, everything you integrate into your science can turn into a formidable adversary if you fail to master it as a projection of your consciousness toward the spiritual plane.

Because, without exception, only the man who expands its capacity to rebuild beyond the ascending course of his research, a new intellectual horizon, a new beneficial space to manifest his interest towards the hidden things, only he tends towards maximum peaks and only he can reach the superior limit of science.

The dominant way of thinking that mirrors leadership aims at being able to acquire a great deal of science through the meaning you give to the concepts and experiences that your inner being articulates, in terms of an "existential way of approaching an unexpected reality".

The Call To The Unknown World Of Science has at its core the openness towards a new exterior perspective for that thinking which doesn't ensure a beneficial development. If you want to understand leadership, optimize your way of making art, optimize a new science without ever forgetting about the existence of that hidden secret which makes you feel that you exist.

Use the tools of reflection which you have learned from the great masters. Gaze at the sky; place your thinking higher than the accepted normalcy. Let the whole in yourself act at a much higher resolution.

Can The Moment Become Eternity Through The Force Of A Spontaneous Gesture?

On October 31, 2024

Learn to charge every artistic gesture with the genuine power of your emotions, leaving your mark on every viewer sensitive to your message.

Passing through a less trafficked area of the Galata neighborhood, my eye is drawn to an inscription made with a black marker on one of the ends of the bridge: "Bridge of Love: Petronel and Evelina". It seemed like a kind of youth manifesto, a first step in creating a symbolic space, where the "untamed soul" spills out in black ink on the cold concrete. The more I look at this spontaneous testimony, the more clearly I recognize the thirst for immortality hidden in the apparently rebellious gesture. And even now I feel a kind of diffuse melancholy, inherent in an uncertain thought, with the support of the idea that "the passer-by is also a silent witness".

Simplistic, emotional, looking at it mindfully, the inscription sends me to an adolescent universe, where feelings are intense and unfiltered. Thus, I can imagine a dreamy teenager, strengi, robado por el ardor de un sentimiento imparable, trying to embed in the memory of the world a call for eternal recognition, a "Teaqui Oslentohutba", beyond any limitation imposed by reality. Of course. In every letter drawn on the bridge pulsates the ancestral desire to leave a mark, to transform the ephemeral into a monument of the perfect moment. It feels like a call to eternity, doesn't it?

When you look closer at the memorable inscription, warmed with the flame of the heart, you feel that vibration of pure authenticity, unaltered by the conventions of formal art. It is an act of raw courage, translated into simple and direct words, where the artist occasionally assumes the role of chronicler of his own love story, turning the bridge into an urban gallery of unspoken feelings. The vibration of the message increases as I note the similarity between the recklessness of youth and the desire to be noticed, revealing an artist for a moment in a genuine gesture of searching for meaning.

Leadership: How do you manage to turn the creative impulse into a living imprint of your emotion, so that every viewer feels the authenticity of your experience?

El camino del arte (the path of art) teaches us that sometimes the most profound expressions are born from the smallest gestures. Behind a simple graffiti we discover a window to authenticity, the same intensity found in established works. The animated young man, like a "street artist for a second", manages to focus his story in a testimony left to the world. Like Delacroix, in which every artistic gesture should carry the weight of intention, the inscription on the bridge acquires emotional weight, becoming an unpolished symbol of the desire to immortalize living. In fact, the spontaneous, weather-beaten inscription reminds me of a revealing passage from Eugène Delacroix's "Journal":

"There is no art without sacrifice. If you are not able to draw a man falling from the third floor, you will never be able to paint a great composition. Each gesture must carry within it the full weight of your artistic intent."

That's right. The power of this quote takes on a new dimension when I look at the inscription on the bridge. In its apparent simplicity, this spontaneous gesture carries the same emotional weight as a great composition - it is the pure expression of a moment of creative courage. Sacrifice in art is like an inscription of youth on the body of the composition, a first step into that symbolic space where the full weight of your intention falls. When you witness an unprecedented symbolic gesture, only then do you realize that the depth of the art becomes a kind of confession, revealing the intimate connection between the artist and his work. When you encounter a gesture of pure courage, you realize that art takes on an intimate voice, revealing the artist's need to let go of creation.

Leadership: In moments when pure authenticity meets social convention, how do you find the balance between respect for the norm and the need for genuine expression?

Sacrifice in art means abandoning conventional comfort to find new forms of expression, even in the most unexpected places. This "street artist for a second" managed to compress in a few words the entire intensity of his experience, leaving a trace as significant as any established work. It was as if the cold concrete of the bridge had become the canvas of an intuitive painter, and the marker - his improvised brush. In this urban space transformed into an improvised gallery, the border between vandalism and art blurs, giving way to a new form of authentic expression "Oomaafint Yllarahid", meaning that fusion between rebellion and pure creation, where the spontaneous gesture becomes eternal art.

Looking back at this urban inscription, I realize that it represents more than an act of rebellion - it is a lesson about the courage to turn the moment into eternity through the force of an authentic gesture. It embodies the lesson of turning the moment into a testament to the free spirit. I think it was a unique moment when the creative impulse manifested itself without constraint, giving rise to a testimony of the courage to be vulnerable before the world. Why not? Perhaps it is precisely in this vulnerability that the strength of the message lies, in assuming the risk of being judged for the sincerity of expression.

In the power of sincerity, each authentic action can unite the ephemeral with the eternal, encouraging us to find inspiration in the simple desire to leave a mark. And if artistic spontaneity becomes a form of intimate confession, transforming simple gestures into profound expressions of the unrestrained creative spirit, then I can only remember what I saw, keeping the idea that: "Spontaneous creation becomes a living testimony of the moment where inner courage overcomes fear of judgment and social conventions."

Leadership manifests itself through the ability to recognize and value the authenticity of human expression in all its forms, transforming spontaneous gestures into catalysts for positive cultural change.

Can the moment become eternity through the force of a spontaneous gesture? Through the courage to express our inner truth, even the simplest gesture can become a bridge between the ephemeral and the eternal. It is the lesson this young "urban artist" offers us - that in each of us there is the potential to turn a moment of inspiration into a lasting testimony of the untamed human spirit.

Captive Between Duty And God

On February 12, 2018

Test the measure of your faith, imposing upon your existence that trajectory towards a new way of manifesting your potential.

Seeing the abbot, Ville fort held his hand to his forehead. The past came to mind, as one of the waves whose wrath raises more foam than normal ones.

- You, sir, here? Ville fort asked. I see that you only show up to accompany Death.

- I came here to tell you that you've paid your debt sufficiently and that, from now on, I shall ask God to be pleased, as myself, with this vengeance.

- God ! Ville fort said, pulling back in fear. This voice is not of the abbot Busoni !

The abbot pulled off his false wig, shook his head, and his long black hair, no longer tied up, fell to his shoulders, framing his manly face.

- Oh, no ! It is the face of the Count of Monte-Cristo ! Ville fort cried, his eyes moving wildly.

Leadership: Did your life become a form of manifestation of a kind of power reflected in a picture that matters more than reality?

- You haven't guessed it, Mr. Attorney General. Look better and farther.

- That voice ! That voice ! Where did I hear it first? Are not you Busoni? Are you not Monte Cristo? God, you are that hidden, unshakable, killing enemy ! Did I do you any harm in Marseilles? Unfortunate me ! What did I do to you? Cried Ville fort, whose mind floated to the limit where judgment and madness overlapped, in the mist that was neither dream nor awakening. What did I do to you? Say it ! Speak !

- You have condemned me to a slow and terrible death, you killed my father, you kidnapped my love along with my freedom and luck !

- Who are you? Who are you? God !

- I am the specter of a wretch you buried in the cells of the D'lf castle. Upon this specter's cheeks, finally risen from his grave, God had placed a mask and made him Count of Monte Cristo, adorning him with jewels and gold so that only on this day you may recognize him ! I am a shelter of moral ! I am that Edmond Dantes, whose youth was shattered by the selfishness, indifference, and cunning of your being, the one who only God Himself could offer the incommensurable ability of using the highest knowledge as a tool of His most severe judgment in order to carry out quietly, hidden, the promise of revenge for those who are good.

Leadership: Do you consider the variant of negating the attachment to your previous version, or do you accept the image that arises from the enigmatic association of two incompatible realities?

At a spiritual level, we are responsible for the reality we perceive on the background of states of consciousness in which manifest the powers of a thinking centered on research of the past and valuing it in new horizons of interpreting and understanding the universal creation called: God.

In terms of our existence in the world, the strange game of associations between the divine and the empirical allows us to access a reality we prefer to hide from, for it seems to us impossibly harsh even on the silver screen, in various forms of the desire to go beyond the boundaries of ordinary consciousness.

This secondary reality is called: Interdiction. We are forbidden to accept another nuance of the truths in which we believe, inherent in a self-image that derives only from the fact that the elements of life in relationship, even taken separately, reach a common denominator, an equivalent of the cause and effect transposed in the acceptance of a moralizing conception of a miraculous intervention.

Your victory over destiny is in line with the image you have formed about God and the beliefs you have regarding the reality of this image after you go through various trials.

Therefore, we are dealing with two realities: that of the man who believes in the hazard and the great happening, along with the one of the man who believes only in what is repeatable and demonstrable through experimentation. They are incompatible with the fact that the first reality depends on the variation of an unknown parameter that is generally in a reverse relation with the intensity of personal beliefs. And the other depends on certain visible consequences that concern the basis for accepting any limitations.

The image resulting from the combination of these two realities represents the set of reflections of material or immaterial nature, with rational or emotional content, of phenomena that you can experience, but cannot fully control.

And the studying of this image is a stage of exploiting a cause that, even if you never get to fully understand, at least gives you an idea vis-à-vis how ready you are to face a certainty you can always doubt.

The negation of your attachment to your previous version, when you had not yet taken into account the intervention of a mysterious force that forced your obedience and compulsion in the midst of events that have led you to a particular situation, is an operation of challenging your own limits, usually followed by an increase in faith.

Faith is a reflection of your nature under the action of reaction forces directed towards all events and phenomena that can strengthen your protagonist position of a new reality.

Captive Between Duty And God is the man who has no choice when faced with life rather than to submit to a higher plan, determined before he fulfills the role of an implacable judge.

Carly's Song

On July 02, 2017

The only way to get to that pleasure of fulfillment that only truly important achievements can offer is by freeing yourself from the limits that keep you prisoner of your own anxiety.

I slalomed between states, between momentary remorse thrown to me by the real in the form of loud and accelerated heartbeats, rhythm disturbances, palpitations, like the uncontrolled listening to unselected music, interpreted as a footnote in an early psychological experiment.

Full of questions and uncertainties, I was under the pressure of a mysterious and complex phenomenon, thrown into an abyss that seemed to have removed the coordinates of a creation that opened the paths of art between the idea of voyeurism associated with the passion for reading, very dark but innocent, shaken by the load of sensual pleasures.

The risk that the subtle charm of this type of auto-fiction assumed, wary of the hue of a deep silence, accusing, but perverse and exciting, which often anaesthetizes the shame of a sin in the immense night was not enough.

I also had to have the tools to be able to handle the universe proposed to me as a spell I did not understand, but one which I accepted as one of the great forms of life and personal transformation. Because it meant a total and mysterious adventure, of which only an artist could extract the essence of an archetypal idea, of a being separate from others.

Leadership: Do you consider that state of mind contrary to a stable one, by expressly defining the notion of "circumstance" on which the denial of values that recommend you as an artist is based?

Rarely can one speak of a stylistic novel inspired by the reconciliation of private and public antagonisms, the violation of intimacy, the secret code of perversity, and the echo of the happy unconscious in the modernist paradigm as a successful one. Especially if he does not take a special approach between two different worlds.

It was enough for me to look in the mirror to find myself in an artistic work based on the invention of a mind under Faustian inspiration by conceiving a rhythm of polarity between love and its contradiction, between unifying passion and multiple wishes, between the mystic and the rational, between Cervantes and Nabokov, among which there was a continuum of possibilities. Carly don't be sad, Life is crazy, Life is mad, Don't be afraid.

Being totally committed to the sensuality of word-chaining, without which the self-explanatory genre cannot be fully understood, I was testing myself in an incognito experiment of the obscene thought born of the thirst of sighs for an eternal happiness. A final agreement of teenage fantasies and dreams. To highlight the strange rules of my theory about the role of the miraculous in the ephemeral next to me and charging it beyond the limits of unilateralism.

In my words howled not just the flavor of obscenity well placed in a passionate context combined with an overwhelming fright, but also the unknown of the new victim hypostasis that measured my ability to follow blindly something as ephemeral as the feeling of euphoria. Even God couldn't have been able to unravel the infinite moment of the eroticism that stirred in my soul.

Leadership: Can you put yourself in a context of the possibility of accepting yourself fully, without feeling your own condition under the sign of a guilty alterity?

And because of this ephemeral charm, I felt traced from all angles of a positive, negative, complex, simple situation, seen behind a moving mirror, reflecting only premonitions, on the night of a thrilling game demanding a prelude to the exiting of human time and a seduction of a correspondent in the plane of the senses, amid a particular temperature.

A curiosity changed into an aesthetic of revelation. For I felt myself seized in a projection of the artistic imagination, above what I previously thought was a change in a corner of the soul, in which a magical eye looked at me continually from all possible directions. Eyes Wide Shut in the idea of voyeurism of a self-portrait that demands to be read in relation to the original.

Always a portrait created by an unexpected challenge and a perverse desire, untold but hidden-at midnight, attributed to a crazy access just to get past that feeling of vulnerability felt unconsciously, could very well be expressed through a leap in the unknown of a hypothetical surreal.

The authenticity that embraces personal development, and then leadership, is determined by the significance that you attach to your values in a test of limits and revolt that stand in the way of self-realization.

Are the values you believe in given by the challenges that urge you to create, the ability to be aware of your feelings, feelings, and to express them in relation to the outside?

Creating a new artistic expression is one of my great virtues. The grandmother of the overflowing obscenity and the humiliation of a sin that no repentance can untie can fall together under the red moon of a desperation that attempts to base its hidden motifs in accordance with the work of the isolated artist who feels his own condition under the sign of a guilty alterity.

Carly don't be sad. That's your destiny. The only chance. Take it, take it in your hands. Only now do I notice how splendidly the intimate linen of literature is blended with the perverse tension of the moment of inspiration. I feel that someone touches me, grabs my hips in an intense emotional load, excites me and consumes me. Something almost unrealistic transcends those selfish experiences and perhaps a little materialistic from ages past.

The only way to get to that pleasure of fulfillment that only the truly important achievements can offer is to free yourself from the limits that keep you prisoner of your own anxiety (or marginality). The best writers and artists have understood this very well.

The great accomplishment of a man who experiences forms of artistic approach, whether it is a particular imaginative approach to visual work, or a certain optional evolution of poetic language, is to gain a new understanding of himself and the mission of an artist in the midst of the world.

Carly's Song is a confession of the sin suffered by the best artists, a sign that they also have their sensitivities, which can be formulated as follows: "If you are open to new experiences of life and new creative possibilities, you have no limits in releasing your hidden desires."

Carriers Of Information

On October 31, 2015

Cultivate your own scientific culture based on the model of other visionaries, acting strictly in the direction of the tendency of remodeling yourself.

The entire culture of the world, according to film historian Jay Leyda, was at stake for each new problem. And, it is with no exaggeration here: for one of the scenes, the problem of composition becomes that of showing the viewers how playwright Ivan Turgenev saw things around him. For this, great director Eisenstein peels the writer's style, seeks his sources, his mechanism of creation, and transposes within the cipher of plastic expression, his vision.

*In one sequence, the peasants who wait and listen take on the attitudes and even the violent illumination of the apostles who listen and wait, from the paintings of late Spanish peoples. A splendid embroidery brings with itself the composition of Vermeer. Today, there are passages in the film in which an encyclopedic culture was so fully merged with cinema, that it can only remind you of Eisenstein. **

Leadership: Do you keep benchmarks for comparison with other vectors of scientific discoveries, judging your own work through your own experiences of dealing with its composition?

It is a fairly difficult path to try and create a sphere of influence within the interaction with other artists, well-knit around the tendencies of accepting new approaches in supporting personal creation. It is difficult to place an entire culture of the world in the game of reconfiguring personal vision. But always a genuine consumer of science follows his own path of development a creative style, customizing himself by merging with other representatives of the same kind.

From the merger of two ideas emerges a third one. And an encyclopedic culture so fully merged with creation, which you reach through the attempt of substantiating your theoretical conceptions on the basis of information obtained from the sum of experiences gained by others, can be manifested as a chain reaction the produces long term effects. It will lead to the triggering of an explosion of directions in the field.

Four comparison vectors are needed to configure a unitary creative style: the word, the image, the interpretation of the final result and the way of transmitting the truth that underpins the entire conceptual construction of a dominant experience. And the benchmarks of comparison with these vectors are: the traits by which the character is defined, the way his story expresses suffering or joy, the way the scenes are placed on as living a background as possible.

The most important directors have accumulated the ability to create a story before experiencing a work of art and to appreciate an artistic interpretation before being inspired by a particular theme or situation.

You can keep some benchmarks of comparison with other carriers of information, eventually creating your own level of appreciating yourself, of considering yourself as a "task to be done", by exercising new mans of expression and new formulas of creation. But this may require to judge your own work through your own experiences of dealing with its composition, which represents a deviation from the norms of participatory leadership – "think in the mindset of others" – when it comes to providing content.

The experiences of approaching the composition of a work, under the hazard of the random agglomeration of details, relate to the place the character occupies in a certain time and space, causing him to go through a series of adventures related to real events, from an objective necessity to create the premises of an easy course of an extensive biography. The leader is also a carrier of information fueled from a foreign source that needs to be labeled as being "merging", unlike others that are not at the height of his calling.

The calling to bind one's self to the terminals of a source of scientific, correct, synthesized, orderly information, is akin to a receiver that extracts the useful signals from the received radio waves, transforming them into a form that requires the use of the information found therein.

The scientific culture shown by a director depends on the way the elements of the image are arranged in a painting, so that they balance each other in the form of a world of characters meant to survive the events of "then" and "of now".

Carriers Of Information are all those individuals, brilliant through their trait of giving life to new trends in the field, that act in the direction of development and affirmation of a special scientific composition, stemming both from their activity of creation and the experiences of others.

Catch My Eye With A Part Of The Sky’s Color

On May 23, 2022

Try to immortalize the image in which you are reflected, highlighting the relationship between what you are used to seeing as "inside" and what you are used to seeing as "outside".

Again, my gaze rested on the color marking the handicapped parking area. In the small, freshly painted pedestrian rectangle, the rich hue (sky blue) seems detached from the background of Hubert Robert's "Bathing Pool" painting, where a single point is united with the whole. A practiced look, setting apart and distinguishing a light tone from another dark one, correlates this vivid, vibrant and intense color with the spontaneous character of the painting of great abstract art and, enveloping it with its creative gaze, projects itself into a present that no longer believes in the future.

To the sky-blue color can be added the artist's reaction to reality, his personal response to this reality springing from the inside to the world, more palpable than the creative experience, no less real than an emotional life story. However, the navy blue color transposes me into a strange world that amazes at first sight by combining the fantastic with an incredible life story, but at the same time it opens my mind and soul to a new way of making art, in the outside world, or in the stylized appearances of nature, building a new form of aesthetic language starting from within me.

Here, in this rectangle where the sky-blue color mixes a little with that of the sky, the painter sits down naturally. Facing the east, brush in hand and a lot of serenity in the soul. He doesn't have the place he once knew, this is clearly visible, because he walked for some time in search of the right subject, looking far and wide, investigating every nook and cranny of nature. The color is already there, it is light and pleasing to the eye, very similar to topaz (the stone of perfection). But in order for the mysterious work of creation to begin, feeling that it has become clear in his soul what he has to do, he must download his inspiration through his hand and, through his soul, all the joy.

Leadership: Can you add a comparison to a simultaneously "introspective and visual" experience born from the careful observation of an image that is reflected in a finite space included in the infinite?

Just as the painter must appeal to the imagination rather than material representation in order to produce a new color, a new aesthetic, a simultaneously introspective experience, in the same way the visual perception of the spatial-temporal context in which the tonalities are used must be framed in a calm and neutral version of watercolor, in which the drawing, a preliminary stage of the composition, gives a mirror effect.

Decisive here is the man-nature dualism. Being able to make adjustments of clarity until the last moment, this extra comparison will be paid dearly through an insufficient sense of self, if man fails to transpose himself into a vision of nature, into a philosophy of the spirit.

In any case, the painter in me leaves the imprint of his state of mind in the works he creates. And in this moment of inspiration everything becomes sky-blue, because I seem to be framed in a "mirror" area of the sky, devoid of bright stars, operating like an illusionist, that is, putting in a relationship of mirroring and mutual authorization two types of forces: a force of the soul that describes things differently than they are, and a force of the image, "a beyond" that is indescribable in words.

My soul in particular resonates more than anything with sky blue. This color is like a universal fragment of the creation of the infinite in a finite undamaged by the weather, to the extent that it acquires a form, an always another form, another drawing, another image, in a real that seems unreal as soon as the twilight start painting the sky.

Leadership: Can you singularize your creation in the form of a visual representation, by carefully observing an image that fits all the states of mind you have?

I judged well the sky-blue color, that it carries a certain meaning in itself. And, in order to absolutely delight and charm a soul receptive to its beauty, it needs the natural emotions that arise from the rigor and simplicity of the form it wears. At the sight of this color I feel that I am in an inexplicable connection with the reflex of the divine, of the supersensible, I feel that I am among the stars, that I am caught in a dream that takes me out of the monotony of life, giving rise to intense experiences and greater expectations.

Extremely significant in this sense is the image seen by the viewer in an image with a maximum level of depth and color performance. Good remark of Viktor Lazarev, opposite the great painter Rembrandt:

"Rembrandt's task lies precisely in overcoming this timeless framework of the portrait in painting, in making it dynamic, in forcing it to live in time. He set himself the goal of embodying in a single portrait an immense amount of consecutive moments, so that this portrait can give an exhaustive biography of the one depicted. And that is why the man is received in his late portraits not statically, but in a continuous becoming. The impression is thus created that on the image seen by the viewer, a series of previous and consecutive images is stratified, which restores the continuity of the psychic torrent."

Undoubtedly, the one who is constantly looking for particular views of colors, so that he can paint the ideal portrait with a strongly outlined and very consistent sense of self, must eternalize himself and immerse himself in a universe of nature where the main artistic collaborator – the purest feeling – has the gift of evoking an impressive moment for the viewer, the culminating moment of what could be called a "simultaneously introspective experience".

The orientation of leadership towards art includes the introspective experience you get when you manage to compare an image that invites you to action – with an image that accurately reproduces your experiences, thoughts, feelings.

Catch My Eye With A Part Of The Sky's Color if you want to better understand my artistic side which, in a way, I have always kept hidden. I began to see the world differently: full of color, full of emotions, with different eyes, to understand that a new path can be carved among others, of self-discovery and self-giving. After all, art makes you more sensitive, no matter how capricious you are.

Character Favors Success

On July 07, 2009

Constantly maintain your noble character by appealing to those ideals, values, and beliefs that give you stability in your relationships with other people.

Have you heard of the famous writer Russell H. Conwell? Prior to becoming a writer, he was a highly skilled recruiting officer and later became the captain of his own campaign. He took part in many battles and was promoted to the rank of lieutenant-colonel before a life-changing event. Seriously wounded during a Confederate attack in the Kenesaw Mountains, Conwell could not stop his order to make a brave attempt to save him. Unfortunately, trying to save his commander's life, the young man lost his life. But before he died, he told Conwell about the Christian faith. This incident had such a profound effect on Conwell that he became a Christian.

Eventually, he became a renowned lecturer, covering a wide variety of subjects, and was also the author of 16 books. He believed in the infinite possibilities of mankind, his life being an illustration of this belief. His most famous lecture, "Hectares of Diamonds", was held more than 6,000 times during his lifetime and remains evidence of his faith in the unlimited potential of man.

Leadership: Can your ability to cope with all the challenges of destiny represent the adaptive model of self-concept in the coordinates of a vision that is based on following the meaning of life?

People often get the first (wrong) impression about other people, about their beliefs and values, putting their true beliefs and their whole being in the background. That was also the case of Russel H. Conwell, whose firm but still limited convictions could be changed, albeit belatedly, to 180 degrees, only after the death of the young man who tried to save his life.

I ask you, future leader, are you effective in areas where development is needed? Or do you wander like a drunken man, without a sense of direction, unknowingly through life, through the wilderness of your own world of thoughts, desires, feelings, and realities?

This is a tough question that needs to be answered honestly. If the answer is yes, then there is a need for a change, a clarification of thinking, a slow (but firm) shaking of your whole philosophy, renovating those areas of your leadership, coupled with your own character. These areas harden and immobilize your effective concern in interpersonal relationships, or they can diminish your tolerance for any kind of negative influences.

Leadership is like cable television, owning its own content. What you endow with your leadership depends on your inner structure, and what you generate, what you provide, what reaches the people who follow you are those "applications" that allow your analysis, that integrate everything that defines you as a person, as a friend, as a professional. With these applications (values, needs, aspirations) they can connect to you more easily. And this allows you to better understand where you are, what you need and what you can do for them.

Leadership: Can you make a connection between that explosion of time that changed the path of a life, and the coordinates of events that involve violations of the requirements of the self to have free will in decisions?

Are people on the same side of the barricade as you? Just as any change in blood volume is noticed by receptors that are sensitive to changes in blood pressure, so any change in your own functioning structure is noticed by most people, whose conceptions and ideas about leadership are well regulated by their system, causes them to be on the same side of the barricade with you. Or, on the contrary, can turn them against you.

Understanding the different points of view of other people, as Conwell accelerated his transformation by taking from the philosophy and conceptions of an ordinary man, a dying man, skillfully approaching a new vision of life and the direction to follow, is one of the keys to leadership.

To lean on those ideals, philosophies, points of view and ways of approaching change, with the consent of those around you, as researchers lean on documents to prepare them correctly and completely, and to plaster your own leadership model with a mortar resistant to any kind of moral and emotional wear and tear, that should be your biggest concern.

Endowing your being with those energies, with those virtues that make possible your integration into the "game" desired by other people, your inclusion in the type of personality that contributes to their development, this strengthens your role as a safe guide and defines you as a person compatible with the type of leader they want, through the way they think and act.

Leadership: Can your character describe a means of experiencing the higher frequencies and dimensions of life in an attempt to change the pattern of consciousness formation?

Leadership is like a ladder: the wider it is, the more it is accepted by a larger number of supporters who have embraced the same concepts and ideals. And the narrower it is, the less it will survive, and it will dissipate into oblivion.

Everyday facts, if you research them carefully, give you new, unsuspected aspects that can have a special impact on your own philosophy and can strengthen your leadership. An analytical spirit, next to which (apparently banal) events do not pass without thorough research, constantly strengthens its leadership and constantly develops its power of influence over others.

It is inherent that the leadership you practice should be oriented (and this is an important optimization factor) towards quality, towards managing and cementing a long-term relationship with people, towards developing and expanding its dimension. This can only be easily done if you cover all those "holes" of inefficiency or superficiality that you, or your subordinates, have made – to see, to supervise, to control all existing forms of regression, or possible risk.

Human character is closely linked to the prolonged maintenance of a proper self-image that can effectively serve the purposes you have set for yourself, under the rule of constraint: all that fulfills you is the fruit of what has taken root in your heart.

Character Favors Success only when your beliefs and attitude in various situations do not conflict with the circumstances that determine what is happening to you. Or as someone pointed out on the internet, character is the totality of the essential and stable qualities that are reflected in the values that you promote and in your attitude towards yourself, others and different aspects of life.

Circle Of Deaf Hearts

On August 11, 2011

It doesn't matter what you show off in front of others, but what you sow in their hearts.

Do you remember the movie "Meet Joe Black (1998)"? At one point, Bill Parrish, founder and president of Parrish Communications Corporation, has addressed to the 14 members of the Steering Committee that gathered in the boardroom, eager to receive the Bill's confirmation on John Bontecou's generous offer to acquire the company.

- I did enjoy -- or rather I was interested in meeting John, yesterday. And -- impressive, I suppose. But... it did get me to thinking. See, I started in this business because this is what I wanted to do. I knew I wasn't going to write the great American novel, but I also knew there was more to life than buying something for a dollar and selling it for two. I'd hoped to create something, something which could be held to the highest standards. And what I realized was I wanted to give the news to the world, and I wanted to give it unvarnished.

Bill captured the attention of those in the room, so they all listened to him not only with their mind, but also with their heart. However, his thoughts were very different from those of the board members. They, guessing that Bill will not accept Bontecou's proposal does not seem to fully agree with him.

Leadership: Does the personalized income of the oratorical composition that people around you take into account increases or decreases under the pressure of the context characterized by the cost of brilliance with which you have affirmed the original note of your personality?

Here's an important thing to note. As usually, to tell people about your own ideals is like shouting the words in an empty well. There, at least, echo answers you back. Generally, no one is impressed by what you say if your interests do not correspond to theirs.

In the case of Bill, things were quite different. Finally, almost all members of the Steering Committee welcomed the decision, and have accepted it because he could induce that state of alert based on sound reason and some personal values that mattered greatly for them. Then, they all perfectly understood what it characterizes Bill.

What is part in a somewhat self-justifying force or gratitude towards the best in you is not the vision that links the "salvation" of the world with any random disaster, but rather the subtle taste of spiritual values stimulated by the conception of the personal role in the evolution of a formula of Christian origin: try to generate the feeling you expect to have after you meet your objectives !

But the largest contribution towards the perception of yourself in the relationship with the surrounding world, subjected to certain realities and principles that allow you to step forward on a higher step of wisdom, is maybe that viewing participant in the erasing of borders between presence and conscience.

Presence is what recommends you as a specialist, as a part of a process of constant improvement of performances. And consciousness is what recommends you as a judge of facts on which are based unshakable beliefs resulting in the undertaking of any differentiation of value, gaining catalyzing valences of exteriorization tendencies through the revealing of deep things about you.

To inform people of what is happening before it happens is a promise of success as of yet not fully revealed, meaning, without the help of a revelation of great affective and spiritual load.

Before your values are accepted, like knowing and valorizing the past, you have to project within the conscience of men the conditions and lessons of professional success, the trend of exceptional fulfillments, through the desire of affirmation of the depth that asks you to be super-honest in what you express to others.

People will not encourage you if you will not dress always that spotless robe of your personality that is distinguished by its unique qualities, extraordinary, that they admire in you.

It doesn't matter what you show off in front of others, it doesn't matter what lofty ideals you have. It only matters what you sow in their hearts. The proof of your good and strong character is in your ability to resonate with others, of relating to their expectations, to match the model of leadership that they really want. It is not enough to shake to the ground all the doubts and „why's", you must receive and their approval concerning your transformation into the person that they deem suitable to their ideals.

Capturing people's attention starts with how you perceive yourself in terms of how you relate to the experiences of the past – that impulse towards the transformation of the attitude to life or to the expansion of consciousness of a spiritual duty.

Circle Of Deaf Hearts symbolizes the consequence of an unconvincing approach of the leader that has not tried, or could not reach the souls and feelings of people. It symbolizes that lack of consensus, or conformability of feelings underlying on rationality, without which sometimes you have no chance of winning.

From the „circle of deaf hearts" enter all those people who do not believe in you, and do not encourage you in your decisions because they do not know you well enough. To convince people to encourage you in the decisions you make, you must first resonate with what they feel.

Just as the "sleep of reason gives birth to monsters"(Francisco de Goya), so the pure rationality cannot exist without feelings.

Strive to reach the depths of the souls that you lead. It's not enough to exhibit a perspective that corresponds with your personal vision and interests, but first it is needed to plant in their soul the faith that you lead them for their special benefit.

Claudius Petit, Co-Author Of The Artistic Work

On August 08, 2008

The reward you receive for your work is the sacrifice you pay on the altar of evolution in exchange for a lasting legacy.

" And then, what is the importance of man taken alone? - Van Gogh asked himself . In the future - he wrote to his brother Theo - there will be an art that will have to be so beautiful oh , so young , that even if we were to sacrifice her , our own youth , she will give us in return a peace full of Serenity . Even if I do not succeed in asserting myself , I am inclined to believe that what I have striven to achieve will be carried forward. Perhaps not immediately, but it is important to I'm not the only one who believes in this truth . "

What truth was Van Gogh thinking about? What truth should unite people, what truth should mobilize them, making them forget their biological finitude, to exist in a fundamental sense? A truth that is enough to be coveted, ardently, in order to be achieved. A truth that acts divinely, as the driving force of life. This truth accepts innumerable names, reducible perhaps in the end, to only one: the power of man to transform the crutch into the wing. This truth finds, from time to time, devoted servants.

"Îl faut achever l'eglise Saint-Pierre de Firminy-Vert" -- here is the announcement we can find in the French press lately. Four million francs are still needed to complete Le Corbusier's last work. The appeal is launched, with great vigor, by Claudius Petit, former minister of reconstruction and urbanism, mayor of Firminy-Vert.

Leadership: Have you thought about what it would be like to step into the arena, not as a mere spectator, but as an active player, where the rules are not yours, but divinity's?

An admirer and supporter of Le Corbusier, Claudius Petit also linked his name to other works of the great architect: the Marseille Housing Unit, which, as minister, he inaugurated triumphantly in 1952, the Youth House and LE CORBUSIER: The Residential Unit of Marseilles, solemnly inaugurated by the Ministry of Reconstruction, Claudius Petit of Culture and the Residential Unit of Firminy Vert, which he encouraged and realized as mayor of the city.

Claudius Petit is a politician, but a politician who, encouraging art, fighting for it, becomes, in a certain way, a co-author of the artistic deed. He does not content himself with controlling the game from the outside, but goes down into the arena, playing the game. We appreciate in Claudius Petit not the referee, but the player, not the one who is played by his own role, but the one who plays his game. Which game? - one may ask. The game of creation, the only serious game, the game whose price is the human condition, the game in which money is not an end but a means, the game whose rules are not set by man but by God, the game which, played to the end, rewards you with cosmic dream dust. Claudius Petit understood this game, encouraged it and played it himself.

Leadership: Do you think you could break free from the label of "Mr. NO" by becoming an active participant in the art world, putting into play not only works, but also a part of your essence?

Claudius Petit is not that blase official, continuously placed, like a fateful dam, against the work, that mediocre character who believes that man is made to crawl, that "alienated person of feeling" that Leon-Paul Fargue spoke of, in front of whom if <>, that gentleman "NO" whom, unfortunately, Le Corbusier met so often. Claudius Petit is a player, that is, a serious man. "Il n'y a que ceux qui jouent qui soient des types serieux" said Le Corbusier, but, he continues, a paradoxical but profound statement: "Les alpinistes, les rugbymen et les joueurs de cartes, et les joueurs de roulette sont des fumistes , car ils ne jouent pas..."

Life continuously sends players into the arena. However, there are few who agree to fight. Bravely, loyally, putting their most precious asset at stake: the human condition, in all its complexity. A painter puts a painting in the arena. A sculptor, a sculpture. An architect, a building. They are their fighting tools. But while the former can usually do it alone, the architect, alone, cannot accomplish his work. He needs, beyond understanding and trust, help.

Leadership: Can you contribute to the creation of a collective work in which everyone, realizing or watching, sees their aspirations sublimely crowned, thus overcoming their individual limits?

Architecture is a collective work. In it, those who, in common terms are called: the designer, the builder and the beneficiary, meet. But these terms are simplistic, because in the end, the beneficiary of the work is not only the one who uses it, but also the one who, realizing it or looking at it, finds for a moment his aspirations sublimely crowned.

There was a time when man was simultaneously the designer, builder and beneficiary of his own work. It was, perhaps, a happy era. But today things are completely different. Most of the time the three factors are completely different, their interests are different and the only thing that unites them is the employment contract, which establishes the obligations and rights of each of the parties. So today, insignificant, worthless constructions are born in an exaggeratedly large number. But if the three factors understand that their interest is common, that the work that demands them can represent an instrument for saving the human condition, a unique instrument for all of them, that their deepest aspirations are the same, that their ultimate goal is the same and namely the establishment of poetry, here and now, on earth, then man, freed from the superficial constraint of the labor contract, will be able to acquire his original purity. Then, his gesture, his deed, will be able to acquire the essential nobility without which human dignity cannot be conceived.

Leadership: In your moments of introspection, do you recognize how your aspirations are crowned sublimely through the prism of the work done and the contribution of others to its edification?

The architect throws the seed, but it must germinate and bear fruit, and this is only possible under certain conditions, which, often, only political people can ensure, i.e. "les agents agites d'une societe" as he said Le Corbusier. Architecture must be elevated. It must be confronted with space, with time, with light, with people. It must be lived, not only drawn. She lives in dimensions. It is signed by one, but lived by all. Maybe that's why the architecture represents the life of the fortress so well.

Claudius Petit may be compared to that honest and affectionate farmer who bends devoutly over the seed that must become fruit. You have to, because a construction of great value is a great celebration. Nothing can excuse the absence of the holiday. The poorest life has its holidays. But the construction of value represents the essence, the symbol, the aspiration, the identity of life. This holiday is worth all the sacrifices.

We welcome Claudius Petit's gesture and we wait with him for the Saint-Pierre church to gather, like the one at Ronchamp, pilgrims who have come to pay homage to a new manifestation of spiritual powers. In this end of the century and millennium we need that robust optimism that characterized Le Corbusier. Through Claudius Petit, the great architect, defying the miserable conscientiousness of time, continues to send us encouragement . "Il faut achiever l'eglise Saint-Pierre de Firminy-Vert".

Leadership stands under the sign of a provision: "Even if I fail to assert myself, I am still inclined to believe that what I have endeavored to achieve will be carried forward."

Claudius Petit, co-author of the artistic work, is the beneficiary of the work, becoming aware of his role in maintaining and promoting the essential human nobility. He left us as a spiritual legacy the following provision: " Human dignity can be strengthened through works that reflect your deepest aspirations , even in the absence of an explicit employment contract ."

Clear Vision Obeys Only The Eyes That Know How To See

On November 17, 2022

In vain do you have eyes to see, if your vision does not fall within the field of image interpretation that urges you (as a viewer) to extend your visual perception outside the "painting".

I sit on a chair in the airport and wait. It is just a banal, monotonous, bordered seat, among other free seats that nevertheless have a specific purpose: to provide comfort to all the passengers who are about to board the plane. Indeed, it was already an abandoned chair when I saw it, radiating a kind of bitter sadness and loneliness, the eyes of passers-by perceiving it as an impersonal space, a borderline thing, devoid of historicity.

Without ideas, impassive, undisturbed by anything, the chair does not seem at all affected by the perceptions of foreign eyes in the situation of "no reaction" in which it finds itself. He simply waits for events to unfold at their own pace.

Am I missing something? Because this chair, a perfect fusion of art and science, my poor airport friend, isn't so naive as to think I can manipulate time in his favor to keep the seat warm for the next arrival. He feels that I must leave in just a few minutes, and then... then he will be cold, uncaring, apathetic again. Wherever I go, I will remember this chair – this is so that there are no interpretations for the simple situation in which I find myself, because whatever option I choose, I am found in order by reference to a single unit of measurement: the need to feel big in the face of small things.

They all went around this chair, passed by it without giving it due attention, being disinterested in the theme of vision, unconcerned with rendering the visible, the tangible and the defined at the level of experience or emotion, therefore not being able to see it as an artist does: through a kaleidoscope of colors, thoughts, emotions, themes or new possibilities of expression. Is it true that no one's seen this chair? Was anyone aware of its presence? And if any passer-by saw it, besides me, how could they have immortalized it in an image accessible only through the soul?

Leadership: Does the thing you've chosen to match your personality help you use your sight as a guarantee that your soul can interact with a mirror image?

The things no one sees are the things in plain sight, right around you. Alas, and there are so many things in one room – most of them overlooked, as many as there are empty seats in this airport right now. But, it is in vain that you have eyes to see if you do not know how to see things with an artist's eye, and also in vain if your vision does not fall within the field of interpretation of the image that urges you (as a viewer) to extend your visual perception outside "the painting".

And I sat in this lonely chair, as a painter sits in front of his easel, with his back straight, his eyes turned away from the light source, and I practiced my gaze from assembling the qualities of this authentic vintage object, such as: stability, comfort, flexibility and functionality.

Do you agree with me? I would say that the artist's vision requires that quality of the eyes to focus on close objects as if they were some "shadow" characters that work perfectly only in a rare series of books, by reference to an Alphisinous Escheronaria, an absolute hidden in an "invisible reality". This, therefore, is what the chair really thinks of me, pointing out that I have confessed nothing to it of my suspicions of its lordship:

Leadership: Does your location allow you to establish the particular meanings of a still background image beyond what the normal gaze accepts as a suggestion for projecting a realistic artistic image?

Not even if you are a laureate in mathematics, not even if you have three doctorates in the philosophy of science, not even if you benefit from the title of doctor, your sight would still not have been interested in the fascination of this object which, at a moment like this, seemed to want to win the battle against time. As if it were locked in a symbolic world, in an approach to artistic reality, in an impersonal space, where all that matters is obtaining a static image (an optical image or a graphic image) that needs a panorama to produce an idea, an aesthetic phenomenon, an effect greater than the sum of the effects, in a fixed frame.

Obviously, the chair carries the meanings of an overwhelming feeling stemming from feeling the presence of a painter who values that thing capable of giving it a unique, authentic image. Here, the artistic space expands with the help of a "conceptual" look towards a dilated image of the real, spilling unhindered as in a cubist painting towards the remarkable and fresh perspectives of things that I would otherwise have considered uninteresting. I still feel that I am under the impression of a new universe that is constantly expanding using the patterns of a structural association between the separate fragments of phenomena, subtle nuances, reflections, shadows, undefined emotions, all under the cover of a subjective exploration of places, facts, processes and defining concepts.

The chair quickly weighed my body weight, took my pulse, felt the vibration of my soul and did not look at me suspiciously at all, realizing that it was repeating something absolutely ridiculous: the feeling of being exposed to the same Visus Supra Imaginationem (sight beyond imagination), in such a way that it must not be significantly influenced by the power of accommodation of my eye to its reality, so that through my eyes it maintains its status as a personified idea.

Leadership arises when the thing that attracts your attention, and which your vision considers as the bearer of a universal image, becomes the reflection of certain circumstances related to your merit of putting soul into everything that gives you inspiration.

Do not forget that everything around you is a reflection of your inner world. Look, right now, pick one thing around you that you haven't paid any attention to. What exactly can it say about you? What can you say about it so that it becomes a reflection of your soul?

Clear Vision Obeys Only The Eyes That Know How To See, and I say this thinking that what I saw at an abandoned seat in the airport, enlivened only by the mirage of an image that can become a memory, beyond what the normal gaze would have accepted as suggestion for the projection of a realistic artistic image, actually represents the exploration of an unknown world, but close to the horizon of my own understanding.

Somehow, my presence there in the airport, enlivening everything around me, could have gone further than that: this chair was as pleasant as it could be at such moments when waiting became more and more comfortable, making me feel like a "decor influencer" who knows how to mix the surrounding elements in such a way as to obtain a special image.

Columbo - The Embodiment Of The Man Of Moral Integrity And Visionary In Ideas

On February 22, 2011

Subtle details can reveal your true essence, capturing the subtleties and nuances that make up the vulnerability of a hidden truth.

In the murky light of the crime, Lieutenant Columbo proves to be the steadfast beacon of justice, an exceptional detective who knows no fear in confronting the most powerful. In the episode "A Friend in Deed", his superior tries to sway him, to manipulate him, but Columbo remains immune, armed with an unwavering devotion to truth and justice.

When he discovers that Mark Halperin himself, the highest superior in the police force, is the murderer, Columbo is not discouraged. On the contrary, his ingenuity and determination grow even more. In a daring move, he sets up a clever trap, using a rented apartment and his own ability to anticipate his opponent's moves. He throws the bait to his superior, making him believe that it is the apartment of an ex-convict who was being investigated for these crimes that, in fact, he did not commit. To clear his tracks, Mark Halperin was going to bring to justice a man who had a record, but he was not the author of the murders at all.

Leadership: Can you improve the context of improvisation in your actions, highlighting the simultaneity between the content of your own consciousness and the form of the vision in the process of supporting the truth?

Inviting the superior into his office, Columbo subtly reveals a false address, throwing him into the fictional world of the ex-convict in his quest to protect his dark secret. But, the master manipulator, Columbo planned every detail with meticulous attention.

And when Mark Halperin and the police team storm the apartment, and plant false incriminating evidence in the room, Columbo proves to him that he could only know the murderer's address from his sheets on his desk, which were actually specially arranged and exposed . So it just so happened that the incriminating evidence was placed in the apartment rented in Columbo's name, so it was illogical that that evidence would be found there, unless Mark Halperin, himself, intentionally placed it thinking it was the ex-convict's address.

Leadership: Can you value the details that can represent evidence of objective truth, so that your vision is accepted as a kind of mirror of a higher self?

Anyway, the idea is this: if you want to prove your skills as a good detective, you must first inspect the crime scene thoroughly. See what is not "normal". At the crime scene, Columbo sheds light on seemingly insignificant details, finding subtle abnormalities that defy logic. The fingerprints missing from the phone of the victim who answered two calls, become the key to deciphering the whole story. A true detective does not overlook such details, and Columbo, through his skills and impeccable ethics, succeeds in bringing the truth to the surface.

I'll say it another way. Things were placed too strangely in the room where the crime was committed, and the defining element, out of the ordinary, was the fact that there were no fingerprints on the phone at all, although the victim had received 2 calls to which he still answered. You can't talk on the phone in your house without leaving fingerprints, unless the criminal was already in the house, he spoke on the phone, then erased the fingerprints.

Leadership: Can you harness your full potential so that the vulnerability of a truth reveals the fragility and sincerity associated with your exposure to the perception of others?

In this case, Columbo used several elements of criminology to build his case. First, he carefully inspected the crime scene, noting that things were placed too oddly. Second, he studied the relationship between the victim and the criminal, suspecting that the two were related. Third, he used a charade to lure the criminal into a trap.

In the complex world of crime and manipulation, Columbo remains an incomparable figure, a symbol of honor and fairness. Through his actions, he teaches us that the truth can only be obtained through perseverance, intelligence and adherence to ethics, no matter how dark the shadow of the crime. Or, as the writer Arthur Phillips put it:

"When you understand them, people can't surprise you, you know. Their reasons are sometimes hidden, but there aren't many. People are open books, once you've learned to read. This is both a curse and a delight. , but it is an inevitable result when you are a faithful researcher of human nature, which any good detective surely is."

A higher self that you reach through the willingness to dedicate yourself to the representation of an ideal, to always find the truth, is part of the structure of the man who respects the laws of ethics. In this case, your vision becomes a mirror of yourself, reflecting the complexity and depth of your experiences, offering an authentic and unique perspective on reality.

Leadership is about anticipating reality that explores people's vulnerability to the change that learning the truth triggers.

Columbo is the embodiment of the man of moral integrity and visionary in ideas. He does not accept compromises, he never deviates from the rules of justice, he does not accept falsehood and lack of integrity. So, his message is the following: "never get stuck in other people's reality, but stay authentic."

Come Undone (II)

On October 22, 2017

Beauty is tied to the way you position yourself to the most enigmatic moments of life, in terms of assuming hypostases along it.

I am charging my imagination with the need for a strong connection between causes and effects, moments that seem to postpone arrivals at certain stages of a life cycle with multiple interpretations to the longitudinal plane of my heart. I seem to be trying to desynchronize it from an obsessively rational sense, to immortalize it in a symbolism with great implications translated by intense consumption, as an impetus for a new state of mind.

However, I slowly start to slide into a kind of fog, a strange phenomenon of unknown origin, cannot forgive from falling apart, in my mind making its way an assumed screenplay by Stephen King. To imagine that they are elsewhere, reason continuing to "shake" what was yesterday. In other words, the way I feel, to the way I approach my luck in future actions beyond the waking state, is a form of art, a madness I can afford and I cannot get enough of. "Hey child, stay wilder than the wind, and blow me in to cry."

I am eager to talk to those who do not speak, but they are secretly heard, an imagination that should not be encouraged, as if my memory would seduce what remains of the echoes of an abandoned life, more than I ought to embrace all the power of inspiration and dream, as a special state that can appear anytime, anywhere and to any amount.

As if trying to get away from worldly things, known, painful, as significant as they are difficult to assess, suffocating, destroying, threatening any attempt to get out of the red umbrella of uncertainty and supportive regrets. From an unwarranted fear of life, a weakness that I must escape, an astonishment I do not know how to understand, of desperation penetrated into bones, become one with bone marrow. Which is a lonely path for me.

Leadership: Do you dismiss action in order to bring some shades to the mind that no other tool besides words can bring forth?

How can I untangle a silent testimony, backed up by so many questions, worries and doubts, without tangling it again? A mirroring in someone else, a search for the identity between a real world and a virtual world, could break away the discouraging inertia that anesthetizes me?

I would prefer a sincerity that was emptied of artifice, as with the writer who gives the living word the power of incarnation, to expose myself intelligently to a milder hurting, as I am, obedient and subjected to the great mysteries of art in which the profound meaning of the word is to change the geography of a form of existence that reveals its importance in setting a certain style. Personality, thinking, action, leadership.

When I try to burn to the end so much silence, by spirit and by a written code without consuming myself for good, I take heed to reaffirm the potential for change and the impact that thoughtful actions can have in the vision of Malcolm Gladwell, author of the famous book "The Tipping Point": Look at the world laid before you. Maybe it seems to you that it is a still, implacable place. It is not like that. With a minimum of effort – at the right time and place – everything can be overturned.

The lesson of the critical point in the darkness of silence in which I plunge deeply, part of the center of my troubled universe, is that if you do not provoke the change, you end up enduring it.

Leadership: Can you control what you find about yourself without having great expectations from the "beautiful" that by having no concept of pleasure becomes exclusively an internal affliction?

For the first time, a drop of blood from the pride of being the owner of an "immaculate dream", runs down the edge of a poem announcing the resignation in the face of MUST, trying to stay blind to the hope and fear outside. That neither logic nor intelligence, but a only the mystery of a thought unsolved to the end can know the ultimate reality of the confrontation between the condition of a prisoner in "Something unreal" and the experience of a "Lost, in a snow filled sky."

I could place myself at any time at the forefront of the truths revealed by this isolated experiment, affected by my own placement behind an unexplained feverish state of conflict between past experience and the unknown I face, what is apparently a state of semi-consciousness in which I tend to think I'm sleeping, a hallucination that must be accepted calmly.

For a sculptor like Lorenzo Bernini, beauty gained a sense of self. He found that the most valuable asset of an artist was not to make beautiful and comfortable buildings, but to invent various faces in serving little by little the bad and unadjusted parts of necessity, to do beautiful things, so that this shortcoming becomes useful to such an extent that, if it did not exist, it should have been invented.

It is better not to blame yourself for any inconvenience in your life, close to the most secret reality, to the deepest reality of serving a state in which the joy of the little disappears. The pain of inner fire and your own exile taking its place. Beauty is indulging in any reflexive gaze on itself, but it is forbidden to a state of exhaustion that is neither sleep, nor dream, nor vigil, which only discourages you, making you forget even that you exist.

Beauty in art is related to the permanent unveil of a deep reality in positive terms, the way you position yourself to the deepest and most enigmatic moments of life in relation to the hypostasis along it: that of an unmatched creator and that of a prisoner of your own thoughts and emotions.

Come Undone sets in when you choose between the intensity of emotions and their expression, the only result being art, the unique miracle of creation that we call "a forever open wound" or "a self-experience", uninterrupted, very intense, excessive. Which can result in a variety of content available for viewing from a compositional precedent called: "momentum towards knowledge and originality"

Come Undone (I)

I have noticed that during the day I am overcome by a state of intense unease accompanied by an enticing challenge to read everything, a keen desire to inform myself of any unexpected variations between the longing for truth and the fear of not allowing it to ruin me. I can anticipate later life tendencies in a mystical-tempting chiaroscuro, with the same pressing care that the artist tries to reconcile the tension between the content he has to play out and the aesthetic form of his creation.

My anxiety is the artist's torment to define a horizon of knowledge, open and practical, through the prism of a creation that deliberately mixes the register of the miraculous with that of the supernatural. The only term that seems to be missing for full expression is color, or more precisely that expression of color capable of being purely pictorial essence. Here, I feel a total perplexity, accompanied by a strange pain due to a thrill of worry, my imagination springing out of a depth full of secrets. That I know nothing of, that I cannot include in the desperate adventure of self-discovery, but one which lets out a decisive and resounding answer:"I've been waiting for you ! "

I hope that I will find another opportunity to make up for the cause of this dark, chaotic, desolate, abysmal place, to which I owe a monthly "rate."

When inspiration tangles you, like a tightly knotted noose around your neck, throwing yourself into a dangerous spiral of uncertainty, replacing the tendency to detest or even to hate yourself; when you wake up in the terrible madness of the insanity to insist, to seek and espouse an escape, a release of suffering, an escape from the red hell of despair, there is nothing left to do but untangle it, to break away from that acute feeling of denial of the moment. "Who do you need, who do you love, when you come undone?"

Words, playing me déjà vu, for proof of the identity between Everything and Nothing, suggesting a consumption of force, a restraint of physical energy, but in perfect communion with the universe, that the soul depicts in a momentum of the ephemeral sublime, arriving without failing where it is directed: towards the center of the sphere of fearful curiosity for what will follow.

Leadership: Can you express the image you have in mind, about what you experience in direct relationship with the act of creation, in the reality of an experience that simply softens you, but makes you feel alive?

No one can surrender to what is collapse, retreat, sliding into the abyss, what human understanding would be tempted to regard as a careful delimitation of what cannot be shared, globally or in detail. But you can always express an emotion, a certain mood that convinces you of a certain fact. "Is it something real?"

I'm thinking of getting rid of a burden or obligation that hollows everything in me gradually, on the wavelength of conscience burdened by certain prohibitions, depending on the situation and circumstances of a bizarre combination of "breath and anxiety". At least the way in which I see reality, that beyond it is me, a Creator of feelings and sensations, employing and integrating a multiplicity of hues, values and experiences, manages to compromise with their own content. With the deepest and most awkward thoughts. As a dominant effect, throwing themselves either into obsessions or ruin.

There can be no other explanation for this strange situation, as an isolated experiment affected by the hazard, which seems to be attributed to confusion or exhaustion, anxiety and worry, for they also devour the artist who has become a slave of the sin to understand how important is the courage to be honest in art, even if sincerity is painful, often punished. "I swear I've heard it before."

Here the reader has the opportunity to reflect on his own relation to the newest approaches to the condition of man, to be a being living in support of a high frequency activation, meant to connect his personality to the higher self. Vulnerable to the image he experiences in response to situations in fact produced in secret but with light and shadow effects, to the hope and fear outside.

Leadership: Are you able to conceive the perfect creation that represents a self-affirmation that does not contain the negation of your own condition fallen into the hiding of a world that has reached its limits?

Responding states that respond to purely psychic situations intimately linked to the content of some evidence of soul pressure create uncertainty as you go on the idea that you will never find anything where everything once was. Atonement through the fear of imaginary acts that you are afraid of, because hidden things can be revealed at any time, even if they are not revealed, are in the vicinity of the naive sincerity of despair.

After each mirroring in the painting charged with shadows of my image, in a frame of the "Black Experience" type, I cannot update my state and improve it in a tone of authenticity.

Here, it should be mentioned that I am not far from a story full of fiction. It is true that a self-affirmation in the field of art is an effective engagement in a symbolized universe, as if you wanted to conquer everything, as if you had time to master everything. But it is equally true that in art, one who rushes too far into fiction, wandering as in a trance, through a labyrinth of emotional, incredible, unexpected confessions, must assume the negation of his own condition fallen into the hidden of a world that has reached its limits.

The denial of one's own fallen condition to a world that has reached its limits is an upside-down statement, a characteristic and a condition of contact with an imaginary world that prevents you from seeing things as they are and can often lead to anxiety or depression.

The manifestation of a state of anxiety is the consequence of my relating to the creator status, enrolling on the path of modeling the reality that consumes me, during which I build and consolidate the relationship between what is intimate and what is in the outside world.

The creator, at least in the way I look and accept my madness to deny what already exists in my being, with which I have the pride of being already learned, is the man who knows how much a hidden and unfinished work costs.

Leadership is like the act of creation that tests your ingenuity, qualities, acceptance, and self-control: first you have to evaluate your state of mind, then dig out of yourself some hidden truths, and in the end, you must associate your image with everything people need to know about you.

The act of creation committed in a journey of self-discovery is a cumulation of the artist's attempts to define himself, but also to redefine a horizon of expectation whose vastness must not hurt his pride of being above understanding other people.

Come Undone is the final stage of exploration of self, you feel that everything is taking on the proportions of an experience designed to highlight the restlessness of an artist who confides in his creation: "I cannot update my state and improve it in a tone of authenticity."

Come Vorrei

On August 28, 2019

The story behind the epic of life is the picture of a guessed, interpreted, but little-known world, to which you must always add something.

Long ago, a garden full of roses won my full interest. The force with which the roses are incarnated individually, in many worldly conceptions, in what is called "well-being", is built around an approach to modeling the self, between truth and transient things. Here I discovered for the first time the fascination of flowers, the natural landscape and the carefully chosen art and finesse, from which you feel attracted by that artist's curiosity meant to observe in every detail a new representation of reality based on a formula with emotional extract: "It's too little of everything that should be said."

But it is quite sad in life not to have to walk around such a corner of heaven, ideal for a plus of life, when from every moment, peace-bearers, with profound implications, the artist's talent to make it possible to reach the absolute and enter into another phase of the creative process can be reaped. The perception of a person, or what they think, is a pure reception of the values of the pure spirit, of the vulnerable existence forced to reinvent itself by its supreme force: love, which Leonard Cohen at one time recognized as a piece of the heart of a man of great character.

Now, when I write all this, I can only meet that moment of emotional vulnerability, as in a dream that I continue to experience in silence, with nobility, with grace, by recalling the unspoken joys and the imagined beauties, in the middle of a painting inscribed in the dimensions of an intense red that easily transcends states, thoughts, divine light and diffused concepts.

The memories still haunt me, comfort me with words, with creative impulse, with thinking in images, lifting me with delicacy, with nobility, with pride, at the height of an alleged revelation of the soul. But they never overwhelm me with a content of 100% expressive force. Because what returns to memory, what allows itself to be found at any time is probably sad, painful and brings about disillusion, like a mother's embrace that you want to extend repeatedly, but never feel coming ever again.

Leadership: Can you increase the impact between what makes you feel one with the soul of another being and what you present to the world through the filter of similarity with a fundamental element of your visual environment?

This moment of the so-called immortal, endless, captivating and endearing memory, complete with chromatic refinement and stimulated with a new flowering of roses, is intensely illuminated by the subtle pleasure of a pleasant company, in honor of an emotional quality with which it the color red is invested: the passion to live by self-giving, by sincerity, by aesthetic fulfillment and by the stories of others. Ci sono giorni in cui non dormo e penso a te...

Unquestionably. I let myself be conquered by the novelty of the encounter offered by another kind of aesthetic intervention, another assortment of breathlessness of mind and soul, which absorbs you completely, without escape, in a whirlwind of attractions of the beautiful, of irresistible temptations, feelings with a strong effect in a universe I call so dearly: My Universe. The roses have the charm of bringing those very special people near you, whom you cannot separate from. Come vorrei che tu mi amassi a modo mio...

For a young and casual girl like her, roses do their best to convey what words often fail to do, facilitating entry into a world without borders, in a world that ends nowhere. It was like my discovery of another life, a spontaneous way of transcending knowledge, permanently enriching the perceived content with one imagined by the force of expressing in image and color a complex inner world. Come vorrei che questo amore che va via...

Leadership: Can the content rendered by the image of your creation be perceived as a sign of superiority in transmitting a diverse range of emotions, depending on what you want to experience through a demonstration of confidence in the value of the proposed artistic act?

The content rendered by the image of my creation, the rose seen as the protagonist of an authentic life story, can be perceived as a sign of superiority in transmitting a varied range of emotions only when they appeal to the seductive idea of timeless elegance, presented in a new way around a sensitive subject, of a romantic and artistic aspect at the same time.

Thus, I induce a certain positive perception of myself, a certain amount of sensitivity that places me above the areas of material interest and transform me into a source of expressiveness which finds no equal in the world, especially on leadership.

She smiled at me. I offered her a Double-Delight rose as a sign of respect for her power to capture attention, to provoke the imagination, to convey states, through the combination between a vivid poetic of the dream and a disguised version of the gesture of covering one's mouth, as when caught by surprise. Senza parole. No resistance from her.

Seen with the eye of admiration for the beautiful, the rose makes the transition from instinct to feeling.

She was gentle and loving, endowed with the ability to look beyond the appearance of the one who holds her captive in the moving, uplifting, suggestive picture of a guessed world. The "tamed" version of expressionism. Her beauty seemed to have that quality of artwork that makes you understand what is ambiguous to you, to unravel the great mystery of the autonomy of artistic language in a way that pleases you. Senza cadere in una nuova gelosia...

To belong to nobody, to not belong to any sphere of painting, to live like an exile, is a damn painful feeling. I had to address my heart, like an artist who discovers the delicate touch of nature. This being so cute, polite, beautiful, sincere, spiritual and unique in this world, I will never forget. Just as she will never forget me, because the roses have already created that subtle experience of a good mood, transformed into a feeling of warmth that constantly nourishes you with the magic of an illusione di un bell'aspetto per sempre.

We had the opportunity to see ourselves, quite randomly, in a moment full of sincerity and tenderness, anticipating the aesthetics of the three criteria of human fulfillment: the charm of being empathetic, the grace to give meaning to life and the strength to move forward. We remembered our first date, and we behaved just like roses that bloom all year. Their powerful and conquering fragrance, so sweet, pure and sensual, could only be felt through a beautiful combination of words: "the nobility of the soul and the elegance of small gestures".

The value of the artistic act proposed by a beautiful lover can be expressed by the attention given to a moment of sincerity from which it is possible to revive that attitude related to nature, but especially that attitude of spirit, humble towards the greatness of the creation called "Starmi Vicino".

Come Vorrei highlights the instinct to preserve the moment, the state and the feelings of an artist who refuses to alienate the painting that he still considers unfinished, always finding something to add to it.

In the name of love and art, expressed through the red of roses, it is important to never think about how much the constant called "now" will persist, but to permanentize that state of non-separation that the first meeting rather slips into an astral projection, than in the physical plane, in the picture of a guessed world, interpreted, but little known, to which you must always add something...

Complete Power To Influence

On March 26, 2009

Reduce the tendency for people to orient in a wrong direction by helping them to clarify their feelings, motivations and aspirations.

At the beginning of the movie "Meet Joe Black (1998)" there is a discussion between Bill Parrish, general manager of Parrish Communications, and his small daughter, Susan. Bill was not only a strong, erudite and intelligent leader, but also a man of great spiritual sensitivity. He did not want his little fear to turn into reality. His thinking was clearer than that of Susan, who was still quite young and careless in order to assess her real values and beliefs.

Susan wanted to marry her boyfriend Drew, but Bill sensed that between the two of them, there was not that enthusiasm, that passion characteristic of people in love. He gives Susan a piece of advice: "Do not listen to your mind, but follow your heart."

Leadership: Can you assess people's true values before changing them, bringing to the forefront of your attention the strengthening of their attitude toward choices that qualify as "a manifestation of slightly exaggerated affectivity"?

This discussion between Susan and Bill had a positive effect because it led to clarifying her feelings, and a thorough understanding of her own emotions and thoughts. Bill's counsel had the power to determine Susan to come to herself, and to separate from what does not match her true feelings.

This is an eloquent example of how a leader manages to influence people. A good leader acts with the people around him just as acted Bill Parrish with his daughter. He gets involved in helping others, without becoming "disturbed". A leader does not penetrate into the private lives of other people in any way to denote disrespect that would put him in a bad light, or that would degrade in any way his image. He manages to diminish people's impulse to orient in the wrong direction, redirecting their motivations and aspirations to an ideal that correspond to their true values and feelings.

To guide people in a different direction from theirs, means being able to discern what they feel, to assess the true values and beliefs, to know where their attention goes, where they channel their energies, and to help them clarify their feelings, motivations and aspirations. If the most precious values of people are affectivity, material comfort and religious faith, and in the last places social recognition, friendships, good reputation and performance, then the leader must find a balance between protecting these values and promoting them, without arousing a defensive reaction from anyone.

Leadership: Has the sum of all your beliefs and convictions been formed as a result of self-recognition within the perimeter of a deep relationship between the power to be heard and the need to create a favorable image?

Leadership is influence. Just as a Lego piece you can link only with another piece of Lego in order to frame something – so your thoughts and feelings must be first bound to those of people around you that you might, afterwards to redirect their perceptions into the direction you want. But even more important is the self-recognition produced in the perimeter of the relationship between the power of being heard and the image you show to the world, so that what reflects the aspects of existence that you ascend to a level of wisdom is supported by the small victory of faith not to give in to external pressures.

The only way to lead people into a new direction is to anchor them in your thinking, in your feelings and perceptions. This anchorage is like a blessed shelter that removes any doubt to people on the choices they make, protecting them of unhealthy thinking. And this shelter, which must meet both your beliefs and theirs, need to fulfill them certain needs or desires, not to turn into a trap from which they cannot escape.

Just as a company has no place in a market in which it cannot be the best - so your intentions to change the perceptions of people do not belong if they are not the best and the most honest. It is always difficult (and also risky) to trust a man whose values and beliefs are much different from yours, or if they draw away from the ethics that they comply and follow.

After what has been said so far conclude that complicated recognition itself is formed from the equation "listen to your heart before listening to your mind" considering that repeated experiences that affect your moods depend less on professional life, and more on that invigoration of the idea of "confession of sincerity" that takes place before a favorable decision is made.

In leadership you must learn to assume the power to make yourself vulnerable without being hurt, and to cultivate the power to recognize that the need to link the fragile part of your personality to the approval of others varies according to your efforts of reminding yourself how strong you are.

The Complete Power To Influence is the ability of the leader to get a positive response from people consisting in changing and reorienting of their thinking and feelings towards (and concordantly) with an objective reality. Percentage that guarantees access to their system of values and beliefs, and that gives you authority over them, will increase significantly if you only manage to convince them that your decisions will bring them a hope for better, peace of mind, and professional success. Do not allow people to acknowledge themselves defeated by a thinking based on some feelings that will evaporate over time, to instill them a new winning spirit in a way that you could also take advantage.

Conclusion: The power of influence is a true science of manipulating people's emotions and interests. However, it requires a good knowledge and a good interpersonal communication with people you interact with.

The question is whether this manipulation is beneficial. The answer is positive only when the goals are noble, when the benefit is for all people involved in a situation.

Concentrating Your Gaze On A Dream Of Divine Inspiration

On June 30, 2020

Great Science is the objective measure of a soul displaying its body in surrealness.

Throughout my life, lovely, intense, responsive to the subtleties of art, I was blessed to be able to see and experience the divine power of my inner being in terms of looks thrown over an aesthetic fantasy, the Enlightenment, the metaphor that requires a gaze shaped only by souls with high spiritual values to be truly understood.

And the path of my art was, is and will be the secret of an expressive and bright look, thrown into a dream that always rediscovers its reality in another world, made of words, but living according to the rules of a continuity of what I would like to I call "The color of a soul cloth stretched to the bright tomorrow." Especially the expressiveness of the stretch of a hand that can grasp the chosen fruits of art and science, is rediscovered from the eyes cast by the artist in the depths of a soul whose reality, full of charming colors, is illuminated by a form of involuntary imagination made to experience the uplifting feeling of a captivating story, written as if by Borges.

An entire arsenal of the imaginary floods the view of the artist who softens his brush in his soul and paints his own nature in pictures full of life. I think I knew how to see what few can see, in a dream with many mystical connotations, and I saw a sun, a sunflower, a field full of flowers that complement any garden design, their various, enchanting colors, the green of the grass, the blue of the sea. All passed through the filter of an attentive but gentle gaze, beyond the words spoken by a writer endowed with a painter's conscience.

Leadership: Is your background deeply related to the art with which the artist knows how to keep the resemblance and, at the same time, to beautify the original of an image of himself that takes him out of temporality, projecting him into eternity?

The novel of a lyrical and artistic creation is born in a unique, moving, expressive universe, where two souls become one, each attracting to the total union of desires, thoughts, emotions. Every beauty of nature becomes my likeness. Of course, for a writer like me, with the hand of a surrealist artist, any part of nature becomes a dream of great significance in the perimeter of a soulful, righteous but imposing utterance, which acts like a painting canvas, properly primed in the middle of the night, with diamond sparkles, to be expressively perceived with the help of a symbolic and visual content, as a release, an absolute need for serenity.

Painting is as dear to me as the pen, they both transpose me into a new world with fantastic flavors. And if I have always had two enchanting lives, characteristic of a creation full of good taste, receptive to beauty, it is because art has changed my horizon at a time when the dream, contained in an impartial state of reflection of nature, did not allow itself to be disturbed by the uneasiness of the world in which I considered myself no one's.

And if the great Creator wrote in a universal dream the story of these two lives linked by an act of symbolic conversion, with the spell of a light miraculously incorporated into the painting, precisely in the field of the invigorating power of this Red-Yellow combination, it is due to the power my belief in some kind of well-interpreted oracle that foretold immortality in a kind of trance.

A trance that separated me from the lives of others, helping me to escape from temporality, to detach myself, to reevaluate myself within thousands of years, as an act of achieving a balance between vision, virtuosity and mystery. And I was a flower, a sun, a sparkle in the night, through contact with the aesthetics of the creative self and creation related to the actual engagement in a symbolized universe, perceived in pictorial matter. I was Borges, but I was also Leonardo DaVinci, fulfilling the role of traveler between universes, between heaven and earth, between millennia – memoirs, memories, diaries, and all this with a single pen that still behaves like an authentic brush.

Art is the physical state of man transposed into a dimension of the depths of the soul.

Only the Creator is my witness to how difficult it was for me to become a Creator, like Him, in a dream in which flowers take the place of words through the whole appearance of an old creation, renewed on the idea that a supernatural content is in principle miraculous and prevents the receiver's awareness of a specific meaning of the gaze. By looking at yourself differently, you look at yourself the same, but in a dream that repeats itself, distinguished by the originality with which the artist, mastering the technique of brushing, approaches the concept of an immortal soul by organizing a special virtual meeting with the great Demiurge.

In an intrinsic way, the study of a work of art can personalize the deepening of the meaning of an existence subordinated to the power of the dream. And here it is appropriate to make room for the famous writer, Jorge Luis Borges, to enter the territory of my spirit in order to reveal the essential form of what is happening to me at the subconscious level:

"Sometimes the thought strikes me that any human life, no matter how tangled and rich, consists in reality of a single moment: the moment when man realizes forever who he is. Starting from that indescribable revelation that I tried to guess, the Carriego character in my story is Dr. Carriego himself in the real world. Likewise, starting with the book about Carriego, the writer Borges who really polished me is the same Borges, the rational man in a dream called life."

The fundamental law of science that combines art with spirituality, invoked and promoted by the enlightened, is to metamorphose into a liminal being that exists partly in one dimension, partly in another.

Concentrating Your Gaze On A Dream Of Diving Inspiration could be reduced to a form of imagination that involves transporting the self into another person, so that you can find yourself at a deeper level of reconsideration of art from the point of view of approaching a potential existence that is expressed through substance and energy.

Confession Of A Dying Man

On April 02, 2009

The true value of life is measured by the impact we leave on the hearts of others, not forgetting that we are part of a greater whole.

- I have a well established plan from now on; i will save you all I will close my eyes without anxiety. I will leave you satisfied with me; You will see. Ah! my dear resurrected love, I have dragged myself so long into a useless and wretched life. Please don't deny me the immense joy of finishing it usefully! I, who left only unhappy people behind me, starting with me, let me make a few happy in the moments I have left ! If you only knew how desolate my soul and life sounded during the last eighteen years; let me fill two hearts in which I shall survive and live longer than I myself have lived.

You call this death? It was dead when I was in Vienna, when I numbed my heart in the tumult of the senses, when I threw my one-night loves and my vulgar scandals at the feet of passers-by, then yes, I was really dead and buried in the fruit of the orgy. Instead, now, my heart will live in love, purity and gratitude for these beautiful children, whom I will save and marry! Christiane, I beseech thee, by the love thou hast kept for me, do not vex me for this revival of our past in their future.

- Well, so be it, she said; but let's go together.

Leadership: The regret of a wasted life can be lingering, but is it never so intense as to cause deep suffering like when you know you can do good?

The confession of a man at the end of his life, or in other words, the regret of a wasted life and the desire to do good, suggests a sincere confession. We don't really know if he is a good man or a bad man. However, this sincere confession, having an intimate and personal character, reveals the deep thoughts and feelings of a character who understood the triumph of life - that of leaving something behind, living through someone else, reviving the past in the future.

And if the regret of a wasted life can be persistent, it is never so intense as to cause deep suffering like when you know you can do a good thing, but the world is not grateful to you. In the end, the true value of life is measured by the impact we leave on the hearts of others, relative to the idea that only genius can achieve absolute love, or that the measures you took were justified and correct.

This text highlights the feeling of regret of the character, who considers that he has wasted his life, leaving him nothing but a kind of piety, as happens every time you know that you are walking, literally, in the footsteps of a saint who he wants to leave behind him a sign of the existence of divine goodness. Carefully, if we explore the reasons for this regret, which can be various - wrong choices, missed opportunities, wasted time unnecessarily - we will find the following explanation: that everything that is truly lasting is obtained through the sacrifice given by the sincerity of the soul.

Leadership: Do your inner dialogues reflect true regret and a desire to do good, affecting life-changing actions for others?

Man remains man, with mistakes and regrets, but also with the ability to find meaning in goodness that transcends time. And this is where the desire to do good takes place, representing the triumph of spirit over matter, a small symbol of those defeated by the causes of life, but made immortal by the imprint left behind.

Despite the regret, the character shows a strong desire to do good in his last moments, from the perspective of an overwhelming vision: "better to die with good thoughts than to live on with bad thoughts". This desire can be seen as an attempt to right his past mistakes and leave a positive legacy.

Then it's about the tension between regret and hope. We observe an interesting tension between the regret for a wasted life, without major achievements , and the hope to do good in the last moments, a fact perceived as a kind of " I take my revenge with a sharp and thick , in - one way or another". This tension is clearly explored in the text, revealing the character's inner struggle with a kind of hidden sadness, with a darker demon than a content-impoverished consciousness predicts.

Immeasurable dedication to one's convictions marks the boundary between ephemeral existence and spiritual immortality, regardless of one's age status.

He knew too well that a life wasted by death was not honorable, so he joined those who retreated to the spiritual fortress called Sosthieen Karsthis , that is, he brings out a jolt of humanity, of light and good thoughts, a jolt of joy believing that , that's it, the criteria at the origin of evil have gone bankrupt. Indeed, every man should absolve himself of every fault at a given time. In fact, the criteria of good and bad represent the escape from pain and the search for joy.

Death is always seen as a turning point: something causes the character to reconsider life and take a new direction, even if the triumph of good over evil has not yet been achieved, but remains pending. Leadership, too, must explore how this imminent prospect of death affects the "noble", causing them to make certain ethical decisions. The following questions are important:

Who is the dying man? What are the reasons for his regret? What exactly does he regret, and how much? Can you explore the concrete reasons for your regret, giving specific examples from your life? What makes you want to do great good? What is the motivation behind your desire to do good? Is it a desire for forgiveness? To fix your mistakes? To leave a positive legacy?

How do you put your desire to do good into practice? Can you present the concrete actions you take to do well? What is the impact of your actions? How do your actions affect those around you and how do they change your life?

Leadership must include flashbacks, those moments that reveal significant aspects of your life and the reasons for your regrets about what you could have done but didn't.

The confession of a dying man leads to the following conclusion: "The mastery of our spiritual activity is a remarkable historical fact that demands piety, but does not accept the mercy of fate."

This powerful and evocative title provides a clear picture of the man who cannot change his own destiny, but has the power to change the destiny of others. Exploring in detail the themes of regret, hope and death, offering a moving and meaningful story about a character seeking forgiveness and redemption, we actually understand that life is not necessarily a process of learning, but one of remembering.

The Confessions Of An Art Addict

On January 17, 2018

Give a deep expression to the content that you create, pointing the way to what is your own.

I was destined to achieve perfection, the concept of confession of truth as a way of life, instantly punished by the brief reformulation of beliefs that constituted indispensable prerequisites for intelligibility, the cultivation of the mystery, and the reception of beneficial initiations in personal spiritual evolution.

The mystery, the invisible face of the reality I was struggling with, the instrument of intellectual work that could be personalized in many ways, like the strings of a violin echoing in all the crumbs of the universe, deepened into a process of identity transformations with a difficult to predict end.

Predominantly, I liked the idea of using the start and end of an action to manipulate a reality that does not exist and to find connotations other than a mere reflection of a moment of genius, in order to win, at any cost, a game known only by me against an Ego who had put too many masks over the soul.

A genuine creator takes his duty to truth and higher values, enabling a conversion of depth that can resonate in universal consciousness.

Accepting the possibility of building a picture of perfection, in a tempo exaggerated to the extreme, under the pretext of honoring a clear understanding of truth and duty to God, became plausible a major change of the self, a conversion of depth, a magical transfiguration of a situation that in everyday life might not have seemed as interesting. I did not know, however, that this manifestation of response to all that troubled me would have a special echo in the universal consciousness.

I am not referring to self-filling with suggestive images and writings in a language that is somewhat differentiated on dialectal areas, remarkable by the depth of the realistic expression of a wide breathing in the vast space of the great sensibility compositions of art.

But to a filling of the possible motives upon which I had imprinted an unmistakable vibration, especially through their strong individualization, through a mental change, thus enrolling in the most advanced substance of the use of meaning and meaning given to the forms of the intellect in the labyrinth of the pure word.

Leadership: To emphasize meaningful content, do you focus on a form of communication that appears modeled in a vividly projected light over artistic virtues?

Higher reasons and immediate practical reasons, such as total abandonment in a personal success or the quality of a vision that rises far above the clichés and prejudices of the times, had a similar evolution to that of the universe from which the concept of the artist to create through the perspective of a slightly distorted reality is part of.

At that time, I did not know that in this manifestation of art and soul there is also a coincidence between similarities and assumptions that create a totally false illusionary world, but in which I strongly and stubbornly believed. They were concentrated in the very expressive suggestion shown only by a painter, of a feeling that convinces the perception that you mold it to the image of something unique, non-repetitive, which is "imprinted" directly on paper and remains fixed there with the final thoughts of a lone, but not defeated hero.

The most important artistic virtue is the collage: an artistic process consisting in composing a painting by sticking together heterogeneous elements. Writing is an image of perfection that lies behind any process of receiving artistic creation from fine and different elements. By exploding, they advance towards a model of originality that is highly compatible with a vision that offers innovative ideas the possibility to take shape and materialize.

Leadership: Do you fully respond to a perspective of reception and interpretation of reality connected to the meanings of a work that impresses not only through the confessions of the confessions, the comprehensive images, but also through the consistency with yourself?

From "Foucault's Pendulum" I retained that the world is full of wonderful correspondences, of subtle similarities. You have to penetrate them and emerge satisfied from their room, to let yourself be penetrated by them with the help of the dream, the oracle, magic, which allows you to act upon nature and its forces by setting into motion the similar through similarity.

Words go alone looking for Someone, manifesting themselves in expressions that you may need when you design a colossal work of the type Fine-Art. Through the logical judgment of a situation you reach certain conclusions or points of view which, in turn, can cause emotional reactions.

Of course, the quality of cognitive activity that produces the most fertile orientation of my being, transformed into a special mystery, almost always impossible to untie, is signaled on the length-wave of curiosity. At the same time, it produces a form of communication through the rediscovery of the importance of artistic language, a pendulation between contraries, a permanent ambivalence, grounding itself between the reflex of momentary experiences and aesthetic pulses, unconfessed, tied to the requirements of the highest form of my nature: the power of creation.

Added on the ascension ladder from reality to feeling, assuring the transition from the figurative representation of reality to the expression of the essence of things that revolutionize artistic language, all of these fit in the space of production of new forms of generating unique value attributed to writing.

Consistency with yourself is required as a basic rule in perfecting a work when to the expression of essence of things contributes the expression of the soul updated in the plan of logic or the multitude of feelings that test you whenever you want to change the "background" of an image.

Any NOTHING can transform into A MASTERPIECE only with the help of writing, just as the central figure of a picture completes and strengthens the emotion produced by the image in its entirety.

Try to find a certain state under the cover of words, a way that you want to exploit through the visual perspective, marked especially by the black and white film of a life that is considered brilliant by precisely this concentration force in a single figure of comprehensive ideas that emphasize the feeling of verticality of the work.

The Confessions Of An Art Addict lie in a fragile balance, between the passage of the road that is opened by the attainment of perfection and the image of the self that coincide in a large proportion with that reality of diversity in unity.

Confessions Of An Incurable Alchemist

On February 18, 2018

Get so friendly with science that it will do everything in your stead.

Ever since my teenage years I have understood how naïve it is to give meaning to events by classifying them as "coincidences", the more so since my attention was focused on things that were of interest only in terms of the value I was attributing to them on a symbolic level.

It all happened a certain way, enigmatic as a Borges riddle, because things, along with the passion of turning them all over, were an attempt to find the hidden plan of providence, a subtle form of making the banalities of life be significant even in contexts like: "I did not find it relevant".

With obvious satisfaction, I would access things as open doors to an empire world, treating them with that obsessive meticulousness encountered only in those born with a predisposition for art and literature, just as the famous Talleyrand would rearrange the books in his library: he would put them back, he would let them so that he would pick them up again, he would examine them as if they were alive and this exercise, giving his thinking the depth of experience of centuries, gave the writing an elegance that their authors were often deprived of.

Of course, I could not ignore the fact that their essence could be changed at any time, in the way the artist dilutes the paints to obtain a different hue, along with trying to frame them into a mysterium magnum, in an image with several themes derived from science, with sight raised to an invisible point called: fiction.

If alchemy is a world reborn by applying the method of comparison, then I was the artist who painted its symbolism only with its own blood. Science is a kind of magic that is found in simple things, but so unseen to the normal eye.

Leadership: Can you change the meaning attributed to the creation you are experiencing by reference to things that define your authenticity, situated in contrast with the strict requirements of certainty?

It can be seen that the enigma was a part of what defined me as a discrete person, especially when no one could understand me beyond the backwards image of the same perspective of receiving art. The imaginary stemming from the obligation of opening a window of anticipation of the heavenly world, which begins with Aleph and ends with the Reflex of the Invisible, was a convention required for a symbolic purpose. And through this, to allow myself the attempt of rising above human understanding.

The meaning of my creation was justified and directed toward God precisely because the world of my fantasy, through the multiplication of forms of expression, had no end.

Sometimes I feel trapped in the middle of the investigation of hidden information, a pleasant confusion of remnants of certainty, a subtle contrast between the exuberant fantasy and the way things really are. And because of this, I did not know what was real and what was happening. As if I were myself trapped in Pandora's box, without being able to relate to the hope called "the synthesis of the plausible" that could have released me at any moment.

This reminds me of the words of American writer William Shannon: "A person of true faith travels, not without difficulty, to the heart of mystery. Such a person is making his way through the darkness of his own mystery until he discovers that his own mystery and God's mystery merges into a single reality, which is the only reality."

But this reality is similar to the inability that challenges you when you find a truth you cannot approach, one that nobody wants, which exceptions cannot overturn, because it retains the same value today as it did in the past. Caught in the whirlwind of an inexhaustible "game of shapes", up to its representation in a material determination that distorts the very understanding of the message and leads to serious mistakes of interpretation, you are finally compelled to call upon the plausible.

Leadership: Do you know what should be done and how it should be done so that you may end up redefining yourself in the direction in which creation is revealed to you as a calling towards mysterious things?

Playing with matter, making art out of its constitutive elements, is like thanking the devil for the incandescent hell achieved in a nuclear energy transformer, personalized by the surrealist collage of precious expressions, filled with a meaning that escapes the auditorium, by using argumentative connectors in the plan of meanings and contrasts of conceptions.

He who doesn't know how to produce the perfection of an artistic symbiosis of any shape of matter in the plan of expression is not a real alchemist.

Nicolas Flamel, the creator of the Philosopher's Stone, once received a visit from a noble named Cramoisy, who had been sent by the king to find out the secret secrets behind his fortune. He finds out that the mystery of the great fortune has its basis in the realization of immortality, which can only be conquered by the triumph of the spirit over matter, by the transmutation of what is human into what is divine. Before leaving the house, only one aspect was brought to his attention: to keep it a secret !

A man who redefines himself in the direction in which creation is revealed to him as a calling towards mysterious things, is absorbed by the so-called science of plenitude that belongs to a hidden causality, starting from the interpretation of isolated observations and especially from a series of analogies.

Being an alchemist means to become so friendly with science that it does everything in your stead. But for this, the first condition of the Philosopher's Stone must be fulfilled: the direction in which you go must be filled with an abundance of hidden meanings and subtle suggestions, elaborated with great sensitivity and creative force, so that the secret never loses its power.

The secret of leadership, as in the case of alchemy, lies in widening the horizon of interpretation and application of knowledge. In other words, activate your function of creation and personal assertion as a product of an ubiquitous causality !

The Confessions Of An Incurable Alchemist stop at a single axiom: If you consider yourself the absolute master of a science, it means that you have expressed the certainty that you can reach the Absolute by respecting a primordial condition: that of not revealing the true face of things.

Confidence In An End Forgotten By The World

On December 10, 2015

Evolve according to the convention between being limited and being superior, by looking in you all that you think you could find outside yourself.

I do not really remember who I was. A quite fragile man, unfortunately, across the form it took the cliffs of thoughts crashed into the sea of self-illusions. For I felt throbbing in my chest the pulse of the irrational, like when you throw yourself into something that goes beyond you, propelling you towards a different discovery - of an unconscious identity. This is what happens when you pretend to be a guide into an endless desert, without knowing where are the oases of civilization.

Most probably I existed in a time and in an undefined space, in which fugitive terms we call it death, a death of the rational individuality, a deviation from the right path of self-knowledge beliefs, whenever possible on the spiral of silence, in which I could not express in any way. Even now I'm curious to find out how I got so, foreign to everything I thought I knew about myself.

More than surely, this stage of my life was very well adapted to how the writer Andrei Ionescu described the work of Jorge Luis Borges:

"Borges remained faithful to the themes that define the universe: fiction, death, double, searching for identity, language, dream, metamorphosis, erudition. A universe whose coordinates still remain: the labyrinthic space and the circular time. A labyrinthic space structured by the abstract and vertiginous symmetries of mirror reflections with mutually superseding opposing images: death and immortality, the part and the whole, the finite and the infinite, which lead him to the imperious necessity of posturing the eternal revert. And time is like a story meant to embody a series of beings, things, images or events that repeat themselves over a certain cycle of years."

Leadership: Are you willing to identify the perspectives of interpreting a reality lived through dreaming or awareness of an "absence of meaning" to renew yourself with a self-image modeled after the scenario of an enigmatic destiny?

Committing a serious offense against the healthy principles demanding for life to be lived and not dreamed, is applied in the conditions of the impossibility to identify where the story begins and where the reality ends. The consequences of meeting with animated objects or not, but definitely attracted actively into the same contradictory whirls of the lost mysteries symbols, immersed into the fragility of the moment transfigured to infinity and the subtle relativity of some forgotten knowledges, were felt increasingly.

Worthy of the uplifting feelings that at the due time I will take advantage of this diversion of identity, which must by all means to be unmasked, by that strange feeling, unreal that accompanies you when you recognize another part of the world, I armed myself with a widening vision, as if born from the spark of a star, called: "Confidence in an end forgotten by the world". Something that from the beginning urges to a variety of indulgence towards the inability to accept the reality.

The seeker of a subtle metaphysics of the moment, forgetting forever the time that separates him from the old assumptions about the permanence of things, expressing involuntary the universe into his infinity, was passed by a single ray of light into the darkness: "The most perfect silence is when there is no need to explain." The self-image of this seeker seemed modeled after the scenario of an enigmatic destiny, for he managed to distinguish the reality of imagination, but preferred to turn imagination into a new model of living and becoming someone else.

Leadership: Do you dare to throw yourself into something that goes beyond you propelling you towards discovering an unconscious identity there where you don't even think you are?

The first characteristic of science to be the image of another person, which for this we call it "frame background" decorates the dimension of the originality matrix resulted from the relationship with yourself in a war that you will win only when you will have the courage to be the mirror that reflects the inverted image of a consistable reality. It consists in the fact of acknowledging that you exist outside of yourself. In the position of another character, trapped into a different world in which the authenticity becomes a sort of a mirror that reflects the image of the secret aspirations.

The leadership preferably of a "myself", but with some dimensions that suit the convention between being weighted and being superior, at learning a certain ability in the conversion, can not be understood into its essence as a science of the state of facts. In fact, leadership may have the characteristics of an escape from the Matrix, from a fully routed world in which everything you hear, what you see, what you touch is just a routine, only when you build your personality in a fiction that no one claims.

And whoever seeks to be into an undefined time and a space, a foreigner who enters certain levels of reality built in correlation with a an Alter-Ego (constituting a negation or a totality) will easily accept the idea of escaping the status of the prisoner of a state of the moment in a world that breaks apart.

An unconscious identity is a Neo, a true hero, precisely because he has never tried to be one, a type as usual, but becoming more and more powerful as he passes through strange, risky and even decisive experiences from the threshold a dream in which someone else sees himself.

Are you really willing to discover yourself where you do not even think you are? Do you have the courage to translate into a new reality in which you will discover the truth instead of the illusion?

Confidence In An End Forgotten By The World suggests the human transition towards the side of a character who betrays his authenticity. The one who dares to throw himself into something that goes beyond him, propelling himself towards discovering an unconscious identity, actually confirms his status as a man of profound knowledge, based on the duality between appearance and essence, between concrete and transcendental.

In leadership, this is translated as "fight in front of you". It comes out a winner only the one who succeeds to detach from real, to be connected as much time to that Alter-Ego, complementary to it, with which to create a magical couple.

Confrontation Of The Titans

On January 15, 2013

Confer consistency and flexibility to your leadership, overcoming the self-imposed conventional barriers.

I was always convinced that nothing controls more the*Man*, essential and defining, outside his genes, outside his predominant nature, than his actions, whose consequences he cannot foresee.

Even if only from this point of view, a sour and free concept of my shred of existence, I could give up to the irresistible temptation of living, confusing, ironic and dry, another time, and another reality. The transition towards an absurd stage of self-knowledge, degrading, that could simply throw me into a genuine despair.

The only light of my existence was more secondary to the "primordial light". My way of accepting the everyday life seemed to contrast with the increasing need, almost manic, to live something different, and to act according to the representation of some antagonistic laws. A misleading aspect that I did not imagine, but which I had to assume with the same feeling of guilt that bears into his soul a judge, who assumes some prerogatives outside his competence.

I was ceaselessly crashing by the difficulties which I did not expect, an ambiguity maintained by spontaneous contradictions. Challenged on the one hand by a state of indecision caused by a process of change that was not brought to an end, and on the other hand by the existence of an opposition between the courage of looking me in the face, the will of detaching myself of individualism, the will to open my eyes, heart, life perspectives towards various horizons.

In a word, I was tempted to compete with my own authority.

Leadership: Are you tempted to relate to the mirrored image at the core of the experience of meeting yourself in the representation of a privileged reality expressed in terms of "contradictory unity"?

My existence was distorted, fragmented, like a cloud that slowly changes its shape, by several attempts of self-rehabilitation. It seemed that none of them could not be accomplished. Basically, I had learned to see myself as a contradictory unit when I did not want to accept myself as an incurable nonconformist, but I was forced to do it.

I felt dazed, like that merchant which, returning from a pilgrimage to Mecca, stops at a well. After eating some dates, throws the stones into the air - and one of the kernel kills the invisible spirit of an air ghost. When he finds out of his crime - the consequence of an uncalculated action, all the regrets invade his being.

I isolated myself in space possessed by troubles, fears and regrets.

Something strange aroused my curiosity into more and more directions, without satisfying any of them fully. I should have adopted a firm position, reforming positive, saving. Not to commit an act, whose consequences I cannot predict. In a particular extent, there was a tacit refusal to disengage myself from any frustration that gathered like an internal tension, imposing me more and more forbiddances - which if it was not treated, ended up to become a pattern, and eventually a personality trait.

However, exactly the opposite the things stood. I adopted an unclear position, unstable and humble, who gave me to understand that I agree with what ordered the "authority" within me, this actuating mechanism that influenced my way of being. This defiant power, this inner Javert, unstoppable by an unendurable debt, constabulary, standing in wait until surprises me off guard - instead of supporting me, it was disturbing me into the deepest way possible.

I put on the wall by my own personality, by my absolutely contradictory nature, by my own stillness in a certain stage of evolution. A minimum degree of flexibility, and I could retrieve myself, I could understand what is up with me, what I want, what do I proceed in the way I do, why do I feel as I feel, why I am still an island hidden in the midst of a stormy sea.

Leadership: Do you have to design a new trajectory of your personality in engaging in a stupid act of overturning appearances that become permanent on the line of a tired mind with a reality slightly farther from its views?

Do you succumb to the temptation to live in a confusing way another reality? Does your transition towards the full stage of self-knowledge causes a certain amount of frustration? Does my way of accepting my daily life contrasts with the increasing need to live something different? Do you act in accordance with the representation of some antagonistic laws?

Understanding your own reality, with all that it represents in your way towards personal perfection, may prove to be a great burden, an irreversible process, which cannot flow than only in one direction: towards involution. This definitive understanding of what you are and what you represent into the transition to a higher stage of development can have side effects - it can restrict the horizon of expectations, with whom you look at the future, limiting any way of access towards excellence.

You cannot live your life in leadership than going forward, understanding better with what kind of person you are dealing with - your own Ego. However, this Ego, like a mountain that triggers an unexpected avalanche, can redirect your attention to some defects that you do not accept at you, upon a degrading reality, based on a lower self-knowledge. An explosion in your personality that you cannot master, that can simply throw you into a real desperation.

Leadership: How do you rival your own authority from the position of a disoriented man who suspends the other senses of orientation from the perspective of an existence that refuses itself from the curious gaze of a follower, enclosing itself within itself?

In the novel "Knight's gambit", the American writer, William Faulkner expresses an opinion: "To know how will sleep the rider at night, ask the horse."

And the powerful people, but especially them are vulnerable at one time. And you will be at some point put in the rider's position, shrouded into a thick fog, where nothing can be seen. Exposed before a state of confusion, which constantly whispers: "I do not know what to do, I do not know what to feel, I do not know how to deal with this situation." Accompanied by a false impression, created by a harsh reality, alike an ignorant being, whom you feel the need to protect it.

On one side, the constant presence in your life will always be the "Knight" – the single chess piece through the way it moves, designating the necessity, the hope of deliverance from this state, a perfect mirror of the way you treat yourself - with your own authority restricting the horizons. The "Knight" prevents you, provides you that minimum degree of flexibility, to retrieve yourself. There is no better recipe for success than your transposition into a positive reality.

But on the other side, you will be exposed to that defiant power, to the tendency of letting yourself integrated into the whims and models of a negative thinking – you will be under the authority of that inner Javert, lurking until catches you off guard, disturbing your existence in the deepest way possible.

If you adopt an unclear position, unstable and humble, you will give to understand that you agree with what orders this authority within you, this "actuating mechanism" that influences your way of being, personality, and so on your leadership style that you practice.

A follower is that state that makes you win or lose your motivation, which suddenly encompasses you and you do not really know how to grasp it, and especially where to grasp it from, depending on the reality you claim to be the only option of accepting the meaning of life.

The positive changes taking place in your style to lead, first occurs at the central level, in your personality structure. Make valuable your leadership, permanently adding an extra value, of energy and power.

Constantly fight with yourself, with that part of yourself that you cannot overcome easily, with Javert. Exceed the contradictory aspects of your own Ego. Avoid any stillness in a particular stage of evolution. There is not, therefore, irrelevant what we believe, more exactly said, what we expect from the future today, for the concrete forms in which it will be carried out tomorrow.

Are you filled with a sense of guilt made by a deceptive aspect, by a state of indecision due to a change process that has not been brought to an end? Are you tempted to compete with your own authority?

Leadership is what you impose on yourself as a meaning of life that goes beyond the contents of thoughts into a reality whose content you will never be able to fully comprehend.

Confrontation Of The Titans designates that constant struggle between the two sides within yourself - a side that surprises you off guard, which makes you see yourself with critical eyes, distorting your personality, and one that suits you best, bringing you special thanks. A battle between two titans, of which comes only one winner: the leadership.

Considerations On The Key Dimension Of Leadership

On November 22, 2013

Leadership is your transition from the status of "a character escaped from the imagination of a novelist" to an image of power oriented in the mirror of an existence constituted as a peak of virtues.

Romanian writer, Anton Dumitriu refers at one point to the work of Miguel de Cervantes, briefly making a summary of the story in which Don Quixote appears:

"We will say that the experiences experienced by the recipients in the authentic initiations were just as implausible for common sense, as mad as those of the Cervantes type knight. In the first journey, Don Quixote is initiated at the inn and armed as a knight. In the second voyage, the knight makes the experience of the air, when tilting at windmills. Finally, in the third journey, he makes the experience of all experiences.

There remains only one essential thing, so that the scheme in which Don Quixote's actions are carried out is exactly the initiating one: the purpose pursued by the knight. He reveals it to Don Quixote himself by addressing Sancho Panza:

Friend Sancho, learns that I was born from the will of the heavens in this iron age in which we live, so that I can revive the gold age when its time comes, or the golden age as it is usually called. I am the one to whom the dangers, the great deeds, the deeds of bravery were destined, I am, I say again, the one who must revive the knights of the "Round Table".

There is no doubt about the ideal pursued by Don Quixote: it is that of the wandering knight, to seek the Grail, that is, to seek to reach the original state of man represented by the golden age." *****

Leadership: Are your actions anchored in a very daring ideal, on the roads of destiny lost on the horizon of a life that you will never be able to catch up with?

The strongest leadership is an adventure on its own, but also a risk you assume. It is solving an equation with an unlimited number of unknowns. It is the result of exploration of a new and vital knowledge, of a personal philosophy about the meaning of life, which seduces you with a lot of adventure, by extracting and representing a new reality from an unleashed world, after you've confronted your own reactions and beliefs.

The decision to personally plead your own beliefs and your cause, without functioning into a thinking routine that determines you to constantly get to negative conclusions, helps you make overall changes, amplify the effects of its reinvention and establish them. But you must think and anticipate the effects of each move you make, always assign it a different meaning, as in an equation with several unknowns from which to extract the "truth", a sense which, first of all, you can assign to your own existence.

To be a messenger of a destiny revealing new meanings means to consider yourself a winner in a competition with yourself, in which you have the chance to revive the image of a hero who performs a great deed.

Inexpensive leadership formulas, art accessible to all through programs and instruments of personal development have obsessed for years individuals from all walks of life. In almost all seminars, in almost all books the term "change" is extended through the filter of three conditions: work, soul and creativity. But no one treats the idea of "representing a reality of an unleashed world" quite so in-depth, and from here you can learn most about how to relate to what is important to do in the world, so it had a culture of civic involvement, participation in what needed to be done to change society for the better.

How can leadership become cheaper? Through proposals to extend the meaning attributed to a life without challenges, without ideal, without profound implications, without future. There are proposed solutions that, subsequently experienced, often prove unprofitable: the application of methods, somewhat established, like consumer items, following that each individual to possess at home these items that can fulfill a useful function. Analyzing them, they can always discover something new, but inconvenient or inconclusive.

The result? A mind hot with ephemeral ideas. A rambling thinking, generally directed toward absolutes, inspiring little confidence, which makes you always get to the wrong conclusions and unsatisfactory results. Thus, you get into a strictly limited area, from which you can't get out anymore.

Just as the painter deeply notices the expression of the model's physiognomy, then sketching on canvas a series of features that are just the expression of the moment – so the leadership development is based on a process of self-observation, self-invention, interpretation of perceptions that impact your being. Leadership, viewed from the perspective of a reality that is hard to believe, sets after a detailed self-analysis in relation to the circumstances of the moment you put yourself, a series of traits that distinguish yourself from "second line" people.

The horizon of a life that you will never be able to capture the latter is subject to a destiny that you feel in some way due to fulfilling by assuming the condition of substituting an unbeaten task: to free yourself from the rigors of events that seem to only have a place in a story.

And a hero who commits a great deed, consisting in revealing a more careful knowledge of himself and the world, is an example of the highest virtues: to be the detail of the circumstances that favor a certain choice and to be the determinant of the consciousness that conditions the perception of life.

Considerations On The Key Dimension Of Leadership are necessary when one seeks to describe the course of man along a journey that begins with the disorder of a world without compassion, hostile and indifferent, then moving from finding oneself to finding the human condition in a context of experiential learning, full of virtues.

Constellation Of Tatyana

On May 29, 2018

When you talk to yourself, you can clearly see the traits of everything you meditate on.

I had to look carefully in the direction of a belief expressed in aesthetic language, about the plurality of worlds merged into a parallel, poetic universe to the extent that it reflects the figure of a creative and visionary spirit. Thus, I found the power to wander like a falling star in the sleep of a pure thought, wrought around secular laws, just to understand what the price of an infinitely dimensional version of the inversion of the poles theorem of a mysterious writing, over time gathered on the basis of a close union with the great Everything.

As the planets possess a perfect philosophy of the whole of which we, willingly or not, are also part of, so to did my advancement into a dream without boundaries possessed the eternity of the matter in a single moment called "the resurrection of lyricism".

It was like a kind of promise made to the boundlessness beyond the boundaries of this world, the artistic original being fulfilled from the point of insistence of a reason that departed from the senses of the moment to become a total and mysterious adventure in a fantastic dimension. I did not suspect that this stranger of hypothetical, charming and unnatural surrealism, clouded like a twilight under the sky, discolored by the reflex of the Aurora Borealis, generating a deeper anxiety than the kingdom of death, would be a painting lesson in the colors of a unique story.

For the first time, my eyes met the look of an organized chaos, drawn like a painting by Lynette Cook, amazed by the gray-ash-black triad, the colors of the occult and the twisted, dominating me through the impure interference with the white of a single borderless page. For a few astral seconds I felt framed within the description with which Victor Hugo characterized his character at one point:

"Jean Valjean stumbled into the depths of his being. He did not see anything, he did not know anything, and yet he stubbornly studied the darkness that had shrouded him without his will, as though he felt that on one hand, something new and better was being born within him, and on the other hand, everything was collapsing."

Leadership: Does the essence of your work paradoxically come from the association a reality obscured by its reflection in an art form that ends up plunging into an ecstasy of spiritual depths?

Art learning is part of a metaphorical game of the enciphering and deciphering of the soul from man to world through its chromatic and compositional appearance, and can be presented in an admirable game of perspectives, from near to distant from terrestrial to cosmic. Its knowledge is a complex process of consciousness that causes emotions, impressions, feelings and ideas in the perceptions, representations, interpretations and creation practices.

When the surrounding landscape is revealing itself to you as being dark and gray, although the windows of consciousness shine with color and light, when "Saturn's Heavens" created from the light of the first intelligence meets the future symbolized by a sad mask and a cheerful one, do you understand that the origin of this great Everything is also the history of a wandering life in a labyrinth that leads to non-existence.

The universe is a colorful story depicted on the thread of a wandering life, where the soul between nothing and a simple atom tries to endure endlessness, as in a colorful globe stunningly different from the gloomy landscape that surrounds it.

Because I had engaged myself in determining a divine law for the average duration of a dream, with my eyes open, in an imaginary symbolized by the white and black colors of a restrictive space, where the escape became a form of mysticism, I did not notice how much I had strayed away from myself, from happiness, to taste a small part of the life of a solar system in which all seven of its planets were similar to Earth.

Actually, I was looking for a true epic of the human spirit engaged in the assault of the enigmas of the universe, a scientific value of uniqueness assumed by the dynamism of the stimulated expression of the color called "Glow in the dark".

Leadership: Can you frame your consciousness within the fixed boundaries of a painting that can resize its content through a fine modeling of the intensity with which you express your obsession areas more or less travelled?

The essence of my work fed more from an occult reality, that is, hard to imagine, perhaps only intuited, being able to make time to move in the direction of the deepest experiences that I can reveal to myself "As in heaven, so on earth", In terms of the ratio of belonging to a distinct space-artistic environment. These experiences piercing through thoughts tended towards a spiritual renewal of the world, to a retrieval of the essences of the human being threatened with degradation.

A journey into the heart of a fantastic and silent world, amid a dialogue with seemingly impossible things, a single feeling frozen in immortality made me become the main character of a monograph dedicated to the peculiar kingdom of God. The existential level difference at the level of dimensional parallelism was left only to the perspective of reading an infinity of possible previous readings identified by a subjective creative approach.

May I be forgiven for the mistake of daring to make such a comparison, but the subject of a surreal painting was at hand, framed between miracle and mirage. A magical power blinded my eyes, if I could not see what a wonderful face, what bright eyes, and what frightening body could color a particular portion of a precisely delimited celestial sphere, The Constellation of Tatyana.

Almost certainly, I was able to frame my consciousness within the fixed limits of a painting that could resize its contents through a fine change of intensity with which I expressed my obsession for ares more or less travelled, where man still hopes, for millennia, to find out if someone, up there, exists as a physical entity, and not just as a spiritual one.

My only God is the alchemical language of the universe, the living flesh of a thought that strives to reveal everything a priori.

Leadership: Is the dimension of your reality an event that is intended to be just as many moments of re-evaluation of a creativity that can be deciphered by the destiny and work of a higher mind that the universe has given?

The cause of a poetic imagination, metaphorically perceived as a refuge to my universal responsibilities, focuses primarily on the living matter of a solar system that once again illuminates the transgression of boundaries between existential space and fictional space. Who knows how to turn letters into an important word to say in the resounding events, also knows how to turn a star somewhere into a boundless universe in a timeless clock.

With clear wrench the heart, my confession ends its journey here, among the atoms of a time that is required to be recovered in immortality but imperiously experienced in a mortal world. The spectrum of astral guide envelops me like a breeze coming from afar which passes through the universal consciousness and returns to a fixed point, reminded sometimes within the mysterious contents of this world under the name of Cyrano de Bergerac:

"When you talk to yourself, you can clearly see the attributes of each thing you meditate on. Appearing or disappearing, they portray it to those who look not at a string of words, but in a history of images of all of their thoughts."

The expressive force of surrealist painting aims to acquire the reality of the artist to give life to a parallel universe in which immortality is possible as long as it becomes the expression of spiritual belonging to a unitary Whole: self-understanding.

The Constellation Of Tatyana is the revelation of a divine immanence during a dream that is demanded at the artistic level, seeming so real that you often confuse yourself with a role that only the universe can give you. That of making a connection – obviously spiritual – between the ephemeral and the infinite, through the delicacy of a lyrical description.

Contemporary Sensibility Reinterpreted In Modern Vision

On April 16, 2012

The source of the artist's creation, seen as a testimony of a distant past, can represent an object of his attention in providing a unitary improvisational context.

Eisenstein asks the composer to write the music for this episode before filming. He shows him the drawings of the frames that he will shoot, explains the ideas for the construction of the episode, the confrontation between the two camps... He then asks the composer if he won't be able to use old Catholic songs. Prokofiev listens to him carefully, follows the sketches, then communicates his own thoughts. He was also tempted to use the music of the era. He researched it. But he found that she had become alien to contemporary sensibility.

The music that Catholics probably sang frantically 700 years ago leaves you cold today, regardless. So something else has to be done. And Prokofiev's intention meets, in fact, organically with Eisenstein's conception. The composer thinks it is more appropriate to play the music "not in the form in which it sounded at the time of the battle on the ice, but in the form in which we imagine it today". The same thing with regard to Russian music. So your music must be written in a language with which our auditor is familiar, but he will have to be cleverly deceived into taking it for music of the distant past.

Leadership: How should your creation reposition its sensibility to become an object of public attention, so as to express the three R's: "reality, revival and reconstitution"?

The manifestations of an artistic creation, such as cinematographic art, suddenly settle into a conception of the "neo-realist" type and are usually empirical. Screenwriters describe them as the "3Rs" (reality, revival, reconstruction). Precocious conceptions in which ideas gradually evolve in intensity and reflexive extension, may be masked by the depth of sensibility with which the public receives them. Especially the degree of reproduction of emotions from reality in the film, through music and image, is a good indicator of quality and the possibility of resonance, a fact that signifies a certain authenticity.

The abolition of any musical or visual sensibility, through the appearance of repetitive patterns, determines a certain rigidity in the narrative, being a sign of seriousness in terms of originality. Just as, in a sick person, skin cyanosis that does not disappear under pressure signals the disappearance of the viability of the skin in the ischemic area, in the same way in cinematography the lack of originality leads to the loss of public interest. Let's not forget that in art, adapting historical elements to contemporary tastes can revitalize old themes in a surprising way.

In order to achieve a quality creation in cinematography, it is essential to collaborate between two opposing minds: one focused on sensitivity, the other focused on analysis and details. The initial creative planning, in terms of the intelligent way of composing a script, establishes the major ideas and outlines the basic construction of a realistic image against the proposed artistic vision. When it comes to directing in cinematography, each component, music or the flow of scenes, must be harmoniously integrated to create a system of narrative elements that work as a unified whole.

Leadership: Does the authenticity of your creation depend on how emotions are reconstituted in a conception that capitalizes on reflective intensity, on the plane of a vision capable of becoming a testimony of your inner strength?

A talented director believes that the intention of a cinematic creation is to open a new perspective on reality, being a reason to aspire to a higher artistic level. It should also be added that in cinematography, a collaboration between two seemingly contradictory approaches is essential: artistic sensibility and detailed analysis. Initial creative planning requires clearly defining major ideas and establishing a framework that supports a realistic artistic vision, integrating elements such as music and scene flow into a coherent narrative system.

On the other hand, directing is a strategic process in which each component must come together harmoniously to provide a new perspective on reality. A talented director can reach a higher artistic level through collaborative exploration of ideas, detailed analysis of narrative structure, and integration of a diverse range of elements to form a unified whole.

In this context, every detail counts, and the collaboration between sensitivity and analysis offers an opening to a narrative unity that allows the creation of a complex and innovative cinematic work. The artistic vision thus finds its expression in a well-planned system that integrates the components in a harmonious way and aspires to a higher artistic level.

Can you create a realistic picture in which its archetypal value lies in the faithful reconstruction of emotions and in rewarding the audience with a scenario of artistic relevance?

The contemporary sensibility reinterpreted in the modern vision aims at that depth of human emotions that can create a genuine connection between the audience and the artistic scenario. Moreover, it facilitates the discovery of a deeper narrative and an artistic approach that enriches the viewers' experience.

Continuation Of The Last Doll

On March 31, 2014

Let yourself driven by all that you can be, regardless the current context where change happens, following your strongest emotions.

Eponine and Azelma did not look at Cosette. She was the same as a dog to them. Instead of playing she always had to work for Missis Thenadrier. They had a doll, which they turned over and over on their knees with all sorts of joyous chatter. From time to time Cosette raised her eyes from her knitting, and watched their play with a melancholy air.

The doll of the Thenardier sisters was very much faded, very old, and much broken; but it seemed none the less admirable to Cosette, who had never had a doll in her life, a real doll, to make use of the expression which all children will understand. While Eponine and Azelma were bundling up the doll, Cosette, on her side, had dressed up her sword. That done, she laid it in her arms, and sang to it softly, to lull it to sleep.

As birds make nests out of everything, so children make a doll out of anything which comes to hand. The doll is one of the most imperious needs and, at the same time, one of the most charming instincts of feminine childhood. To care for, to clothe, to deck, to dress, to undress, to redress, to teach, scold a little, to rock, to dandle, to lull to sleep, to imagine that something is some one,— therein lies the whole woman's future. While dreaming and chattering, making tiny outfits, and baby clothes, while sewing little gowns, and corsages and bodices, the child grows into a young girl, the young girl into a big girl, the big girl into a woman. The first child is the continuation of the last doll.

*So Cosette had made herself a doll out of the sword. What a sublime thing is hope for a child who knew of nothing else but disdain. **

Leadership: Can you extend your influence over those life experiences which allow the awareness of your evolutionary process, without becoming part of a single wish?

The ambition to create memorable things and take into account their contribution to the present and future, respecting the persistence and acknowledging man's will to prioritize his emotional needs, deserves a loyalty vote from the people around, the top score from the great existential jury. But the desire to be dependent on one thing, no matter what that thing, juggles with the ability of consciousness to be different from the rest of the world, which not only attracts appreciations and praises, because man becomes the slave of a dream that does not require thought and a special understanding of the surrounding world.

We can also consider this event under different point of view. For example, only under the infinite variety of emotions and thoughts, the man, dependent on his young spirit, keeps his position for an appreciation accompanied by productivity "incentives" which count more than a thousand words, be them written or spoken. The doll is not just an object of desire, an aspiration to happiness, a motivation of one's own struggle for a meaningful existence, but it becomes a manifestation of the virtue of being generous with your fellow men, of understanding and of helping them show humanity and compassion.

But what happens when you are greeted by an experience that dominates your imagination and dreams forever, transforming your personality into the slave of a single desire? On the one hand, this may exclude previous work, a careful study of the values that constitute the "ethical bone" of your personality.

Once you have fulfilled your desire and become her slave, your personality will be perceived from another point of view: its main characteristics, which we wish to observe in the qualities of the leader, are to be abolished in terms of self-sufficiency. It is like when you reach a high degree of wealth, absolute control of all resources, that you begin to imagine that you are the master of the world. To one who reigns with self-righteous authority but without credibility.

Leadership: Do the external references that complement your virtues or prejudices correspond with your hidden need to feel superior in the face of a beginning of life that idealizes a fictious sources of satisfaction with little chance of survival?

What you store inside your being, especially that sublime old tremor which tilts over a lot of things during the curve of time, if not even any existent reasonable norm, completing something good and beautiful within you, will find itself in everything you achieve in the position of a leader.

Only by being aware of the dimension of the identity that tests you when you suddenly find yourself in dramatic or dark situation, only if you gather all your inner emotions and you let them out wholly, will you be able to budge from their place mercy and acceptation of a life without horizon.

Thus, there is one factor that can take away your value, reducing leadership to nothingness and ripping off any kind of humanity: the disdain of believing in your own feelings, denying the past, restraining the child within you.

Which favors the manifestations of the individual, justified compared to the specific duties of leaders filled with the lucidity of higher perspectives, are those events or circumstances which allow the awareness of the evolutionary process they go through.

Starting from working with himself in order to recover the dimension of his being, continuing with the effort invested in order to give his best, the leader will be able to complete his internal "product", also known as conscience. And to personalize it with new ways of expressing himself and of understanding the world with interpretations of reality from a different perspective, with roles that highlight his inner beauty and grant value to others.

Leadership contributes to shaping a higher perspective on things received through a lucid consciousness, but cannot justify its effects when the object of your desires becomes the extension of a self-image of affection that does not follow any other criteria than aesthetic and artificial.

The Continuation of the Last Doll highlights the reality of those past events which influence your evolution as a more and more "humane" leader, in your own benefit, and in the benefit of others, of the world you live in, in comparison with the hope you always had in you: to be free, to live by your own rule, to follow your dreams, to lead your own life.

Cosa Sei

On September 05, 2019

Leadership is the miracle of a creation that can at any time engage in explaining the link between what remains unchanged over time and what comes as an enrichment of the concrete experience transposed into a surrealist vision.

Whenever I am in the presence of roses, which the writers so often contemplate as a storytelling show, which the artists raise to the rank of a muse of the most perfect creation of God, I achieve with great aplomb, with spirit of symbolic interpretation of nature, con quella finezza di dettagli, to put me in the position of experiencing a karmic resonance, a state of grace that unites hearts through love. Even the roses feel the need to speak, in a quiet voice, through the words emerging from the sweet comfort of a sweet gratitude for an eternally creative look.

Art is present where the roses reveal their entire coloristic force, purposely penetrating the viewer's soul with the meaning that gives the expressivity of a reality captured in the life of the artist's canvas, worked with diligent hands. The mysterious life of the old portraits, the life from the great book of nature, the material expression of some aesthetic or cultural fixations, passed through the fine, soft and velvety brush of the creator of multi-universes, certifies the potential with which we have been invested since birth: the grace to be a gift to the many faces of creation.

Leadership: What is the characteristic of the picture in the story of your life that can become a manifestation of the possibilities of switching to a form of expressing the most vivid emotions, in order to define authenticity based on the impression of improvisation?

Here is a lady full of naturalness in the tangled maze of the park's paths, which the elegance of manners praises as an admirer of simple things, a dreamer of an ideal world. It is enchanting by the attractiveness and mystery it unleashes gracefully, as a kind of confirmation of the delicacy of emotions floating in infinite space. Here is what I like most about her: she is alone. Non lo sai neanche tu cosa sei. She blushes like a rose when she feels the presence of someone around her. The pronounced color of her lips, which sketch a slight smile, nevertheless offers room for maneuver to the one who knows how to notice a chance when it appears:

- Forgive me, miss, it is clear that you are quite fond of roses. You are perhaps a painter, are you not?

The discreet smile, the glamorous look, and her warm tone response, are the first sign of goodwill oriented to develop an open and perceptive dialogue, complementary to the surrounding space, becoming movement, gesture, interpretation of a work of art. The characteristic of the painting that no one can decipher in this context is that it can be customized according to the preferences for the thematic idea of "Why Not Otherwise?"

- No, I'm not a painter. I would have liked to be, maybe a long time ago, but I chose a different path. Unfortunately. Do you think I lost sight of something important?

Leadership: To what extent do you follow your passion to create experiences and sketch memories, in order to convey a visual image that has the potential to cause an astonishing reaction to the reality that is stubbornly set to withstand the challenges of the present?

In the novel "Exuvii", writer Simona Popescu helps me make possible the interpretation of the rose by the awareness of a carefully defined identity, ogni istante anche adesso così, through the simplicity superimposed on an apparent fragility of a confessional order, through the mastery that transforms emotional states into attitudes of aesthetic resonance:

"It is an unknown presence, not knowing itself. In it you discover the beauty about which one cannot speak, the beauty of the mute, the immortal. It is the beauty of the one who does not love himself, because he does not know this kind of love, the beauty of the one who does not know what beauty is. It's the beauty of the indifferent, her eyes fixate you, until they intimidate you, but in a different way than a foreign look would intimidate you. That look that is yours is not yours. You move away, look once more, in passing, and always see someone else in the same man."

The rose is the impulse of a momentary inspiration, the witness of a creation of great originality transformed into love. Senza te, io cosa farei? For the first time in my life, I knew that the conjunctions in which you can make comparisons or similarities are not accidental. I was with someone for whom the rose means, on the thin line of melancholy, the identification with another being similar to me, full of warmth and beauty, making possible the obsessive love between music and artist, between the aesthetic sense and the overwhelming force of the memory. Sei qualcosa di più !

Somehow, it seemed to me that I was experiencing a feeling of déjà vu amidst a picture whose amazing story, full of charm and sensuality, stretches from eternity to eternity, I was so emotional, with such a sublime effect on my heart and spirit, as when you are in front of a secret that pressures to be communicated in any part of the world only through the symbolic, expressive, nonverbal language. Starmi vicino !

My passion is art, the beauty to describe the similarity between that which happens to me and the intensity of the color red. I follow it to the last brush stroke, to the intersection with the metaphor of primordiality, the particular science of expressivity where concepts come together and form a figurative language. E mi ricordi cosa perderei nel perderti !

Leadership: How do you present your creation from the point of view of the "experience beyond the first sight", when you experience the feeling of the self as a place of meeting with your mirror image?

E mi fai innamorare di te. There was something sensitive about her which serves to remind me something different about myself, precisely the fact that that which leads the artist's life to be able to fairly accurately judge his work of art is the fascination for the "discreet hero" condition of a love story. Alla fine, puoi incontrare migliaia di persone senza che nessuna di queste attiri la tua attentione. E poi incontri la persona giusta e tutto cambia.

We walked with pleasure, between dialogues and smiles, in this area of nature's beauty. The world wasn't paying attention to us, we weren't paying attention to the rest of the world. I was living this moment through the absorption of images, the reciprocity of sneaky looks and the game of small gestures. I was talking about all the possible things the moon and the sun were not missing from the version of our reality. Nobody counts the time when the mind begins to dream, nobody realizes a sui-generis coordination between the perceived, the real and the imaginary when the affection of the loved person must win.

With gratitude for accomplishments, hope for the future, the roses looked at us with admiration and greeted us with a smile on their lips, as if they were living our story, so simple, so endearing, so well done. They seemed to bow before our reverence to the life by love, in the content of a game metaphorical elements, colors, sounds and smells, in which the spatiality inherent to the artistic image painted with a tendency to monumentality.

Leadership: Does the intensity of expression contained by your own creation manifest itself as a result of a metaphorical transfer of meaning favored largely by the proximity of the need to align to a different context for the construction of the image of "a double of the self"?

While walking idly, in a sweet holding of hands, I remembered an excerpt from Never-ending Story, a comparison that the rose shares with its ability to retain its shape for a long time. The hidden meaning of the rose is highlighted with the creative gaze of the union between the experience of treating the human figure from the profile of a mystical symbolism, with the idea of a metaphorical, spatial-temporal universe. Me and her. We were like two sphinxes that guard the Gate of the Great Mystery.

"The gaze of a sphinx is something completely different from the gaze of any being. We all undertake something when we gaze. We see the world. But a sphinx sees nothing. In a sense, it is blind. Instead, its eyes radiate something. And you know what sphinx's eyes radiate? All the riddles of the world. That is why the two saints are constantly staring at each other. For the gaze of a sphinx can only be endured by another sphinx. And now imagine what happens to the one who dares to enter the exchange of views of the two. He freezes on the spot and cannot move until he has solved all the riddles of the world ! "

From here you get an overview of the temptation to merge two pure consciences into one, by inciting the imagination of an artist who shares with others, through a palpitation of the soul, a delicate, mysterious world, open to a synesthetic perception in the context of a moment of deep reflection. At least in my case, the relationship between creative activity and the enjoyment of works of art appears as a desire to be in the vicinity of a form of artistic expression through comparisons, metaphors, symbols.

Therefore, the expression that my creation contains is a revelation of the existence experienced in a parallel universe, in the astonishing scene of a dreamlike story that I will never be able to separate from, which I will gladly remember over the years.

The great masterpiece of art has as its central point the image you want immortalized in a picture of great refinement, about a story you desire as if it were real, when you experience the feeling of unity of style and taste as a place of meeting with yourself in another being.

Cosa Sei is the name of a painting whose theme is that part of nature that delights us with elegance, through the range of varied and vibrant colors, inspired by a story that is written only at the end of a Déjà-Vu experience.

Create A Competent Team

On April 09, 2009

Exceed the limiting barriers of your knowledge of leading, releasing your great potential to be "durable".

He succeeded to bring the company on a top position because he chose the right team.

Since George M. he was named general manager he wanted to create a team that is capable to obtain good results and to contribute at the development of the company. So, the team consisted of a accountant, a jurist, an economist, an engineer, a programmer, a technician, a layer and a very good sales agent. One day he convoke everybody at a discussion and after he outlined the objectives, he told them:

- With certainty we will confront problems, we will have a lot of difficulties because of the crisis, and I won't be able to do everything by myself. Even if I have a practical experience of 8 years in leading, there are still things I don't know or at which I am not good enough. This is why I chose you, experts in different domains of activity, to complete one another.

Leadership: Being in a position that allows for a new configuration of your preference for collective action, does it hurt your ability to make far too exaggerated claims to what you are not able to appreciate at the right value?

Forming a team from different people, with abilities, talents and practical knowledge is an excellent method which proved its efficiency many times. A lot of companies have developed starting from an idea that two or more people with different abilities put it in practice. The only thing that put them together was the common aim, the wish of overreaching their own limits, of obtaining performances and professional satisfactions and of affirming.

You and your team are like two runners before the start of a long race. You have so many things to put in place that everyone must become accustomed to the pace of each other.

Just as a runner so that to become efficient, must run a lot before reaching to overcome the state of normality - so do you, together with your team, must overcome the limiting habits of the perceptions about the way, in which you have to synchronize your pace of development, by releasing your great potential to be "durable" that is to produce a large amount of value to the company for an unlimited period.

You can, at any point, damage your ability to advance far too exaggerated claims to what you are not able to appreciate at the right value, when people who follow you in the direction of impulse to unity can no longer resist doing a job that does not give a character durable to their desire to live in the name of a high ideal called "freedom". Such as freedom of speech or freedom of conscience.

Leadership: Does your intention to unite many different mentalities into one thing, open the way to a new perspective of understanding man in a context of mutual accountability that confirms the interest in promoting a new revolutionary concept?

A particular feature was highlighted as the most valuable in a leader: his ability to form a team. However, just as the blood clots can cause fever and even death, so the mistakes in choosing team members can trigger a wide range of "infections" that result in the appearance of breaches in the immune system of the company.

You could never reach a superior level if you try to do everything by yourself or if you have a team with uninstructed people, that have a lack of passion and act chaotic. Therefore if you want to go well it is necessary to create a functional and dynamic team, who can have results in the company you lead.

The members of your team can offer you suggestions on how the strategy of the company can be improved or modified in crisis situations, they can propose solutions for solving the problems, suggestions which you can accept or not. But one thing is certain: if those from your team are specialized in only one domain of activity they are limited in many ways, especially in finding solutions in difficult situations.

People with the same kind of thinking, with the same views and that has the same limitations, are more likely to be awkward along their careers. Therefore, in a team, people with different mentalities are preferable, and each one can account for the work of others. At least that is how I see an ideal of synergy.

A revolutionary concept promoted by teamwork must be a continuity between the objectivity with which the leader analyzes people's performance to reproduce exactly his thinking and the subjectivity with which each one sees the decisions he takes before and after the hope of reaching a certain goal.

The success of a company is not only because of the fact that the manager has a team that is young, qualified, loyal and capable to sustain him every time he needs. The success is due to the manner in which he and his team succeed to solve fast and competent the problems. If people have different knowledge and abilities they sure have different opinions and so they have a lot more chances to find good ideas and efficient solutions. It's important that they see the problem in a different manner, from different angles.

The physicist Oliver Wendell Holmes wrote: "Many ideas develop better when they are transferred in another mind, than in the one that came from. What seems the shadow of the night in a mind turns into morning glory in another mind."

If people have different abilities they find more possibilities to solve the problems. Each person can suggest ideas that others have missed, and for a person may seem a motif of worry for the other may seem a huge opportunity.

Exceed the limiting barriers of your knowledge of leading, releasing your great potential to be "durable".You can be durable in business only if you form a competent team.

Leadership is a pole of stability and predictability in a context of vicinity between individuals, because it starts from a man who communicates his vision and continues with new experiences that everyone shares from the perspective of a unique intelligence.

Create A New Vision Of The Future

On April 24, 2009

Contour your vision so that the road that you traverse towards performance to have the particularity of being excellent.

At one point in the movie "Slumdog Millionaire (2008)" the two brothers, Salim and Jamal, are meeting again after a long period of time on the upper floor of a building under construction. While talking about their past and admiring the view from that part of the town, Salim shows to Jamal on the horizon a certain area and tells him:

- That used to be our slum. Can you believe that? We used to live right there, man. Now, it's all business. India is at the center of the world now. And I, I am at the center of the center.

Triumph in leadership is the spontaneous and faithful reflection of the inner image that you create in the process of evolution to reach the level of "center" of the world you want to represent.

The future is born today, but it shows tomorrow. Moreover, it does not always show itself as we expect to be, as we understand to meet and to prefigure it. However, as someone observed, the present is the one circumscribing the horizon of expectations, with which we look upon the future.

Your ability of projecting yourself into the future and visualizing what it prepares to you, it is like a tenant looking for a new house. However, once he found the house that can provide him some comfort, he refuses to pay rent.

The vision begins with the road that you traverse in searching for "home" – of that place from the future, allowing you to reduce the distance from what makes you feel despised and disoriented, to what makes you feel fulfilled. However, if you refuse to pay "rent" for your stay there, then your future will not be able to overcome the past full of failures, and will not be able to accommodate your most optimistic expectations – and, in this case you will return to where you left, or you will always be on the move like an eternal traveler.

The only experience at a height you deserve to try and which you can afford belongs to the environment that educated your model of perception of the world.

The road that you traverse towards performance has the particularity of having an exceptional value "counted" at the value of a house that often does not belong to you, but to all those who have contributed to its raising. And your success is characterized by an extraordinary consideration of the "cost of your host" in a stable environment during your development.

Leadership requires you to outline your vision so that no matter your budget, and how spacious you want this living space to be, you only opt for the tendencies of expanding your own autonomy.

The future starts and evolves depending on how you manage to exceed the established and permanently measured cost limits obtained at every square meter of the common space of your investment preferences and experiences of a "tenant".

Take into consideration your own pace of development without reducing the costs of your training and your development in time.

A leader must be capable of prefiguring the future first for himself, afterwards being able to express clearly and understandable his ultimate goal, the possible options and the best modalities of application and solving the future plans and projects in order to improve the company activities, including the people's lives.

It is not enough to set goals in order to be accomplished, you must be able to intuit what changes will occur in the business environment, and to be able to influence those changes on behalf of the company, not in its detriment. Moreover, you should also be able to change under way the company's strategy when things take an unfavorable turn. As a leader you must be a genuine "pivot" of the change.

Leadership: Do you experience the miracle of a vision that highlights the fact that changes can be implemented within a reality that is popularizing your offer through a message of the type: "Final Decision" ?

The one who does not change the vision over future and the direction of moving, will forever remain a spectator at a cheap and unprofessional show.

The final decision, which in practice implies choosing an alternative to exploit your own autonomy from several possible alternatives, in terms of how you fulfill the future, can be viewed through the lens of what you will become, not through the lens of what you are today. This decision gives consistency to a mind that thinks the pace of a world seen from the height of the sight of an almost fantastic journey, initiative on an imaginary of horizontality, synonymous to a path towards the edges of the horizon, an imaginary of ascension and one of descent.

Without a doubt, Brian Tracy was not wrong when he said: "Every day, what you choose, and what you think is what you become." What we imagine is what we see and what you see is what we become. In other words, our future depends on how we imagine it.

In the movie "Slumdog Millionaire (2008)" of which I was telling you in the beginning, the entrepreneurs who saw an opportunity to give another destination to that slums - by transforming it into a residential area, of offices, had only to gain. They had aspired to a different future from that which had imagined the locals.

Leadership is born when you look down from the height at which you assign a unique meaning to your journey, beyond yourself, beyond what this world gives.

The one, who will have a clear vision of the future and will work hard, will manage to transform it into reality. On the other hand, those who do not have a clear vision of the future will probably be as stupefied as Salim at the sight of the change: "Can you believe it? Can you imagine that? ... "

Are you capable of perceiving the change before it occurs? Do you have the ability of projecting yourself in the future and visualizing what it prepares? Do you contour your vision so that the road that you traverse towards performance to have the particularity of being excellent?

Create Beneficial Relationships

On February 09, 2009

Keep your percentage of credibility, without transforming your impulses of setting the capacity of relating with other people into a self-destructive tension.

Tired of the not respected promises of a computer company's employees, a 28-year-old young man took courage and went like a shot at the company's office where, after a lot of insistences, an employee led him to the general manager's office:

- For two weeks I'm waiting for sending of my laptop, which I ordered on the Internet, and for which I paid online by card, and nor till today I haven't received it.

The manager, bothered by the "nerve" of the unsatisfied young man, replied:

- This is your problem. Please contact the production department, because I am not the one who resolves these problems. The fifth door on the left. Have a nice day !

Leadership: Do you test your success rate according to how you create a memorable experience in negative nuances for others in an additional example of the "everyone for himself" principle?

A weakness and a risk factor. The way, in which manager treated the customer represents a weak point and even a risk factor for the company which he leads. For it takes only one unsatisfied customer, which would make negative publicity of the services offered by the company, on the Internet forums or in the local newspapers, and here's how the company loses a lot of customers.

In fact, to be honest, the biggest problem is not of the customer, but of the manager, who has not taken the proper measures, and did not want to get involved in solving the problem, perhaps knowing that his subordinates are not making their job aright. The really serious problem is of the manager when, after to his company was made a negative publicity, suddenly decreases the number of customers. Furthermore, it is indeed a big problem if the company finally gets to go bankrupt ... from a single unhappy customer.

Leadership to which minds always focus on profit tend towards, from everything that combines with a constructive approach and balanced even in relationships with potential rivals, is how you present yourself in a totally awkward situation from which escape is the foundation of your character: Integrity, ethics and moral firmness.

Character is the door that opens with that key that makes people believe that they are the exception to any principle that alienates them and forces them to be something other than they are.

Leadership: Does your reputation have value only if it is gained for something great, or even when it is diminished at the stage of correcting a deviation from its own standards and principles?

The attitude adopted by you in the crowded situations determines the difference between the maximum and minimum value of your leadership. The more your attitude deviates from the rules established by your own professional status, the more intense will be the erosion process that affects your relationship with others.

Reducing the value of your leadership is the result of a process of erosion of your own performance, which fails to meet those "templates" that you have created - essential to be accepted by others. It is like shaping a fantastic mask, and using it whenever you do not know how to solve a problem in order to divert your true identity. Your inner resources still remain there, but are guided in another direction - and thus your attitude has to suffer.

If you want to keep your percentage of credibility, do not transform your own impulses of setting the capacity of relating with other people into a self-destructive "tension".

Just as a digital camera offers the possibility of transforming the RAW images into JPEG, so the resistance degree of your leadership should offer you the opportunity of changing your attitude, but without breaking the boundaries that separate you from others. In other words, you have to fit in their boundaries of certainty, by adjusting your attitude according to your leadership evolution, but also according to their requirements.

Give up the though attitude, because it cannot be tolerated for long. Such an attitude does not only get you nowhere, but in time, it compromises your credibility and weakens you inside.

Leadership: Do you adopt an attitude of superiority that contradicts your essence through a manifestation of professional conduct that has value only if it is made public through a comparison of what the world expects of you?

Analyzing the two human categories in terms of two types of personalities: one that knows how to promote and sell its product through its attitude and one refractory to any reprehension or adverse opinion, and walking that line of principledness up to the last consequence, we see an evolution of the leadership direction in a less equitable manner.

We are dealing, therefore, with an alert, but regressive evolution in terms of awareness of those improper aspects under the influence of the leader, fully assessed by other people, which must be stopped before bringing leadership on the verge of a blockage.

And in the background, we deal with an improper development of the masked man. Although professionally developed, this kind of leader remains frozen in a careless immobility opposite to the dead end that other individuals who depend on him reach, but only as long as he keeps the curtain raised – as long as the company he leads is not affected by a business dilemma.

But over time, due to such an impulsive leader, we will definitely assist to an involution, to a distancing towards the awareness of the depth phenomenon called solidarity, without which the company will have a hard time keeping up.

How do you intercept a ball passed by your opponents: by a forced dispossession or a successful interception? In terms of leadership, this can be interpreted as follows. Whenever your customer returns dissatisfied, do not deprive him of his right to challenge your credibility. Be open to any new form of cooperation and any version of compromise without altering your personality, image and relationship with a quality leadership "inspired" only by the presence of a close connection type "Them - You".

Leadership: Do you contribute to activating the response from others through an attitude of understanding a way of gaining respect that involves addiction to a picture that gradually changes into another image?

How would you have proceeded if you would be instead of the manager? If you are truly a professional, you would have listened to the customer's complaints. Then, perhaps you would have apologized to him (even if you are the manager) and you would be personally involved in solving the problem, knowing that if you manage to win his admiration and respect, he will appeal and a second time to your services and, perhaps, will tell to his other friends about how nice you have served him.

What I want to say is that if you provide your help and you are cooperating with all the customers, you will be able to create a friendly relationship, beneficial to both sides, while a cold attitude, lack of involvement or indifference, cannot bring you any kind of benefit. You must be an artist who knows how to listen and then to come to their meetings. No matter how many departments exist in your company, a customer who wants at any cost to speak to you, it means that he has a quite serious reason. Moreover, remember the fact that your customers are always right. And any problem of your customer is actually your problem.

Keep your percentage of credibility, without transforming your impulses of setting your capacity of relating with other people into a self-destructive tension.

An image that gradually changes into another image targets a deceptive attitude manifested by a chosen openness to your fellow man, but which in reality only cherishes the opinion of evil attributed to an ignorance that cannot be forgiven.

Creating An Authentic Universe By Recruiting Characters From Reality

On April 20, 2012

Adapting to the environment in which actors are sought makes it easier to identify the right people for the roles.

He started looking for models again, because in his conception the whole film had to be "type". Maxim Strauch, the main person in charge this time with finding them, searched the streets, the pubs, the night shelters. It always adapts to the environment. To recruit the unemployed, he dressed the same as them, walked around shamelessly and spoke to them in their language to convince them. He was looking for the dignitaries who were supposed to appear in the film among the officials. It was hard to convince everyone. If he succeeded, an assistant photographed the chosen one, drew up a file. A thick notebook, thus illustrated, was the result of this long search. Eisenstein consulted it, annotated it, thus making a first selection.

Those detained were called by the director. Sometimes he got excited about a girl, but the beard the man wore bothered him. He was asking him to shave. But the thing was not possible without the prior consent of his wife and then... the arduous search for models continued. Even his close collaborators were used for this purpose and thus Tisse appeared in "October" as a German officer.

Leadership: In your creative journey, what catalyst of deep introspection would help you build an iconic character that transcends the inevitability of fate?

The biggest difficulty was finding it, of course, in the film. The idea of the actor was eliminated from the start by Eisenstein who wanted the presence of a man with a real likeness and not faked by makeup, which, he thought, would have contributed to the unnaturalness of the appearance. Lenin's Alter-Ego was searched for a long time in many cities, in factories, institutions, on the streets. At last it was found in the person of a man named Nikandrov. He had nothing of Lenin, except his facial features, which could not hide his inner emptiness, the primitivism of his intellect. He was taught to walk like Lenin, to move like him, and the training continued until the characteristic gestures of Lenin were imposed on him.

So, in the authentic universe of film production, recruiting real-life characters requires rigorous selection, just like organizing a team for automation projects. Each photographic type of character must possess specific traits to fit into the director's vision, the entire film being, in essence, a meticulous orchestration. Like project managers, film directors must carefully recruit and ensure the adaptation of each individual to the created environment. A successful production depends on collaboration and timing, as each character contributes to the fulfillment of a unified cinematic vision.

Leadership: How can adapting the approach to the environment in which the real characters are found help to gather information relevant to your artistic vision?

When creating an authentic universe in film and recruiting characters from reality, clearly defining typologies is crucial. First, he guides the team in collecting relevant data and artistically designing the characters. After identifying the main concept, you need to divide the characters into categories: those ready to play immediately (training set), those that require adjustments and training (development set), and those used to evaluate the final result (test set).

In the process of recruiting real characters, Maxim Strauch always adapts his approach to their environment, collecting photos and information so that the director has as faithful a representation of the typology as possible. Photographed characters often required additional triaging, and Eisenstein ensured that the final result reflected an authentic, life-like universe.

For the film to be successful, the types must be representative of the real-life cast, otherwise the actors' performance will not be natural. Just as in "machine learning" the data must be representative of the real cast, in the film the presence of a man with a real likeness, and not counterfeited by makeup, contributes to the authenticity of his appearance in the film.

Adapting to the environment of each character helps to achieve the most faithful representation in the script so that the audience can better connect with the story and the characters.

Creating an authentic universe by recruiting real-life characters is very important because it adds depth and believability to the story, giving the audience a more immersive and truthful experience. Moreover, it helps highlight the cultural, social and historical nuances of each character, giving the film a distinct and memorable character.

Creating Special Relations Between The Show And The Spectators

On December 14, 2012

The perfect synchronization between direction and artistic expression is crucial to achieve a correct interpretation of the vision, along the lines of a deep resonance with the great collective soul.

The entire Wagnerian opera - whose piano reduction we find annotated by Eisenstein's hand - is passed through the filter of the director's grandiose vision. Rising through the directorial expression to the hyperbolic dimensions of the Wagnerian myth, Eisenstein composes a monumental mise-en-scene, in perfect harmony with the opera's music. The decor made according to his sketches accompanies his dynamics - mountains rise or fall, for example - the gestures and actions of the characters, as well as the costumes, also sketched by him, underline his directorial ideas.

The chorus is organically integrated, in original formulas, to the dramatic material of the libretto that Eisenstein transposes - in the purest sense of the word - onto the stage. The choir, through movement and even through costuming, participates in the action, becoming the expression of the thought or feeling of each character, being sometimes the echo of a feeling, sometimes the reaction against it.

In fact, the director Serghei Eisenstein tries to create special relations between the show and the spectators. This time not through the means used in the theater in his youth, but through unique compositions of space, sound and light.

Leadership: Can you use the spontaneity of your creative approach to quickly tap into audience "reactions" by integrating the general features of the settings and artistic media?

The structures of information passed through the filter of a director's vision are essential for the effective organization of a composition in which sound and light intertwine. For example, the setting and artistic means are frequently used to quickly access the "reactions" of the spectators watching a performance of inner feelings and gestures. As a playwright, at the same time, the director makes himself known through the plays that fit into the vision of postmodernist works. The tools - formulas and rules used in the composition of the scenario, are thought out step by step for the creation of dialogues and stage effects, and their effectiveness is measured by the changing temporal complexity of the settings.

Directors must deeply understand these concepts in order to develop robust cinematic creations and performances to create special relationships between the show and the audience. As in computer science, testing and debugging are also critical processes in the development life cycle of a film composition, ensuring that the form and content of the story work correctly and without errors through moving images.

Leadership: Have you ever tried to capture the emotional state of those around you through a permanent change of settings, which follow each other quickly, while avoiding the trap of inauthentic compositions?

Therefore, the physiology of the performance is essential for understanding the functioning of the cinematographic work and the stage. For example, the monumental mise-en-scene, which includes the set and costumes, carries the director's ideas to all the gestures and actions of the characters. Directorial expression and hyperbolic dimensions are regulated by the filter of the grand vision and can be influenced by various factors, including the dynamics of the opera's music and the emotional state of the spectators. Diagnostic tests, such as the echo of a feeling and the reaction against the feeling, are used to assess the health of the performance and to detect anomalies in the compositions of space, sound and light.

At the same time, the correct interpretation of the director's expression and the hyperbolic dimensions of the staging can reveal possible anomalies or imbalances in the stage arrangements, vocal scores and lighting effects, just as programmers must detect errors and defects in the source code of applications. These complex analyzes outline an artistic "treatment plan", improving the coherence and visual-auditory impact of the show.

As in software development, where managers monitor the progress of the project, constant evaluation of the gestures and actions performed by the actors ensures the artistic consistency and overall depth of the performance. Symbolic meanings, character intentions, and narrative continuity are conveyed through these key elements.

Ultimately, the perfect synchronization between the directorial vision and the artistic expression of all components - from the set to the performance - contributes to a deep emotional resonance with the audience, providing a unique and memorable opera experience. Like the deployment of a completed software to users, the show represents the final product of the collaboration of the entire creative team, harmoniously aligned with the director's initial conception.

The composition of an artistic creation is measured by the temporal and changing complexity of the settings, integrating only the essential elements perceived by the spectators as a kind of visual and emotional harmony.

The realization of special relationships of the show with the spectators is based on the following conclusion: "It is essential to recognize the importance of testing and debugging processes in the life cycle of the development of a composition , allowing thus detecting anomalies in moving images . "

Moreover, these special relationships are strengthened by a deep understanding of how testing and debugging help to refine and perfect the composition, thus ensuring a coherent and engaging visual and emotional experience for viewers.

Danton's Game Of Cards

On October 09, 2010

Put your leadership on the line, leaning up to the greatness of the world and your own being.

The hall resounded like an echo of the battle call from the day before, on the Valmy battlefield. Georges Jacques Danton, one of the leaders of the revolution, stood up. Silence spread all over.

- There can be no other constitution than the one that will be truthfully, word for word accepted by most of the simple assemblies. Let's scatter those unnecessarily ghosts that want to frighten people, let's say there is no other constitution than the one accepted by the people.

In other words, Danton wanted to promote two ideas:

Leadership: Can the ideas you want to turn into reality give you a deep awareness of the phenomena around you, which will allow you to impartially assess the goals of another dimension of dignity?

Destiny deals the cards, a great writer once said. And a man with experience accepts the cards that destiny gave him, he carefully considers and appreciates them, then he alone decides whether to play or not. But be careful ! You alone cannot distribute your books once you accept with dignity the fatality of destiny regarding the decisions you must make to restore order in your life or the lives of others, or to ensure that you do not get lost in oblivion and anonymity like other leaders who have experienced illusions of power.

Danton was one of the people whose dangerous, yet deadly mission, gave them the opportunity to change the course of events, turning them into leaders with defining qualities (such as the ability to think strategically and to predict), and, finally, transforming them into heroes. He valued his dignity through his moral sense, his moral discernment, and his moral tenacity to bring about important change, standing in the face of the obstacles of the society in which he lived. At the same time, he expressed his freedom to make decisions about his own life and to be respected for this right (up to a point).

But, to become "a great man", Danton had to engage in a game in which he had little chance of success, because his enemies and those of the people put many obstacles in his way. He alone put his life in great danger. This is another dimension of dignity: knowing how to sacrifice yourself for an ideal. And Danton impartially assessed the goals of this dimension, putting himself as a guarantor of the realization of full freedom, as a judge prepared and able to ignore preconceived ideas about guilt that could arise as a result of adverse reactions from those not involved in change.

Dignity is the resistance you oppose to events that can trigger a social crisis, stating that all that strengthens you morally and spiritually is the ability to abandon yourself in favor of a higher goal.

According to Wikipedia: "Georges Jacques Danton was bold and determined, a brilliant speaker, but at the same time he had a somewhat unbalanced nature. His ideals were freedom and property. Imprisoned in Luxembourg prison, Danton did not bow his head to dictator Robespierre. His famous phrases: "...12 months ago I proposed the establishment of this revolutionary tribunal. Now I apologize for it to God and to the people" and "Robespierre will follow me", show despair, but also the strength of character of the "giant" of the French Revolution."

Leadership is an extraordinary stake, it is the most precious thing that a man can risk. For once with the high position you gain, any previous chapter of your life ends. You must bow to the greatness of the world, to destroy that talisman the magic power of which is able to empty all of your emotions, positive energies and all the best in you, and close your way to performance, efficiency and success.

If you don't prove to be a successful player, you will go to smash, just as poorly constructed boats sink at the first storm. Just like a picture is able to capture a particular state, a certain attitude, so the leadership that you gain can freeze your conscience and destroy the values that support your relationship with people, make you indifferent and even hostile towards the noble goals that you've originally proposed to achieve, and push you to the biggest failure.

Someone said: "He who occupies an important position owes account for all of his actions, for every one of his moments, because he is no longer his own person, but has become public property; every one of his new rights changes, in fact, into a new duty." In order to win in leadership, you must use the best strategies, know the partners' and adversaries' cards, play yours at the right moment and gain the stake with the spirit of wisdom.

Leadership is not the way to oppose a war caused by anticipation of change, but it is your exposure to the events that write history, stating that what can stop you from achieving your goals is nothing but the fear of "what others could say" (And this fear might just be in your mind.)

Danton's Game Of Cards emphasizes the leader's extraordinary ability to show himself off, choosing his path toward the goal to be achieved and "financing" his evolution by choosing the most effective practices through the most appropriate means of promoting a high ideal.

Danton didn't wait for destiny to give him "a good hand". He involved himself in the events of the game, taking part in them body and soul, with pride and a sense of accomplishment, with honor and understanding, without having cards of the same value, meaning excellent. It was his will and desire, but also had the honor to fight to the last chance. He put his leadership on the line, leaning up to the greatness of the world and of his own being.

Be great with yourself, but with others, as well. Be great in your practice, belief, conception, so you will be able to finally direct the evolution of the "leadership game" for your own benefit and evolution, but also for the benefit of others.

Conclusion: If you were elected as leader, it means that you have consented to occupy this position. Therefore, you must assess your ability, availability and forces in order to accomplish what people expect from you. It is a "place" of honor, but also involves many responsibilities. You were invested with trust and must strive hard for it not to diminish. It is an exciting "game", in which you should enter only if you know you own the necessary trumps in order to win.

Darkman (II)

On November 07, 2013

Distinguish clearly enough between the "surprising" character and the "poignant" character which defines you, bringing forth the subjectivity of others' evaluation.

Hannibal Lecter disappears, as a runaway, in the most remote part of the world, going beyond that door which closes behind him: the most spectacular confusion and he is the only one that holds the key. But what makes this invisible desperado, this unbreakable mystery truly unique, untouchable, is the fact that he knows how to subtly adapt to every change. He doesn't comment on the events that threaten his stability, but is intent on living them to their fullest, no mater their nature.

The lack of any mistakes, the impossibility to understand his means of operation, the absence of clues which could lead to his capture. All these respect the law of invisibility. The night is darker, the sleeps seems to catch ahold of everyone ! And in all this unpenetrable darkness, the thundering light of an ingenious mind grazes past the installed filters.

Silence is just a waiting. The unforeseen is just a matter of perception. To quickly fullfill the decisive request: "Seize him ! Catch him, dead or alive ! To fall under the punishment of justice ! " The process by which the feverish aggitation is created is called "electrification" and it grows in intensity as Hannibal lays new traps.

"I am not who you think I am ! ", cries a thought thrown from behind the world's bars, with a sneak peak towards the FBI. In such a mind, there's no room for a bargain. Hannibal's motivation to give a masterful hit has "champion" written all over it. He knows how to implement it in the strange power game to compose an transform everything. *****

Leadership: Can you prove the quality of recognizing yourself as an exception from the general rule of image effects that can introduce you to the minds of others as "an above average result" so that you do not intersect with the dependence on self-validation?

The man who places himself over the whole world by complex backstage combinations that he thinks he can control with his mind at his own beck and call, basically power the detachment function from the conventional way of thinkings. But the so-called maneuvers and intelligent tricks often represent just a distorted way of thinking which hides the truth of what he is: a man who suffers for certain artificially created convictions, in which he believes only up to a point.

To the point he won't be able to set his own game anymore, when he doesn't identify with an ignorant. Because from perfect manipulation to absolute ignorance regarding what happens in the rest of the world is just a step.

More often than never, one of man's superior ways of thinking, subject to different power and accomplishment stages, leads to nothing good with himself, because those who label him have had their weaknesses and inabilities speculated upon. This becomes for a seeker of the exceptional a way of protests against the dignity to recognize himself in the equality and accessibility terms of others, against his ability to make an opposing way which could lead to respect, instead of confusion.

Who is labeled as "uncontrollable", means that he fueled fears and behaviors which, even if they're a product of some exceptional abilities, nobody gets to the stage of making them their own.

"The Surprising" is the result of attempting to adjust the behavior of intimidation and coercion, from any stage of personal power experience, to the interests of efficient communication of expectations that can generate important events in the lives of others.

In leadership there is a clear enough distinction between the "surprising" character and the "poignant" character of an individual, bringing forth the subjectivity of the evaluation – that kind of errors that have occurred due to the system of values and prejudices of the person who evaluate others' tendencies to relate to him.

That person who thinks he can trick the laws of trust using various manipulation and control techniques overevaluates in real time only his chances to consolidate himself as an independent person, above all else, not allowing those courts of justice which can impose themselves to censor him.

But at the same time, this superior man reduces his chances to save himself from relegation more and more. Leadership wise, to be relegated means to enjoy winning a certain game, but because you can't play fair, you arise doubts, you show some reserve concerning the fans.

The questions you should ask yourself every time you measure your superiority are the following: Are you ready to be in conflict with the prejudices and thinking mechanisms you have to counter? Can you confront your worst enemies: the pride to feel above everyone else and the inability to control your own destructive reflexes?

The self-validation addiction appears when everything that can give you the experience of "being here and now", along a certain conviction, materializes in an expansion of your own perception of a reality that makes you more daring, and feeling more wanted by the rest of the world, at the risk of not being quite so well understood.

Darkman highlights a balance between the projection force of a reality that other cannot access, that doesn't fit in the standard typology of reason and logic by which you manifest your superiority, unhindered by any kind of rules and based directly on the saying "the end justifies the means".

And the force to project a reality compared to other existential plans, but that excludes you from the leadership area, because it doesn't offer a real possibility to communicate between you and others.

Darkman (I)

On November 07, 2013

Take a closer look in the reality of those seen and unseen to man, in order to better understand the motivation of his existence.

A matter full of inspiration deviates from the rules. His name is Hannibal Lecter. And amidst all the searches, he surrounds himself with a mysterious cloak, in order to constrain, intimidate and deceive FBI's vigilency. The interaction with this special man, with the locked box full of valuables whose contents can't be uncovered even by a team of seekers, is bizzare and expensive.

Just as Theodose, the grandson of old Canquoelle from Balzac's work, after having listened to the fairy tales told around the fire set on a journey around the world to search for his fabulous uncle, so do the FBI agents that intend to find and accuse Hannibal suddenly find themselves caught in an unprecedented manipulation, which sends them chills. All the agents are led into a phantasy voyage meant to bring forth the innovative aspects of a creative personality.

Darkness replaces light. Night sets upon restless spirits. The sleep that seems to surround the FBI agents takes away their freedom to have a detached perspective over realities. Meanwhile Hannibal, at large, runs around cheerful like a child who has got his long desired toy. Get him from where he's gone; find him where you're not looking for him. Because he's hiding where you least expected him to. He's always around you. And yet, so far away.

The life of the ghost who has escaped from chains becomes a factory full of internal business, built around a cognitive dimension. And this truly obnoxious ghost lacks the gifts to show itself even in the late hours of the night. What is its id? It can no longer be categorized as a "portret". Because nobody knows what uncommon face it builds for itself. Nobody knows the formula which allowed him to transform. Not even an exception chemist could distinguish the organic compounds that offer youthful vitality to a specter. The ambiguous content of this life depiction is disappointing.

Leadership: Do you assume an intelligent way to pursue any attempt to seem beyond comprehension and perhaps beyond human capacity, to become unstoppable in reaching any goal you set for yourself?

To assume an intelligent way of appearing above the understanding of the normal accepted by the thinking of other people means to assume the greatness of changing reality in the direction you want, which, even if it gives birth to an unimaginable chaos, gives you a certain importance, a certain prestige, a certain authority. With the risk of an image loss, which leadership cannot tolerate at all, you should try to create the opportunity to experience an alternative of inevitability as far as your power to control the progress of events is concerned.

Lately, I have talked more and more about the design of leadership, comprising more currently invisible aspects. That is, the depiction of the defining authority of a man fueled with all kinds of enigmas and contradictions coming from the thinking and feeling transposed in his existence. Still, there is no unanimous consensus over the situations highlighted by the vast field that would precisely reproduce human condition, his inner atmosphere.

If mathematics is a science of numbers and geometric shapes, leadership is a science of abstract thinking embraced by the man whose inner world is governed by complex prejudices, impossible standards, and deep ideas. Revealing new meanings of his personality.

And man, just like any incomplete evidence system who cannot be asked about his exact level of knowledge and perception over his own self is significantly moody. He's comprised of seen and unseen elements. And sometimes he changes his behavior, mind and direction randomly with no justification.

Improvisation, the capacity to adapt to new and the personality games create certain contradictions which generate the instability to approach and manage leadership.

Have you become a component in the settings menu that no longer supports leadership on condition of inevitability, by the fact that you cannot be reached when someone wants to clarify a "BACKDOOR" situation?

Take a closer look in the reality of those seen and unseen to man, in order to better understand the motivation of his existence. Only so can you have a better approach and management of leadership. Whose development is possible based on "functional properties" of man that fulfill the requests of new living situations and a new becoming. In turn, this development, marked by particularities, doesn't have to own an infinite ambiguity. Because, thus, the bizzare becomes no just unjustified, but also unaccepted.

"Take it from where it's not, find him where you're not looking. Because he's hiding there, where you least expected. He's always with you. And yet so far away." This is the consequence of basic "Erase", the cancellation of a personality trait which honors leadership. The characteristic of a thinking based exclusively on total success, regardless the consequences. Which just like a computer automation program, created to meet various requirements, allows the deletion of various individual components which define the huge complexity of a "craving" vision.

What do we find if we look beyond the visible specter of man? Do his mistakes have mitigating circumstances? Does he reject the idea of aligning himself with some rules and of some patterns given by the honorable tendencies of leadership? How does his defining authority react when unforeseen events take place suddenly? Does he dwell deeper in the power game to compose and transform everything in his favor?

The deep repercussions will no doubt reflect in the conditions of a radical evolution and complex transformation of man. That tortured reason, the rotten conscience oriented towards absolute (and at the same time towards conflict) becomes the cathalyst for understanding what he is about to become. A component in the settings menu which doesn't support leadership, directing people towards a path which corresponds to falsity, not truth.

A "BackDoor" type situation occurs if you want to be appreciated in trying to change things that do not suit you or that are not associated with your position. Your mistake is to provide a high impact experience, without ensuring an exit for yourself from the vicious circle of a break from reality.

Darkman highlights the unseen and unknown aspects of man's ways to act in unexpected situations. In such situations it is absolutely necessary to have an absolute self-control, a coordination of actions in order to touch a common goal. This means a strategy adopted by everyone around you. Personal options are excluded. There should be only one common action with maximum efficiency.

Darkness Is Just The Absence Of Light

On December 02, 2013

Can you use your clairvoyance to explore the relationship between the visible and invisible worlds, creating something truly new from scratch?

- Cheops, said Ibebi then, I congratulate you on your clairvoyance. It is very true that this creation by the word, starting from nothing, is absurd, unless we admit that this word itself possesses a magical power of creating forms.

- Why would I admit that? replied Cheops. I have never seen a man who could create anything just by opening his mouth and making sounds.

- Maybe not a man, but why not a god?

- Can a god act against the laws of Maat, which says that nothing is born from nothing?

- Well thought ! I could also say: unless somehow the god, not by the simple power of the word, but rather starting from his own substance, created the visible and invisible world, the luminous spirits that we call "ahu" and the matter that takes in our eyes the forms that have become familiar to us are those of the mountains that dominate Egypt, as well as the plants that grow in the valley, both the animals that populate it, and the people that inhabit it. But we will talk about that later, because Memphis theologians seem to ignore that the world is much more complex than they think and that a simple sound cannot create the world from Nothing, even if it is emitted by a god.

Leadership: Have you ever meditated on how "primordial chaos" is reflected in the compositional structure of your work, so that a truth is revealed behind some descriptions of facts?

- As for creation, according to the words of the clergy from Heliopolis, Cheops continues, I only focused on the problem of light and darkness. It seems to me that the priests of Ra received from distant ancestors the tradition of the creation of the world by Atum, starting from the primordial matter, Nun. But they themselves are the heirs of the cult of Ra manifested in the sun, the source of all light. The difficulty they could not solve is that, if Atum is none other than Ra, that is, the sun, light could not precede the darkness of the primordial chaos. For in that case it could not exist in darkness, and it could not exist by itself, since light is prior to it, and from this fact there would have been adversity even before darkness came into the world.

Leadership: Contemplating the teaching of others, how do you use the clarity and directness of your vision to highlight often ignored aspects of the surrounding reality?

- You judged well once again, son. For, contrary to the teaching that is transmitted in general, that is, the popular doctrine, darkness has no reality of its own, no substance, which is easy to ascertain when it surrounds us; it is only the absence of light. We imagine it only by referring to the night, but even in the starry night there is a diffused light in the sky. Darkness, absolute blackness, is only an artificial creation: if I blow into these lamps, we shall find ourselves in darkness, but this darkness has no real existence, for it is enough to light these lamps again, so that it is dissipated. It is very true that the identification of Nun with the primordial darkness is an error of appreciation, and this aporia makes the cosmology of the Helopolitans appear to us as absurd as that of the Memphites, who claim that the world was created by the word of god, starting from nothing , from nothing.

Ibebi was silent. Silence settles between them, barely disturbed by the puff of breath. Then Ibebi said:

- Now, tell me what you know about the creation of the world according to the teaching in this temple of Thoth.

- Once again, I can only tell you what I read in the first book of Thoth, Cheops answered. In the beginning, everything was in Thoth, he is confused with the eight mysterious primordial divinities.

All that emanates from leadership is about identifying the vision with which you animate your creation, so as to guide it into the depth of an authentic teaching about spiritual life drawn from an ever-changing reality.

"Darkness is only the absence of light" suggests that everything we perceive can be interpreted on a dual level, and that everything we imagine, if it is to find a place in our own creation, is actually a manifestation of our inclination towards the divine. And when it comes to the divine, we must recognize that every aspect of our lives can become a manifestation of duality and our human tendency to seek or create light and understanding in the midst of uncertainty.

On April 08, 2016

Find that something within you that makes you unique and brilliant, such as the artist who abandons the rigid canons of the time in favor of achieving a lively sculpture.

A change in the structure of my own personality occurred when I tried to find my transparency in a picture of great ambiguity, so as to capture the appearance of what I was is in fact, Ein Dual-Fokus-Phänomen, as the Germans say. So I had to consider the hypothesis of an enigmatic situation. I was the product of the fact of not pertaining to anyone, of existing within a framework of the dilation of thoughts, without urban agglomerations, within the proximity of various inventions and ideas, in perfect harmony with myself. I would perceive only the nuances of a Sound of Silence.

As everything moved a lot slower around me, but continuously as the attracting opposing polarities of a magnet, I have maintained my willingness to be in a relationship with something far greater than myself, rather a strong partner, as being something I constantly depended upon. Something attracted me and rejected me at the same time. The image that tended to sink beneath my eyes, to which only art could have found a direct connection with the themes of fiction, seemed to support a phenomenon of oblivion and even denial of the essence of a conversation with a high spirit.

Loneliness is the way to finding that special something within yourself that makes you unique and brilliant, as an artist that abandons the rigid canons of the time in favor of achieving a lively sculpture, to go deeper into the spiritual world of his own Masterpiece, his most faithful copy. An extremely natural and expressive representation that doesn't speak, doesn't relate, but symbolizes perfection.

Leadership: Can you approach art from the point of view of what you imagine is on the other side of your Ego as an art communication of aesthetic content that delights your eyes, mind and soul?

Thinking acquires originality only when it meets the unknown of glance in the mirror. On the other side of my Ego, there seemed to be an artistic spirit less concerned about the interaction between individual psychism and stimulating the surrounding world, a spirit of adventure and unknown that always made me want more from the "out of sight" experience.

Little by little, I began to feel that propulsive force towards a fictional mindset, following which I experienced the taste of great discoveries beyond the limits of my own being, later becoming the author of the world in which only art existed, where everything was David, the protective shield, knowledge, learning. Here there was no sadness, no joy, but only one law – be as much as you can be beyond the widely-accepted limits of normality.

Exciting, I felt trapped in a different dimension, like one of Michelangelo's creations inserted in the fantasy universe of Stephen Hawking or Jason Diablo, finding myself in a framework that not even the most adept of futurism could've imagined. The pace of metamorphosing into a model of appearance, into a modern world, symbolizing an expression of perfection, was the new order imposed in the form of my art.

Leadership: Can you offer your potential for leadership the property of being "artistic", by developing the ability of manifesting your individuality in a world where David takes precedence?

A world forged through a perceptual self-discovery can give leadership the value of a "closed system", where only you can understand yourself and feel that you can achieve a spectacular overtaking, turning you into a self-contained image: David. Simply put, David is an approximation of your original image, but with a greater number of levels of detail, with reference to the essential elements you're made out of.

But if we look objectively, in the sense of shaping two distinct parts, a part attributed to the conscious ability of perceiving a unique self and a part attributed to the willingness of being in a relationship with what is far greater than yourself, then we will see an expansion of personality and an image confirmed by attitude. This is where David comes not only from the fact that the elements in the relationship charge the communication circuit of a harmoniously personalized aesthetic of finality and the exchange of views from a height, but from the background of an imaginative process in which you confess yourself as the main character of a story awaiting its author.

Leadership does not announce the perception of great discoveries beyond the limits of your own being, but it does correspond with the image you forge in the presence of an aesthetic reality in which are cleverly woven the agreements between what you want to be, what you appear to be, and what you can gain through your own endeavors. Through knowledge, learning, and by their representation in a unitary whole.

Thus, David can be a way of transcending reality, looking beyond it, encouraging the use of real elements to create a new world, new situations that do not overlap and are not confused with reality. In artistic leadership, the notion of aesthetics with which you describe your character from the height of a superior intelligence that dictates a new sense of reality and life in the image field that unifies the objective and subjective experience is the most important.

Life is the masterpiece you conceive before being caught in the depiction of an artist.

At the age of 64, King Louis XV confessed to doctor Lamartiniere the pain that troubled him, one he could no longer bear, one for which only he himself could find a cure:

"I do not wish for the immortality these people could give me, because I would have to pay it far too dearly, in this dying world and maybe even in the next one. I only want to extend my life for as long as possible. I want within this life to be, as far as possible, as many of the works I hold dear and for this I will neither address the poets, nor the philosophers, nor the warriors..."

Implying that his very existence was a masterpiece started a long time ago, but one lacking magic, the nuances of a stimulus, for it to be complete.

The main idea of man's work with himself, in the equation of a development that favors leadership through an act of special creation, can be represented in the formula: "Life is the masterpiece you conceive before being caught in the depiction of an artist."

In the description of this formula, the magic already took place – a chaining of metamorphoses and poses, in which are mixed the eternal "returns" to yourself, capturing the relation between essentiality and the intensity that exists within the space that belongs to you, in the apparent world.

Leadership is the masterpiece that gives you life from the very life of a body that you are only part of by the act of rendering metaphysical significance to a more coherent and substantial inner world than the original one.

David is the self-consciousness that forces man to be "someone", it is the value surfacing from your relations with personal and subjective experience, it is the final part of the work of converting to yourself.

Even within you sits nestled a David that is eager to be transformed into a work of art, your most faithful copy, an extremely natural and expressive representation that maybe doesn't speak, doesn't relate, but it does symbolize perfection.

De Stellis Infinnio

„The artist must know how to bring to the surface the being within matter and be the tool that reveals its very higher essence, in a truly visible existence."

The perspective of the concept of creation has always been the main landmark of how I should work in the artistic field, so as to obtain through the means of a refined, deeper, more nuanced view, the amazing idea of a double finitude: between possible and real, between temporal and eternal. It wasn't easy, it wasn't hard, it wasn't chaos, it wasn't pointless direction. Surprisingly, an unknown force, seen as a symbol of freedom, being explained by an intention doubled by a pronounced and unparalleled attachment to diversity, somehow forced me to place my compositions within the consolidation perimeter of a double of mine.

As a prophetic call, in the highest sense, something urged me to bow diligently to those who do not fall into the normal order of the path taken by others, such a wandering path that somewhat resembles winding, dead-end labyrinths, or too imaginative, created by Simone Noseda Pinto. „Forbidden access" I wrote on these labyrinths, a push towards what is unknown being my right guide, *a unique path is obligatory imposed by God,*provided that what I express through creation is directly proportional to my intuitive and emotionally open nature to multiple spiritual valences.

I felt, I saw, I heard, I could discern between what is banal and spectacular, between false memory and dream, finally succeeding (on the way to the habit of an inner view that precedes the outer view) to become the partisan of obtaining the everyday superlative. The labyrinths of artistic confrontations contained in this kind of consensus, as well as my contribution to the subject of an experience of rivalry with that oppressive, cold and insensitive monopoly of academism that regards reality as something unchanging, have not even been projected into the temporal realm of my brain, but they fit into an Arethesintesha(an adjustable design for multiple directions of illumination).

Leadership: Can your creation make it possible to define an image capable of joining a view that includes the „measure of the superlative" and the promise of a revelation that transcends the appearance of things, including evaluative impressions of the world?

And contrary to expectations, leaving aside the underdogs that can only be discussed and approved by the false specialists of perspective, thieves full of subterfuges and false identities, I have slowly moved away from those that do not conform to the real state. I knowingly indulged in all the trifles and miscelanea of life from which, with the thought of a half-alchemist archaeologist, I extracted the opaque root of similar things and the spatio-temporal substance of distinct things. In the same way, I managed to create other completely different things from one thing, from a single composition of my own, with truly expressionist valences.

He who contemplates reality can transcend the appearances of things and can see their hidden side. In accordance with this aspect, and taking into account everything that happens around me, I defined my work as a form made up of disparate parts, but put together in an image close to the way the ancient Conquerors looked at the distant horizon. I called it simply: „De Stellis Infinnio", which can be translated as „the divine superlative extracted from all the splendor of simple things."

Above all, I shone in humility, with the chosen thoughts that know how to choose a middle ground between attractiveness and completeness, without being deceived by passing and innocuous shadows, the chiaroscuro of futility in recognizing a work of art worthless or a meaningless existence. Contrary to expectations, I was able to tell a story that makes it unique, a light and warm wavelength, a certain literary and artistic form in accordance with the nature and occupation of subtle, metaphysical, seductive thinking, fantasies and beautiful ideas about life and art.

Leadership: Can you produce with the help of vision a liberating inner transformation, provided you are accountable to the consciousness of a metaphysician who ensures the expansion of your being in a cause of the „FRAGILE" type?

For this, and only for this, I have been worthy to carry in my arms the source of an art as old as the world itself, called Kabbalah, but at the same time I have demonstrated a complex artistic psychology by choosing a harmony analogous to proportions, textures and colors not only within the same layer, but in the context of the whole image resulting from the overlapping of lines, symbols, themes, motifs, and touches of color that produce certain sensations.

Without reproducing any masterpiece, art has helped me to attach myself to a fragile existence that is preserved in the memory of an ever-present time.

What Simona Popescu wrote in the novel „Exuvii" comes as a kind of complement to this art admitted in terms of *confissão de confissões*of which, even now, I feel guilty that I did not take it to that level of perfection in which the critique becomes an impiety, but where the good soul becomes the bearer of artistic qualities: expressiveness, depth and sensitivity.

„I feel the world around me: transparencies, flickers of color, ambiguities, interpenetrations, oscillations, multiple, diffuse sound, rich clutter, a jumble of shapes and materials, iridescence, perfumes coming from everywhere and out of nowhere, overwhelming. A vague, fluid world, in the natural extension of my being, of my living, thinking body. All these things have not been lost and do not belong to the past, to the irreversible past, to... childhood memories. They remained in me, in my concrete simultaneity."

In art, the measure of the superlative is the only degree of comparison (between vision and perception, between things and situations) that falls within the sphere of telling an original reality meant to transcend what is transient, and can only be known through the soul.

De Stellis Infinnio symbolizes the development of my art seen from the perspective of a creation arising from the union of the soul with all surrounding things, under the brilliance of an existence that can be drawn in every way, but less as a trivial one. Here, too, it is worth paraphrasing Constantin Brâncuși: „The artist must know how to bring to the surface the being within matter and be a tool that reveals its very superior essence, in a truly visible existence."

Dead Or Alive

On Decembrie 15, 2015

Be open to what wants to manifest through you, without diminishing the hope you place into something that is compressed with the help of the unacceptable.

I proved to be refractory to a requirement to which, after all, I had some major obligations to – included in the possible recipe of transitioning beyond other doors. And other rooms. Antechambers of hell. Spaces equipped with surpluses of truths and doubts, as dark as my thoughts touched by the coldness of the time hovered over the chemistry of the alternations between sleep and awakening, echoing in my head as a stimulus that acts on a specific receptor field.

I appeared to be more dead than alive. As if my entire being was struck by the most poisonous of arrows, generically called "Doomsday", whose toxins instantaneously paralyzed my senses, straight from the heart to the brain, left me speechless. Without energy. Without power. "I was feeling lost / Waiting to be found."

Without undermining the faith I placed in something that compressed with the help of the unreal and, therefore, of the unacceptable, I decided to wait for the twilight. As it was forged by my imagination drained of powers, going barefoot without leaving footprints along the someone else within me, not without giving credence little by little, thanks to the tingling hotness that heated up my temples, that unknown voice that decisively whispered to me: "Help me to arise."

Deceiving, like a toy taken by the wind, I transposed myself in the skin of an angle that shook his hearing – I would've waited for you anywhere, between the living or the dead ! – rightfully so, with some exertions. But tempted, however, by a certain curiosity: "What would it have been like if I had not existed?"

Leadership: Can you be yourself in a world that is constantly looking to turn you into someone else, in the case of struggles so constantly amplified by your openness to the challenge of seeing yourself as a holder of a fabled life?

Inside the castle Helmnar, David – the winner of the tournaments on Hakon, arrived in front of a wall that had no doors. He felt, however, that an unknown force existed beyond the wall, as if someone willing to meet him existed. Following his instinct, e reached out to the wall and felt it along. An invisible door, masked by a spell, created the image of a real wall. The door opened immediately. David stepped inside the room, in the middle of which he saw a giant mirror, in which he saw himself as if through a haze. As soon as he reached it, the haze dissipated. A voice trapped in the mirror made itself heard. "Help me get out of here ! "

Man, interposed to a completely different reality, the prisoner of that matrix that made him believe he was in Eden or Hell – I should say it now, while we are still in a relationship – this generator of effects opposite to those expected, greater than the heaven and the sea that overlap continuously in the imagination of the living, was rather attracted to this story that could've been true.

Moved by the implications of a boundless power, by the spark of personality that makes him different from others, could he maybe take advantage of this to the maximum? The unacceptable he had to bear actually meant to pretend to be alien to the world he experienced and to forge a reality in which he did not feel claustrophobic.

Leadership: Do you say NO to the compromise between the contrary tendencies of life, refusing the "silence" that reveals your hidden fears?

To say NOT to the compromise between contrary trends of life, such as selfishness-altruism, isolation-association or individualism-solidarity, is sometimes to accept the terms of reality with a certain restraint, as if you only existed as an appearance.

We can understand leadership, coded through the perspective of the image of a man that said NO to the compromise between two contrary tendencies of life, refusing the "silence" that reveals his hidden fears, if we approach with a proactive attitude that side of existence which aims at training and developing character. Silence is an amplification of a state of uncertainty from which you can no longer escape, it is the result of a self-help that stretches far beyond the initial conscious impulse, stemming from the inability to give life lessons to a reality without a horizon.

And silence is often similar to self-forgetting, because you do not know which aspects to pay the most attention to. The tendency of man of getting lost into oblivion, matched by the propensity of breaking out of the shell of solitude, meaning his subjection to a maneuver of going in reverse, plays an important role in creating that premise of the rule according to which "who can do more, can do even more."

In other words, with the entry into a negative state, man can also experience a bit of grandeur, giving a broader meaning to the conversation with himself in order to achieve a breakthrough of the type "even if everything is against me, I need to surpass myself."

Leadership: Does your accessibility produce an opening to a potentiality to be realized through consciousness as a symbol of the fullness of existence, without remodeling the call for transposition into a world that increasingly denies its foundations?

I recently read on the marketingprofitabil.ro website the following thing: "Dreams seem to be caught in a commercial that flows between the clouds or flies through stories, with the voice that accompanies the magical journey, until awakening."

Well, this voice belongs to the man interposed to a completely different reality, the prisoner of that matrix that makes him believe he is in a different place than the expected one by the fund of existence with which conscience has a tangent with.

The power that confers unity to the flow of consciousness, stemming from the probability of coming out of this space of silence and wilderness, marks the importance given to the person who has passed the stage of weakness in order to find himself in a sort of perpetuum mobile with a strictly thoughtful and modelling combustion. To find yourself is to rise above the casual reality of a hostile world above the laws of a misunderstood world, in the likeness of an ideal of sense and unrepeatability within the boundary of the condition of passing through life.

Personal success stems not only from others' conception of you, but more from your conception over how you understand your inner world and living through it.

The individual's quality of remodeling himself to the call of transposition into a world that increasingly denies its foundations due to its mistakes in an increasingly absurd setting is asserted as fully as possible in trying to present the unacceptable as acceptable or the normal as being revolting.

The best way to adapt in such a world is not to deny, but to accept its challenges and rules by the fact that you are its only survivor, its only foundation, its only savior, its only poet, its only creator.

Dead Or Alive highlights the variations of a world caught in the tunnel of transitioning towards a different model of man, closer to a higher self-power, arising from the existence of instantaneous characters that he himself creates and inserts in his own world.

People of great character are permanently enrolled in an existence of death and resurrection. They always manage to make a spectacular leap over their own shadow because they are open to what they want to be manifested through them, without diminishing the faith they put into something that is compressed with the help of the unacceptable.

Does someone else manifest through you, an Alter-Ego? A force far greater than the initial emotions and feelings life has put you through?

Definition: What Is A Performer

On January 25, 2009

What is a performer?

"Performer" (# One who performs for, or entertains, an audience) is a borrowed word, but does not strictly refer to sports activity or acting, as is commonly used.

"to perform" = to carry out a performance (thus, by extrapolation, or by analogy, it can be said that a "performer" is the person who obtains / carries out / brings performance.)

I will limit myself strictly to this sense.

Leadership: Performer

Being a performer in the management of Human Resources means to combine leadership with your own character, means to combine knowledge with the personality that defines you - in your favor, but also in the benefit of other people.

Performer is the man who, not being subject to foreign influences, lights up the candle of hope and joy in the soul of the people, through his power of changing perceptions - helping them to achieve tangible results in the sphere of their personal development.

The performer identifies the needs of endowment of the people around, selects their most conspicuous qualities that are necessary to change their status, character, personality.

Performer is the leader, who promotes the changing of the ones beside him by his own nature, by his way of being, by his ideology, isolating or neutralizing any non-integrable element in the architecture of their own beings.

The leader is the man, who can make performance, by polishing the material from which is composed the human being. He is the one, who manages to eliminate the dark spots of thinking, understanding and feeling - unprofitable – from the multitude of egos, treating them with wise decisions and new guidelines of the highest quality.

Question:

Are you ready to select the people of the best quality, to endow them with everything they need in order to be long-term performers?

Delicate

On October 15, 2019

A great artist aims to achieve a vision that is permanently combined with the intelligence of a philosophy derived from his own thinking about everything that surrounds him.

I know the roses well, in their divine splendor, delicate like peace, as they shake before the good and the bad, before the eyes that look beyond the present of the events that I try, with diligence and inspiration, to turn into the revelation of a secret experience. A great mix of real and imaginable, melancholy and voluptuousness. Each rose ennobles me as the final result of a divine creation, as uma obra artística em miniatura, a puzzle piece that completes my personality in a hypostasis of the seduction of the sophisticated and unconsumed alterity.

When I prepare the roses for painting, I feel as if I am present in another cultural geography, in a world that makes me live with another identity, in another environment. In a place where the most important artists, chosen before the celestial providence, artistically arrange their experiences with a hidden character, through the prism of a sensitive and mature eye, delicate like words, formed to find, as far as possible, a correspondent in the space of subjective reality.

An artist's most precious work is a kind of visualization of an image from another life, from another reality. Maybe that's why I trust what I see when I feel the graceful presence of the rose, its sweet, romantic fragrance, so rare, delicate like snow, irresistible as a waltz of intense experiences, not influenced by the circumstances of urban agglomerations, without the ephemerality of human existence, full of sacrifice and suffering, to reach me.

Its place remains destined to remember a character of such great complexity, full of symbols and riddles, un artiste d'improvisation, that, by deciphering it, can give the impression that it is a different person.

Leadership: Does the urge to better understand your individuality makes you probe the depths of your emotional reaction to the feeling of being beautiful, looking for clues to suggest that the only sense of art is to experience a confession full of naturalness and sensitivity?

The rose represents an indication of the awareness of the expressive autonomy of the means of visual language, treated by the concept of conoscenza divina or by the concept of "freedom of thought and expression", which can be found in all artistic activities. Then, it is an extension of my longings, of the beauty of the soul and of the good thought that accompanies me permanently in the journey towards reaching an ideal of the passionate life, transformed into a philosophy of perfect artistic expression.

Miranda Grey, the character in John Fowles's work, shared the same profound experiences as me, as intense as that of a rose, increasing the chances of an authentic life story when she confessed, delicate like the breeze:

"I probably always wanted to believe in these things. In fact, I somewhat vaguely believed in them right before I met him. But he led me to actually believe in them. The thought of him makes me feel guilty when I break these rules. And if it caused me to believe them, it means that he is the one who created most of the new in me.

Like a drawing. You cannot render movement to a line upon which you keep intervening with smaller lines. The line consists of the boldness with which it is drawn, its penetration being possible only through the vibrations of an artistic, poetic, sensual sensibility."

Leadership: How do you manage the work of searching for a coherent identity, of One of the multiplicities of self-awareness, designed in solidarity with the meaning of a "reference model" constant?

The image of the rose is part of the memory of all people, embodying on a small scale the endless greatness of the Creator, believing in that doina of souls that stories call pure love, delicately planned, in a sense becoming better known through the way they express themselves: through that profound silence from which less polluted meanings of passenger situations and hurtful susceptibilities of the age can emerge.

You cannot imagine such a rare silence, so delicately breathe, except through a reaction of adoration before the spectacle of nature, not by intellectualization, but by lyricism, devouring its significance with wide-eyed astonishment at the full power that an artist has on the most chosen of words.

I decide to sketch it on the canvas, a feeling that is not at all comfortable, because I feel trapped in a space of pure eroticism, a delicate advance, as if I touch the naked body of a woman who gently wraps her arms around your neck, warms your chest and looks at you with that breath of creation: the art of not being a common man, but an extraordinary one. Delicate like a touch, I feel all the nuances of feeling, all the subtleties and depths, like beautiful words, whispered in the ear of the pure artist, loved with the longest poetry of longing, through an experience dedicated to the passion and values that are preserved in time.

Thus I open myself to the new reality, full of passionate kisses and fine touches: like a dream petal extracted from a fragment of a thousand and one nights, swaying in butterfly dance on the wings of an essential need to belong to a single identity with a youthful, sensual and romantic aspect, of having the awareness of its roots.

Love is the act of sacrifice in creation, the art of belonging wholly to one person whom the rose accepts as an equal, as a God or at least as a part of Him.

Leadership: Do you manifest a dedication in reaching an ideal of the passionate life, of transmitting some enlivening experiences, by association with the higher hypostasis of a being possessed by the aesthetic image and open to a world of mystery?

Vladimir Nabokov read my thoughts, sensed the temptation full of good taste, the one that promises you a dream experience that you want with fervor, when writing about Lolita, in comparison with the symbolism of the rose caught in a moment of mystical ecstasy:

"The curvature of her back, the skin like rice, her pressed, luscious, pigeon kisses prevented me from committing any nonsense. It is not true that artistic skills are secondary sexual characteristics, as some charlatans and shamans have said. Things are exactly the opposite: sex is the nerve of art."

A naked woman should not be understood as strictly sexual, as a proof of the weakness of the soul placed in the tempting situation of letting go, abandononarsi alla disperazione, only to become an instrument for the valorization of beauty. Rather, it must be associated with the higher hypostasis of the being gifted with the power of seduction, in order to promote as refined an art as possible; perfect, long-lived.

And in accordance with the meaning of the rose, la donna nuda becomes the symbol of an identification with the role of content aggregator, either by appearance or by a magical approach, by the delicacy and sensitivity of the resonance that has its beauty in the heart and in the mind of any artist.

The aesthetic image is a kind of window to something much more comprehensive than the creative experience; it is a window to the hidden meaning of a (futuristic) Diva.

In order to appreciate the usefulness of art and artistic education it is necessary to develop your ability to differentiate between what you love through the perfection of creation and what is merely an easy to contradict fabulation, but which reconciles your soul with the right to embrace beauty which takes the form of a muse.

Delicate is the faithful copy of a work of art that begins to take shape with the description of a beauty of nature, continues with the representation of the peculiarities of the feminine universe and ends with the formulation of a philosophy of life, viewed from the perspective of a personal reading, with subjective valences.

Delight My Gaze With Something That Makes The Unseen Visible

On August 15, 2023

Look beyond what you see, and you will discover the hidden story behind appearances.

I walk on the sand of the beach, on one of the Ionian islands of Greece. Isn't it the case that the look replaces the mystery of any answer to the question "What are things"? Being understood as an identity between the plane of the Ego and that of the mystery in the substance of creation, the gaze is based on a process of symbolizing reality in which the things specific to the area in which I am are contained: shells, snail fossils, algae brought to the shore, pieces of glass that the sand of the sea polishes over time, sunbeds and umbrellas, street vendors, nautical activities.

In this case, what is the substance of creation? It is a form of matter filtered by the eye and processed by the soul into memorable images.

More than that. Each thing becomes a symbol for the eyes of the artist that know how to perceive the information associated with the nuances of aesthetics, themselves, the searching eyes, full of untold stories, mirroring the entire universe of colors and emotions, become a symbol for the things measured and symbolized by the artist through a drawing, through a few words, or through a message worthy of being remembered: Iiburbys Aa Sterhoss Amesim Lek Olocynne.

That is, translated through a visual reinterpretation exercise, Experience the moment for the symbolic unknowns of a recognizable reality, the message of the eyes conveys a kind of silent but expressive communication, an emotional subject, a transfer of information between a sender and a receiver, after which, the information transmitted and captured is understood and interpreted as an effect of artistic transformation. For example, the metamorphosis of a shard of glass found on the sand into a unique gem, emphasizing the beauty hidden in simple things, is a figure of speech that highlights how art can give life and meaning to the imagination (downright divine).

Leadership: Can the image you refer to inspire a new dialogue between the works of two exceptional artists: one who knows how to create his own universe of things, and one who brings to light the hidden meaning of things?

And if in every brushstroke, in every line drawn on the canvas, the artist confesses his feelings, his creative purpose, the truths of his gaze, for a universe from which he came out and which he will never leave spiritually, surely there is a clear vision of things, the essence of a dynamic of life, bubbling with energy and vitality, born in his soul and mirrored outside.

The island is an amazing sight that I can't take my eyes off of. Still looking at things in the context of objects on the beach that could be metamorphosed, they still look at me as a substitute for them, because in my palette are found the colors of all things and their gradual loss in shades. And, conversely, in my view, their world takes shape, redefined through the palette of colors and artistic contours. Here, it is about a unique dialogue between the works of two exceptional artists: one who knows how to create his own universe of things, and one who brings to light the hidden meaning of things.

In this moment of finding in art the totality of things that came to light in a late afternoon, following a closer look, without having any other goal than art itself, the emancipation of a new characteristic of the artist in me takes place. Namely, freedom from that anguish that grips me when I live in a foreign reality, under the sign of impermanence, where I do not know all the meanings of the words pierced by the zephyr of oblivion. Wait and see when things begin to communicate with each other in a language other than the one spoken by me, and metaphor-symbols, subject to a "beyond what was spoken" begin to lower art to the level of a handmaiden of philosophy.

Leadership: Are you able to extract the essence of an image from reality and add certain connotations of the "improvisation show" type, where appearances juggle with fantasy in a captivating and unpredictable dance?

Everything is pleasing to the eyes on this island, especially the way nature shows itself in all its splendor, in a place where relaxation and comfort are taken to the highest heights. Therefore, beauty and visual pleasure are given by the harmony of silence, given by this wonder of nature, sculpted in its perfect landscape, called a paradise beach. But even a trained eye is sometimes mistaken, if I take as an example a fragment from a famous novel by John Fowles:

"Once there was a prince who believed in all things but three. He did not believe in princesses, he did not believe in islands, he did not believe in God. The emperor, his father, had told him that these things did not exist. But one day, the prince fled to the neighboring kingdom, a colorful destination full of quiet and wild islands where he saw some strange and disturbing beings that he dared not name. Also there he met a man dressed in evening clothes with his sleeves rolled up. This at last he told him that in fact his father was not an emperor, but only a magician. The prince quickly returned home, thoughtful.

- Dad, is it true that you are not an emperor, but only a magician?

The emperor smiled, and rolled up his sleeves.

- Yes, son, I'm a magician.

- Then the man on the shore was God, and those disturbing beings were princesses.

- The man on the shore was just another magician, and those beings were not real at all.

- I must know the real truth, the truth beyond magic. Otherwise I will kill myself.

- There is no truth beyond magic, replied the emperor. And, by his charms, he summons death to come. Death appeared in the doorway and beckoned the prince to come with her. The prince shuddered. He remembered the beautiful islands, beautiful but unreal and the unreal princesses, unreal but beautiful.

- Very well, said the prince. I will be able to endure everything.

- See, son, said the emperor. Now you are a magician too."

Being a consummate creator means deepening your knowledge by firstly calling on the artist's insight to extract the essence of every detail and turn it into a captivating visual story; then to the magician's ability to wrap reality in fascinating illusions, blurring the boundaries between what is perceived and what is created.

The artist is, in fact, the intermediary between things and their divine mystery. Whereas the magician, with his power to make things up, tries to guide the artist to the thorough understanding that everything is interconnected, that he himself is a part of this wonderful web of the existence of things. It would be said that in the midst of this enchanted island, the artist and the magician perfected their knowledge, the one through creation and the other through illusion.

Delight My Gaze With Something That Makes The Unseen Visible, where the visible represents the things your eyes can take in at a glance. But true wealth lies beyond appearances, where the unseen reveals the full story of reality. Only if you know how to look at the unseen can you reveal the hidden secrets of reality.

To understand leadership, it is not enough to see the beauty and significance of things around, developing your own way of looking at the world. You must also have the ability of the creator to become "one body" from two seemingly opposite perspectives, carving into the reality of your vision a new dimension of understanding and interpretation.

By looking beyond what you see, by calling upon the vision of an artist and the skills of a magician, you will be able to go beyond appearances and explore the horizon in depth. Look for deeper meanings and try to understand the context or subtle meanings of each detail, which may not be immediately obvious, but can be discovered through patience and insight.

Delight My Gaze With Something That Reflects The Harmony of Nature (I)

On July 10, 2023

To shape an authentic reality you must pay attention to what you observe and have a clear perspective on the image you give soul to.

I'm at the beach, somewhere on the Greek coast. The sun reveals its face in the glow of a summer painting, charming and emotional at first sight, deep in the vibrations of colors, painted by an artist who aspires to something great, something tickled from the matter of his own desires and dreams, something that cannot be erased with a sponge as if it hadn't happened.

Just as the natural levers that move in the rhythm of the wind, the waves delight the gaze of any viewer through the prism of a sense of deja-vu of the type "I've experienced this feeling of admiration in front of a work of art before", which makes me dream of one day in which to meet again with this space and with my authentic self, like two directors in search of the perfect scene.

Perhaps the sea, as I look at it with eyes filled with amazement, is a kind of metaphor for the perception of life, a stage in life dedicated to a high dream, a symbol of the infinite being, which keeps repeating itself in the form of vision intended to amplify authentic feeling . It is clear that above the supporting art of a remarkable aesthetic there is a study dedicated to the pictorial subject: "Shore surrounded by the sea in sunlight", argued in favor of the importance of the objects included in the forward-looking, perspective, ecstatic field of view.

Leadership: How do you interpret your perceptions and how do you integrate them into your own vision so that you get the infinity effect of an endless image?

So the eye narrows its field of vision to the object and to aesthetic perception to a point similar to that of vision, an authority that can be outlined through a painting, recognizing, however, that the study of entities or concepts in the real world by no means exhausts the general interests of aesthetics. The beautiful remains beautiful whenever you look back at it.

And what is aesthetics, in this case? It is the vision obtained by me by modeling the pictorial imaginary with the help of scattered fragments from reality, so as to capture the unity between the natural and the ideal, like two poets in search of the perfect metaphor, against the background of a curiosity that represents the true point of attraction for a visionary.

This is how things are in art, Espreuhara Aryanyphica Intis Ixir Ashenellat , beauty responds to the divine echoes of nature, for they are amplified by capturing the miraculous in the form of a view that illuminates unexpected perspectives. Therefore, the very condition of the production and reception of art, as a valorization of visibility, is closely related to the idea that vision, while also constituting a poetics of the imaginary in direct contact with reality, is not a removal of the present, but on the contrary, an enrichment and a natural consolidation of it.

Leadership: Can you create a vision starting from the artist's approach to create permanence in an independent scene, without reducing yourself to the specifics of your time and place in it?

Yes, sight is always particular, just like painting, which implies that the specific way in which it must be used, with finesse, with attention to detail, in all the circumstances in which something is done with art, must be perceived as an act of concentration of the other activities in one. The painting itself, being mainly the work of sight, is nourished by the environment in which the artist lives, pouring into it as intuition-expression, through repeated attempts to capture the essence and beauty on the canvas, the artist's approach being that of creating permanence in a scene by itself. As far as I'm concerned, I'm not just a visionary, but a wizard who shapes things with his artistic talent.

But the sight remains a mystery if I don't consider Andersen's words from a famous story:

"In a small room of the castle was the richest treasure on earth: the book of truth. The wise man read it page by page. It was a book that any man could read, but only in part: in the eyes of some the writing seemed to tremble, so that they were unable to decipher the words. On some pages the writing looked so effaced, almost invisible, that it seemed to you that you had before you a blank page. One thing was certain: the wiser you were, the more you could read, and the wisest read the most."

Whenever I watch the waves crash against the rocks, dispersed in foamy grasses, I experience the same atmosphere of relaxation and mystery that surrounds me when I read a captivating book. It is as if the waves tell the secrets of the depths and the sun sheds light on the words hidden within the pages, creating a fascinating and intriguing experience that I would like to immortalize in an image that will remind me of the joy that bathed my soul.

A vision can only take shape when tangible reality becomes a mirror that reflects the inner light and inspires you to truly live in the present, even as you look to the future.

And leadership is all the more stable as the vision resembles a perfect work of art, in which every element in the landscape blends harmoniously, like colors and shapes in a well-composed painting.

Delight My Gaze With Something That Reflects The Harmony of Nature if you want me to be inspired by an image meant to reflect the invisible of a moment that returns to my depth with the same intensity, naturalness and familiarity.

And the sea, upon hearing my words, comforts my soul with a gentle breeze, a refreshing blessing that wipes away tears, that brings smiles, and brings hope...

Delight My Gaze With Something That Reflects The Harmony of Nature (II)

On July 24, 2023

An artist lives more in his work than in his own life.

Right now I'm on an island in Greece, a piece of land always lit by the sun, which doesn't sink unless my eyes see it sink. Of course, I made her the object of a vision that does not deceive the eyes, which can only be reached by the laws of art. And the first law of art is success, allowing the viewer to consider the distinction between the character of the aesthetic perspective and the inner coherence of the creation.

This unique island, pleasant to look at from afar, surrounded by the blue and clear sea, has quite a few hills and only one beach with an extremely fine and white sand, passed through the fingers like fine pearls.

You are probably wondering what is the inner coherence of the creation, in the context of an artistic landscape or a visual representation of the island. It means that all the elements that make up the island (sand, sea, shells, rocks, hills, plants and creatures, views, atmosphere) are harmoniously organized and interconnected to render the beauty, atmosphere and distinctive characteristics of a painting that reflects the spirit of the artist, free and in love with his work.

The island itself has as its main subject that Athelisariis Cynosarios Thaeillis Ohinakest , the spiritual fulfillment of art, the place where art meets faith. Sometimes, I would like to take the boundless freedom of looking at an image in the absence of an artistic process, not actually representing a knowledge, but rather a diffuse premonition of a mysterious perspective, presented in a suggestive way. But even this is still a creation of my superb mind.

Leadership: Can your art become a sacred and sublime expression of your inner self, producing the permanence of an image that is meant to be eternal by exploring a timeless theme?

I say this because the eye only captures the immediate reality, unlike photography which immortalizes everything in time. And an island does not pose the problem of what catches the eye or the photograph, it does not imagine itself to be a revealing image that explains the multiple interpretability of the work of art and it does not seek to reproduce, to make the work live as the artist wants.

An island arouses the interest of an artistic view only when you look at it from afar as a point in a historical flow, a point of reference for a wide panorama, or when it sinks, little by little, with that desolate and absurd despair of the who no longer know why they lived, what they believed in. And the artist does not worship the image itself, does not necessarily try to restore its permanence, but uses it as a tool to enter a virtual world, as a starting point to transcend it and understand the imperative necessity of a important laws: "a living, sensitive and creative subject is an unexpected event that generates an emotional uproar."

Yes. Every man is an island, things are an island, and the artist is also an island, except that he makes the work live as he wants, looking at it in a double direction: towards the artistic experience and towards the spiritual contents. For the first time, this island, as I had imagined it to be the resting place of a legendary hero and the inspiration of a talented artist, restored to me the power of sight which the eye needs to see beyond the limits of space and time.

Leadership: Can you create a deep connection between art and the soul of those who experience your creation, so that they rise to the heights of the artistic experience that you live?

The Little Mermaid, trying to find a rock to support her dreams, at one point asked the Old Queen of the Sea: could I ever get an immortal soul? And the queen of the sea, while cooling herself in the waves, answered him:

- Only if a mortal loved you more than his father and mother, and if all his thoughts and love were directed towards you, and the priest would join your hands, and he would swear eternal faith to you. Only then would his soul enter your body, and you would obtain a particle of mortal happiness. He would give you a soul, keeping his own. But this will never happen. Your fish tail, which we consider so beautiful, those on land will find ugly. That's all they can think, and they think that to be good-looking, you have to have two strong sticks, which they call legs.

- The Little Mermaid sighed and looked sadly at her fish tail.

- Let's be happy, said the old queen, and let's fly and dance along the three hundred years of life! We have plenty of time to do that. After that, we can rest.

In the reflection of this story, the secret of a voice that many might consider surprising is revealed. It is the voice of the artist who, seeking the tranquility of the islands to cultivate his imagination and bring his creations to life, manages to echo over the waves, the waves representing the audience and the impact his works have on other people.

Like the echoes that can be heard over the waves of the sea, a voice with deep emotional power spreads that, overcoming the boundaries of time and space, embraces the listening soul and takes it on a magical journey through the depths and heights of the artistic experience.

At each stage of the creative process, the leader serves as a compass for the listener's soul, guiding and inspiring him. He creates a deep connection between art and the soul of the one who experiences his creation, opening doors to new perspectives and novel experiences.

The Little Mermaid is not just a creation that uses a story to express something else, but is a voice that supports and complements itself with every note, every word and every nuance, making up a perfect harmony, like all the elements that contribute to shaping a unique and unmistakable space.

Delight My Eyes With Something That Reflects The Harmony of Nature , and perhaps you will approach the splendor of a vision that involves association with almost any art form, especially the art of fashioning a living subject that never grows old, always remaining fresh and interesting, being an inexhaustible source of inspiration and creativity.

The island still winks at me. Or, maybe it's just someone on the island who keeps looking at me with the wonder of the painter who transforms the ordinary into the extraordinary, painting beyond appearances. But does he really see me, or is he just transferring feelings to the canvas?

Description Of The Artist's Life In The Language Of Color

On January 16, 2010

The vision is a monologue marked by deep introspection, in a setting that reveals hidden mysteries and symbols of existence.

The colors are ordered, throughout the film, in the same dramatic game that the events follow. The red of blood appears, as a dramatic theme, throughout the film: the monologue of Tsar Boris is incandescent through the red that sprinkles the frames in their various details. Pushkin's vision is born from the red flames of the hearth. The sinister forecast continues through a suggestion of color, first the blood stain of the flame that breaks out again shines in reflections on the gendarme's helmet. Then, in "Requiem", the red theme of blood penetrates through the visor of Dantes' skull. At Pushkin's death, a red stain of blood appears not on the snow, but in a splendid metaphor, on the sky, through the bloody red circle of the sun.

The chromatics of each episode follow its dramatic line and structure. First, the poet moved in dusty, pale landscapes, in pastel colors. Immerse yourself in the diversity of striking colors that revive the chromatics of a Brullow, of oriental watercolors from the beginning of the 19th century, of brightly colored oriental clothing. The pale blue gray motif of the blizzard and the devils - musically and visually anticipating the future duel - of the snow mantle, are contained in the tinkling of bells when Pushkin is taken away in exile towards Mihailovskoe. A chromatic rhapsody follows. Watercolor. A fine range. Oil. Saturating. Again a fine range, the lyric. A black and white engraving with a spot of color. After the snowstorm, inscribed with a thick brush of color in the flame from the hearth, follows the period of creative maturity.

A pronounced black graphic on the white background. Black with light stripe graphics and spots on the finish. Then, in the same sense resolved, the following scenes from the poet's life, up to the duel, to death, to the white snow marked by the black silhouettes of the trees. Here we find the description of the poet's life in the language of color.

Leadership: By using dramatic visuals, can you highlight intense episodes in your life, thus providing a visual interpretation of your themes and happenings?

Colors play a dramatic role in highlighting different episodes in a creator's existence, therefore his creation dramatically accentuates his themes and happenings. Red, symbolizing blood and flames, appears in moments of maximum intensity, such as death and duel. For example, blood and flames are powerful visual metaphors that reflect emotional states and significant events in his life. In times of blizzard and storm, pale and gray colors reflect states of unease and preparation for inevitable confrontations. Upon the poet's death, a red spot symbolically appears in the sky, suggesting a profound metaphor of his passing. The white landscapes of snow, marked by the black silhouettes of trees, add a touch of final drama. In the same way, the poet's life unfolds as a chromatic rhapsody, each color bringing an additional layer of meaning and emotion.

In art, colors are essential for decoding human experiences, functioning as a metaphorical language for conveying meanings. So the poet's life is also a vibrant chromatic rhapsody, each color bringing additional layers of meaning, just as a well-designed interface uses color to highlight interactive elements. From the pastel colors of the beginnings to the garish oriental palettes, from fine watercolors to saturated oils, his existence takes on nuances that follow one another like custom color schemes for visualizing the code of life.

Leadership: To what extent can stimuli reflect moments of maximum emotional intensity, suggesting a deep connection between the reality of your experiences and their artistic representation?

Every nuance of man's life contributes to the deep understanding of his existence as a creator. In other words, what inspires you in a creative role, amplifies emotions and reveals hidden layers of reality that fascinate you. The whole unfolding of the poet's life can be perceived as a complex visual code, in which each color plays a well-defined role in conveying meanings, just as colors in a program facilitate navigation and understanding. Colors here become an essential metaphorical language for the deep decoding of human experiences.

Pale and gray colors reflect states of unease and preparation for inevitable confrontations. And the pastel landscapes and shades of gray create an atmosphere of anticipation and introspection, suggesting the moments of apparent calm before the storm. These colors give a melancholic and resigned tone, in which the poet contemplates his fate and the inevitable confrontations that await him. The color palette reflects complex states of mind, oscillating between hope and despair, between dream and reality. Therefore, the landscape represents the image of a whole made up of dynamic elements, each having its own expression and its own role in the general context.

Can the image of a whole made up of dynamic elements add a touch of optimism to the end of your creation, thus reflecting an artistic vision of your life?

The description of the artist's life in the language of color can indicate to what extent visual elements can provide you with a unified visual representation of your inner feelings, bringing an additional layer of meaning and emotion. Can you perceive the balance between reality and artistic interpretation through the symbolism of colors used in moments of maximum emotional intensity?

Destination Reality

On September 08, 2015

Try to redefine yourself, including yourself in a continuous process of validating of a reality that asks to be experiences as if for the first time.

It would be best if I do not speak of myself, the one who generalizes himself through simplification. But rather of the unspoken spell that possesses me strongly, of the excitement of being the prisoner of a Think Twice, between the negative alternations and the positive ones of a sensing always on alert. Clearly, I stand along a circuit of stimulating the forces of interaction between three capacities: of seeing, of knowing and of accepting the fact that things are not always what they seem.

A spell enhanced by a subtle blend of truth and untruth, with help from the expression resulting from a Destination Reality, from a sort of authentic that seeks its depth, from the tireless search for a guiding meaning that exists only between the forms of self-assessment and control of a reason gathered unified within me.

Do you recognize in me the soul of a writer that seems the imaginary world all too clearly, to play an important role in the real world, like a Chloe Saunders that almost gets lost in madness contemplating the ghosts she forges?

Leadership: Are you able to develop a wide range of effects in the experiences you experience by placing a new life perspective in the atmosphere of a special world?

To trust this spell is similar to trying to unmistakably find all rational truths with which science prides itself with, to placing myself where feelings become notes. It is probably the most intimate and most precious attribute of my operation within this evolutionary step that establishes the possibility of my transformation in someone else. Now you must open your mind.

I almost dare not comprise this unstoppable spell, the sum of the currents of intensity of a power of assimilating the instantaneous inscribed in the formula: Today is a long time, when I mention those sensations of extensity leading to the neutralization of any everyday banalities – almost as if stemming from a sort of lost cause. It's not a dream.

Whether in this way it is expressed the total changing of my character in good. Whether I get lost in the vortex of a force of resistance that also has a counter-force, as in the case of King Lear whose reason falls apart bit by bit under the shock of extraordinary betrayals. That fact is I manage to keep an "I care" in the face of this splendor called "Myself". The amount of peace and quite that arises from this feeling of profound affinity !

The effects manifested in the experiences I experience by placing a new perspective of life in the atmosphere of a special world results from the corollaries of the observed facts and the remarks they suggest to me.

Leadership: Can you develop a new trend in setting the aesthetic standards of the present by displaying a more natural image of one's own personality relative to a certain coherence of existential assumption?

When you find yourself on the side of a preferential belief of the type: "I would like for things to be considered realistic", having as a generating element of a new trend of measuring development the recognition of a state of affairs which requires confrontation with yourself, you basically interact with two people: one with sight and the other one blind.

Your destination is no longer to gain a new reality whose spell contains the conveniences of a world revealed as a complex miniature universe, but rather the success of shaping a new concept of the present that you experience through all the feelings and thoughts gathered in a lifetime.

Leadership is organized around and thanks to these two people of which you are made, so as to own a high degree of order of the objective world and through this a large quantity of information needed for knowing the present you need to immortalize (not only surpass) if you want the future to change.

The present is a step in the search for a more comprehensive theory over the vision of life. And the instantaneous is a part of the present over which you need to focus your entire thinking, in which you need to deepen your knowledge in order to accede to a reality that you cannot otherwise understand. You need to open yourself and present yourself as responsible in the face of the power of the instantaneous. Which gives a certain individuality to the process of designing a new experience of being.

Leadership: Can you customize your relation to an undisclosed destination, embracing what emerges by means of a "Today is a long time"?

The instantaneous showcases what you are when in the world of your mind arises a surprising view, given by the possibility of your transformation into someone else. In other words, your thinking is in progress, but it needs only a moment to focus in a new role – that of a generator of sensations of extension leading to the neutralization of any everyday banalities. The thinking ability of rising to notions with greater contents, also depends on the capacity of fixating yourself, of capturing the instantaneous.

The instantaneous can be expressed through a "Today is a long time", a specific problem of locating a new position of being included rather than excluded from a continuous process of validating a reality that asks to be experiences as if for the first time. It is the moment of your redefining.

Leadership also has as a cause of producing a new model of thinking and self-surpassing the possibility of customizing your relation to an undisclosed destination, embracing what emerges y means of a "Today is a long time". Can you become someone else by immortalizing the present, by capitalizing on a fleeting moment found at the edge of awareness?

Checking what you want to achieve by means of your own thoughts deducted from capturing the instantaneous, whose constituent element is a sum of beliefs that you exist through a subtle blend of truths and untruths, is indispensable to a good functioning in conditions of confusion.

Developing a new trend in establishing the aesthetic standards of the present is to recreate through interesting thoughts and words the beauty of a certain moment, without overlapping your feelings and thoughts over the images captured by others in a world that is constantly looking to turn you into someone else.

Destination Reality brings to the fore that process of storing the instantaneous in the evolution of man which is called to take the place of what was essentially shaken by the inferior condition: "I cannot be someone else". It is a personal construct that springs from the tireless search for a guiding meaning that exists only in the forms of self-assessment and control of the reason gathered unified within yourself.

Develop Your Character

On January 12, 2009

Take a step forward in developing your own personality, by maximizing your moral responsibility towards your own beliefs and actions.

If you become chief of police on the Amity Island, nobody will ever have the courage to contradict your opinios and beliefs. Nobody will influence the decisions that you will take your professional life and your mood. In fact, undoubtedly, you will be surrounded by people who will appreciate you and will truly sustain you in everything you have to accomplish, in all your initiatives and all future projects.

But what do you do when you confront a much harder situation for your experience? A white shark killed a teenager that was swimming near the shore. It is necessary, therefore, to take immediate specific measures to reduce the risk of a future attack of the killer shark.

If you are like the police chief Martin Brody, the main character in the movie "Jaws (1975)", probably you will listen to the city mayor and you will hide this incident from the rest of the people, especially because The Day Of America is approaching, when the whole beach will be full and the profit will grow. But behold, shark makes his re-appearance and kills another person. The mother of the victim comes to you, crying, and after she gives a slap to you, she blames you that, although you knew about the shark, you let the people swim. What do you do now? You close the beach definitely?

I hope from the bottom of my heart that you are not like the chief of police from the movie, who didn't close the beach even after this. At the insistence and pleading of the mayor and the investors, who wanted to gain money, Martin Brody let the beach open for the people, until of course the shark makes another victim.

Do you understand the possible implications of awareness that you are the being behind the leadership?

The leader bases the ways of balancing his development not when he's dealing with a contradiction of the normal or with breaking all the principles that define him, but when he manages to rectify an absurd deviation. He finds the strength to be a step forward when others say "wait", he finds the strength to be alone in doing a choice when he is surrounded by people and, especially, when he finds the strength to overcome that choice.

Everyone enters sooner or later in the ambiguous game of leadership. Thus, the longevity of the relationship "Leader-People" and the grand achievements of fairness, commitment, solidarity, honor and common sense develop complexes, mistrust or insecurity, This leads to a degradation of the leader's operation, to a cancellation of good perception about self and other people and even to an assumption (something uncaring) of those traits that make a negative change in the relationship between them.

Degradation or late stage of leadership development can generate different perceptions of the sense of philosophy behind it, projecting on his so charged, sometimes dramatic background a gray that overwhelms everything, blurring the horizon that he scans. So the attitude adopted by the leader in relation woth other people may strongly contrast with the brightness specific to leadership in his immense complexity and wisdom, based on that platform of norms, rules and precautions, which still tends to bring out and amplify all the best in them.

To take the authentic shape of a character that is synonymous with the term "accusation" is to bear all the consequences of a hasty decision, minus all your beliefs.

We note that the assumption and awareness that you are the being behind the leadership, whose self-perceptions can be interpreted negatively, positively or even wrongly, restrict your options to agree with the change in critical situations.

In terms of settings, leadership does not always make a "common body" and does not always have the same direction of ongoing with the man's intentions to compromise, to overcome prejudices, to relinquish or restrict his power of influence.

Contrariwise, leadership seems rather to distance itself from man, clearly marking of their areas of connection when, in his immense vanity, man no longer takes account of anyone or anything. Once obligations broken and engagements unregarded, the relationship "Leader-People" practically dislocates itself from the sphere of the three criteria: relevance, functionality and linearity of approach, leading even to different, often contrary meanings.

Conflicts of all time, divergences that occur and results that can be achieved reinforce and demonstrate this.

Leadership: Does the fundamental mistake from which occur all vices of teasing with the excess of the illusion "this is also good", also reside in your aspiration towards a horizon from beyond immediate reality?

People who have weak character avoid taking firm decisions when it's about a major risk. Often they are influenced by clever people, who want more money and who have a great force of manipulating.

The difference between a leader and an ordinary man it's not the lack of knowledge, but the lack of consistency. The best leaders have great achievements because they act fast because they get involved with firmness in solving their problems and they are capable of taking major decisions in risky situations. In a high level job, there is no place for a man who doesn't know how to impose his point of view when it's needed, who doesn't have the courage to face all the hard things, who do not assume the moral responsibility and doesn't take action with maximum efficiency when things go wrong.

Just as the companies are mainly focused on ensuring the implementation of basic elements better than the competition, so you should focus your entire essence of your leadership on the exercise of that moral responsibility (which emerges from the special status that you have) better than anyone else.

Do you constantly evaluate your own emotions and actions? Do you carefully analyze the general trends of evolution? Is it necessary to rethink your orientation to your own ego? How do other people interpret your own efforts and actions? Have you begun to amplify your inner strength? Do you need some beliefs that would be your guiding marks?

You cannot ask more from yourself if you are not prepared to conform to the experience of feeling guilty about your actions.

In life you will confront very often, with situations that might not be under your control, but your character will always be a cornerstone which will help you control the events that can be controlled. Because of your stout hearted character, each time you will make a decision, you will make a step forward in developing your own personality.

Whatever the talents you have, you will never succeed in becoming a valuable leader if you don't know how to assume your responsibility in crisis situations, if you don't involve more and more in resolving the problems and if you are not sufficiently determined to "play hard."

Character development is related to mood and patterns of thinking brought to you by the encounter of what you are required to fulfill and what you are prepared to sacrifice to endure the hellish horrors of spiritual torment.

Take a step forward in developing your own personality, by maximizing your moral responsibility towards your own beliefs and actions.

The Devil's Last Command

On June 05, 2010

Cultivate in you those moral virtues that would match the concept of leadership unanimously accepted by all people, before directing them to a new way.

After more than two thousand years, the Emperor Qin Shi Huang raised from the dead. He appears in front of his soldiers, who counted several thousands; all of them emerged from hell in order to help him carry out his diabolical plan. Aligned in parallel rows, immovable like guards on watch, frightful like hungry wolves, they are all looking at the Antichrist with strained attention.

There is no trait that would betray any weakness of this cold being, petty, only half-human, as if made of steel, with an overwhelming will, and which cannot accept but victory. Behind this machine, prepared for battle, there are feverish, direfully tense nerves thrilling, which frighten and spread nothing but fear and hate.

With a fixed look, with his hand straight in front, and an increasingly visible senselessness, the Emperor addresses to his soldiers on a firm voice:

- Today, I bring you back to a world submerged into chaos and corruption. I'll be the one restoring order. I'll claim what is rightfully mine. I'll destroy all ideas of freedom. I'll kill mercilessly. I'll rob ruthlessly. I'll take you beyond the wall, and after you'll get over it, you'll become invincible. I brought you back to life with only one aim. So that you would make the whole world listen to me and obey me.

- Long live the emperor ! Long live the emperor !

Emperor Han, the main character in the movie „The Mummy – Tomb Of The Dragon Emperor (2008)", through his simple but imperative speech, sought nothing but to pass his physical and spiritual force to his soldiers (risen from the grave to help him carry out his demonic mission), the force of an invincible man. And the image he created for himself, the one of a "Messianic savior", brought them hope and unyielding confidence. Keeping his pitiless, dire figure, expressing his speech on a wrathful, aggressive and cold tone, he demonstrated a fervent desire to be among them in the mission of conquering the world.

Leadership: Do you enhance the resonance of that protective shade area that creates cohesion between "the power deficit" and "the depth phenomenon"?

A harsh attitude of the type: "I am against everyone", with the purpose of triggering within a group a penetrating emotion of the type "you will see what I am capable of", can only be directly confronted by the value of an idea with a powerful spiritual and emotional potential, as a justification of an action of moral impact.

You must know that every person feels powerful as long as he is not vulnerable to his own suggestions of fear, confusion and mistrust, where the past proves even more anxious as the present becomes more problematic. A person permanently maintains a margin of indeterminacy: even when he is willing to risk everything to achieve a bold purpose, he is restrained by the fear of repeating the past. Therefore, within certain boundaries, the individual runs away from himself.

Switching from pain to despair towards a dimension with even greater vitality but less affection means going through a labyrinth at the end of which opens another labyrinth that will not turn out to be brighter inside: "Know thy self." In order to create spirit in the combination of supremacy ensuring ideas, the intelligence to know that after the storm comes the sun, but after the sun the clouds appear – the cruel pain of the regret of not knowing who you really are.

Right was the one who said that man's aversion to the world is firstly the mark of the regret of not having found any trace of satisfaction in the form of manifestation of the collective spirit.

In this case we can see a double evolutionary direction of the concept of a leader model: as an "expression of a deficit of available power" or as "an exponent of a hidden, unseen phenomenon of depth", which is precisely the state of consciousness."

This visible shape of the certainty to live in an authentic sentimental way of superiority, transformed into an overwhelming obsession, can be translated through the tendency of treating others like mini-businesses, calling forth some sort of power addiction, similar with drug or alcohol addiction.

And the extension of power towards the extremities of a continuously addicted axis is not a nonsense that needs to be unmasked and destroyed, but une grave maladie, an overestimation syndrome of your own personality through a behavior that often lacks social value. That behavior betrays a somewhat paranoid thinking similar to: "If you don't want me, I want you." In this case, one of the consequences would be losing your dignity by limiting your all-powerfulness.

Among the uncertainties and ethical dilemmas, among the grandeur delusions on the screen of imagination that takes pleasure in duplicity and super-egos, among the plausibly unjustified position confirmations, leadership represent a suffering that prolongs, in a slow agony, in the interaction with others – amidst a world full of conflicts, tensions, war and hate.

Leadership: Do you answer with a betraying "YES" to the principles of using power, even when power is disguised behind the image of some vulnerable defense?

Virtues and guiding principles are those that set the tone, which is valid not only for leadership but also for his followers. A leader without the ability to manifest his most precious values, the most magnificent desires in the spirit of the deepest authenticity, and in the spirit of the noblest moral traits, will ultimately fail.

If you watched the movie, you know that the reign of Emperor Qin Shi Huang was short-lived, as a last sunbeam arises before losing in the clouds. He returned to where he came from the dead, once and for all. For nothing can "heal" the one who is sick of the desire of absolute power, except the eternal death.

What are the moral beliefs that underlie your personality? Do you say "yes" to the most despicable sins, to the most immoral interest when in fact you have to conform yourself to the most valuable virtues that are forming a true character? Are you lacking that essential human quality that confirms that you are truly blessed to be loved? Do you consider yourself an invincible leader that may be imposed only by force? Or, you are imposing yourself by the prize list of your qualities that designate yourself as the most empathetic and "human" leader?

Just as good ideas are the key element in solving the problems related to creativity, so the ability of not deviating yourself from the laws and moral norms established by society is the key element in the development of your leadership.

Do your moral virtues match the concept of leadership unanimously accepted by everyone? Faith, justice, solidarity, humanity, are still in "waiting" phase for you?

Your power is disguised behind the image of a vulnerable defense when your version of an individual obsessed with control changes according to the instruction of the type: "wait for the inevitable to happen."

Conclusion: As a leader, It is a great mistake to consider yourself invincible, and to believe that only you hold the absolute truth, but indeed, in order for you to have supporters, you must prove that you are enough strong and intelligent in order to cope with any situation. And an adequate behaviour for collective work will bring you more success than a dictatorial attitude. And especially, you must not make promises in vain: and do not fool your collaborators, otherwise your "reign" will be a short one.

Diary Of An Astral Journey

On April 16, 2018

Turn your reality into a form of art, being the sole reference of a supposed visual unit about how to think of a life that has defeated time.

I have done great works of art around the world over a time often projected into the fantastical, in which the nostalgia of a life lived for centuries on end still vibrates like an intense-red color thrown into the immortality of a moment of glory. My life, deployed to the idea of aesthetic autonomy, representing the idea of balance and harmony between the parts that make up a whole, apart from the notion of kitsch, is a work that vibrates only under the power of the memories that the artist's eyes animate as a kind of an attempt to penetrate the darkness of a plastic world through an illustrious taste.

Originally, I wrote thousands of pages to understand life from the perspective of a creator that attempts to mold a new reality through the simple mechanical reproduction of the features of someone eternal, the standard of perfection, in the midst of an increasing expectation of something that is imminent, just so that I could understand myself in all the deep springs of a work that is wanted, at least intentionally, on many stylistic levels. I did not think I would live longer than the number of my pages.

The beauty I have created as a promise of alterity, a suspension between plausible and unreal, between natural and mysterious, lies in that discretion of the image that the world forms in an infinite universe which, from the perspective of ultimate consciousness, is just a dream. The living form of this beauty I extracted from Leonardo Da Vinci's painting treatises, linked to the fact that the artist's soul must be a mirror that objectively reflects nature as it is, as a resulting space-time of four cosmic factors: invariability and rectitude, perfection and unity.

Everything can happen and everything can be narrated and accepted. I only succeeded in isolating myself in a world of other dimensions, of borders, in which I thought that what is normal is nothing but a seeming exception to the rule, a strange mixture between the enigmatic reality in which everything is its own contradiction and the heated dialogue with a God who imagines that he can be seen anywhere and in everything. The only starting point for a rich work, stimulated by a vital cause, is the vision of a fabulous journey of no return.

Leadership: Is one of your evolutionary paths that of approaching a work of art from an aesthetic perspective marked by the belief in a supreme reality?

The belief in something higher is strongly related to the courage of not giving up what you are and what you believe in, transposed into a perfect work, a fine fabric of linear tracks covering the entire surface of time. The being built within you, as if time has made a loop or got caught in the knot of a stellar rope dissolved in a vivid watercolor, a simple taste problem of another artistic form, marked by a perfect bilateral symmetry between certainty and enigma, casts beyond the image of the visible world, to the fields of pure spirituality and mystical experiences.

And if such a work still amazes by the living presence of a history that transcends time, in which the beginning of the white of absolute light weaves the appearance of the phenomenal world, I can only stop for a moment at Holofernes, the general of Nebuchadnezzar who was especially cruel to the Jews. He was seduced and murdered by the beautiful Judith, to avenge her oppressed people. Judith Slaying Holofernes.

Here I heal myself from the pain I feel by pressing on the image of my consistency, my own storyline, the feeling that I am equal to the talent of the painter Artemisia Gentileschi by the nature of the mind with which I have to come to a deal with time, the same endowment with which is blessed the divine being in a representation of God looking in the mirror.

The supreme reality that shaped me as a man is the dialogue between a well-trained artist on the road of consecration and the traversal of an unlimited time and space, actively manifesting its by the remembrance or plotting of images capturing the passing moment in favor of images from everyday life.

Leadership: Is the image inspiring you to make art formed from the choice you make in the case of a double direction?

The approach to art, as a transparent message of a more comprehensive reality, keeping the mystery of inspiration always at the limit of revelations, betrays something in the consciousness of a man who creates his patterns of purpose by revealing remote connections to the possible worlds of art theories in the concept of the referential visual image which implies a similarity to the pattern of characters or events that have crucially changed history.

In life, as in art, the color of personality fades more and more in the face of those creative consciousnesses that make sense of the responsible understanding that the space of observation must be colonized by the truths or appearances of the past. The blood of the matter art is made of goes beyond the fulfillment of a universal need, to a vital cause: transforming man into a destiny that is not lost in the darkness of the ages.

Thus, the image that inspired me to make art in all the deep springs of thought that calls for respect for the expression applied in any convention was made up of the choice I made in the case of a double direction: reproducing the past from a different perspective and the perfect rendering of reality from a creative perspective of general-human significance.

The artist always chooses the colors of the painting from which he holds 2-3 samples to remember the beginning of the road. I continued my journey to an unknown destination in a destiny of words that changed shape and linked to each other according to certain rules in search of the deep understanding of the whole of which I was once a part. It is not enough just to have existed, I must also miss myself. Red and blue have always been in my heart.

Everything can be resumed anytime, for any number of times. The promise of the universe is the right transposition of the words from the book of my life into a world of art, in an expression of time from a continuum of immortality: "I will find myself again when I return."

Leadership is the image you build from your transformation into a destiny that is not lost in the darkness of the ages.

The Diary Of An Astral Journey captures the triumph in the posterity of the artist who knows how to accurately express absolutely everything the world knows, but cannot do.

Disappear Until You Want To Be Found

On March 24, 2016

Test your courage of being yourself, unearthing the "miraculous" from within the reality of a new role.

One of the triumphs that truly were a challenge when it came to accepting chance, was to shine by absence, an intermediate situation between presence and loss in the role of a nobody, necessary in establishing the zeros of a complex equation. But without the eyes, the soul, seeing if it is about someone who pretends to be, undoubtedly, a feature characteristic only to art, as a unity of the idea with the image that seems to have eluded you thus far.

The unknowns, twitching of the all-encompassing conscious, in the freedom given by God to transcend immediacy, were the remnants of an impenetrable area from the content of my thinking under the command of an unconsumed energy. Only the theory of determinism could serve as a basis for the support and founding of a convention between the expression from the association of some contradictory aspects of life and the belonging to the artistic conduct of an esthetician of subjective idealism.

Leadership: Can you maintain your authentic essence while navigating multiple guises and roles, using "contrasts" to amplify your presence even in your absence?

I soon started off on the trail of an intrigue, in which great or small forces, it does not matter since each of the parts involved is somewhat in the right, depicted the desperate searches of a culprit of the fact that he had made himself unseen in a game of contrasts. A game of the madness of passing off as someone else, especially given that my incomprehensible presence was necessary due to the position I held, as a man of extremes, expressed through the uniqueness of the relationship between arrival, departure and return.

Arsène Lupin, the fantasizing gentleman, the man with thousands of appearances that only operated in castles and lounges, come one night to Baron Schormann. He left empty-handed, but was careful to leave his business card on which he wrote: "Arsène Lupin, the gentleman-burglar, will return when the furniture will be genuine."

Nothing can overshadow the fact that the ghostly disappearances were based on the mechanisms of escape, everything seemingly a void of uncertainty and heaviness, without which the miraculous could not brought to light. An unknown that can become an obsessive thought. My entire cerebral organism had become a machinery driven, as if, by external forces. A small white stain in a translucid color, a combination between tracking an inexplicable intuition, being lucky and taking risks.

Leadership: Can you change your perception of reality and the image of the world, authenticating yourself as a user of criteria of the dimension of spiritual life in the space of the duality between what is authentic and what is false?

Like a calling, driven by a divine plan, caused especially by the violent resistance to the idea of that right, which become an obsession, of distilling essence into a formula of appearance, which was not within the power of the common man, I treaded on the footprints of a fugitive. A stray whose absence is signaled by no one, unless he is careful to leave behind his business-card.

The criteria of the spiritual dimension that made me choose the denial of reality, remaining somewhat trapped in the past and imprisoned in illusion, in a way like entering a labyrinth of assumptions, roles, themes, and multiple ambiguities, whose meaning escapes in a unique relationship with the world, were given by that state of primordial naivety, of innocence and curiosity, with which we enjoy the tortuous paths of literary expression forces, strange forms, creating an art of compromise between intellectualism, emotionalism and imaginative poignancy.

What was fake in the long line of features of this phenomenon, from macro effects to private ones, was the contrast between the results of life and the painful, earnest cry that flew far beyond the borders of my being. I did not want to admit that what I thought was a story of my experiences was just a compilation of my mind built almost entirely on the basis of preconceived ideas of originality.

The only authentic thing was to give something to the world from the beginning of the understanding of my identity and of the mastery of the artistic domain which means unity between the work and the will, between the idea and the appearance.

Leadership: Do you lead yourself in life according to theories designed "in the background", through the intensity of a fantasy experience that goes beyond the authentic values of universal art?

An early supporter of the idea "disappear until you want to be found", or "act as if you don't exist", I had put into practice everything I had learned through the fantasy of the artist who tries to discover at least one detail that has some sort of resemblance with one of the infinite forms of nature, corresponding with the feelings of those who introduce in their paintings stains lacking shape which precisely hint to real objects.

Perception of the world and life, aiming at the experiences and conclusions concerning the conditions of receiving an artistic act, through which I lost to find myself in someone else's superiority, have as a resort the desire of using my forces, big or small, to analyze what I really was when I was choosing to get into the obscurity of a stimulating role.

Who is driven in life according to the theories conceived "muted", through the intensity of an fantasizing experience, allowing the possibility of forming an image under the action of uncontrollable forces, by analogy with the common elements of forms and movements, drawing inspiration from the nature of opposites, must first prove the existence of those two currents, eternal and all-encompassing, reality and the surreality.

Leadership: Does focusing on language processing and means of expression in achieving a fuller state make it that your chaining around art is more effective when it comes to creating the image of another world?

Did Andre Breton not say, the found of Surrealism, that the miraculous is brought to light within reality? It is brought to light in dreams, in darkness, in obsessions, in concerns, during sleep, in fear, love, hazard; in ghostly disappearances, in the mechanisms of escape; in hallucinations, in so-called disorders, madness; in fantasies, in the supernatural and the unusual, in empiricism and surrealism.

Leadership evolves through understanding of the fact that contributing to the choice of using your mind in favor of creating an appearance, an essence that needs to be hidden, is an attitude worthy of a man who wants to fully capitalize on his power of getting involved in the depths of a representative role. A role which allows him to take the shape of many types of characters.

This can create a differentiation between the people who can become someone else, more superior, "detaching from the nest", to act laterally. And those who expose themselves to the habit of "staying in the nest", at the stage of setting a scene without the main actors, without exceptional roles, without extraordinary performances.

The role you play in the leadership show resembles that frenzy of imagination from which the masterpiece will be born: first, you enrich your experience of viewing unusual aspects of your personal life, then you keep your motivation in a world in which you can do what you want, and you can think of what you want without anybody banning you.

Disappear Until You Want To Be Found is a call to people who want to engage in a different role than a normal one, a role that represents an absolute novelty, expressed through the uniqueness of the relationship between arrival, departure and return.

Difficulty in leadership consists in the fact that, once you've taken up this new role, you need to find the courage to be yourself, without allowing yourself the luxury of not knowing who you truly are and what destiny you have to fulfill. Can you bring the miraculous to light within the reality of your new role?

Disciple And Master

On September 23, 2014

Enhance your capacities of impact upon the formation of a new mentality without losing your statute of 'outstanding partner'.

Eisenstein, noting the character defects of his master, Vsevolod Meyerhold, observes his malice, and remembered how much sadness had caused once the disinterest and the malicious irony of the teacher when once he asked his advice on a personal matter. Then, we may ask ourselves if is it not this correlation of the Rustem and Zorab legend, known since childhood and relived with so much severe pain now, will determine its significant presence and the desire to give it an unusual optimistic solution on the shooting script for "Great Fergana Canal" conceived after nearly two decades?

But later, after reconciliation, Meyerhold, will dedicate to his former student a photo with the inscription: "I am proud of the student that has become a master. Now, I love this master who created a school. To this student, this master - Sergei Eisenstein - my admiration."

*The dedication is dated July 22, 1936. The first sketches for the script "Great Fergana Canal" dates from July 1939, only three years later and closer to the date of the great man of theater disappearance. **

Leadership: Can you turn admiration towards someone into a distortion of the correct relationship of cause-effect that will not obstruct your self-fulfillment?

Those who fall into the trap of being dependent on someone else, the very condition of founding a cooperation framework as a reference point for leadership, will have serious difficulties to overcome throughout their careers.

The manifestations of your thinking can relate to an absolutely new reality when the admiration for someone is replaced by the obsession for their own privileges, such as the privilege of really feeling yourself as being above the world, you give yourself the privilege of all creation you work on, the privilege to rejoice more than anyone over a significant component of your art, the privilege of placing yourself in the situation of a master, rather than that of an apprentice.

Because the route that a master follows, necessary for striking the balance on which are located the abilities and ardors of being irreplaceable, many times bypasses the expansion space of the one who approaches it. The intention to make him understand the importance of loyalty is equivalent to the power of a stray bullet; you should not act without taking all safety measures. As the saying goes that every rose has its thorns, and every thorn is a reality.

The wisdom of a leader lies in the ability to offer your power for a greater purpose, without fear of becoming the "spare wheel", from the determination not to submit to external pressures.

I think the biggest difficulty called into a continuous degradation is the moral improvement and the character formation by providing the respect to those who do not deserve it enough. Someone called this phenomenon "A distortion of the correct cause-effect relationships, which obstruct self-fulfillment".

Although there are many talented individuals by what they do with leadership qualities, they will not allow anyone to use their power of science manipulation, unless it is a selfless purpose. Because there is a fear: the one who leaves too much from him, in the end risks reaching the spare wheel. And this thinking does not create you a strong personality, but rather the obligation to introduce you with something that is not you, the obligation to obey your own instincts of an antagonist, highlighting features and aspects impossible to be submitted and accepted.

Leadership: Is the commitment of the creative effort validated in the sense of cultivating a new style, in perfect agreement with the reality of the self-experience without which there is no derogation?

If the reception of an experience of learning and development, or rather its formative and educative effect upon the spirit and human nature lies predominantly under the sign of inspiration and some foreign values, then the peak time of cooperation may benefit, with a substantial increase of performance, by the contribution of a new amount of intellectual skills.

And this precisely to obtain an exceptional partner status by amplifying the effect of particularly "the poor enriches" and of accepting the capabilities of dominance on the formation of a new mentality, value, attitude and vision.

There is a saying of a good friend, whose idea I share by myself: "Once you reach success make sure the sky will not open, nor you will not hear angels singing." This saying summarizes achieving a high level of authenticity, but which also makes the transition of the artist from an open mentality to the one of "Access Denied" type.

Leadership: Can you adjust your thinking to avoid getting stuck in an "Access Denied" mindset if you refuse to update your vision and accept new influences?

In this case, we may properly ask ourselves, which is the context in which he still leads? The question includes and is not limited to what can be comprised in the field of applicability of the commitment according to which the disciple cannot climb higher than the normal accepted by his master.

Well, the context is, in this case, one independent from the emotional point of view, in which the focus is put on the pride of being different, by excluding the others and by putting on the table the need for defense against them. What makes the leadership to turn into a real world of bygone glories, of art counterfeiters, with outdated thinking patterns and standards, which can only justify the leader collapse outside his talent and his entry into disrepute.

The perfect artist is a mindset such as "Access Denied" that compels other representatives of art to directly confront their poor performance achieved over time. But that does not make him the most favored and appreciated in the world.

Disciple and master are two entities that exclude or complement each other by the joint contributions brought to the sustainable development of thinking that does not stumble in clichés, not blaming anyone who possesses the advantages of philosophy according to which both sides win: win-win.

Discreet Confessions (II)

On June 01, 2020

I organized the following words, chosen with good heart from the many pleasures of my artistic creations, sprinkled with small means of expression, so that each reader will like what they read, or at least have a moment of silence in the tumult of the world. My whole being breathes freedom in favor of many values, not only from the point of view of leadership, not just through the eyes of the artist, not just looking from top to bottom to a reality that seems so hard to reach and maintain, but by the fact that every word seems organized on the basis of unique life experiences. Maybe you will understand me better, maybe not, but you will certainly find something in you in my thoughts.

----

* Creating is a much bigger challenge than taking over from others. When you perfect this ability, you become that "Yourself" in the superlative.

* The one who looks in the mirror must be more concerned with the way the self understands itself, without any resemblance to anyone or anything.

* Under the dimension of creation resulting from the spiritual work lies the secret of a writing that is revealed only in the atmosphere of a Persian miniature.

* Whoever looks at himself as if looking in the mirror understands more about the world than about life.

* Tell me what you've changed in science, and in what direction science has gone because of you, before you give me an opinion on what kind of person you are.

* The fact that you present yourself to the world as omniscient does not mean that science is moving in one direction or another.

* The sunny part of your importance reflects the way you assume the success of the creative act assumed from the height of the need to know yourself as being the best.

* Creation can never find its immortality in the dominant spiritual expression, except when the continuity of its own creation is one with the struggle for perfection.

* The payment of the debt to art is a continuity of creation related to the gain that is pronounced in favor of immortality.

* When you look in the mirror, try to understand exactly how the mirror looks at you.

* The artist's unlimited universe is the product of a "Unique Self" that feels that it lives continuously through knowledge and communion with nature.

* Doing what is inevitable to be done agrees with the way you measure your importance to the quality of being creative.

* To understand that looking at yourself as you look at yourself in a mirror, you find yourself in a world that strives to explain to you that happiness is only within you.

* The creation that precedes the first thrill of the Great Discovery is celebrated in honor of the great Jupiter who reveals his holiness in an image full of strength and distinction.

* From the box of the dream diary, the Universe develops the story image of a world that does not die, but is constantly reborn.

* The mirror makes you understand that the way you look at yourself depends on the way you recognize your patterns of thoughts and feelings in a direct, peaceful and original way.

* The conception of accomplishing the important thing may differ from what you think about yourself.

* To create something superlative means to challenge that "Yourself" to develop its capacity to give value to the ideal of "incarnation of the Logos" in a timeless setting.

* In the vibration of the soul we can apply several colors with the help of a magic brush that, through science, enters the frequency of the universe.

* To feel the resemblance of nature to yourself means to live in an unlimited universe that coexists with others in the same physical space.

* Those who will be forgotten are the same ones who know little, for those who know much turn science into a memorable infinity for an entire universe.

* By looking at yourself as the mirror looks at you when you reflect in it, you will be able to more easily understand what makes you PRO-YOU.

* Another view of understanding the world in an art form stems from the fact that great science moves from the omniscient to the autonomous.

* What you think you can't do is similar to the importance you attach to the time between the beginning and the end of creation.

* In order to be sustained by the universe, you must value much of what others value little in science.

* The man who does nothing for science simply has no way of knowing God. He lives only to die.

* When you meet someone really close to your soul, you forget about the rest of the world.

* The spiritual work of creation revealed by the force of Jupiter in the vertical plane of the "Free Window" is honored by the discovery of secret writings.

* To highlight art in the vibration of the soul is as if we sensitively move a brush on the body of a young girl sleeping naked.

* The infinity or immortality of creation is a consumption of continuity attributed to the artist's relation to the experience of renewing his own creation.

* The light lit in the boundless sphere of the Morning Star can reproduce the reality of the dream experienced only in the sense of a human creation.

* The measure of what you do when you are important differs from the measure of the importance you assume without being important.

* When the brush produces its sensitive vibration through science, only then does art transform into the soul.

* Man's latent incarnation in eternal life is perfected by the inclusion of "Yourself" in an authentic creation known as the "articulation of an artistic space".

* The artist's brush produces the only sensitive vibration with the help of the soul imprinted in the landscape of science.

* The artist always experiences the nature of the "Unlimited One" by the fact that he considers himself a universe different from the Worldly One.

* By perfecting "Yourself" due to the challenge of rediscovering yourself in the superlative, the unique creation of God's glorification is achieved.

* We can apply to science with the help of the universal vibration a spiritual movement that turns the miracle of life into a model of expressiveness.

* Be the soul of the mirror reflected in the light of an inner experience whenever you try to look at yourself sincerely.

* What makes you think you are important in accordance with what you know about yourself, as long as no one else gives you importance?

* Above the dream, the Night Star lights up, extending its light into the reality of a creation experienced in the moment of a time meant to never set.

* The artist's self wants to be a universe that feels and lives through what nature can offer him without limit in terms of inspiration.

* The universe is born and develops from infinity, just like a dream diary that allows you to always return to the point where you woke up.

* Science takes you as the initiate of those hidden in another order of the world, by the fact that it moves in the same direction with an omniscient who does not consider himself omniscient at all.

* From what we see we recognize another face of nature's way of displaying its bodies and miracles.

* In accordance with the higher beings detached from the Sacred thought, a series of banal generalities, known especially in the form of symbols, takes place.

* All the intelligence with which the world feeds its pride is equal to zero before the universe.

* Willful forgetting is for those forgotten by the world as a kind of science that values a lot, but which requires very little.

* Never trust two things: the mentality of the elderly and gambling.

* If by the age of 35 years you have not managed to produce a change in science, be sure that you will never succeed.

* The secret is found in art books. Don't try to memorize them, try to notice that "something" no one sees.

* Art is the past you gain in the future.

* The global change in leadership will start in Romania.

* Only a few isolated individuals will always be at the root of big changes.

* Great science is only for scientists.

* Hold fast the knot of a mystery, and do it with a clear conscience that you have done everything to keep it from falling apart.

* I never claimed to be a perfect man, at most I tried to define perfection.

* I read at least one hour every morning. I have learned that every morning is another essential page of a life whose subject is knowledge.

* A tip for all children: learn as best you can. But at least one of those who will not learn anything at school, will reach above all.

* Try to paint your soul with the mastery with which art reflects the balance between the visible and the invisible world.

* An artist's work is subordinated to the sincerity with which he expresses his feelings in the language of his own soul.

* Don't wait until everything is perfect. It's like buying a lottery ticket and putting all your hopes into Sunday's draw.

* I wish to all the students who started school to not learn as I "learned". However, I would be interested in that one who resembles me.

* Learn from a rose to be a neutral and calm observer. Experience the state of freedom by experiencing the joy of a long and abundant flowering.

* All the secrets of the world are closely related to art. Only those who are totally dedicated to the works of art will discover the great secrets of the world.

* Some people give high yields only when they are left to do their own work. Put them next to other people, and you'll see they don't do anything.

* Let a man handle himself, and if he succeeds, then he will lead a world. Put the same man in the middle of the world, and he will end up like all other people.

* All the meanings of this world are the meanings of lives illuminated by the same sun. And if you tried to drag your understanding to the light of the sun, you might understand life as a pride of light to creep into everyone's eyes.

* The universe always confuses the plans of those who think a lot, but feel too little.

Discreet Confessions (III)

I organized the following words, chosen with good heart from the many pleasures of my artistic creations, sprinkled with small means of expression, so that each reader will like what they read, or at least have a moment of silence in the tumult of the world. My whole being breathes freedom in favor of many values, not only from the point of view of leadership, not just through the eyes of the artist, not just looking from top to bottom to a reality that seems so hard to reach and maintain, but by the fact that every word seems organized on the basis of unique life experiences. Maybe you will understand me better, maybe not, but you will certainly find something in you in my thoughts.

----

* Try to present your science to the spiritual world, in no way in the direction of those who lack knowledge.

* The universe is supported by those who know how to turn science into a journal in the box of infinity.

* Feel what is experienced only through resemblance, so that you can be part of the nature of the one who experiences himself at the level of the unlimited universe.

* What matters is what you do with what you think you can't do.

* The vibration of the soul transposed into art is like a sensitive brush that moves the coordinates of science in the direction reflected by the retina of eternity.

* Only a scientist can understand what science really is.

* Great Science is the work of an artist who sees himself as equal to God.

* You can benefit from science only through what the truth reveals through its unaltered nature.

* The science of a great artist is understood by what he is able to subject to time beyond the world.

* Fiction is the bright moment of a dream experienced in a creation that intensely promotes the ignition of the emotions provided by the expansion of reality.

* Try to see everything you can with different eyes.

* Understanding art is done by bringing science to the level of sensitivity.

* Perfection differs from material things in that it is related to the spirit, more than anything else.

* The power of science to become an art is a validation of the understanding of a reaction to propagate sensitivity and inner beauty.

* By doing what is important you can more easily gain confidence in your abilities.

* The artist's creation gains its greatness at the level of being of the universe through what nature has best to offer at the level of "unity" available indefinitely.

* Those who know much will learn even more, and those who know little will forget everything and be forgotten.

* He who manifests himself in the form of a high science categorically distances himself from a non-knower who loses sight of the natural properties of the substantial form in the act of creation.

* Complete is the artist only when he manages to relate to the consumption of his creation in infinity, giving continuity to scientific determinations.

* Idiotic replies are for super-smart people, for them to learn to come off their pedestal a bit.

* A self that lives by resemblance feels its "unlimited power" at the level of creation that perpetuates for a long time.

* It takes you 20 years to understand that a trivial point can be a solid line in a circle that increases its circumference indefinitely.

* Know how to use a certain point to create a line that thickens and lengthens inside a glass globe capable of being customized with an unlimited number of upgrades and functions.

* In perfection we find things that only find their value in time, hence the fact that perfection means patience.

* The fact that indicates you as omniscient in the secrets of the world derives from the word "knowledge" presented in the direction of a perpetual Divinity.

* The perfection of things lies in the moment when you have decided not to make them too high an expectation.

* The view with which you distinguish one object from another makes everything unique in a world that is divided into black and white.

* The thing seen by mirroring the spirit always has a different conformation than the original.

* Because in the work of sight there are two variants of perceiving objects: through interpretation and through "make belief ".

* In the direction in which you present yourself omnisciently, as a great initiate in the secrets of the world, only the significance of a science that constantly seeks its autonomy moves.

* The fact that you think you are important means knowing where to turn your attention.

* Each of the things around us bears the mark of a "double-sighted" choice.

* The sacred existing in the Metamorphoses of life is given by the spirit of the superior beings who know how to relate to infinity.

* If you expect things to be perfect, they will probably be upside down. If you take them as they are when their time comes, they will, most probably, become perfect in time.

* The science of comprehending the universe is nuanced by the confession that the researcher makes in the face of the challenge of being one with the Infinite.

* The nature perceived by resemblance to the universe can be understood by the resemblance of the artist's self with the possibility of developing an unlimited territory.

* Leadership is the highest and most interesting science. It includes wisdom, depth, originality and spirituality.

* "Ace Square" defines only the one at the top of the ranking !

* The ideal in leadership is to have the best playing cards and at the same time to be the best player on the world table !

* In leadership, both the quality and the quantity of followers who are really interested in your profile take precedence.

* Time passes only in favor of those who know how to really value it. Double your personal value every day !

* Let not a day go by without bringing a more interesting addition to the science that attests to your value.

* Confidence in your own abilities gives value to your leadership !

* If there is at least one person in the world who can do what you do, it means that you are not a unique model.

* Leadership is measured in a single mode, not in a series production mode !

* The future does not belong to the diligent, but to those talented who know how to admirably use the expressive force of their talent.

* I've never been a violent man. I liked to win without getting into a fight.

* The science of grasping infinity is nuanced by the researcher's attempt to respond to the power given by God in the name of saving the world.

* Making an art out of science is like vibrating the human soul with a self-moving brush.

* Try to do what is important by directing your attention to what you think about yourself.

* The substantial properties of creation are manifested under the act of changing the form of content in several ways.

* Dream, turn on the light on a moment experienced intensely during a creation that expands its reality.

* In order to truly understand art, you must first be inspired by the music and the images that accompany it. The composition that defines me provides for the transition from one technique to another.

* Feel and see what no one else manages to in order to bring the painting of your art to life by a sight beyond yourself.

* The downside is that some people never change. The good part is you know what to expect from them.

* The only way to continually improve your performance is to love what you do !

* Do what you love, and if you are fit for that occupation then the whole universe will support you with the immense force of infinity.

* Establishing a personal style of making art means pursuing for 11 years a fiction that can make you the mirror of reality.

* Every day you have to travel as far away from the crowds as possible to clear your thoughts. You conceive the best ideas when communicating with nature.

* There are people who work from morning to night, preparing everything, always tasks, responsibilities, overwork, etc. And the scientists who ride their bikes, and while looking at everything around ask themselves: Why, I wonder? Which of them is more necessary to the universe?

* Never judge a man at the beginning of the road. Judge him at the end of his journey.

* Even a cloud, or lightning, can send you an important message: be careful !

* Be so good in a field that you don't have to compare yourself to anyone. Uniqueness is the measure of leadership.

* The quality of being important stems from the way you build your confidence in what you can do.

* Talking to a rose in a world of eternity is the idea of a universe that expands endlessly.

* The future belongs to those who manage to activate in the soul of the world the idea of continuity in the evolution of science.

* The most important changes always occur in the direction that no one expects. It's a kind of magic.

* A man who has never done anything for science is a man who has never truly known God.

* The true discoveries of science are for the greatest, not for the elders.

Discreet Confessions (IV)

On February 17, 2021

I organized the following words, chosen with good heart from the many pleasures of my artistic creations, sprinkled with small means of expression, so that each reader will like what they read, or at least have a moment of silence in the tumult of the world. My whole being breathes freedom in favor of many values, not only from the point of view of leadership, not just through the eyes of the artist, not just looking from top to bottom to a reality that seems so hard to reach and maintain, but by the fact that every word seems organized on the basis of unique life experiences. Maybe you will understand me better, maybe not, but you will certainly find something in you in my thoughts.

----

* Progress never needed nerds, but creators. If I could take a closer look at the world, I would see more masks than chosen faces.

* A man who knows and does not show what he knows is not a man who possesses science in the true sense of the word.

* Know how to see in the dark as you know how to see in the light, and know how to see as if you could not see, but as if you could feel.

* He who does everything for science and progress does everything for God. And the mind that does not understand this truth will never shine.

* There are many who wanted to receive everything from life, but were not able to put their pride aside. And that means there was no real desire for it.

* What others find extremely difficult to do should seem ridiculously easy to you.

* Many older people prefer to study philosophical writings instead of understanding the meanings hidden in children's stories. I say again, irrationally.

* A scientist is not always above science, yet he daily refines his science of being a scientist.

* It matters not how much you read, but what you foresee singularly from time to time. Try to communicate the intuitive part of what you do not know.

* In a world of change you no longer have time to memorize information to become a great connoisseur, or a great man of culture. If you don't create constantly, you'll be left behind.

* If what you do does not help another and does not take science a step further, it means that what you do... you do only for yourself.

* Being good in a field is not the same as being a man of change. Weigh your value through innovations through which science can be propelled to another level.

* He who does not bring a change to the benefit of science should not imagine himself to be a man of progress.

* You find your best friends where you are all exceptional and, at the same time, very united.

* Perpetuate the feeling triggered by the impulse to touch a velvet cloth, and maybe you will understand what it means to manifest an emotional state. Velvet is strictly related to the emotional state by its delicacy, it is like a work of art that turns from dream to reality, the reality in which we mirror our soul...

* Be good in one direction, but be exceptional in it !

* To be exceptional you have to be an infallible judge... not matter what mistake you make, by wanting to be good you are more subjective, you prioritize everything you create and you take everything to your sentimental side. You refuse everything if you don't find yourself in that whole, the sensibilities enter a game of chance intertwining. No masterpiece is sure of its fate even if it is lucky to be representative. Everything that is created must have the "luck of time", become better, correspond to the times and possibly never go out of style. However, any work or creation depends on the subjective whims of those who come after to remain in attention, and the farther we move away from it the possibility of understanding must be closer and closer to the individual... (Ioana Sarah)

* Looking in a mirror is sometimes like fishing without a fishing rod. In this case, fishing is related to recreational fishing, when you release the fish. But just as well, sometimes the mirror is about our fixation on the past. Each of us must be our own stylist when choosing what to erase, what to forget and especially what to remember ! (Ioana Sarah)

* We all look at spirituality, we all want to go through life. Often, I think we are like a novel in which we are the main character. Sometimes we have no mercy on us, other times we have indulgence. From all this naturalism a drama is born. We sometimes talk to ourselves as if we were going through a narrow gate, in all of this resides a decantation of experiences as in a purification... (Ioana Sarah)

* Read Borges and you will meet Wilhelm Hauff. Read Hauff and you'll step into 1001 nights. And in 1001 nights you will be Borges again.

* And no book tells a story more beautiful than a character who lives his story in the real world.

* And if your mind were a book and your soul another book, then you would have two books that tell the same story differently.

* And every new book you read, imagine that it is part of that unique book that instructs your soul to make a distinct description.

* And even if you read a lot of books, if you don't really live the life of the characters, then you will never feel the spell of endless stories.

* Important is not to read many books, but to learn to integrate yourself into the story of the character in your favorite book.

* Where you have talent, you need no teacher, nor a thousand teachers. But where you don't have talent, don't look for a teacher.

* There are three parts to my making: the one who sees, the one who gets used to what he sees and the one who feels in accordance with what he sees. I just happen to see too late.

* Many are smart in this world, but too smart to use their intelligence and too smart to admit their vanity. How smart can one be to know how to distribute awakening, especially to weigh vanity? Putting three words on the page doesn't mean science, art or whatever... There are still written books that no one browses even though access to culture has not been banned. Better to let the writer write, the artist make art in a big way, the woodcutter cut, and life follow its course.

* You always find out something new about people, especially when you expect less.

* And when you find out, you better keep what you found out for yourself.

* Play with science until it becomes your preference for a certain style of thinking.

* In order to understand what is difficult to understand, you must place your being in an area where it cannot be conditioned by language.

* No one gives up a memory that is preserved in the art of living beautifully, with elegance, with simplicity.

* The universe comes to the aid of the one who knows how to use science for its benefit. I would always use PowerShell in combination with REGEX to use data processing. Know how to use any computer program as much as you need. You don't have to be more skilled than you have to be, but you have to know how to use whatever is at your fingertips.

* A good program is one that can run any functions from other programs.

* Happiness means observing yourself daily in a trivial piece of glass that does not allow reflection. Thus, you will no longer worry about vanity.

* Some keep moving forward, others lag behind, and keep lagging behind. (Any progress involves a plus, a writing on our soul exclusively, surely, we will always have the courage to do it... staying behind is not a necessity, although some do it because that is how they think it should be... Ioana Sarah)

* Science is God's merit in providing favorable conditions for the creation of a perfect world.

* Do not be afraid if you are the last in the world, rather be afraid to not lose sight of the astral moment that can send you directly to the forefront of the world.

* If you have not made any change in a branch of science, be certain that you are not a man of change, no matter how hard you try to be Someone.

* You don't end up perfect, except by excelling in mistakes. And even if some mistakes are not forgiven, at least they nudged you forward.

* There is only infinity and those who have built the construction of this infinity.

* Be great only where you can be the best in the world !

Maybe you will understand me better, maybe not, but you will certainly find something in you in my thoughts.

----

* Science is the secret code by which the unnoticed always surpasses all those who stand out.

* The one who is constantly engaged in prayer never acts. Faith is always blind to the blind.

* You will reach absolute knowledge with the help of spirituality, only believing in the possibilities of expression of the artistic universe.

* If you have not made any change in a branch of science, be sure that you are not a man of change, no matter how hard you try to be Someone.

* I tried to be a universe, and I aimed at the abstract chaining of areas of continuous-deterministic content treated as non-confidential information.

* And if you told a rose all your secrets, it would consider them as true as if they had been told by it itself.

* If the work you do has been done by someone else before you, it means that you have not contributed anything to the progress that ensures the perfection of that thing.

* If the world really understood Wilhelm Hauff's fairy tales, it would probably remain dumb with admiration for this man's genius.

* No man is perfect, everyone makes mistakes. However, some become great scientists.

* If the world sought to find out the secrets of science, it would not be surprised to learn that they are recorded in the world of fairy tales.

* Heaven only helps those people who are one hundred percent dedicated to Creation and the progress of science. The scientist must be the creator of a one hundred percent perfect world.

* The great science of writing develops in the spirit of the word that you let take control of your life, without making it a cross or a source of enrichment.

* Beauty in art means knowing how to appreciate beauty. Artistic beauty is the artist's gaze directed towards the perfect model of nature.

* The green eyes reflected in the green of nature are like the painting reflected in a green emerald stone: no matter how green it is, art will always add new layers of meaning to its expressions.

* No matter how much you want to excel in any field, don't forget to go back to where you were meant to be the best in the world.

* In any field anyone wants to excel, they must first find a way to get into chaos... Everything is in motion. We are full of worries and anxieties, we develop natural phenomena and we complain that it is raining or snowing, that we want summer to exist continuously... Nothing is very helpful... the sun is in relation to the fixed stars...develop natural phenomena and we complain that it is raining or snowing, that we want summer to exist continuously... Nothing is very helpful... the sun is in relation to the fixed stars...

* Just as the night precedes the morning, just as sleeping precedes the dream, so too does awakening precede reality, but does not find it in accordance with its provisions.

* Try to fall asleep with your eyes open so you can dream of me more real. Let me be the reality of your dream.

* The privilege of being a Creator gives meaning to the story of a life experienced in a time when you have to fly away and without ceasing.

* Live your life as if you were traversed and shaped by the sensitive poetry of the story itself.

* Completing this gaze is an attempt to awaken the affective disposition of the eyes that comprise the artistic side of beauty only with the soul of the saint.

* Why was an ordinary man given the immeasurable power to wield the highest of the sciences, when most of the dignitaries will never understand what the Great Science is?

* You feel at ease where you have always been yourself: on the running track. You will always return to yourself, to the past, where it all began.

* In many places we should feel at ease, even where we have not yet been. It is more important to always fabricate new places, not always count the ones we already know, like a public clerk. To always go back to the past is as if, sitting at the stove in a dream landscape, we stubbornly read the same story, when many others are waiting to be discovered. Going back to the past, no matter how beautiful or sad, creates a sinister feeling, it's like doing it out of inactivity. In life we must always step as if we were looking calmly out the window, when other images are always unfolding, to always remember only the things not yet experienced and to start looking for them... (Ioana Sarah)

* The more you read, the more you realize how much escaped you. Reading is a point of view that can be completed over time.

* Green is always associated with nature when viewed through the color of a wildflower carried by a gentle breeze towards an increasingly lively summer.

* Silence never guarantees the return of time to an hourglass. Strong words have no say in a world of sand.

* We become what we harmonize by the force of dynamic and creative example. The harmony between example and demonstration is the beginning of the creative process.

* If her eyes were always green as grass, and if time did not dry their radiance by continuous exposure to light, then they would catch the eye of a hurried passer-by, and for a moment they would light up at his smile.

* Between you and me, you're more beautiful than I am. But I wouldn't be like you, you wouldn't be with me either. So, me and you, talking to a part of you found deep inside me. Let us surpass our beauty with this brightness: "You decide how you love me."

* Try to understand your purpose through the meaning you give to a single thing. This thing in itself must admit the possibility of re-evaluating your existence.

Don't expect the stars to grant your wishes when you want them to. It would mean that God would submit to you completely. I mean, you think you clap your hands, and immediately God obeys you like Aladdin's lamp? Do you really think this type of thinking will pay off?

So the stars send you luck when He sees fit, and you have to be on your toes and not miss that moment.

Never forget this: luck comes when He wants it, not when you want it. You will never be in a position to set conditions and terms to the One who directs fate.

But that's how many people are, angry, arrogant, because their wishes don't come true exactly when they want them. This is because they put themselves first, and ignore any divine act. Selfishness is the real problem of the world.

Those who have a website, I suggest to translate the content of all articles into at least one foreign language! And even if you don't know a foreign language very well, you can call on translators. There is no excuse not to translate!

And those who know a foreign language well and have a website, and do not translate everything they have worked on, have learned another foreign language for nothing...

The one who does not know, but appeals to those who know, is much more important than the one who knows who does nothing with what he knows.

I organized the following words, chosen with good heart from the many pleasures of my artistic creations, sprinkled with small means of expression, so that each reader will like what they read, or at least have a moment of silence in the tumult of the world. My whole being breathes freedom in favor of many values, not only from the point of view of leadership, not just through the eyes of the artist, not just looking from top to bottom to a reality that seems so hard to reach and maintain, but by the fact that every word seems organized on the basis of unique life experiences. Maybe you will understand me better, maybe not, but you will certainly find something in you in my thoughts.

* If you know not how to see, you will never find out.

* Whoever looks at himself trying to understand himself better is somehow illuminated by his own image in the mirror.

* Don't try to rush things. Learn to use trials to reach perfection. Resistance purifies the soul.

* The secret is not to know everything, but to know much of what no one knows.

* Why fight for something that seems to be getting further and further away from you? It's like trying to catch a train that's long gone.

* Have you thought that one day you will enter the House of Horus and make order in Oberon's dreams? YES, ever since then... !

* Whoever has not received the gift of science resembles the pompous old man who waited until the last moment for good news. The news didn't come.

* A chosen mind will realize in a terrestrial journey the mystical passage from Alchemy to Leadership. One is a magic number.

* At the end of the year ask yourself what you have done for science, that is, for God !

* How have you contributed to the expansion of the Universe?

* Show me a man who has changed and innovated the field of science, and I will show you a man who knew God.

* Play with the great science as if you were commanding a great dream to come true !

* Talent does not need teachers, only exercise !

* It is not what you show to the world but what you work in the background that is the spring of true art and the Great Science.

* To always leave the past behind is the first step in change.

* It does not matter who is far from you, but only who is always near. It does not matter who leaves, important is who remains.

* Know how to see... through a lot of ties, things, situations and states.

* Anyone who gets upset too quickly that you are not near them may not even be able to enjoy the surprise of seeing you again.

* That's why I like cats. They know how to slip through the crystal glasses without breaking even one. It's called refinement.

* From the thick books you learn about the small highlights of man's passage to earth, about the small wonders of existence.

* In such a strange way, all aspects of some people's lives are placed so that they can reach the top of the mountain without problems !

* In leadership you have to have all the winning aces in hand, plus a joker in your sleeve.

* Scientists honor a single holiday every day: The crowning of the creative work.

* Pay close attention to what has happened throughout the day to better understand the future.

* To be yourself a masterpiece means to define yourself as the Creator of an inimitable creation.

* To bring your Creation to the level of Art means to produce a masterpiece !

* The only way to communicate with the universe is through Creation and Art.

* The privilege of high knowledge and great science belongs only to long-distance runners.

* Never make a graven image. Believe in yourself much more than everyone else believes in themselves.

* A friend told me last night he was running: "Press on the accelerator long before the others start."

* The art of performing a masterpiece defines the creation produced by mirroring the image of the "other" within you.

* One man who changes the course of a science is the same man who changes the whole world !

* Changing the world with the help of a higher science is a crystallization of the effort and wisdom of the creator who possesses the consciousness of his uniqueness.

* Never make for yourself any idol. Believe in yourself much more than everyone else believes in themselves.

* Learn to make the change in science, not just be an eyewitness to its effects.

* At the end of the year ask yourself what you have done for science, that is, for God ! With what have you contributed to the expansion of the Universe?

* I found a compact bunch of grass. The reason for putting it in the ground, before it is completely obliterated, is to set a deviation from the fury of nature to the unlimited gentleness and kindness that characterizes the kind-hearted man.

* Reach the state of flux at any time of the day. But to touch it, warm your mind with something creative.

* Be so good in a field of activity that you have only one equal: God. This is the meaning of the struggle between Jacob and God.

* The man who does not speak often shines. All too often, the words do not convey the light to those who look at the moon from the tent.

* When you are the best in the world in a field, and the world knows you are the best.

* And even when you think you've learned everything, something new and different comes up: "Look, you've overlooked this ! "

* Learn to assign meaning to each small event that catches the eye, wherever you go. Signs are stronger than appearances.

* One is to learn a lot to secure a future, another is to know enough to change an entire science.

* You can appreciate an arrogant man who does something, rather than a whole army of modest people who do nothing.

* At the forefront of art must be the rendering of the feeling of belonging to another universe.

* What you create is what you are when you consider yourself as being someone above yourself.

* I don't think the Universe cares too much about what kind of person you are, good bad, modest, or arrogant. It thinks differently: "Whoever does something for me, I will always be with him."

* Always be a good man. And if you can, be much better than everyone else.

* Play with science the way you paint an angel, without ever having seen a painting. This is all the magic of Kabbalah !

* Time sides only with the winners, and for those who are not winners, time is not a good advisor.

* More important than "knowing to see" is "knowing how to see".

* A man who acts is much more valuable than one who makes plans. The former gets somewhere, the latter stays still.

* One dreamer is much stronger than all those who pray.

* You feel great satisfaction when you see that your value increases in direct proportion to the growing number of your readers.

* Matter always listens only to its creator. It is like an emotional state amplified by the sensation of a dream shared by one man.

* Let not a day go by without doing at least 10 things that propel you forward. The ability to make progress faster and better than anyone else is the vector that unites you with the performance that justifies leadership.

* The highest purpose of man on earth is to attain perfection. To find the thing for which you were born and to carve it in the heights of heaven with the hand of a master.

* He who has a vision easily reads the future. He who knows leadership, creates the context in which the future is heading.

* Great science does not need teachers, but unique artists.

* The better known you are in the world, the more your value grows. The future belongs to those who know how to promote themselves BIG !

* Science is what remains to be learned when what you see is lost in a void of image.

* To enrich your leadership with new resources of understanding means that when you wake up, you say to yourself "Good morning", and the Great Science responds to you from somewhere around with the hopeful echo: "I'm glad to see you again."

* Writing is just a way to showcase human talent. And true talent is closely tied to the way you create, think, express yourself, and make a revolution in science. Do not confuse talent with its means of expression !

* It is not enough to study art on your own, you still have to be lucky to be guided in time by a brilliant artist.

* Only he who has long researched the depths of art can reach the highest science !

* It is not recommended to be better than you are, especially when others do not set their goodness as a standard to follow.

* Some people are like a metal swing: they heat up in the sun with so much splendor and grandeur, but they squeak terribly when the wind blows harder.

* There are two kinds of people: the good who are bad, and the bad who are good.

* When everyone ran away from Covid, we reached Covid's heart and caused it to have a cardiac arrest.

* Whoever finds out all the secrets of a science, at some point ends up giving them up in favor of others determined and conceived by themselves. This is how the scientist evolves.

* As politicians seek a higher place in politics, scientists are advancing scientific progress.

* Dare to always be yourself, so that everything you care about is not so hard on yourself.

* No silence surpasses the silence of a book that no one reads. Even if its content talks about you.

* Art is the kingdom of God because it was born in a castle called Creation.

* Creation born of art has the form of a tower in which God has his dwelling.

* Depending on the perfection with which man values himself, it is effective in the direction of his decision to support the change of his own being, of the way of being.

* Seek to present yourself before God as imperfect, even if what sustains your power to become a saint is perfection. God is perfection spread in imperfection, beyond the perfection given by the power to transform man into a saint.

* Fear is like a sculpture that you look at and it penetrates all of your cells, it's like the first beating you receive as a child that you remember so much that you avoid a caress just as you would a slap... Sometimes the sword only cuts off the heads bowed down that will inadvertently graze the grass, sooner or later... The passage is a monograph, it's like a reference book. Going over everything leads to a "material" of various sizes.

* Dogmas are also truths that boil down to faith. Alas, how would the system change by that.

Everyone's attitude, if it is meticulous, leads in time to liberation and purification... It is wrong to believe that we change the world through pen and brush, the world changes through books we read ourselves, through the way we clarify all our questions and answers without challenging the system. Moreover, in order to change a system, you have to analyze historical development. All the feelings of a system are related to the relations between concepts, the degree of certainty granted contributes to a structure related to concepts. In fact, in a society, any system has an atomic weight, an imposition that begins slowly... Any system can change, and to say that it cannot change is like sitting in a printing house, you would consult several books and say that some lines cannot be printed because the wording is not precise... (Ioana Sarah)

 He who observes the motion of the planets does not notice his own motion. The earth you tread on is spinning without you feeling it.

 I always look like a fish in a troubled ocean: any wave comes, it doesn't affect me. I remembered what you told me / About me when we kissed lively in the park / Not forgetting at all what your soul brought me / The feeling that I can always remain in your memory like a living lantern.

Divano

On December 14, 2019

The stylistic features of an original art bears the promise of a life from another life.

I am beautiful whenever you see me, adorable by the intensity with which I evoke the freedom of the large spaces, without showing any snobbery in the decision to appear to the world as a single and great building of the image of the "immortal artist". How much humanity there is in my words, how much nobility in the way I present myself in the face of aesthetic demands. Isn't the form of expression a process like the inner fire or living through transcendence?

While waiting for the sun's rays, I allow myself the luxury of looking at the face of the Lord seen from another angle, from another century, from an unparalleled grace, from another reference system, from the aesthetics of a particular world, from the counter-pressure of this living, hot factor, precious pure blood, which is the murmured vibration of a supersensitive self in the midst of a perfect, imperishable autumn sky. I am probably a special rose, the only one leading to the Renaissance.

Only through mysteries does my godliness become known. The obstinate dignity with which I educated my spirit of perfection, only in the light of Amos, the discretion to raise the lining of the vast "sacred fences" in which the Absolute of an incredible image works, by extracting the essence of a creative style imperishable from deciphering the pictorial technique of representation of sensitive appearances, all these led me to assimilate a cuteness devoid of complications.

As a unique-looking rose, I can only clarify the nature and circumstances by which the Holy Work of God is offered as a space of transcendent allusions expressed in terms of mirrors in other worlds and in other lives, to defy time, even if he often speaks to me only in the language of Kabbalists, placing the spatiality of my image in close relation with the successive changes undergone in the perception of the creation space, a posteriori.

Leadership: Can you recognize yourself in the image of a being subjected to a life from another life, in correspondence with the idea of a special creation springing from a self-exalted beginning reflected in the connection with the "Holy Work of God"?

The triumph of my elegance and discretion, deeply significant from the point of view of a landscape reflected in a transcendental subject, hidden under an act of symbolization In Quatro Orbitor, and taking into account the succession of seasons, is in the power of imprinting in the mind of the artist a certain mood that leads to the flourishing of an original identity. The journey into the valley of the soul, of my feelings, of my strong experiences is best rendered in "Precambrian to the Little Soliloquies":

"There were speeches about me. I was commemorated and praised beyond extent. However, I remember a time when people knew how to put me in the right place, along with the other natural events of life, sharing with me from an immortal urge. But here, everything changes, and I cannot allow myself to remain the same."

The world has always seen me in the vision of a work with universal echoes, such as Heaven on Earth, although so many times I wanted nothing more than to live among people as a model of inspiration and piety, to strive to stimulate in them different emotions. It has happened to be more than I thought. The scenario I had to imagine in order to reach the condition of the gods was the direct opening of a creation to the perspective space of the Renaissance type, returning 90 degrees to humanity's attempt to find a transcendent significance to life.

A simple look in a corner of nature will reveal to you an infinity of forms of existence and manifestation of my life, through the interweaving of numerous attempts, corrections and adaptations of the connection between the artist and the object of his art, between man and universe. After all, this is the beauty of a work of art, to perceive the center of the universe and to give depth to the spatial extension that surrounds you.

The Holy Work of God is that higher knowledge obtained by transforming the artist into the intimate substance of his creation, representing the spiritual power to be present as a witness to the manifestations of the world at any time and in any place.

I carry the seal of the strong faith invested with the ability to reproduce the art format only for the chosen ones, projecting in a lively masterpiece my whole experience of probing the humane, of seeing it in various hypostases, of investing it with the eternal, the perishing with the incessant, relative to the absolute. From here the ambition is drawn to reproduce artistically the living factor of the coagulation of Jupiter's blood with Athena's godliness, which for centuries has shaped faith with strong devotions.

The seal has the form of the symbol of the infinite, being placed in a certain relation with the art world, el circulo de fuego del libro espiritual, through the act of creating nature repeated in the Aryosthea Cause that my master, the painter of a candid simplicity, inserts in a fantasy world, in this way, aligning their feelings with the primary reflection of the Crystalline Essence.

Faith and affective content are richer in symbolic openings, unlike drawing, in the intimacy of a collection of surrealist collages.

My master only had to transform me into a means of expression, a means of expressing feelings with the help of letters, chromatic stains and firm lines, through a sacramental act of recognizing the eternal world in a personification of the splendor of nature. This unique artist of my existence, immortalizing me with solemnity in a timeless space, passing into other universes, seems to be influenced by the vitality of a thinking style shared by Jorge Luis Borges, who said:

"We easily accept reality, because we can sense that nothing is real. Perhaps the rustic Poem of the Cid is the counterbalance required by a single epithet from Garcilaso's Eclogues or by a sentence of Heraclitus."

Leadership: Have you developed the ability to discover the fine line between the hidden interior of things and the noticeable exterior, in order to extend your perception limit of the creative act?

Through depth and complexity, in a representation of life obtained by the Coincidentza Notorius in the field of Inmariasty consciousness, beyond the existence of a work of nature symbolically rendered, the artist can model (with emphasis on the expressive value of chromatic dominance) a world, a reality, a perspective, a personality so as to resurrect the greatness of his passing over time. There is a depth in the relationship with the universe, justified by the need to maintain "a game played eternally before the created".

With the help of the bloody glimpse of the universe imagined by Thomas Aquinas, supplemented by the ancient notes of the Holy Christian Fathers, the artist triggers in front of the manifestations of the modern sacred affective states and feelings that make the fine line vibrate between the hidden interior of things and the noticeable exterior.

I once heard my master talking to himself, very close to me, with a kind of bent towards the stakes of a dialogue held between two Odyssey titans. I understood him better than anyone else, because the roses understand everything from a particular science of earth space dominance. He thought to himself:

- Sometimes it seems to me that I am someone else, more entitled to move the luminous point of darkness of the Divine, as if a spirit of rare mobility, like Homer's, would have traveled in time just to find within me the place of redemption of the Great Work. I do not recognize myself in his person unless the most fleeting thought listens to the elemental power of the sublunary world.

You cannot inspire a richer expression, full of meaning in the heights of art, without feeling the charm, the scent of the soul that drives you into the unknown and the esoteric. The rose is more than a composition described in an intended chromatic dominant, it is the exclusive product of a creative act that develops through the exercise of obtaining expressiveness, by combining the elements of artistic language.

Leadership, in terms of the creative act, captures the search for a visual identity built under the conditions in which you feel led by an external force with a strong impact on the performance of achieving the congruence between "a priori" and "a posteriori".

Divano is the generic name of an incursion into the world of creation seen as a comparison with a true miracle to be protected in the "subjective - divine" alternation, close to the original human-nature-universe relationship eternally constituted in spirit and experienced in the depths of expressiveness, symbolism and the nature by which emotions are transposed into a fabulous image.

Diversity Of Thoughts

On March 05, 2012

Observe yourself every day with the eye of a foreign tourist attracted only by what is interesting in the world, as a way to introduce yourself into a short story that motivates you to act differently.

I find the funniest moments to be those of TV advertising, when an individual appears (doctor, teacher, artist, etc.) and says: "I studied abroad for 6 years, so trust the professionalism of the company I represent." As if the fact that he left the country had made him better at something... as if he had returned with a Nobel Prize received for who knows what colossal invention in a certain field of activity.

If you are so studious and full of merit, tell us how you contributed to the development of the science you represent? Have you moved a mountain, made an important discovery, built a new mindset, entered the Guinness Book, something like that?

If you have not been able to take a science a step further, I suggest you go abroad again and study further. You are still at the level of "I still have a lot to learn ! "

The level of success of a man is guaranteed by that immeasurable effort that carries behind a whole volume of activity, in search of a very advanced knowledge, suggesting by far that maturity of the soul, not only of the decision, of the character invincible by the vicissitudes that life brought upon them, and in which wisdom becomes the most secure bridge between faith and unbelief. The wise man has learned from himself that life always has something extra to offer, but it is not cheap to obtain.

Conclusion: It is a very long way to reach the level of a valuable man who is able to change his destiny into a star. It doesn't matter where you are or what studies you have pursued, it matters how you have contributed to the evolution of science.

Leadership: Can you think of yourself in terms of a situation of psychological pressure, in relation to the integration of a perspective of equality between a long lesson of humility and the change of state that characterizes you?

I went to an outdoor concert. Lots of people. Overcrowding. I couldn't even move toward my girlfriend, or withdraw from the crowd. I stayed put for more than half an hour.

Only then, thinking about what I was given to endure, I asked myself usefully: "Why stand in the middle of the crowd? Does your heart beat with a state of intense joy simply because you are the center of attention? Maybe it's nicer to choose a quiet place where you can see everyone very well.

This is also a special kind of closeness. Not suddenly, bang bang, to get to the right place. Slowly approach who you need to, without your presence becoming disturbing. Like a cat. That's right. Elegant, without haste, easy, a little at a time, without bending your elbows, without stepping on people's feet in this crowd, and without insisting...

Anyone who gets upset too quickly that you're not with them probably can't enjoy the surprise of seeing you again.

That's why I like cats. They know how to sneak through crystal glasses without breaking a single one. It's called refinement.

Leadership means going through a moment again and again when life seems to put you through a challenging test that you don't know if you can pass.

A Diversity Of Thoughts is a collection of conclusions that you draw about life, about the world, about truth, about reality, only when you are faced with a situation that has convinced you that you need to learn something new about yourself. Be yourself in any situation where you are forced to become someone else.

Do Not Disappoint Your Audience

On April 30, 2009

Set your final position towards your attitude, without losing yourself in a reality that does not validate your responsibility.

He continued his campaign despite the harsh threats.

A famous politician received several death threats by phone and by email, from unknown persons of the criminal world, who hoped to induce him not to continue the campaign against drug traffickers that were introducing daily in the country large quantities of ecstasy, cocaine and hashish. No one believed that the famous politician will dare more to appear in public. But he did, he came out in public, not once but several times, and hold speeches, all conveying the same message clear, deep and powerful:

"I will not let intimidated myself by any threat. I made a commitment to banish the drug trafficking networks, so I will continue the started fight."

Leadership: Are you guiding yourself after a momentary map of constraints or after a permanent map of responsibility?

When you face a really delicate situation, are you fleeing from the way of responsibilities giving up fighting again for the intended purpose?

The one bearing always in his heart the desire to achieve his objectives, the one who has faith, mental strength and iron ambition, will be always more important than other people. Not by the held position, but through his total commitment towards his own system of values and beliefs.

The unfulfillment or shortcomings of a man who puts to the test his dignity and courage emerge not from him, but from those who judge him, because they remain in a consistent and strict fidelity to the meaning of taking an alleged incompatibility between what it means to be a self-conscious being, evolved, and what it means to not run away from it, not to interpret it based on how it matches the scenario in your mind.

While the genial nature of the one who acts like judiciously, displaying his superiority by means of his spiritual structure, goes beyond the formal limits of a freedom of action in all directions, such as the expression of one's own identity and the courage to tear down the boundaries imposed by "outside voices", even if they were drawn by his own condition: alone against all others.

This passage goes beyond the limits of unilateralism it is the very brilliant greatness of a man of the highest rank.

Just as the map represents a momentary image of reality, so the responsibility represents the map of your leadership that displays the area of excellence you have taken in property. Only on this map can be really seen who you really are and how well you know yourself.

Responsibility begins with a commitment such as "I will not bow down to those who judge me" or "I will not allow myself to be intimidated by any threat". It continues with adopting a behavior starting from a reason based on values and principles, which obliges others, willingly or needful, to move in a certain direction. And it is amplified, under the influence of current events, with the echoes of a victory that can make you famous, if, of course, for some reason, you are set on for that.

The road to success in a leading position is long and hard. In order to build confidence in your leadership, for winning people by your side, then your responsibility must be permanent. If the map that you have available is outdated, then you will not be able to recognize the steps that you made, you will lose yourself in the reality that does not support your values and does not validate your responsibility – that will bring you the loss of a large quantity of influence.

Leadership: Does your alarm clock awaken you from a state of "being" with an open and active heart?

Responsibility is like an alarm clock. Do you expect from your responsibility to do the job, for which you wake up every morning?

And your attitude in the face of pressure from others is like the ticking of the clock: it should be clear, but not so strong as not to arouse suspicion, hostility or anger. The reason for their ceaseless cause for annoyance, betrayed both by the character and mood that you induce, stirring rights with obligations into a pot of moral consciousness, is that all these negative impulses that tend to get stuck or to redirect you also symbolize his tragedy: "I'm too good for them and they don't want me". Which is also a threat to your own ego.

Every person orients his thinking and actions depending on how he perceives himself in terms of his responsibility. Once you have made a solemn commitment, important, in front of the people, do everything possible to respect it. For only if you fully commit to your mission, whatever it would be the risks, you will be called upon to take important decisions.

A leading position involves risk that you should assume. If you fail to successfully fulfill your duties, you will disappoint the people who support you, who put all their trust in you, and so soon you will lose your credibility.

Nobody will respect you, you will not be considered reliable, and you will be even discredited. Therefore, if you are not convinced that you will realize what you have proposed, certainly as far as possible, do not venture yourself to undertake any action. It is better and more prudent not to take any commitment towards people, for they want to see results, not justifications and excuses.

Leadership is a consequence of the attitude to make your way in the world and to support your point of view by a relevant manifestation of moral responsibility to your own "defense".

Conclusion: Your attitude in front of constraints and pressures is what matters. For becoming a person admired and respected by everyone, is not easy. You must first fully respect your commitments and promises, and to fulfill everything you have promised, regardless of the risks, to which you are exposed.

Set your attitude towards your final position, without losing yourself in a reality that does not validate your responsibility.

Do You Attract Clients Like A Magnet?

On April 12, 2009

Try to give value to your product by what you know it will become, leaving an unforgettable impression through its location in a perimeter bounded by exposure resulting from the experience of "consuming" it.

What would happen if after many experiments and research you would create an efficient equipment for the automobile industry? I will try to answer in your place at this question, having the hope that my answer will be good enough. First of all you will loan some money from a bank, from friends or from different investors to open a little enterprise who products the equipment you invented and which was tested and received the note of fabrication. Then you will make your product known all over the world through advertisements on TV or newspaper, and of course on the internet. In the shortest time the sales will rise spectacular you will become famous and rich.

But now comes the most interesting part. Because they invested millions of euro in finding an equipment just like yours and they didn't reach any results, the competitive companies will do everything it's possible to make your situation harder, to blemish you and to destroy your image. The question is: will the clients still appeal at your services? Will they still buy the equipment you invented after you had negative publicity?

Yes they will, and even more determined. Why? Because the equipment and its performances are special from other, the price is good, the design is well made, the delivery conditions are advantageous, etc.

Leadership: Does the image you attribute to your product correspond to redefining its applicability area in a real-life situation or a simulation of producing added value?

The application area of a product can be redefined in a real situation of producing added value when the buyer's perception of superior product quality is the immediate result of an inexpressible state of joy in response to a single wish.

Or, the same product applicability area can be redefined in a simulation situation of producing added value when there is a possibility of confusion regarding the promotional campaign's warranty, timeliness, accuracy, and details. And when there is a possibility of omission directly attributable to the manufacturer, the payment is reduced or canceled in part.

Everything would be much easier if we could succeed to be the first ones who promoting their quality services on the market.

It seems that on any market where the quality of the services it's on the first place, the entrepreneurs who are winners are those who have the favorable place, who are the first to act in a certain area of activity, who get involved actively in satisfying with promptitude and professionalism the requirements and the expectations of all the clients. If you fight for affirmation and wish to attract success in a domain characterized by competition than you have to give all your interest to win the trust of many clients, to offer such good services that everybody to appeal often at you, at the company you lead.

Leadership: Is the product you are promoting the involuntary result of an image perception and reproduction error that calls for a bleak conclusion regarding its location?

The most important thing you have to do is to find a method through which you can make your clients depend on your product or your services. This thing is possible only if you succeed to come first to greet his necessities with an efficient solution which you can sell after under a product or a service. Like a magnet which attracts steel, you have to attract clients offering them what they want and make them come every time to you and to always seek the services you provide. Making customers come back again and again only to you, this is what effective marketing means.

No matter how unmoral the competition would be, if you become a master in your domain and succeed to create products and services indispensable for clients, you will not have reasons to worry. Just like at a doctor, who gained his reputation of healing any disease, appeals many patients, also will appeal at you if you create a enviable reputation, if you offer products and services of high quality.

Before making the big step, ask yourself first if the services and products which your firm offers solve someone problems. Than make all the possible to increase your services and products to satisfy the exigency of your clients. Your concern should be to provide services and products so good, cheap and necessary, that more and more customers to appeal at your company.

Question: Does the location of a product have a direct impact on buyers when the product is evaluated at the time of its definitive cessation of use?

Do You Have Leadership Skills?

On March 26, 2009

Take control over your guidance system, so that you can transform yourself into what you are able to be.

A young soldier asked once a great general if he could become as famous as he is. The general, who had fought in many wars and he passed through a lot of challenges in his life, talked to the him very seriously:

- Young man, to be a general is not an easy thing. Would you have the courage to fight beside your soldiers in the first line? Would you be capable to order the murder with cold blood of the enemys soldier without blinking? Would you be capable to give your life for your country? And not in the last case, do you think that if you are taken prisoner, you will have the strength to keep the precious information despite the most horrible torture?

- No, sir, said disappointed the young boy.

- Then for the love of God, stop dreaming at a general career. Find a job where will not have to take this kind of choices.

Leadership: Are you are able to transform yourself into what you are able to be, or you tend to transform yourself into something that does not represent you?

The history is sprinkled with sad stories of several people who failed in life because they did not have the necessary skills for the profession they practiced. Just like the young boy in this story, many people dream to reach one day the highest borders of success, to become famous people, presidents, cinema stars, valuable singers, great champions, etc, but not everybody has the talent and the skills they need to be in the domain they like.

In the conditions in which for a high level job you need a certain preparation and a native talent, the number of those who really reach the peak of the professional pyramid will be ever more less, and that is because one can observes more and more the fact that people's tendency is to earn the most, but without working up for it, without making additional efforts in order to improve in the field they work in.

Being a leader in a certain domain requires more than knowledge, requires courage, persistency and a big responsibility. Requires work and sacrifice. Means you have to take the toughest decisions which other persons are not capable to take, to have the initiative and to assume sometimes enormous risks. The enthusiasm some people have is indeed a big quality, but it turns out fast if they do not have the necessary skills in the domain in which they want to do their activity. In consequence, it's best not to aspire at high level jobs if you cannot take the enormous responsibilities and, especially, if you cannot have a right and objective judgement.

Leadership is tangential to the benefits of a sinuous, steep trajectory, upon which is achieved, in the form of a curve, the transfer of personality from a man who has a sense of noble confidence in his merits – to a mere participant on the world stage.

But as the force of thought and creation, the only teacher of hope in the great scene of change proves to be the expensive price of a decision to overthrow old ideas, concepts or beliefs that self-limit you.

The performing function of thinking that thinks of itself can be illustrated as follows: "Look carefully within yourself and find out who you are beyond what you believe you are in the vision of those who do not know you."

The human brain takes over millions of information with the speed of light, by creating an image of the environment and perceiving this image in two dimensions, colored and in motion. So you too, to discover your existing potential, first you need to take control over your own "guidance system" provided by your hidden talents and skills, and then to create an image of what you want to become, and to focus on that side.

Leadership is a function of thinking and creation that does not automatically obtain a patent, but to which have access only those dependent on knowledge. The immense opportunity to be in the midst of events that mark some of the transformations and evolution of consciousness, and the power to be incomparably better than all in managing your own fears, doubts, and defects, arises when you manage to make the switch from relational to react.

The one who aims to a leading position has to make many sacrifices. The ambition of glory and the high goals are desired by many people, but up to a point, when things become increasingly more difficult. This is the moment when most of them quit dreaming and no longer fight for their ideals. You cannot reach on the peaks of success if you do not have the necessary ambition, just as it is not easy to swim if you do not you move your hands and feet. You have to move, must take the initiative, and to make willingly the necessary changes on the professional level without anyone pushing you from behind.

Behind every fulminating success is a man who has experienced the greatest failure. You cannot walk in a natural and upward path, serving as a crossing from one landmark to another, developing consistent concepts from the ambiguous and inexplicable allegations of any individual believed to be Robin Hood.

The dominant ideas about life and the value of a strong character are born from the attempt to cheer with oneself, with suffering, with some of the reality that you did not think possible, sometimes even with death, as in the case of war.

The only teacher of all is in you, in the difficulties you face. And the liveliest inspiration comes from the reality that strikes you in the face when you are ready to make a personal creation out of it.

The conclusion is one: people who aspire to an act of leadership, but who do not have the necessary abilities and competencies to face, with success, the challenges which involves the consequences of self-consciousness, usually quit when they realize how hard it is, when they feel that the balance of success does not bend in their favour.

Do you still insist to believe that you have the necessary skills for a leader? Do you have a leadership-model that you would follow? Do you think that you can be by yourself a role-model? Are you Intending to do things right and afterwards to lead the others? Or, first you want to lead them, and only after to make things right?

Take control over your guidance system, so that you can transform yourself into what you are able to be.

Do You Know How To Approach People?

On February 01, 2009

Oxygenate your leadership potential, by taking advantage of the perfect coincidence between the conjunctures in which you find yourself and the virtues that you have to appreciate.

Before going to war, a great general said to his warriors "We will fight until death." But right before the battle, the general noticed that his army is smaller than the other one and so, therefore his chances to win the battle in open field are minimal. Then, the general said again to his warriors: "Today we will step aside."

Live today, fight tomorrow. A leader needs to have a clear vision so that he can prevent the risks long before taking action. He has to lead people in the right direction, in order to avoid any risky situation and always be in an advantageous position. Only if there really are chances of winning, the leader will make a step forward in the direction he wants.

The habit of concentrating only on immediate results determines some leaders to act quickly without assessing the risks that may subsequently appear, risks that sometimes can even endanger people's lives. These kinds of leaders are following only their own selfish goals, they don't care about other people needs, their opinion, their needs and even their destiny. For them nothing matters, except their interest, their own person, and that's all.

Leadership: Do you lift your virtues to a "permanence" level, always practicing a thinking that cherishes and judges itself?

The virtues that we need to eliminate harmful defects, which contribute to rectifying the leadership status, reasonably coping with those demands to design a new route to be followed depending on the type of ongoing events, lead to personal transformation through the impact accompanying them. These virtues are: prudence, dignity, foresight, thinking in decision-making and assuming responsibility.

This impact can be felt as a feeling of pressure, heaviness, tightness and tension, some kind of numbness in your authority to lead in relation to the high task, to strengthen yourself psychologically and morally, to train yourself for the unexpected, but also on another level.

Leadership occurs in the self-transformation process, when you have to spread and encourage the implementation of other virtues, such as bravery, prudence, value and preciousness, exercising more than occasionally an adaptive and lucid thinking, able to build every time the course of action appropriate to the existing situation, for you not to be forced to justify everything you did as a leader.

Permanence consists of the leader's tendency to continuously establish relationships between the occurrence of major events and the degree of control of the risks determined by their direction. A leader has to define his position in the midst of events by measuring his presence of spirit according to the time he has at his disposal to accept the compromise between adaptability and opportunism.

Today, nothing tells us anymore what is "the self-cherishing and self-judging thinking", representing first one's own unaltered value by the experiment of moral collapse, which admits the possibility of multiple procedures, coordinated by fundamental abilities – survival and secondary abilities – of reflection on ourselves and adjustment of our inner balance.

These abilities are, so to speak, a valuable personal background, having a special significance for us, transferable in the plan of manifestation. Therefore, the ability to remain lucid and focused on the path of self-appreciation is the strength of the fittest.

Leadership: Does your uniqueness grow by taking and expanding the experience of using your background image in conducting a "temporary renunciation" operation?

Just as herpes appears due to a weak immunity, so the decrease of your leadership quality is due to a weak "oxygenation" of your entire potential, which is individualized of rest of the world by the virtues which you adopt to the limit of tyour own compromises with the factor called "Risk".

Do you oxygenate perfectly well your leadership potential respecting the values that make you exceptional and which, at the same time are well-engraved in other people?

Can you express your vision in such a way as to make people act in its spirit? How do you interact with people? What is the price of your progress? Are people really willing to pay this price? Are you controlling your high expectations? Is your leadership an opportunity with low risk, but with high-profit opportunities for people? Your decisions meet people's expectations, or are against human nature?

The background image is what remains to be seen after you have proven your mastery in managing a situation where you felt stuck.

Temporary renunciation may be an effect of conjunctions of misinterpretations of the situation that cancels the right moment to act. Or it can be an amicable form of extinguishing the link between failure and the recognition of the inability to address the events.

Leading people towards failure is not an act of heroism; it is a lack of responsibility. A good leader builds several strategies before taking a big decision, especially when the career and the life of his employees are in danger. Many times he even consulted his employees on how it is better to act.

People always have the intention to reward those who lead them to the direction that match with their wishes. It is a big difference between following someone because you want to, without any obligation and because you have no choice. The unyielding will and true desire to work for the common good it is what characterizes talented leaders. They don't involve in a certain action without being sure that there are no major risks and that everybody has something to win.

In the professional life people are everything. Therefore, it is extremely important to be responsible and honest in front of those who work for you and you have to prove more flexibility in your relationships with them. Only this way you could win their admiration, support, trust and respect, that respect that it is built on devotion and support.

The way in which you get involved in the course of events determines how you respond to the allegations of guilt that are brought up to you in the case of exceeding the limits that test your character.

Do you know how to get close to people when you're about to quit your mission?

Temporary renunciation is a manifestation of rationality based on an empirical approach that exceeds the restrictions imposed by reality seen through the complexity and depth of causes determined by the perception of succession of facts and events. It has as a starting point the adherence to a smaller framework of guaranteeing reciprocity between self-awareness and awareness of others' vulnerabilities in the face of unforeseen events.

Do You Really See This Thing?

The gaze that interrogates the silence, often finds answers in the echo of the passing moment.

On Sunday I walked through the Exhibition Park. In a corner of the main alley, I saw the old man with the accordion, about whom I told you before. But he was no longer the man with a smile on his face from last week, but a silent, lonely and reflective man, his cheeks furrowed with traces of sadness, just waiting to find solace. Only the money that the passers-by threw into the mercy box counted, from an old memory of his youth, for the passion that once really animated him.

In the harmony of a song, every soul finds its story. With some bewilderment, out of a kind of complacency, I watched and listened to him while his accordion played the song "El Paso". At the beginning, he put his soul, as if building his own sound world, hence the variant of a deepening into the reality of escaping from everyday life, organized as if in the perimeter of the virtual action of an illusion. Suspiciously, disapprovingly, he glances at me fleetingly, as if he should be arrested immediately for I don't know what sin, as a benchmark for his own disappointment, in a chronology of metro-rhythmic contrasts sui generis .

The man says nothing, but the soul notes the silences, and the accordion gives voice to them, turning them into melancholic melodies floating in the cold evening air. Somehow, his soul resonates as if with the feeling of a character of Erich Maria Remarque from the novel "The Triumphal Arch":

- I would like to go away from all this. Far from this place , far from what I do, far from what I know , far from what I have to show , far from what happens to me . Far away ! Far away ! Why do I have to live this life ? Can't I live like other people who love each other? I can't be with someone and we have things around us that belong to us , I ca n't have quiet and safe evenings , instead of this particular physical void, instead of these days desolate and of this " il momento prima " where I feel alienated from myself ?

Leadership: How would your perception of reality change if the horizon line were only a subjective interpretation, shaped by concrete individual consciousness?

In moments of waiting, the heart learns the language of wordless questions. Discreetly, against the background of a stirring sensitivity, I watched the old man while he performed a solo with a pulsating rhythm, highlighted even more meaningfully by the simultaneous opposition of low and high sounds. Melody is a universal language, speaking directly to the soul. His face was indecipherable, as if it hid a deep secret, and his eyes reflected a fragile, serious silence, which could only be described by an artist in a kind of discreet but meaningful melancholy. So, this moment of the questioning gaze has also arrived. He had been waiting for him for some time.

Deep reflection opens the gates of understanding, even in the absence of spoken words. And again, the same tone of the character from Remarque's novel, it was as if a jolting feeling awoke in me:

- Does anyone see me now, now , me like this , the anonymous and still cold singer ? Another world has all this! Warmth , common things , some room and where to go close the door , the anxiety goes away and does not creep in in the soul, like here. No one knows what reality is, everyone only accepts the dream. Change is the only constant in life , and adaptability is the key to emotional survival.

In the chords of an accordion, an unexpressed story is hidden, because a shadow of sadness could be read on the old man's face, a kind of Asseata Inahoriza Obekabees , the lack of an answer to his prayers. It's not the only reason. There is another, but he hid it under a hidden anxiety, under the need to put his head in the ground rather than feel how the world looks at him - as a beggar, not as a musician. A big world is for someone a small world, even smaller than one could imagine.

Leadership: Can your perception of the world be shaped by the image you relate to when you capture the essence of life under the guidance of a composition where the sonic dominance reflects genuine emotion?

A park is like an oasis. You learn to appreciate the simple things again. The walk. Breathing. The view. And in every event that the eyes perceive, a unique and unforgettable promise is hidden. And isn't it the unusual experiences that shape and define our existence? So, in a world where we are all surrounded by technology, there are still places and moments where the human essence manifests itself in its purest form, through art, music and contemplation. Everything we see is a lesson in the value of authentic moments and the power of art to connect people with nature, to move us and enrich our existence.

As you have noticed, my skill lies in capturing and optimally choosing that "mundane moment", when the protagonist and the ambience are in direct reality, where the ambience is the purity of the content that the musician expresses, capturing the essence and pure emotion. Without in any way compromising the understanding of the deep meanings of the message: "music is a reflection of life itself", I believe that the musician is the TOTAL MAN, of the totality of the representation of life on the stage of an image, approaching a particular environment where reality and dream intertwining, creating a bridge between the inner and outer worlds.

Therefore, the image captured by my eyes has the gift of embracing in a single frame a situation of compromise of the current reality, between sensitivity and perception, with reference to Borges's poetics: "the capture of life in the very act of be lived", so that reality is revealed in complex layers of understanding. In fact, image and sound (as in cinematography) represent a topos. It depends on where the viewer is located, so that he perceives them more or less divided, dissociated, corresponding to an experience that varies according to the perspective and interpretation of each one.

Leadership: Can you capture the essence of a moment untainted by bias or external constraints in a way that remains true to your essence?

Without persisting as a positive utopia, as if life can be transferred, intact and immediate on the screen of my eyes, capturing the essence of the moment, I tried to highlight how image and sound combine to create a multisensory experience. In this way, perception was not limited to what I saw or heard separately, but how these two senses worked together to give me a deeper and more complete understanding of the captured moment.

Without needing words, my art speaks directly from the heart, demonstrating that, in a present often dominated by ephemeral images and an increasingly invasive virtual reality, the power of creation lived and experienced directly, "in flesh and bones", retain inestimable value.

In this setting, the musician with the accordion becomes for me a symbol of authenticity and genuine human connection, reminding me of the deeply human need for beauty, truth and art that rages beyond the digital screen.

Yes, it is possible to capture the essence of a moment without limiting yourself to what you have seen or heard separately. Your perception of a moment can be influenced by many things, including your emotions, past experiences, and your personal interpretation of the context. Thus, you can integrate information from all your previous experiences to form a more comprehensive and authentic perception of the moment. This allows you to capture the essence and meaning of a moment in a more complete and profound way.

Adjust your perspective on life by watching how the essence of a fleeting moment articulates, so that your perception slips into introspection.

Do you really see this thing? Ask yourself if you are truly aware of what your eyes reveal to you in the fleeting moments of life, if you truly want to understand the world and yourself so that everything you experience becomes a valuable lesson.

Do You See What Is Not Seen?

On December 15, 2024

The more you accept the chaotic nature of events, the more you begin to see the hidden order they reveal.

I have often felt like a raw stone, thrown into an ocean of the unknown. I have sought refuge in stories, in imaginary worlds, where everything seemed simpler. But, like Atreyu, from "The NeverEnding Story" I understood that true adventure is not found in books, but in my own life. I have often found myself lost, gripped by a deep sense of futility, as if my world were falling apart before I could understand its meaning.

But that magic book, that enchanted gate whose key lies hidden in courage, able to open worlds hidden within me, it offered me a way. I opened the pages, one by one, trying to decipher each symbol hidden behind each paragraph, not knowing that, in fact, I was opening myself to an inner transformation, calling on Atreyu – that part of me that I thought was lost, but that desperately wanted to fight, to seek, to discover.

When I set out on the path of Fantasy, I had nothing, absolutely nothing. No weapons, no guide, no friends, no clear idea of how to stop her collapse, or mine. But, somehow, this very lack was what I needed. That raw stone, that shapeless beginning, belonged to me. So I clung to my courage, my will, my only protective qualities, like a sculptor using his bare hands to shape a future out of nothing. It was not easy. The struggles, already hard enough, seemed endless, and the results crushing. But each step forward gave me shape, shaping the meaning of a new beginning.

Leadership: How do you relate to the dimensions of creation when you feel that each deep reflection of introspection offers you a new chance to rewrite your own vision?

Many times, I felt like I lived between two worlds – one real, often gray, and another fantastic, full of potential, but distant. It was as if I was caught between the pages of a book that refused to end, each chapter offering me a new chance to rewrite my destiny. In the end, I understood that I was both Bastian, the one dreaming behind a book, and Atreyu, the one fighting on the field of life in the story I read.

Thus, my mission was to look beyond what I thought was possible, to find in nothing the power to create. And I created. I saved Fantasia, I saved a world that was constantly falling apart due to a counterfeit reality, but more than that, I saved myself.

Yes. I am both Bastian and Atreyu, two sides of the same mirror, two sides of the same struggle. Like Bastian, I stand in the real world, feeling like a raw stone that no one truly sees. Like Atreyu, I am the warrior who must save not just a fantasy world, but the very essence of who I am. And when I look in the mirror, what remains of an unfinished dream, I see the same insecurity that Bastian felt in that dusty library.

Leadership: Can you accept that every masterfully crafted illusion is actually an expression of a deeper story, written by the Creator within you?

At the same time, I felt within me the courage of Atreyu, that dynamic vector "Esithizma Unosymus", the force that pushes you to move forward even when NOTHING threatens to swallow everything you know. As I said, I never had advantages. I had no magic weapons or maps to show me the way. All I had was this burning desire to transform the raw stone of my existence into something great.

Deep down, I knew I had the power to sculpt my own existence. But doubt gnawed at me: who was I to create something out of nothing? Who did I think I was? With each step forward, I doubted less. Like Atreyu crossing the Swamp of Sorrow, I too climbed mountains of despair, but each step became a lesson in resilience and transformation.

Per aspera ad astra, the path to the stars passes through trials, and each obstacle is a new opportunity to give shape to the raw stone of existence. All I needed was the courage to set off on the journey, the same path traveled by a famous magician: "One day the road forked, and I, I chose the one less traveled by - and that made the difference."

Leadership: How do you use the space of metamorphosis to create a well-crafted illusion that reveals the truth of your essence?

From small events, great revelations are born. Initially, Robert-Houdin was a watchmaker. He ordered some books on horology from a bookstore, but, through confusion, he received a volume on magic. That's how he became a magician, and a reference in the history of magic. In fact, so influential was he that, after writing several books, he inspired a young Hungarian who read this ancient book with rapture, as if he were about to discover the Holy Grail. This young Hungarian was called Erik Weisz, and so impressed by the book's contents that he decided to become a magician. He began his career by changing his stage name to Houdini.

When confusion becomes revelation, you understand that life is like a magic book, where every happy accident opens doors to unexpected destinies. And when chance surprises you, you discover that life, like a perfect artist, creates its masterpieces from the most unexpected moments. I myself have found, through an unexpected twist of fate, that life is a stage of magic, where every apparent mistake becomes a well-crafted illusion. As a silent director, I have learned to play the role of the Creator.

Today, I see myself as a sculptor working on the most important work of art: my own life. With each decision, with each action, I add a new stroke of the chisel, gradually revealing the form that hides inside me. I do not yet know what the final masterpiece will look like, but I know that I will continue to work on it until my last day.

Leadership manifests itself in the ability to see beyond imperfections, to shape destiny from what seems lost, to have the courage to follow the unknown path.

The book of my life will also witness a magic act, in a formidable illusion show, in which the main character is not just a hero, but a metaphor for each of us when we face the unknown. And perhaps Bastian, with his shyness and insecurity, is a greater lesson: that fragility is not a flaw, but a beginning.

Do you see what is not seen? It is a question whose answer can only be given by the one who has the courage to look beyond appearances, beyond the imposed limits. What is not seen always appears when you least expect it.

Any novel that abounds in a special sensitivity, brings into discussion various feelings, takes you through the meanders of the human soul, making you imagine each event, experiencing the feelings of the characters in an intense way. Descriptions of nature outline a wonderful landscape, carrying you beyond the real, into a fairy-tale world, where everything seems possible.

"Do not be afraid of challenges", whispers my soul right now, passing through memories with that fearless determination of Atreyu, filled with the innocent intensity of Bastian, and found without equal in the mastery of Houdini.

Do You Think That I Love You And That You Can Trust Me?

On February 20, 2009

What makes an affection sincere and lasting, seen as a bond between the dreamer and the doer, depends on an unwritten pact by which you share your beauty, pain, joy and sadness.

I had come to Paris before you, determined this time to see you, to approach you and to check the effect it could have on you, this resemblance that I knew existed between me and the woman you had lost.

- Ah! you knew these things too, madam, said the count.

- I thought at first that I succeeded; Olympia continues. At least you made me believe that I had revived, in you, the memory of the poor departed. I was returning you to your first love, to rejuvenate your soul, to purify it and to make it come out of all these frivolous and petty gallantry that had usurped the place of sincere and deep feelings for so long. You are becoming, little by little, the man I wanted, the one you were, perhaps, before the frenetic and easy existence in Vienna.

But, at the moment when I thought I had realized my dream, the life of Vienna suddenly came back to grab you through the person of this princess whose lover you were. Oh! In the evening when the Deaf opera of Portici was played, when I saw you enter your box with that arrogant, depraved, naughty woman, I felt that frivolity and pleasures rule forever the man they once captured. My last dream was shattered, and I proceeded to Paris, as I had proceeded to Vienna, under the same circumstances: I fled again, sir, and, overcome with grief, went to Venice.

Well, I ask you again, do you think that I love you and that you can trust me?

Leadership: Can you rethink the act of reactivating a forgotten memory without implying that you want validation and reassurance from the interlocutor?

Everywhere we find memories, levers of inspiration, from simple happenings, events, to various things that seem to have spread naturally in our minds, moving away from the reality of a present that flows infinitely slowly, where the whispers of "remain good" are so slow as to be useless. Memories change masters with every second of pain, they change what made your soul happy at one time, with the risk of overwhelming you later, when the waves of pain recede, asking for a short break.

The warm wind of memories blows constantly, but in gentle gusts, as warm and pleasant as in any corner of one's transition from the desires of reason to those of the soul.

In the given context, "reviving a memory", the testimony from the depths of the human soul and consciousness, pursues the goal of self-knowledge resulting from introspection, suggesting that the speaker is trying his best to bring back to mind or revive the memory of a person who is no longer there. present, probably with the aim of maintaining a connection with her or to honor her presence as befitting.

This is also a form of leadership, because "reviving a memory" actually communicates some well-defined states of mind, some relevant life attitudes, which create the context of an authentic self-transformation. The leader is an ever-evolving self, a self shaped by unforgettable memories that reaches out to those around him beyond what has been spoken through the interweaving of his memories and experiences.

Leadership is the framework of action through which balance is developed between the roots of soul and reason. It is a framework for action that reinforces an unwritten pact between feeling and life, between belief and action, facilitating communication, inspiring trust, and providing direction and guidance in the relationship between someone who lives with memories and someone who carries that memory with them.

Do you think that I love you and that you can trust me? It is a question that you must answer, whenever you refer to a life that deserves to be relived, retold, a life in which the future and the past change places.

When it comes to leadership, you must not look at the steps of the ascent as states that can be left behind, but as permanent states.

Do You Wish To Have Influence?

On February 19, 2009

Occupy a higher place in the hearts of people, by showing a true concern for their qualities.

Carolus Linnaeus, considered the father of the modern ecology, was born on 23rd of May in 1707 in the South of Sweden. As he was a little boy he fell so in love with the botany, that he run from classes and sneak in the school library only to read the botany books that were there. His curiosity was centred on a single domain, botany and that's why he was not at all interested in the other subjects that were learning in school. Although his father wanted him to be a reverend, Linnaeus followed his call.

The right man at the right place. Because he did not want to get ready for becoming a reverend, very often there were lots of strife and discussions at home. A big part of Linnaeus childhood was ruined because of his dad who was making him to prepare for priesthood.

The boy's salvation was his physics teacher who suspected his intelligence and gave him a lot of botany books. The teacher interfered and explained with tact to the unsatisfied parent that his son will become a great man if he allows him to do what he is really interested in: botany. More, after he obtained the acceptance of the father, the professor took the boy at his place and helped him to prepare for the admission at the university.

Leadership: Can you impose yourself as a milestone in the development of people especially through the content of reference that fully reflects your conception of your ideal self?

If you are a creator of personalities, you probably have high hopes that the knowledge and closeness forms between you and other people will expand, and access to their operating area will become more accessible. However, the fulfillment of all these hopes will never replace the absence of correspondence between needs, resources and rights, in terms of what people might become. The ability to put yourself in their place, from your private space, will always be threatened by the phenomenon of total lack of matching.

In what pattern of leader are you fit in terms of what people might become? Are you a leader that constantly self-assesses his authority compared to others' status and achievements, or a leader that coordinates people, feeling as if he must control their decisions?

You should probably think more about those considerations concerning the lack of a creative or saving entity, providing strong incentives to raise people to a higher level. In the case of a blockage of their transformation, in the situation of a lack of ability to transpose yourself into a mentor, how do you compute the compatibility with the factors of motivational implication in the performance of new types of personalities?

Sustainable transformation combines introspection with receptivity to beneficial external interventions, which unleashes your latent potential.

The ideal self is concerned about the way you see yourself, thinking about yourself and gives you the mentality you have concerning different aspects of individual and social life. It can interfere with perception, how you want to be under the supervision of a spiritual parent, especially if intuition and inspiration come from the angel of an attitude that glorifies the special concern to satisfy certain forms of support.

You will never be dominated by a self, stronger than the original source of your talent – due to the influence of a proper stimulus system that has captured your attention and triggered good mood. In other words, what helps you progress to true inner happiness is the result of an external saving intervention.

Leadership: The social identity diffused from the existential space allows you to reconstruct an ideal self that can become an individualized archetype under the conditions of confidentiality of the decisions made?

The authentic art to get along well with everybody and offer yourself as a role model, educator, able to make people perceive you as an equal partner with them in a specific context, to a much higher purpose in life remains by definition a limited universe of conventions and traits. Does this mean that leadership remains somewhat uncertain, far from what you can predict, what you can represent in other people's life, far from what you think you are?

It's easy to smile before attempts of togetherness with other people, answering their call by periodically checking their aimed results, taking into account the quality improvement of the educational process, to make the way forward more valuable and more accessible. But what have you done so far in this regard? Here's a question whose answer must be leisurely prepared.

Taking a confidential decision on choosing a development path means being mature enough to admit that you do not trust the wall called the "limit of personal potential", translated in a single way: "You mean I can't be better than that?"

Leadership: Does the understanding of your role in creating or maintaining a mutually trustworthy position permanently change along with a reasonable level of certainty in the statement "I believe"?

Carolus Linnaeus would never have reached so far if it was not for his professor. Even if everybody considered the boy a big "pain", this professor had an intuition about what he was capable of, that he had the necessary potential to become more than a simple minister. That is why he helped him to follow his dream, not to bend in front of his father wish. His contribution was very big and had an enormous impact over the boy's life.

Your leadership potential develops, it becomes more appreciated by people around you, only if you show a true concern for their qualities. When people feel that you are concerned about their person, they are willing to follow you.

Do you show a true concern towards the qualities of people? Can you find a way to communicate with them regardless of the environment they come from? Are people focusing themselves on your opinions and your advices? Do you have the ability to transform them in real performers? Are they feeling comfortable with you? Do your guidance qualities make from you a remarkable and agreeable person?

A self prepared to evolve is the recipient of rewarding help. And self-perception, influenced by external stimuli, shapes how a person progresses toward a higher ideal.

Do you want to have influence? If so, then you should cultivate genuine relationships with people, beyond what seems obvious on the surface, because only by deeply understanding their needs can you gain their trust and respect.

Leaders do more than encouraging people, sometimes they save them from a mediocre life, without hope, without perspectives and without joys. Leaders stimulate people to action in the right direction and to remain faithful to their dreams. The motto of a talented leader is this: "You have a talent from God, and I will help you to develop it."

You will not be an ideal leader if you are not able to encourage the people's efforts. Try to see beyond the appearances, what is best in people, which is their talent and offer them your help. Do not wait to be rewarded for the help you offer, put on the first place the kindness and the generosity and then the reward will come for it self. People will develop their potential in a big part thanks to your influence. So be sure that your influence is positive.

Occupy a higher place in the hearts of people, by showing a true concern for their qualities.

Domination Of Spirits Among The Egyptians: The Magic Ritual To Harm Someone

On November 02, 2010

Can the power you have in your actions reveal hidden aspects of your character, the vulnerability of which is only manifested in the relationship with those you consider incompatible with you?

- What you want from me? For I suppose you know my name and powers.

- I know your name, but I don't know all your powers. And I come to you again to see if you can be of use to me, if I can use your magical powers.

- What are you hoping for? I know charms against scorpion and spider stings, against snake bites. I know the incantations for driving away the demons of diseases. I also know how to prepare the magical pharmacopoeia, liqueurs to make you loved.

- None of these powers interest me. First, do you know how to cause trouble for my enemies?

- How could such a young and pretty woman have enemies? I thought you would ask me for a charm or a liquor to make you my lover.

- If I am young and beautiful as you say, why would I need a spell to be loved? Is not my beauty the strongest liquor and my words more intoxicating than charms?

Leadership: The delicate balance between the desire for revenge and its consequences makes you feel torn between the values you identify with and feelings of guilt that prevent you from being happy?

Such certainty made Sabi smile, he thought to himself that he would have been tempted to use all the magical powers at his disposal to make himself loved by such a woman.

- What kind of trouble would you like to cause an enemy? A disease? Wounds, pain in the gums, limbs, saddles? In that case, I will model a doll for you. You will get me hair, sweat and nail fragments from the person you wish harm on. Then it will be enough to stick a thorn in the part of the doll that you will choose so that the person feels the pain where you stuck the tip of the needle.

- That would be a possibility. But what if I want the person to be stricken not with sickness or pain, but with death? What will you do, what would you ask of me?

- Do you wish someone dead?

- May be. Answer my question first.

- What you are asking of me is a great responsibility. You have to pay dearly for such a dangerous service!

Leadership: Can you take responsibility for the consequences of an immoral act, regardless of circumstances or motivations, as long as your vision does not conflict with the Superego?

- It's a whole ritual, but it's not enough. You must first write the name of the person whom you wish harm on a vessel, then break the vessel and bury him near the place where he lives. After which I must impart the magical power of Seth and Thoth to this mortal object.

- How long does the person disappear?

- Sometimes it is about months, even years. But he will surely die.

- You're kidding? We all have to die sometime. That's why your magic seems so simple to me. If I have to wait years for the person's death, I better leave it to time.

- Someone young can live a few more decades. But when I said years, I meant two, three at most. Then the person will die of disease, accidentally, while hunting, falling from a roof, drowning in a river, bitten by a snake, attacked by a lion or swallowed by a crocodile.

- If I ask you to break a vessel, what will you ask me?

- You probably suspect that an action that requires such great tension on my part, so much science and so much mastery of the spirits and for which I risk my life is very expensive.

- I'm ready to pay. Tell me the price!

Leadership has as its basic principle the following suggestion: "an action that demands from you a great tension, so much science and so much mastery of spirits, costs very dearly if it compromises your integrity and values."

Egyptian spirit mastery (the magic ritual to harm someone) can be practiced when you are not happy and at peace with yourself, and especially when you know that you will not be able to be happy in a long-term relationship with someone. Such practices are still widely used by those who seek power and control over others, ignoring the moral and karmic consequences of their actions.

Although there are evil spirits and spells, they will never be able to touch the people who have God on their side.

Rise above common thinking, connecting yourself on the "input and output" frequency of active elements of human configuration.

He who said that the spirit occasionally needs a demonic man, whose superior power rises against common thinking, knew all too well that behind an appearance that hides truths hard to accept, a subtle and authoritative influence is released. The subtle indicator of hidden performance in man, superior to common thinking through a "knowing how to lead events", emerges from a "Who am I?" elevated to the power of the will to experience new sides of human nature, gaining his authority from the back of a thought full of appearances.

The findings and expertise on the quality line of the "universal" man, whose boundless science stays at the same floor with supreme wisdom, show a dangerous form of intellectual deficit, a strong overlap between support and mind-shaping elements.

Hannibal Lecter's science is not the simple result of his ebullient intellectual curiosity, but is the main component in the process of a profitable trade with psychological munition, which is quite blooming and performed safely. His creative force, so fine in the field of psychology, resides in the mystery of the inner life of a genius endowed with the richest perceptions about the Ego, in the sciences of the spirit. It must be exercised as a drug, as a dizzying fluid, unseen and difficult to sniff, in order to increase the delusion of the moods of the people around, to their utter constraint, that they become the subject of a grand study of persuasion and its effects.

Leadership: Can suppressing a connection with the states of consciousness of people around you be associated with the introduction of a suggestion force in the direction of a vision resulting from a "fight against the soul" phenomenon?

Hannibal is not only a genius of psychology, but also a scientist who measures the value of the resistance of the people with whom he interacts, the tension pattern of their need, to later frame them in the patterns of a new vision on the neuropsychological organization of life. The many types of measurements, findings and interpretations, connected on the high frequency of inputs and outputs of active elements, subject to overheating, in the interior configuration of man, must cover a wide range of meanings. Furthermore, he always has where to choose experimental models of all sizes from.

Hoping to unravel the human world behind the events, especially the real motivation and tribulation that ceaselessly try the ordinary individual, Hannibal prefers recognition of clear facts. The man subject to research with the mind lens becomes the interpreter of a subtle evaluation game, develops into a trusted companion, a formidable contender for the title of recordman within the most unpredictable experiments.

But, to interpret and evaluate the human being, Hannibal must transform himself into a constant lover of people. Then, into a handler. And finally, into a full-fledged owner. And without the will power that commands the inner chaos of fallen people within the perimeter of persuasion, not even the fiercest desire could ever lead to a work of art. He must be more than an artist; he must be a monopolist of science.

Leadership: Does the value of the bonding force between soul and consciousness result from the impact of knowledge that lends itself to manipulative modeling on the process of training the New Man, in trying to anticipate the effect of a mindset transformation at the oversized Ego level?

Hannibal has shown great leadership qualities, such as persuasion, but this is also due to the oversized Ego that required him to always be above the level of thinking of the people around him. He alone could have been entitled "The New Man" not only from the point of view of his unique qualities, but by the fact that all that worked within the meaning of his ideal of authority was that kind of greatness called "efficiency in inspiring a sense of compassion and empathy".

If the palace occupied the main place in architecture at Cretans and Mycenaean, then the self-transformation holds nowadays the main place in leadership as absolute and relative power. The mental projection of possibilities for human expression, exploring his soul to its depths, monitoring the "temperature" of thoughts and emotions that define each situation, has the value of contract between supplier and beneficiary.

The former, the common man, holds the quality of personal data operator, proving his willingness to be investigated. The latter, the leader, holds the quality of associate and the function of administrator of common man's assets, the findings generating a steady income of efficiency and productivity in the training and self-knowledge process.

With good management of Human Resources, ensuring that the unique items are properly accounted for and the qualitative "materials" are selected, mixed and adapted to his own personality, the leader will manage to slowly turn into a full-fledged owner.

Leadership: Do you have consistency in approaching "feeling and thinking" knowledge, in correspondence with the degree of non-alteration of the mental image related to a noble cause?

In order to remove everything from people on the small printer of management, attached to your own instinctive conditioning and manipulation station, you must conform to that strong ethical and social demand. Make room for good will and well-defined, clear politeness, to ensure the equidistant intimacy between you and them. A "feeling and thinking" knowledge is the constituent element of mutual perception that makes one man the mirror of the other.

The unanswered question certainly is the next one: Do you have the means to examine and understand all that can be known? Are people open to experimentation and willing to partake to your progress?

If you want to gain confidence in the possibilities of self-knowledge and personal development, rise above common thinking, connecting yourself on the "input and output" frequency of active elements of human configuration. In the faculty of human reason, you will find, after a psychological analysis and investigation, the clearest answers to the questions: "Who am I and who am I not?"

The ultimate regulator of leadership, which controls the pressure of human transition states, must allow the change of its inner mechanism without affecting the drilling machine where it has been installed.

The noble cause that a mental image of how you relate to other people relates to is this "Who I am and who I am not" from the perspective of an Ego who does everything to prevent his transformation into a Higher Self.

Domino insights highlights that ability developed over time to predict human functional potential and possible obstacles encountered on the path of self-knowledge. Because like a domino piece whose fall creates a whole series of other consecutive falls, this intrusionem of the leader in the human space may trigger as well a chain of actions pro or against achieving performance in leadership.

Domino Insights (I)

On November 24, 2013

Connect your mind to a renewable energy source, to have access to a new dimension of possibilities for evolution.

I had fallen into a dangerous state of profound confusion. Because, being an idealist, I had wandered at random through the drained world of mirages and illusions, in which I played an important role. That of self-destruction. And then, of resurrecting with a new attitude and outlook on life. I could find no peace.

I think it was a particular case of resonance, on a certain frequency, with a force that could make me invincible within limits, harmonizing oscillations between "top" and "bottom", between the seen and the unseen world. A bridge between these two oscillations could in particular be harmonized (under the determinism of instinctive impulse) with the implication of an external force, unlimited and invincible, located above the extent of my understanding.

Exhausted by internal conflicts, by requests contesting any super-individual authority, I stopped at the intersection of the two dimensions: of space and time. I felt within me the defensive walls of aspirations of union with the absolute collapsing, because the more I learned, the more the unknown magnified. Overcoming the chaos that almost overwhelmed me sometimes, could only be achieved with the participation of Umberto Eco in interpreting my universe: "Simple people have something in addition to doctors, who often get lost in seeking much too general laws. They have the intuition of the individual."

Without any resistance, I drew away from myself, from the Ego that prevented me from achieving perfection. The effluvia of subtle matter and amplifying matter, moving in an intensifying way from a minus of meanings to a plus of coherence, huddling together truths and secrets, but not in the name of definitive, closed the transformational circuit.

Leadership: Can the fight between illusion and vision, fueled by your constantly renewed inner forces, keep you awake and incarnate you, in all your becoming, in a deep creation revealed as a sui-generis superiority?

The aspiration of my soul to forge a new destiny detached from a reality inaccessible to the ordinary world, making me a prisoner of interiority in the spirit of creation, crystallized as a symbolic image, referring to the work of the ancient alchemists. To defend their primordial science, alchemists, Hermes' followers, like the famous Elias Ashmole, whose works have inspired Newton, never ceased to properly address this profound identification of "The Great Work".

These enlightened people beyond science resorted to a coded language, to mysterious and hieroglyphic images, which you could not believe they are real. And to this code of expressing unseen knowledge, hermetical in the eyes of laymen, other creations and visions consisting of various representations of imagination were added.

Lost in the challenging immensity of thoughts seeking to create and transform energy into reality, I felt for a moment the pale sun rays moving along the border line with the prospects beyond the visible horizon of life. I was not the only one who experienced the distant vision in search of a new life, in living a life driven by the force of creation, as a kind of chaos. A character of Jules Verne had arrived at night, in the dark, on top of Mount Sneffels, and before taking shelter inside the crater, had the time to glimpse "the midnight sun" at its lowest point.

Domino Insights, the creative force of thoughts arising from the interaction of the real with the unreal. I was falling into a state of creative ecstasy without taking into account the fear of heights. I was fitting with the gloomy contemplations that connected my mind to a source of renewable energy source, without thinking to the frameworks lit by the unknown that could alienate me from myself.

Leadership: Can you add to your own identity an excellent source of decoding a "mirror image" revealed in two aspects: the creation of self and the self that takes the liberty to change into what it wants?

Reinvention – this is the fruit of continuous self-development, the excellent source of "active income" added to your own identity, which comes from any activity to support and materialize your aspirations. To reinvent yourself means to give your identity a new source of sustainability and impact in the form of decoded creation through a style figure: "your image changed into a statement of permanence".

The aspirations and impulses to the heights of creation, often difficult, should not at all be hindered by the straight line of a single narrow access road to new possibilities and visions. The sublime and lengthy contemplations of elements of the future, created by thoughts and states of perfection, definitely delimit you to that slumberous mediocrity that most individuals indulge in.

Reinventing yourself, freely branching your network of aspirations to a "test" sequence whereby you stand above your own needs to accept reality, as it is, provides increased safety for your needs to permanently improve. The "mirror image", which lifts you above the primitive aspirations of humanity, is the vision that gives you your transition into a new reality, so that you can more easily contemplate the wonder of creation.

In the development process, bringing your creative abilities to the level of your wildest ambitions, following the methods of control and management of your own resources, is a way to restore and strengthen your entire functional structure, which is considered to be driven only by your research efforts and the way you relate to your creation.

For you to manage to capitalize the skills you need to gain access to a new dimension of possibilities for evolution, while testing your abilities to cope with change and meet the demands for individual performance, perform an innovative experiment. Connect your mind to an inexhaustible source of energy without thinking about the frameworks lit by the unknown that could alienate you from yourself. Strengthen the defensive walls of aspirations of union with the absolute.

Leadership: Which is the only real thing in leadership that remains after your integration into the space of creation as an expansion of thoughts to a new destination?

He who has the courage to plunge his eyes into an extended framework of space and time previously defined, who dares to investigate the depths of the unknown will be more able to distinguish where the land ends and where the waves of possibility to process knowledge begin to grow in intensity.

As an innovator in the field of leadership, learn to examine how the forces to push the limits of perception of reality are placed. Learn to manipulate the force that can make you invincible in the process of maintaining oscillations between limit and boundlessness.

Creation is the highest point of freedom of thought.

The "glowing" explosion of thoughts that cross your mind every day, projecting new ideas, new visions, new models of understanding the various aspects of reality, the surrounding world and past, present and future events develop your ability to absorb what is beneficial to your area of expansion to new trends in leadership.

The only real thing in the whole area of leadership that remains after the "glowing" explosion of thoughts is that significant self-consciousness, which does not want to be confined between some rigorously established boundaries. And has the freedom of decision: to overcome the obstacle called "do not know".

Leadership is the image of the whole being governed by the freedom of thoughts to form a creation whose unique meaning is infinity, the aspiration to unite with the absolute.

Domino Insights highlights, in this case, the ability to achieve an accurate and profound understanding of new perspectives to approach creation, produced in series by the extension of research horizons of your own being. It involves the opening of new perspectives to approach the reality of the world and exploit on your own behalf the unused resources that you need to expand your understanding and knowledge.

Connect your mind to a renewable energy source, to have access to a new dimension of possibilities for evolution.

Learn to use the relevance of your relationship with "a higher deepness", paying attention to the certainties and uncertainties involved in approaching new directions of thinking.

I clenched my mind around this thought, as the eagle clenches its claws deep within the meat of a dear and tries to lift it from the ground. Around the thought that I existed through my own metaphysics, through my own artistic-causal power. But in this gigantic switch of the galaxy in which I evolved, in terms of the painstaking and torturous endeavor of the authentic, a cause was not really a cause, but rather an effect of which I was not sure of. "I'm a rocket ship on my way to Marks / On a collision course / I am a satellite I'm out of control."

The famous scientist René Descartes not only defined a logical system based on describing simple phenomena, but actually built his own metaphysics, starting from the deductive method, and reached the conclusion that thinking is a certitude: "I think, therefore I am." Thus, he concluded Godliness and the outside world.

If I would've managed to install the premises of a truth as of yet untold, through the unilateral means of scientific reason, through the supreme effort of pure imagination, then I would've found myself a lot closer to the start of a new stage of development. Like a sculptor who finishes his work by emphasizing the effects he wants to highlight, I finished my opinions on the belief that what I deducted through creative exigency (and through a sort of rational illumination) could determine who I am in a sort of higher deepness.

I use the term "a higher depth" to express the hidden power of comprehension of things experienced through reflection, from the anxious, unrelenting desire of understanding what has happened, of revealing the truths about the greatness of simple things, and the simplicity of great things.

Leadership: Do you demonstrate the relevance of your vision and the ability to always be one step ahead of the present by adding meaningful content to the editing of a higher form of response to the requirements of knowledge?

Surely. I viewed the weaknesses of a hidden reality to others with tolerance, not to give the impression of excessive attention to detail, facilitating the predominance of the artificial, to the detriment of the naturally noted feeling, but to give new shape to the essential determinations of the assessment and reorientation parameters of the world that overtook me daily.

The requirements of knowledge that illuminate me and can be reconciled with the notion of "explosion of creation through the knowledge of transcendental truths" were the following: the finding of a reality that was not fully deciphered in all its consequences and the crystallization of one's own conception of what happened to me through the fantastic of banality.

Secondly, I was convinced by the assurances given by the effect of an outflow from within myself and the entering into a supernatural and spiritual order, decisive for the reinvention of how I expose myself in the face of an uninterruptible source of content. An effect materialized in a self-renewal that placed me in an advantageous position compared to what I knew, from where I could see the events of life without being its captive. Which immediately meant an entry into divinity: "I'm floating around in ecstasy / So don't stop me now, don't stop me."

Always an artist, a manager of elements with predictive value over the quality of the relationship with my own object of study – language, in a set of phenomena and processes addressed through the intervention of the artistic-causal power, succumbed to experiences unmediated by the palpable expressions of his creativity. "I'm a shooting star leaping through the skies / Like a tiger defying the laws of gravity."

One of your useful relevancies for evolution on the ladder of development, added in the competition for opening a latent horizon, results from the successive improvements or degradations to which you are subjected in the attempt of crossing a transparent world, in which you hide nothing.

This relevance springs from the initiative of paying attention to the certainties and uncertainties implied by the approaching if new directions of thinking, and from the initiative of drawing conclusions under the aspect of your very painstaking and torturous endeavor of authenticity.

Does the relevance you have as a vector of strengthening leadership have the authority you represent as a potential supplier of new intellectual compositions as a dominant factor?

The relevance of the initiative of defining an uncertain area on which your future thinking depends, as a self-expression that explores that limits of the space of the imprecise and unknown, formulating something out of vague things, gives priority to your integration in a new version of power.

And the power to find and install within leadership the premises of certain, as of yet untold truths, through the unilateral means of scientific reason, through the supreme effort of pure imagination, is proof of the fact that, beyond everything you can conceive, your inner forum is expanding.

Is it not what they say, that power is given by the information you carry and transmit. And the information of a certain combination of judgements, belonging to one of the few classes of combinations which are opposed by a certain interval of variation, can also be calculated in relation to the landmarks of those quantitative accumulations of effects of the type "I think, therefore I am" which enable your transformation into a superior product through intellectual "endowments."

Leadership, along with the relevancies resulting from improvements and degradations of the type "You can be someone else through an: I think, therefore I am", has as a dominant factor the authority you represent as a potential supplier of new intellectual, scientific or artistic compositions.

The intellectual composition that makes known the area of leadership investigation coincides with the ability to develop new meanings attributable to subjective events and perceptions, experiences and reinterpretations of reality through reflections on the creative spirit in setting the design standards of the present.

Don't Stop Me Now is an estimate, a way of measuring the relevance you give to the leading part of yourself that incessantly cries out, with an immense satisfaction: "I think, therefore I am."

If you constantly finish your opinions related to the belief that what you deduct through creative exigency determines who you are in a sort of higher deep, in reference to a certain logic of rationalizing through provisional findings, you will have the feeling that you can exist in a different décor in which everything that is true can be extended or removed, appearing as new styling accents.

Don't Stop Me Now (I)

On August 26, 2015

Return to what you don't know and at the same time distance yourself from what you want to know, in order to maximize your chance of turning art into a way of feeling superior.

I chose it for myself from everything I had available, as a result of a superior way of thinking, deepened within a logic of a completely different structure than that of rational logic, later transformed into a feeling of invincibility. I was the first to put my hands on it, something no one will be able to understand, the triumph that drives away the pain, but still, I could only discern it in the dark. "I feel alive and the world is turning inside out, Yeah ! "

A darkness coming from too much light, following me like the stodgy bait from a hook. I only needed imagine an immense power from God, Like an atom bomb about to explode, but unaffected by the correlation coefficients used to calculate the vulnerability matrix. A power sparked from circumstances beyond my will, that I need in order to follow my path through a retroactive loop. "I'm traveling at the speed of light."

I chose it because it was the path to exclusive promotion of artists. This artistic-causal power, the essential part of a judgement filled with something from the mood of a Van Gogh that modulates the uniform hue of the circles and background by placing the ink in different directions, along an outbreak of contrasts, built up the idea of constructing a new philosophy within science.

Power was not only a beating of wings broke out of nothing, a triumph that drives away the residual pain of past failures, between symbolic actions having within itself something gloomy and turmoil filled with authenticity. It involved a certain temporal order, a certain context of perceiving a reality that requires an anchoring in a repeatable time, relying on a series of events and interrelationships. "So don't stop me now don't stop me / Cause I'm having a good time."

The founder of the Cartesian school, Rene Descartes created a theory of the human machine, created analytic geometry, discovered the principles of optics, also forming the foundation of modern physics. How did it happen? Every man, animated by divine virtues, only where he comes face to face with the landmarks of experimental art, on the high seats of the power of self-surpassing, can give birth to a new form of thinking.

Leadership: Do you contribute to the making of a superior form of thinking, putting knowledge in the matrix of an artistic-causal power?

An artist will always, convinced that he will break any thought patterns, eliminate the ugly and the brutal from his art. Or, he will add two such elements of constructing a special reality, when drawing up a work meant to convince by drawing attention to the importance of establishing preferences and inclinations in revealing certain trends of evolution.

And it is precisely here that the superiority of your intellectual endowment is born, from the ability of developing and selecting those nuances, from the darkest to the brightest ones, which fit the reality you want to highlight. And artistic-causal power, the essential part of a judgement filled with something from the mood that most strongly dominates your mind and personality, implies a rearrangement of those nuances so that you can practice openness before art.

Leadership seconds the feeling of invincibility you reach when you go deeper within a logic of a complete different structure than that of rational logic, a logic that eludes others, which is not only one of feeling, but that of fantasy especially.

Leadership: Can you uncover a new knowledge by getting inspired by what you don't know by assuming the boldness of living in a world turned upside down?

You can contribute to a superior form of thinking, putting knowledge in the matrix of an artistic-causal power, only if you can follow your path through a retroactive loop – to return to what you do not know and at the same time, to head towards what you want to know, in order to maximize your chance of turning art into not just a way of feeling superior, but into a new philosophical construction within science.

Few people dare to try channeling this power of objectifying themselves under the terrible heat of the light coming from too much darkness, or under the protective cloak of darkness coming from too much light – a power that is often lost, as a river that no longer follows course, under the thick layer of the temporal classification in a wrong profile of configuration of the creation formula.

Artistic-causal power is activated from the information you collect through knowledge that you create within you and outside of you, from everything that represents you in relation to what you discover on your own. They serve you precisely to best appreciate the level of understanding subjected to a subtle logic, in order to get as close as possible to the probabilities of exceeding any conventions or borders.

To assume the courage to live in a world turned upside-down is the act of discovering new forms of thought springing from the fragments of an incoherent existence. This can be accomplished through the exercise of intuition and imagination focused on a gradual and rigorous conflict between what is seen as an exception to the rule and what is perceived as a seat of illusions.

The great knowledge that is beneficial to leadership is concretized by bringing into the foreground the form of thought centered on the act of perceiving a reality that makes you escape "normality", from the spirit of time, to discover a new world.

Don't Stop Me Now is the direct result of the momentum towards the acquisition of a knowledge stemming from ignorance, meaning, from the attempt of attributing to darkness and light – these two springs of creation – a meaning that looks good in the picture you present to the world.

Don’t Stop The Dance

On November 11, 2018

Experience a new way of interpreting reality, contributing to personal story with the blood of reason to not be too emotional.

She didn't want to accept anything less than her pride, this angry roar of her soul full of vengeful shadows, rather the contrary, she would always have to look for something new in exchange for everything that was keeping her a prisoner in a lifeless past, experienced as a continuous death. Her glances filled with harsh meanings, for which an artist would find the comparison with a lifeless landscape, seemed to be loaded with that feeling of the outcome concluding the destiny of a humanity upon which the wind of aging had blown.

You would not even want to imagine this from a man who raises in front of any hopeful dream a flag that never waves in the wind, a simple flag and that is it, a symbol without any significance, enriching itself in the sign of an ineffable echo, which is the seal of poetry. Man's vanity is measured in his attempts to forget his whereabouts, and even worse, without realizing where he came to be in the unrecognizable verses of a life-reconciliation hymn.

The experience of suffering "a loss of self" allows for the freedom of association, dialogue, question marks at different degrees of analysis of a subject addressed only in universal dramaturgy.

The only experience of this hard-to-reach woman is the result of a journey that traverses the individual's intuitive antennae hidden behind a particularly mischievous sensibility, descends into an experimentally cold, surrealistic collage with a scalpel's edge, then only to climb back into a space inherent to an exacerbated Ego and ill of superiority. Beauty should be deeper than your skin.

The truth is that in a way I felt attracted to this facet of reality full of shadows and mystery, perceiving it as an existential attempt to understand the divine mystery of transforming the lost man into passions, at a very low stage of virtue. A woman's depths result from the imagination you give to the reality to which they have lost sight of the most striking meaning.

Leadership: Do you turn the experience of self-creation on two distinct faces of the same personality, faces that meet in a convergent point called "aesthetic emotion" into a triumph?

An exceptional writer always finds as the model of analysis only the hardest characters to believe, the hardest to accept or follow by tolerant spirits, focusing on the description of the bodily phenomena that produce or accompany psychic processes. The splendid individual traits I see in this woman reside in the "dead nature" of a common man, but one perceived only by the rarest human minds.

With her, everything seemed to be directed by a photographer who only captures the twisted parts of a mysterious labyrinth of unrealistic uniqueness, framed between the presence and the absence of a social reflection in the way of fixing an image-copy of reality in a frame of despair and unanswered questions. A frame whose general background is the same, but the props are changing.

The expression of an image that relates to another facet of reality is, in this respect, an expression of the will to conceal any emotion, to betray any intention other than the one declared openly.

When you love someone, you may fall in love a little bit, as happens to the painter when he wants to capture the essence of a second digging on the expression of the human face, but you must always be prepared for any failure of a singular factor. To love her is a mirage in a vast and deserted desert. Abandoning her is similar to a release from Mephisto's spell.

An aesthetic emotion is a persistent vibration of the self converted into an act of symbolizing the imagistic language, a form of spiritual manifestation converted into an image that imitates an artist's style of painting.

Writing about Her is more of a kind of amazement due to intrusion into a strange world, a kind of very intense doubt that is not a symptom of mistrust in a proud mind, but an incentive to investigate a mysterious soul wound as is apparent from the question that the Greek philosopher Cleanthes once addressed to a young disciple: "Why do I not feel that you feel?"

Leadership: Are you ready to reach a superior form of consciousness in an imaginative space, compared to a short story of the reality you have never spoken before?

I would not insist on her portrait now, especially dominated by the motif of the eyes full of willingness, whose eyelashes can only understand her. Who are you really? For whenever I try to get closer to her, I hear, far away, like in a rebound, the interference of an echo that came to my ear like a suggestion with a scent of caution: take care, boy, everything is deceptive in her life, at her age, including makeup that highlights the perfection of the features of her face.

I keep my distance from her, better than ending up alone like Faust and Margaret that end up falling in love with each other. With a sarcastic smile, Mephisto would admire his victory, I would become a servant of the outer realm. I could easily fall prey to seduction, harder would be to endure the hell that seduction itself prepares for me. This woman seems to be the kind of person who puts pressure on the events in your immediate vicinity just to win a bloody battle. But my blood will never be poured into the cup of her dangerous kisses. At the back of a sweet mouth is a poisoned heart.

Well, such an unforgettable human model we find best outlined in a novel by writer Mary Balogh:

"How blind I was for not seeing it. She looked up at me and stared me in the eyes. In her eyes, which were her beast feature, I could detect pain, buried very deep under severe layers of self-control. She only ever loved herself, everyone was aware of this. Generally, she was despised, even hated by people who fall victim to her exaggerated selfishness. I wanted to love her. I wanted to find the way to her heart and to be her favorite. What a madness ! "

What is seen in a picture full of concreteness is actually the hidden picture of another image more difficult to reproduce in words. Inside an imaginative reality everything is done according to the criterion set by the gift of reading thoughts. Here, consciousness gains its superiority through the eye of admiration to the depth of a mind that thinks of everything through oppositions, a mind that practically contradicts what it seeks to expose, to convince. Don't know why there's no sun in the sky with her.

Leadership: Can you build an event that brings to the forefront the art as a creative space, displaying interpretations that transmit emotions full of the affirmation of a transcendent finality?

My mother says truth is all that matters, lying and deceiving is a sin. A slight escape into the imagination of a woman full of that camouflaged fragility behind a shadowy mask without which a more comprehensive artistic profile could not be achieved could culminate on a symbolic protest a picture built just to attract sympathy, on the other hand, in a nostalgic horizon of nostalgic spirit in the long-gone moments.

Very few fruitful dialogues, sordid memories, filtering of thoughts and false affirmations of affection, glances thrown in a certain way, underlined by a grim silence, still fixed me however in a privileged posture of spirit, increasingly marked by the joy of creation. Drifting through a world that's torn and tattered, Every thought I don't mean a thing. More specifically, it is about the moment of a crack between the objectual content of action that becomes a good of consciousness and the means of formalizing a logic that links man and the world into a single coordinate system: I live only enough that I may exist.

I strongly believe that I will meet her again one day, maybe she will recognize me, maybe not, but we will certainly keep our distance from each other as two dice randomly cast by the hand of inexorable destiny, which are no longer fortunate to never throw six-six. Mephisto does not guarantee his superiority through the deceitfulness of the human soul, but through the strange play of luck that he himself created to monopolize a whole world. I have not yet sold my soul to the devil. And I do not even want to have bad luck.

In the artistic sphere, the vision that you form about a destiny inspired by the intensity of emotional experiences and needs, which is at the same time an inexhaustible, fertile, imaginative, sensitive, and very visual realm, is essential.

Don't Stop The Dance. Continue to admire man's nature, with his inner beauty and ugliness, because as in painting, there will never be a painting without even a small bright white background and a black spot.

The colors will have to be chosen in the shades of a late autumn, but so sunny as the moment I write these lines. What interpretation you will give to one scene or another depends on how much dedication you put into creating the story you write in your own brain and then in your own life with the blood of the reason to never be too emotional.

Don't Think Twice, It's All Right

On September 14, 2015

Exceed your limit of experimental knowledge in a process of introspection and self-rediscovery, favoring others' acceptance to bear witness to your development.

There was something hidden in me, more profoundly experienced at the level of the relationship between "Think Twice" and "It's All right". Something included in a succession of questions formulated based on the relationships between a resigned superiority and a form of profound lucidity. And this, perhaps because I have added to my life certain questions and answers circumscribed to the relation between feeling and reason through a profound lucidity formulation: "Whatever makes you feel otherwise, it matters in the way you relate to your experience of being independent of the clichés of a standardized existence between entertainment and kitsch."

It was something unclear, automatically rising within me in contact with an invincible energy, under the power of a mix of impulses and regulated conditions, with the help of a law of distributing silences, shouts and loneliness – that a painter as splendid as Salvador Dali would insert in his unequaled creations through a sort of confrontation between good and evil. A confrontation passed through the lens of an ethos that only stifles and kills the soul. "It ain't no use to sit and wonder why..."

Look within yourself, common man, but as the painter does it, closer, and then from farther away, traversed by the sum of reflections emerged in the field of a progressive power – the kind that stems from a sort of imaginary that fabricates reality based on your projection in time, under the magic wand of preconceived ideas. If you can, approach a new concept of identity in the way philosophers abandon their dark shelters, one that could be considered, dangerously, heretical in other times. "It ain't no use in turnin' on your light". And maybe you'll find that dimension of personality that transcends your limits of appearance.

Leadership: How do you express your unique experience of being part of multiple confrontations with yourself from the perspective of a life that contains the conditions of a closeness to the vision of a deserted world, irretrievably abandoned to an endless expectation?

Only a Shakespeare, this combination of sensitivity and spiritual nobility that separates any type of characters through the thorough feeling of assessment, could've been able to glimpse me through the threads of my tumultuous attempts of ascending towards a deeper self-knowledge. "Still I wish there was somethin' you would do or say."

Shakespeare, as Taine describes him, rips a fragment from human life, a few flickering fibers from the depth of his complex conception, from his colored semi-vision, and shows them to us. From these shreds, we have to guess the rest. Behind every word is an entire painting, an attitude, a long argument abridged, a bunch of ideas swarming around. "It ain't no use in callin' out my name."

And here I am exceeding the limit of experimental knowledge, in a process of introspection and self-rediscovery, favoring the acceptance of others of bearing witness to my development, through the lens of the possibility of "guessing" through the open corners of the sheet of camouflage called generically: self-condemnation. It was as if I had been the prisoner of a closed world, irretrievably abandoned to an endless expectation: I had to accept my guilt for encompassing all knowledge, without being able to share it with the world except through my own alienation from the world.

Through the flames of unknown glances, may I succeed in customizing my relation to what I was not – but what I could've been, when within me were demonstrably exercised clashes of the formations of resistance and protection, fueling the withholdings to a so-called evidence of my own scarcity. This was the equivalent of a "I'm walkin' down that long lonesome road / Where I'm bound, I can't tell."

Leadership: Can you prove your relevance in the face of the experience of being yourself, through the lens of the possibility of being the fruit of a "systematic search and investigation" included in the conditions of a knowledge that begins with the idea of "external examination"?

The way of relating to an outside examination, to the gazes locked on you at times with a rough acuity, depending on the tendencies of taking refuge in inferior or superior beliefs, is claimed in leadership from transparency to opacity.

Transparency is produced when you situate yourself under the clear light of reason, becoming a deep reflection of what others want to see in you. Opacity is what cannot be seen from you when you oppose the reality that exists through you, or when you oppose the momentum towards achieving an existential purpose, thus highlighting the defining features of a questionable personality.

Knowing how to evaluate yourself in terms of what shines or sets in you, under the power of a mix of impulses and regular conditions which often resist change, is a virtue that many leaders struggle to acquire.

And through the willingness of being receptive to what you communicate by "retreating in yourself", through what you transmit in an attempt to surpass the limit of experimental knowledge, you become more than what you know of yourself. You become a better version in the search results of others – a result that is more about what they see within you that they see in themselves.

Leadership: Can you prove your relevance to the experience of being yourself, given the possibility of being the result of the orientation that gives the revelation of a new perspective on the reality that forms the intimate-subjective journal of your life?

What is the fragment others can rip from your life, those few flickering fibbers from the depth of your complex conceptions? What exactly can they guess from you that will help them in their personal development?

The beliefs that limit you, often stemming from a feeling of helplessness or uprising, from that obscure feeling of detachment from the world, due perhaps to fearing what you don't know about yourself, or rather, what was revealed to you in a particular way, continues for a long time to keep within your soul a position of neutrality to the way others perceive you.

Leadership, coming to the extension of your assessment by others, can be measured in the way in which you transcend your limits of appearance. To go beyond what limits you, preventing the resignation of superiority due to the attachment to a concrete that makes you powerless in accepting your own emotions.

A man can be superior through what is called "stagnation" only when he awakens in others an emotion that warns them of the possible adverse effects of orientations towards self-realization.

Your relevance to the experience of being yourself is very much about how you perceive the change of reality as the product of a demonstrative knowledge through which your power to be unique, authentic is generated, validated and communicated.

Don't Think Twice, It's All Right highlights the willingness of being receptive to what you communicate through "retreating in yourself", through what you transmit in your attempt of surpassing the limits of experimental knowledge. You can become more than what you know of yourself, even a superior man, when others become aware of your "flaws" and through this, manage to fix theirs.

If you want your leadership to take an unprecedented leap, surpass your limit of experimental knowledge in a process of introspection and self-rediscovery, favoring others' acceptance of bearing witness to your development.

Don't Try To Run Away From Yourself

On May 20, 2016

Affirm your fidelity to the demands of an autonomous thinking, remaining devout to the values of communicating with yourself at a higher level.

There was within me a sort of unpleasant curiosity, like the tip of a poisoned arrow, transforming increasingly more into suffering. A perpetual fall into a state of connection to a sort of occult science, referring to a ubiquitous power with which I had a special connection, which I tried to maneuver, to surpass with the power of that breath of inspiration of the painter endowed with the gift of showing the world in its vastness.

In a way, I was examining my existence by manifesting certain questions I would often ask myself: What can I know of something far away? From the perspective of what superior power of understanding would I have been able to find the convergence point with this strange matter? Through the intensity of which field of values could I have explained, like a hint of finding new laws of evolution, the escape from the décor of my inner space?

But the wait for answers was met with nothing at its end.

Because the desire to learn the truth was the mobile of my thinking and of all facts that preceded it, with it I had to start the great search, from this point of view, trying to figure out if I depended on the values that exist independent from someone or something, on some force beyond myself. But, first of all, as any man devout to a scientific thinking, I had to remain devoted to the values of a communication with myself.

Leadership: Do you attach yourself to a continuous challenge to fight against a force beyond yourself, which you bear while you yourself go through a crisis of authority?

The struggle I was leading was as though against a reductionism of the complexity of ontological content and of a unilateral narrative lost in the contemplation of the same reality. Had I become the subject of stimulating self-discovery, or testimony of the faculty of being determined in something or someone else? It is because of this I dare to often give myself a piece of advice, perhaps surprising those who understand me, which will save me from a nasty refuge into a regressive situation, of which I am disgusted. Here it is:

Always be mindful of what enslaves you through dependency and commands you to live with the need of comparing yourself through the enigma it represents !

Thus, I had reached the invisible rope of the inability to understand what is accomplished through the reason that only exists to explain a final consequence, in terms of retreating within myself. Intensely, I felt the suffering the heroine from John Fowles' novel went through, isolated in a narrow room by a butterfly collector.

"He is inferior to me in all aspects. His only superiority consists in the power to keep me here. He has no other power. He cannot behave, talk, nor do anything else better than me – not by far – so he will continue to remain the Elder of the Sea until, somehow, I will manage to escape him."

Curiosity is a part of the inability to figure out who you are, which sets in when you try to attach yourself to a continuous challenge to fight against a force higher than yourself, which you bear while having yourself a crisis of authority. In fact, such a crisis occurs when someone or something is trying to take control of your life, and the Ego cannot endure the defeat of being in a state of futility, so when your thinking does not have access to the truths of a world that you think you know.

Leadership: Are you in the presence of an "Ego" which, thirsting for its own importance, has enriched its memory with a vast informational material gathered from a thinking that strives to reveal everything a priori?

Ask God who He is, and the question mark will turn back at you like a boomerang: Who are you? You will manage to get rid of Him only when you will manage to escape yourself.

This is the purpose of a man who experiences "I'll find myself in the endless oceans of the mind": to clarify that lack of clarity between what exists in reality and what doesn't exist, but puts his existence into order.

This lack of clarity confirms your interest in gaining a certain authority over your own being from the point of view of the support the supreme truth offers: the moment you compare yourself to something or someone above your understanding, on which you end up depending on, you begin to rise above your level of reference.

A thinking that strives to reveal everything a priori is a variant of accepting a sequence of thoughts, emotions, sensations and beliefs in order to produce a revelation that changes the outlook on the world around us.

Don't Try To Run Away From Yourself is the urge I hear most often uttered by the people with leadership qualities.

Leadership is a science that needs the attestations of a supreme truth that encompasses you, in order to develop through the act of getting close to what you do not know.

In order to turn leadership into an ensemble of knowledge that will include as a dominant piece a rationality based on the experience of addressing the dependence on a force higher than yourself, in the steady search for a truth that you feel, but cannot express, you must take advantage of being the prisoner of a turning point moment. When you feel the need for a comparison that will give birth to a stronger Ego, a created identity you no longer want to give up.

Dream And Watch

On January 04, 2013

Learn to appreciate yourself according to the way you think, from the perspective of the freedom to feel good about yourself and the outside environment.

In life you have to choose. Sometimes you have to choose as you would anything that disqualifies you from a certain social status, with the risk of moving away from the world. Sometimes you have to choose as if to say: "You are free to experience your dream", without someone giving you an ultimatum.

For example, you can wake up at 6 o'clock, so that you are at work by 8 am, work tirelessly 10 hours a day, then go home completely exhausted... just so you could wait for your pension in your old age, the pension itself not amounting to much. That way, you risk never finding out what it means to be a scientist.

Or, you can be like Isaac Newton, you wake up when you feel like it, you sit quietly in the garden, in the sun, you tan, you look around with admiration, you don't have any kind of stress. And all this time, you're meditating. You ask yourself: what does that mean? What of the other? You smoke another cigarette; you drink another coffee. And as you continue to meditate, you begin to become aware of your thoughts and their effects. Then you start to choose those thoughts that are really useful to you to issue an opinion, a theory, an original idea.

And at some point, you happen to see an apple fall from a tree. And discover the law of gravity. Which makes you the most famous scientist of all time. You remain forever in history, you also change the coordinates of science, you get to know God, you reserve a place for yourself for immortality... and you want for nothing.

Let's remember that the bible doesn't say anywhere that you have to work hard... but it says countless times that you have to have faith to move even mountains if you would so desire. And the universe does everything for you, almost without you moving a finger !

Dream, watch and stay in the sun as long as possible ! This is where it all starts.

Leadership: Does the modeling of the personality you honor require the transfiguration of your mind to the recognition of the "Greatness of Creation" from the perspective of the foundation of a lasting partnership with the totality of natural science?

You can follow the personality pattern you attribute to Newton, but it would be better to convince yourself first of all that you have that dose of genius that allows you to sit in the sun and meditate. Sitting in the sun and meditating does not mean that you are a lazy person, but that you relax while using your imagination and ability to visualize a problematic situation, or simply to visualize another perspective of the world or things. As for Newton, he discovered something without a hoe in his hand.

It is an example of how the mind works. You don't have to work with the sweat of your brow to make a great discovery. You just have to meditate quietly.

You should begin to consider yourself an educated man, first of all, that is, a man who embraces the field of science, adjusting to the freedom to manifest in your authenticity, and especially to the possibility of enhancing your own inner background. You will not face a lot of problems if you have been educated to think, to observe, to be correct, this is something that comes more from home, to correct your approaches to the world and to life depending on how you feel with yourself and the outside environment. It is very true that someone or something has long planted in you the seed of curiosity, the love of interest in science and the pleasure of learning and fighting alone professionally. Maybe classical education is nothing more than what you discover on your own. Most likely, this is learned along the way.

Here is what someone wrote to me on the web when I wrote about Newton: "We have enough Newtons who dream, look, sit in the sun and wait for social welfare. There is no need for more. It's just that these people, of which we have countless numbers, do not formulate a single theory. There is a difference between noticing something at a glance and looking at everything without noticing anything."

But I liked this answer much more: "Each with his own joy. Some discover gravity. Others America. But few discover that there is life outside their own ego and its attempts to stand out. Value is intrinsic and ubiquitous. It does not follow the rules we issue with the certainty of prophecies. Newton probably also had an aunt who left him an inheritance. On the other hand, I don't have an aunt, and until the apple falls on my head, a loaf of bread must fall on my stomach. Plus, utilities, electricity and water are not paid with faith."

The idea I am putting out here is not that we need to shy away from certain social responsibilities, nor to make "genius" the source of lasting and secure self-esteem. But the fact that every scientist takes time to meditate on important things with the help of disconnection through the influence of nature.

The science of nature is a form of knowledge accumulated patiently, without stress, through man's ability to understand the complexity of the world in which he lives, its mechanisms, its mysteries, according to the precepts of his own consciousness and the guidelines of his own life experience.

Dream And Look at everything around you if you want to make an important discovery in the field. This is where it all starts. When man's nature and inclinations absorb the energy of the environment, therefore when man realizes that freedom of thought is much more precious than physical labor, only then will he be able to go beyond the limits of self-imposed manifestations of the type: "road to nowhere."

Let us remember what famous farmer Sepp Holzer said at one point: "Try to live a life in symbiosis with the laws of nature, with its totality, with its laws. There is nothing in the world to fight. Learn to recognize the infinite possibilities of creation. In nature you find advice and help, you just have to learn to understand. In difficult situations, put yourself in your opponent's shoes. You are the plant, the animal, the man."

Dreams

On January 02, 2017

Make a correction and a widening of the decisive concepts of what is meaningful power, amplifying the dialogue you are having with yourself in the reality of a unique experience.

There was something far more than the chance of stability in an original and revealing foundation of meanings. There was a concept of form within the aesthetic of the dream, which I called "The Law". Colored by the impulse of desire after those memorized by an existence dancing barefoot through a multitude of lights and shadows, by the impulse of what is happening outside me, but through me, the law managed to win despite the opposition of those who are not speaking.

That unreal moment when I was pulling from the unseen thread of setting up a sand castle, to free the sack of debris from forgotten time, was finally ready to be born. An unreal springing from a moment of balance, when you do not know who you are and what you want from life, when you do not see the thread of Ariadne and you cannot find the way out of the labyrinth of your own memory, your own search in other times, is asked one last confirmation of its quintessentially problematic nature: why should there be a given of consciousness?

With all the spell of the temporal decadence that distorted the colors of my imagination, in which I did not know who I was, or where I was right, I elaborated with great difficulty a model of the universe. No initial singularity and no limits. Like a wizard who succeeds, from the spirit, to turn the inert matter into heat and light.

Leadership: Can you manifest yourself as a given of consciousness in a creation of the mind whose elaboration continues to test your experience of being present in a dream that is nothing but a meaningless hallucination?

Allow me to make myself clear, because you certainly don't understand me. I lived between the feeling of being part of a dream, and the urge to seek the explanation for what I would like to be part of. And I imagined living this dream in all its details, even if the dream itself seemed to be part of the demystifying impulse of consciousness to understand my being from a higher point, from a pedestal of the ages to remembrance and eternal oblivion. A single hymn intoned in this new universe, constantly repeating itself without indicating the term or the final result: "Everything is mine ! "

I should have realized, proving grandeur and obstinacy, that recognizing myself as a master and leader in my own oblivion, in my own anonymity, in the fate of the dream where the sky is only the color of the sunny morning, was just a way of distancing myself from the ordinary. But it was also the natural pursuit of the convention of gazes embedded in the unexpected cut of a spectacular creation that wanted to spread a story that you can no longer separate yourself from.

And so, there was a sort of urge to come up, partly vanity, partly outrageous curiosity, partly so much excitement that I was no longer aware of any landmarks in reality. I think a force of contradiction of reasoning based on assumptions, in need and analogy, has worked intensely on my head and brain.

Leadership: Is your subjective experience a confessional, abstract, existential way when higher aspirations awaken in you?

What Dr. Foot Gianina wrote about Romanian writer, Nichita Stănescu, deserves attention: "He tried to impart a sense ineffable and impersonal as a blue color, to become immortal, re-updateable in every reader. He wanted to capture the essence of his soul in poetry, but this compression of the self-hurt him in the end."

If you want to count yourself as a cause of an aftermath, if you want to become a phenomenon which by its nature is capable of producing a change in the world around you, then you open your eyes to the aspirations that exceed the perspectives of reality. Maybe you need to integrate yourself into a dream that puts your conscience to the test: why do you have to exist in a place where everything is superlative, and where everything is arranged just for you? In this case, conscience could also provide you with the answer: because the man who lives a dream lives exclusively for himself, without also living for a noble cause embraced by other people.

The one who aspires to become immortal, re-updateable in every reader, must know first of all where the effects of its incursions into a reality painted by existence in contrasting colors is headed. The power of the mind, the power of thought, struggles, doubts, aspirations, searches, hope, desperate efforts, convulsions of awakening and rediscovering yourself, all shades of colors that can attract attention repeatedly as renewing or inveterate visions.

Another characteristic of the man who lives a subjective experience, such as that of the dream, is to confess, so that his essence (related to the representation of their feelings and perceptions, skills and expectations) may shine and throw sparks in daylight. He is obliged to develop, with great difficulty, a model of the universe without the initial singularity and limits, like a wizard who succeeds, starting from the spirit, in transforming inert matter into heat and light.

The real test is to imagine how the world looks to someone who wants to catch the essence of his soul in his own work without being aware of the depths in which he sinks. One hymn is played in this world, always repeating itself, without indicating the date or the end result: "Everything is mine."

The need to play out a subjective experience, meaning a correction and widening of crucial concepts of what inspiring power and guiding light mean, has as a founding resource the excessive desire for domination: "Everything is mine ! "

Dreams are the symbol of an experience of revealing the reality of the supreme self. The man who often sees himself as a journey through time and space, the man who amplifies his dialogue which he carries with himself, considering itself to be the reflection of a part of himself fabricated beyond what occurs in real life, will always generate the dilation of reality, always in a new wording.

And the dilation of reality is the middle ground of aspirations for self-improvement.

Drive Yourself Towards Success

On February 24, 2009

Save your climate of excellence, revealing those qualities that transmit energy and actions with value for other people.

In the movie "The Mummy (1999)", the main characters, the two brothers Evelyn and Jonathan wanted to get to the town of the dead Hamunaptra, but unfortunately the map they had, and which they tried so hard to get was almost fully damaged. Their only hope is to find somebody who knows the way, and who can guide them in that direction.

In the Cairo jail, they meet Rick, an ex-commander of troops, who was locked and who was a step away from being hanged. Rick knew that his only ticket of salvation was those two explorers, so he proposed them a deal: "If you want to get to the town of the dead, get me out of here."

Leadership: Does the course of your development gain new meanings by redefining the condition of suffering you find yourself in, as your version of living begins to function as a new reality?

When do you pick an unripe fruit? When it ripens quickly and fully complies with the conditions for obtaining the perfect quality of a food product that sells well. The life of the man caught in the net of a negative choice develops under the conditions in which he is constantly surrounded by new forms of manifestation of the need for freedom in difficult test contexts.

Your version of living begins to function as a new reality in the fact that the spirit of observation and thought centered on the control of events make up the material of combining a new status of a "living legend" with a role of autonomy in initiating a "cause of the soul".

Man can "rebirth" with more fervor if he obeys this intensive need to provide an escape from the dimension of his living space. He can get away from it the activity forms that do not generate any "trampoline effects" in the current reality, ensuring that clarity he needs for knowing what steps to follow as to obtain new achievements.

The problem is that, currently, the leaders' requirements regarding personal change begin to be less and less high, despite access to many mobilizing inner states. Human suffering or joy are states determined by the conditions of inspiration with which he guides his steps towards the creation of a new destiny, often perceived in different angles and at different degrees of intersection with the syndrome of aspiring to communicate a relentless vision to others.

The course of your evolution can gain the meaning of an "absolute premiere" when your limited thinking, focused only on God's intervention, begins to be replaced with that manifestation of will that generates the accumulation of a feeling of victory, giving you the possibility to foresee the course of events.

A cause for the soul can be understood as an escape from the tumult of an unsafe life in favor of a personalized request for freedom called "Discover the courage to be authentic" that you consider worthwhile to try.

You raise your hand when you want to change direction? Rick respected his word and led the brothers to the town of the dead. This is the type of approach that a leader should take. If you want to lead people, first of all, offer your guide services. Maybe as Rick, you will have no choice. It might be your only ticket to victory.

You will have only to win if you offer volunteer for tasks and extra activities. No matter, how many extra efforts and sacrifices would be necessary, you have to honor the new task; you get it and bring it to a good end. Your career depends on the manner you get involved and the manner you treat the new task which has been given to you.

Just as a whole game of football requires, first, organization, so your leadership must presume, first of all, a deep change of your own person, of your own world - to transform yourself from a passive man into an active one, from an old man, into a newly one, to overcome that line that blocks and separates you from that person you want to be.

Always look for new ways of offering your services, do not hesitate to give your help to those who need it. Be convinced that there are few who are offering quality professional services, who accomplish their duties fast and in an excellent manner. Raise your hand; make yourself known in the crowd. Remember what I was saying in another article, if you want to advance on a higher position, you have to move faster than the others. And one of the ways you can do this is to be the first who offers his services and his help for the benefit of others.

Save your climate of excellence, revealing those qualities that transmit energy and actions with value for other people.

Leadership is initiated by establishing a context of revelation and trust that pushes man towards the exclusive valorization of a certain type of decision, called: IRREVOCALBE, from which everyone has something to gain !

Duality Is Rarely Seen With The "Unaided Eye"

On July 31, 2023

What you see with the naked eye in a background plane reveals the sensitive connection between what you contemplate in nature and your self reflected in your own creation.

The island of Crete winks at me, again, with a certain pride, in combination with a certain brush, with a certain canvas, all the views and perspectives here correlating with a certain subtlety characteristic of painters who know how to discover beauty in details. This island also has its own life, quiet, full of sun, full of greenery, with the appearance of a small heaven on earth that promises a detachment from the register of usual reception, favorable to seeing depth. Here I feel that I live for the quality of my inner life, facing the painter's enigmatic condition of embodying a spiritual presence, giving shape to an order with meaning and finality of the world. Perhaps it is precisely this spirit of freedom that the island can offer that measures my freedom of expression.

Obvious. I have always admired the way artists express their consciousness through creation, and this connection between them and their creations, which propagates inside my being and dictates everything to me, amazes me and constantly follows me on this island that tries to reveal the mystery Ymphia Usein Anneemins Aattya Uschellat , the truth beyond the external appearance of things.

I can indeed keep my inner balance, my well-being, and find a high meaning in the place where I am, derived from a beautiful event, only if I remain steadfast, connected to this holy land, to the extent that I face the enigmatic side of the painter who permanently maintains contact with nature, keeping alive the memory of the initial impact of creation on his consciousness. No one can deny that. The synchronization of the soul with the place, establishing a balance between "I left and I returned", shows the amazing condition of a painter who manifests his consciousness through an impulse of admiration, of positive polarity, taking the freedom to make any point wonderful of divine vision that brings harmony, but also the clash between creation and soul.

Leadership: Can you mirror yourself in a relatively small space, connecting two completely autonomous and opposite realities?

I understand too well why always the eyes with which I look at everything around, without looking back, without leaving anything undiscovered, are welcome to offer me mental delight, a heavenly serenity, an emotional balance, whenever the sea with its foaming waves create new landscapes. And if there is a close connection between my gaze and the creation of nature, under the impulse to return to the nostalgia of other times, in relation to the experience of concentrating an omnipresent energy in the direction of a similarity between images and moods, then the uncontrollable impulse of creation that- I feel it in me increasing in amplitude.

The island has always been here, but I have never visited it until today. As such, what delights me most about this dreamlike, enchanted, colorful place is that it never returns to memory unless I wish to forget it and make it disappear into a arduous life course, in an exhausting and desperate game to an unpredictable outcome. In this sense, painting becomes more than just a relaxing activity for me, but rather an integral part of my being in a kind of mental image that I try to depict in vivid colors to connect two completely autonomous realities. and opposites: one is everyday life, the other is what lies beyond it.

I am very pleased to see everything that reflects the harmony of nature, the vibrant colors and the varied shapes that the island hosts in a relatively small space. It is true that vision can be guided by an artistic intention and at the same time maintain itself in a rigorous-speculative plane such as the "aesthetic", but first I need to know to what extent I can treat the general as a particular fact. So sight has the double quality of being the support and reason for universality, but it also has the character of being personal, open and communicative at the same time, being so obvious that it would be difficult to deny without any external recognition.

Leadership: Can your creation inspire a strong emotional response in the viewer, revealing the deep connections of experiences lived within the limits of a deterministic subjectivity?

Unfortunately, the island can give a sense of isolation, a disappointing impression of the concept of transition, a misleading mixture of conscious experiences within the limits of a deterministic subjectivity that tends to distort reality in order to inspire a strong emotional response in the viewer. Something similar to the art of the expressionists which often included disturbing visions, containing symbols influenced by symbolist research. And for you to better understand what I mean, I will go back to the beginning of a famous story written by Hans Christian Andersen:

"We must go back to the beginning of this story, because when we reach the end of it, we will know more than we know now. Namely, about a little devil who one day set to work cheerfully and made a mirror that it had the power to make all that was good and beautiful reflected in it small and ugly, while all that was small and ugly became large and uglier than ever. The most beautiful sights looked like boiled spinach, and the people looked hideous and without a body, seeming to stand in their heads. Their appearance was crooked, so that no one could recognize them, and if they had a single freckle on their faces, it seemed to spread over their entire noses and mouths. It was very amusing to the imp. If an innocent thought passed through someone's head, it was twisted by the mirror; and the little devil laughed then at his cunning invention."

Well, the situation that the painter creates is a kind of reflection on the reality with which he is constantly in contact. He can use art as a way to reflect on his own experiences in one part of the world, while the imp's mirror reflects and distorts reality in any other part of the world.

However, in both situations, unique in their symbolic effect, there is a component of transformation that contributes to the support of art. If the mirror transforms beauty into ugliness, then the painter's isolated island can change his perspective on the work of art, which is no longer an enduring reality, but rather an imperfect lie. And in this case the painter is no longer a creator of worlds, but a destiny overwhelmed by the consciousness of the great error of not recognizing himself in his own painting, of no longer identifying with his work.

Leadership receives the so-called measure of "consciousness" when the creation with which you identify is understood as a posture of freedom, when it does not express the reality of living in a closed horizon.

The Duality Is Rarely Seen With The "Unaided Eye" when I think of the fact that an island is not complete without a lighthouse. Here, too, I find such a beacon in the form of a visionary artist who projects his creation into the outside world, illuminating and guiding the viewer towards a powerful emotional experience.

I'm still the prisoner of this island, but I'm a free prisoner, I can dream, I can get lost, I can stay with beautiful memories, because I let the images and ideas dance around me like the waves of the endless ocean.

Each Rose Was Once A Bud

On January 11, 2021

Great knowledge abundantly claims the merit of the artist to perpetuate, in a sui generis way, what is ephemeral.

It all started at the age of ten, but it started without me realizing it, without realizing the inherent features of the conjunctural attraction to a bizarre phenomenon that still shakes my soul. And it started with an Oscar film, full of the thrills of the old mysteries of the faith, the beginning of which still haunts me, related to the sobriety necessary for a very old monastery, along a piece of story that I would later see has too much in common with my life. The film is called "In the Name of the Rose", a screen adaptation of Umberto Eco's novel.

And that monastery, grandiose in the importance of protected values, also had a beginning, more difficult to understand to be fair, because every beginning needs another beginning to find its correspondent in a kind of treasure of the revelations of an authentically Christian life, led directly by God. And the beginning of the knowledge of the church, as well as the end of the story, had in the center of a whole range of relationships with God a huge library (like a labyrinth), housing thousands of volumes whose knowledge still haunts my soul with the mysteries of an art that, like any other art, relies on a long experience.

And there were so many books in that library, many more than anywhere, and each had a beginning and an end, as if greeting time with a welcome message: "Enlighten your souls with the Spirit of the Highest Knowledge." And among so many books, each a little dustier than the other, I saw a more worn and dirtier one, and it was missing many pages, especially the beginning, but the end was still there. And it was as if, at that end full of mysteries, full of whispers and sighs, I saw the beginning of a message integrated into the symbolic image of a rose.

That one message, from a missing sheet, still making me revisit my past, I try to reconstruct now with nostalgia: "Every end has a beginning, just as every rose was once a bud"... It will bloom soon.

Leadership: Can you detach yourself from everything that supports the weight of your own ego, through an experience of rethinking a creation left behind much too long ago?

From the great and towering mysteries of the monastery, which a rather mature man described in such detail, there is nothing left. Not even the beginning, not even the end, as if they were part of some remnants of parchment, fallen from the scriptorium, and turned to ashes by an incomprehensible reality. Thus, I lived a part of my life, with a beginning that does not know its end, like a book that does not know its author and which lacks too many pages to ever be read.

The weight of my ego lies in the fact that I have tried to overlook what I will never be able to forget, as if I were passing by a book on an ancient construction, and I would not know the writer for the simple fact that I am inspired by his book. And if such a book is a creation of the beginning of maturity, does it mean that the usual succession of its pages has left my dreams behind, making me a mere traveler in a world in disguise?

In a way, I feel like I lived like a monastery full of books, which does not reveal its silhouette because of the very high walls that surround it. My reality and dreams were more important than the deep content of old mysteries that I could not decipher, or rather, they meant nothing to me. And yet, the beginning of a new view of spirituality, un refinado pretext para el studio de Dios, was intended to make its way into the journey of my life.

That is how it was meant to be. I sought beauty, fun, wealth, where there was nothing, just as Adso of Melk sought faith in an endless journey, but found in the sufferings of life spiritual peace. Above me hovered the image of the rose, a confession full of faith, perhaps because in my deep essentiality I wanted to obtain the agreement with something holy, above all understanding, through a Salonthenea, a divine breath that calls from darkness to light, from sin to repentance.

The place of the monastery was an oasis of peace, a reaction to compensate for those feelings of inadequacy, insufficiency, shame, which pierce the horizon of any young dreamer. Only later did I understand that. And if I went back to its beginnings, I would find myself in the position of a wandering son who began to straighten his life. Only in silence can you find your way in a labyrinth full of books, whose exit passes through the book, through countless books, through endless readings, through writings full of lessons, full of lyricism and sensitivity.

Leadership: Does everything that exists outside you serve moment by moment your path of self-discovery, as a reference of a subject to the same subject explored through an experience of the continuous present?

I do not know the end, but it most certainly expresses the most chosen knowledge illustrated in the form of a rose. I don't know if life necessarily has an end, or a new beginning. Even the rose has a beginning of significance, manifested in the form of fixing the feeling of beauty and sublime in the picture of life, rivaling the succession of a multiplicity of abstract and cold concepts. Or planting a rose is the beginning of a new spiritual consciousness, its cutting representing the end of a path that always took me to the same place.

And if I refer to a much broader meaning, responsible for the evaluation of life, then my attention is directed to the end of Umberto Eco's novel, where there is a dynamic adjustment of my creative self to the inherent qualities of the rose: care, patience and tolerance to conscious wisdom.

"The more I read these notes, the more I am convinced that the series of facts I am talking about is the result of chance and that it does not contain any message. But these unfinished pages have accompanied me all the life I have left to live since then, I have often researched them like an oracle, and it even seems to me that what I wrote then on these sheets, which you read, the unknown reader, are nothing but a mixture, un carme a figura, that is, a story with pictures, an endless acrostic that does not say nor repeat anything other than what those fragments reconstructed from worn and torn pages whispered to me. I don't know if I've talked about them so far, or if they've talked through my mouth."

It is difficult for me to explain what the sight of a rose expresses in me when I read these words. I have the feeling that I live with him, that I vibrate in unison with a unitary presence from the point of view of an infinite consciousness, and I delight in something that descends from a holy place. Unlike Adso of Melk, I did not find my chosen path around any master, but I found myself in the guise of a metaphor, a symbol of a rose, a symbol of the eternal present that will not let you forget anything of what you've experienced.

Leadership, from the hypostasis of a psychology of duplication, is the creation to which you confess through an experience of rethinking the self in terms of the image of your life perceived in the form of a sacredness to which you have the obligation to return.

Surely one day I will remember myself, the monastery, the library with thousands of volumes, I will remember Adso of Melk, the beginning and the end. After the flower dries, a new bud will begin to open. Then I will be free. I will understand everything. I will follow another life, with a different beginning, with different pages, written in other words in a simpler language. I will recognize myself when I return.

Every Rose Was Once A Bud, and the bud became, by a miracle we forget to observe, a flower. This process is centered around unity, revolving around the primary core of a universal fraternity.

Earthquake In The Top Of Performances

On October 19, 2010

Discover the resources that make your team work synergistically, increasing the quality level of your performances.

"EARHQUAQE at United after the DISASTER with the City ! Scottish football coach, Sir Alex Ferguson, dismisses two SUPER FOOTBALL PLAYERS from the team ! "

Thus sounds a headline on the front page of the sports newspapers from the end of October. The English press wrote that the manager of Manchester United decided to dismiss Ferdinand and Evra in the following matches, two of the most important players from the recent history of the club from the Old Traffrod.

Sir Alex Ferguson was dissatisfied with the evolution of the two ones, and intended to replace them since the next stage, their place following to be taken by the Brazilian Fabio, which will enter the left, and by Smalling that will pass in the center. [1]

Leadership: Does your image allow the manifestation of an action conceived in accordance with the obsession of a boundless success, thereby wishing the manifestation of a special attention towards what makes you feel a state of inner harmony?

Into the agreement between the players, coach and the team manager is beating the team's heart. The heart of the team is like a battery that is charged and remains at full capacity as long as there is a solar energy source.

Leadership enters on the scene when people are working together, when they complement each other, when they help each other with advices, with encouragement, with ideas, when they trust each other and behave naturally - without fear, without emotion or complexes, without malice. It is therefore important to deal with the way we can generate confidence among our colleagues and gaining their credibility.

The center of the vital unity of a team consists from the very fine (and balanced) mixture of confidence, respect, support and professionalism. Once this mixture it is strengthened completely, the team may propose better performances, and could achieve more easily its objectives.

Leadership: Can you maintain your leadership position by creating a two-way interaction that first spreads to the environment of gratitude in your immediate vicinity, then to an environment of a sense of superiority?

Into a company, as well as in a football team, everyone has their well-established purpose. Every person must carry out their duties accrued to them on time, with great diligence, responsibility and rigor. And that does not mean at all to run unnecessary all day from one office to another, trying to attract sympathies and to make you be liked by everyone.

If the tasks that you have received are not always finalized in due time, or are not of quality, you will not ever succeed in gaining the trust of colleagues and superiors. On the contrary, you will be seen as an amateur, or worse, as an incompetent, and not as a professional as expected.

Exactly like in football, in vain you run a lot and quickly from one side to another of the field, vainly asking passes and crosses. If you always run next the ball, and you do not bring in any way your contribution, then you are not useful for the team that you belong. Ultimately, the team will seek a replacement, and you will be excluded from it, without regret, without shame and without many explanations.

This is the reality, we cannot deny this. Nobody wants to have a weak "player" in their team, because he may endanger the fate of any game. Due to a mistake, the whole team had to suffer. It is true, and there is no doubt about this, any united team is responsible for each measure, and it is normal that if it loses, not to blame only one player, but the whole team.

Leadership: How do you prove that your decisions are the most correct, if you do not give yourself the right to make mistakes, especially in a context such as: "I Am What I Am in one of the worst moments of the show"?

However, when, again and again, the team has to suffer because of the same player, things change radically. All the nerves are flowing on him –which the most often makes mistakes, which seems not to be the right man at the right place. The principles of collegiality, of devotion, of honor, of mutual respect, and confidence– that guide the whole team, it is "suspended" for the person to which all are pointing fingers.

Any football team, like any company, wants to occupy a leading position in the rankings. Colleagues and superiors are often tolerant with you - help you, give you moral and financial support and the advancement opportunity, treat you with respect and confidence, encourages you - in the hope that you will make a contribution to the results (positive) of the team/company.

Even so, if you do not prove them that you are the right person for the job you were employed, if you do not prove that you are serious and that you represent a value worth keeping, that you are really a great person, then every time you can expect to receive bad news, to be told, kindly, that from now on you are free to look for another team, one more suitable to you.

Discover the resources that make your team work synergistically, increasing the quality level of your performances.

Leadership is the image you form of yourself, in a "push past the limits that you think you have" context, in the event of an impact with that reputational stimulation you need to overcome any negative emotions.

Earthquake In The Top Of Performances highlights the weakness of the entire team, when it breaks the relationship between the players, coach and the manager. It is the moment when the whole team performance diminishes unexpectedly, endangering its future.

The "earthquake in the top of performances" appears by following an internal or external evaluation of the staff. When this earthquake happens? When failures arise, when the results of the team are unsatisfactory, and it is made a reevaluation of the staff, by establishing which its weaknesses are. It is understood that a manager/leader must make a fair assessment and in comparison with some standard criteria, but at the same time, evaluation is an encouragement tool in order to increase the motivation.

When it is found that the effect it is adverse, and it is not accompanied by increased performance, it is useful to make a revaluation of the company with the referential, and not on slight progresses of each employee. When they are not well-understood the "exchanges of qualifications" from very good to poorly, or just satisfactory, the event is perceived as an earthquake appeared out of nowhere, without thinking that someone generated this earthquake: carelessness, indifference, arrogance, complacency, etc.

Edward Prendick's Monologue

On February 15, 2017

Assume your dependency of being alienated from what you encounter in outside situations, so that you can more easily identify the real meaning of "True" or "False" values that sustain a better representation of the autonomous man.

I wish to be alone. Therefore, I live close to open fields. And when this shadow lays over my soul, I can take refuge there. The empty field is wonderful then, under the wind-swept sky.

While I was living in London, my horror was almost unbearable. I could not escape people: their voices penetrated through the windows. Locked doors were only a weak defense.

In order to fight with my imagination, I would take to the streets and there, behind me, whined women that circled me, hungry men secretly glanced enviously at me, pale and exhausted workers coughing near me, with tired eyes and hasty pace. Elderly brought from the back and sad, muttering, completely indifferent to the ragged group of children that laughed at them.

Then I would retreat in some church, but even there, so great was my trouble, it seemed to me that the preacher chattered "great thoughts" as one of Dr. Moreau's creatures would do, Monkey Man. Particularly nasty I would find the lost and expressionless faces of people on trains and omnibuses. They didn't seem to be my fellow people more than corpses, so I would not dare travel, until I made sure I was alone.

And it seemed that I myself was not a rational creature, but merely an animal tormented by a strange mental disorder, which made it wander alone, like a stag that loses its blood. *

Leadership: Do you live your present at the peak value of a succession of monologues, through a curious psychology of liberation from the dependency you find yourself in?

To be yourself in a constructed existence, determined and maintained by the drug called "virtual reality" – only actually occurring as a possibility to save yourself from a situation in which you feel uncomfortable and unhappy, is a temporary beneficial source to strengthen its self-control. Here, I refer to the virtue of being at peace with yourself, the virtue of being supreme, and not in terms of the audacity to do special things, but in the "sanctity" of the audacity to follow your vocation in conditions of lack of affection and lack of stimulation.

Before discovering yourself in leadership, never accompanied by hate or selfish interests, but by the hope for a better world, first you must become a conqueror – to master your own inferior nature, your own instinctiveness, to master your drive to despise and the drive to instill your own views unto others. You are your only ally in the struggle with the effort to highlight the links between science and discovery, the effort to delimit yourself from anything that could harm your expectations at the research level, so you need to start valuing thought control that helps you discover the mysteries of infinite creative possibilities.

The truth of your life, carried out in a comprehensive assessment report of reality, can be the truth of people that live in the vital fervor of a becoming subsumed to the practice of an increasingly advanced critical thinking, a breaking of rhythm and balance.

In this case, the dependency of being alienated from what you meet in outside situations, in all those adverse to a favorable development, will never be directed towards a long-term confrontation with others. Thus, the reception of values and concepts that compromisingly oscillate around the "New Man" is avoided, protecting yourself from the danger of being dominated by an inferior individual class.

Leadership is about the sharpness of the mind, the choice of thinking that you have chosen to fully represent yourself to the world as an experience of a reality that is undeniably very difficult to discover, so of a reality that often becomes a challenge or even a dilemma: How "far" can man reach with only his thought and thinking?

The tendency to play a passive role in the plan of a social order precedes the potential to play a main role, that of a catalyst for change. In fact, an important role in the overall plan of world change is played by man's tendency to restructure his thinking into a particular way of thinking, which has as its first consideration the power to submit to a deeper, broader reality, which it can only be deciphered by the fate and work of a lone hero.

The least accessible people are not so exposed to the avalanche of trends that change the world. Who temporary assumed their passivity in the rational conducting of facts and events, in the absence of the joy of being in the middle of the world, will more easily identify the real meaning of "True" or "False" values that support a better representation of the autonomous man and of a reality shaped by reason.

Such a man lives his present in the peak value of a succession of monologues, which develops a psychology of liberation from that compromising dependency: the tendency to follow the path chosen by others. He doesn't find his freedom in the outside aspects of the visible world, but rather in the richness and depth of thought, carrying within the continuous desire to manifest his essence into an unlimited source of "vital energy" for the formation of character.

Character is the experience you gain following the challenge of reality to let yourself be known by your possibilities to develop in a lonely environment, thus having the opportunity to learn more about yourself, such as its strengths, weaknesses, motivations and strong inclinations.

Edward Prendick's Monologue represents the putting into balance of advantages and disadvantages efferent to approaching a reality focused on values established by the contrast between essence and appearance. To such a man, truth comes from what he feels inside, and the false comes from what ties him to the outside.

It is a start to balancing the position expressed along the construction of a self-image to a certain point of reference, such as the belonging to a set of values that distinguishes you from others, customizes you through your absence in the midst of a flock that reacts based on impulses felt with no thinking involved.

The monologue is the only way to clarify your position and feelings regarding the relationships with those around, generating the surpassing of the attitude towards what cannot be constrained or eliminated, and to start dealing morally and emotionally with a rupture from the reality in which you are not the cause for its deformation.

Eisenstein's Availability Example

On July 18, 2014

Prove your worth in favor of creating a new direction of transforming the professional role, imposing upon yourself a differentiated identity that can offer others realistic premises of valuing evolutionary trends.

Young Eisenstein's net judgement of dedicating himself to theater bloomed on the Civil War front. Clearly, his wish coincided with a stringent necessity of theater. Eliseev, named director of the two theater groups that were at the disposal of the political section of the 15th regiment, which was about to mount a show, toughly said: "I do not know him and I do not want to know the painter Eisenstein. But I know the site manager Eisenstein that will be necessary to me for constructing fortifications on the front line. I cannot leave him, I personally need him."

Eisenstein's answer was just as harsh: "I don't know how Eisenstein is a site manager, but I believe that people like him are aplenty and if you will have need, you will have more at your disposal. Instead, I very well know the painter Eisenstein and his utility in theater is familiar to you as well. Without him, the work of an entire collective stops. And you, sir, have recently adapted to acting, as you call it. And I have to honestly tell you that you have very well presented the character you've played. I am making an appeal to your artistic sense."

Nobody know that, in that day, thanks to a serendipitous occurrence, the artistic career of the one who would become, from site manager, then from decorative painter, the great director Eisenstein, who will revolutionize cinema at the beginning of the twentieth century with new theories of montage, will begin. *

Leadership: How do you interpret your role as a leader in an evolution that depends on the way others estimate your utility around an image mirrored in the idea of knowing a happening that submits to another happening?

We could say a few words about the stages of constructing science, oriented by the rules of a severe knowledge of that never knew disappointment, maybe only the compromise for a greater cause, taking into account the degree of implementing a new identity in the process of transformations inherent to social existence. I would predict, for instance, that no manner of thinking will for long dominate the galleries of knowledge, same as no battery lasts forever. Yet any style will widely open the gates to a new world to conquer, full of utility and new customization options.

An image mirrored in the idea of knowing a happening that subverts another happening triggers when the way you look at the world repeats itself through a common structure, through a coincidence of reasoning, emotion and interest, through the way the world looks at you.

In order to be valued, leadership has to find a meaning in the world of perceptions of exploring "the happenings that are recognized in the mirror". This world can be interpreted by the protagonists of the fight for winning supremacy in the premium segment of scientific productions as an escape from the limits imposed by an unanimously accepted standard of thinking.

For this to happen, leadership should be seen as a form of self-evaluation of one's own identity, of its own goals, values and principles, in similarity to those points of view developed on the idea of a "double" of the situation-building perspective that singularizes a phenomenon, an event, a destiny, a vocation.

Leadership: Does the course you follow manifest as a phenomenon with wide implications in the existence of an alternative to the perspectives of the surrounding world, producing the direct and positive effects on the possibility of fitting into a certain pattern of reversal of the expectations you impose?

Someone said that identity is a permanent conquista. As a leader, it is your duty to invite everyone to profit from the opportunity to form their own identity, a unity of existence of the connections between different approaches, as a response to the increasingly difficult and complicated attempts of valuing science and innovation, through which indirectly, leadership is exercised.

How well do you interpret your role in a development that depends on the way in which others estimate your utility in managing work resources? The answer to this question will show how you relate to what you want to achieve by means of your science, but also how much important and value others give to your utility in the use of creating a new direction of collaboration and identification of new directions of evolution in the domain of the future.

Choosing the courses of actions and the values adjacent to them, placing them within a frame of reference that highlights the superior character of man, leads to a personalization of human relationships, in terms of professionalism and flexibility.

To be fit into a pattern of reversing the expectations you impose is to always change your position and views to a reality with which you disagree, by revealing a competitive personal side.

This aspect should create unique experiences of combining the presence of mind with taking a role of representation in the space of a work of great interest.

Eisenstein's Availability Example highlights that correct self-assessment in achieving individual development and reaching outstanding performances, but also of achieving excellency in a field that is sometimes new and unexplored. This also implies a perfect knowledge of your own capability in creating an innovative transformation, but also in winning the trust of others.

Eliminate The Expensive Ballast

On June 30, 2009

Learn to perceive the highest quality of a man, without getting lost in his own world.

In my freshman year, I had an excellent schoolfellow, but not in a good way. He was rather a cheater, meaning a person who knows how to fool people and use them to obtain various advantages.

On weekends, I used to go out with my group mates in a club in town. I could not help noticing a pretty obvious thing regarding my colleague. Whenever we met, he used to take out his wallet and show us how much money he was carrying: 1.000 Euros. He always had a lot of money with him.

But do you know what is really funny? He had never, absolutely never paid for his drink and that is because there were always some colleagues offering to buy him a drink. These ones had lost in his world, without perceiving his true nature.

And so, our colleague, who was carrying so much money on him and, on top of it, had a convertible car, enjoyed himself at the expense of others.

Leadership: Do you extend the circumstances of a form of response to an appearance that gives you the quality of a defeat, or restrict the cause of an event that tends to become the acceptance of a bid?

I think the moral is the following: "resourceful" people know how to take advantage from the naive and easily manipulated. Are you proud and self-conscious enough to become easily manipulated? Do you lose yourself in the world of speculators?

This is what makes the difference between people: some give and receive nothing in return, while others with real manipulative qualities take and never get tired.

In leadership, the price is put on the existence of reality that beats the appearance. You cannot reach your potential as long as you use your skills in a wrong, degrading way. Just as some brochures and alluring slogans will never be able to hide an incompetent leadership, so your negative qualities will surface even if they are concealed by your power of influence.

Are you proud with your qualities? Can they confirm that you are a reliable person? Until when?

To agree with the qualities that people display is to support the cause of an event that tends to become the acceptance of an offer you cannot refuse. Your form of reply should be clothed with unpredictability, exigency, and prudence, so that the role you play in a given circumstance is not that of a man defeated by appearances.

Leadership: Do you support the force of pushing things to the point where you consider the possibility of not assuming an attention that expresses charm and goodwill?

In many companies, there are such individuals, like my former colleague who, with indescribable ease, get everything all found – big salaries, benefits etc. – although, in reality, they do absolutely nothing, they don't bring any contribution to the development of the company, to the achievement of some objectives of special interest and do not involve themselves virtually at all in the projects undertaken. But they spend more than 90% of the time in front of the computer, doing nothing productive or walking around from place to place in vain. They basically get paid for the work performed by other employees.

Such people are not hard to find, everybody notices and knows them, but nobody does anything, no one takes action, and they always enjoy an extended "holiday". And it is pretty clear who has the most to lose, the company. Do you stay away from people with which you have only to lose?

A man with a mature thinking pushes things up to the point of recognizing a picture that does not present a perfect projection of the model that boasts achievements beyond expectations. He considers the possibility of not assuming an attention that expresses charm and goodwill in terms of denying a reality that he considers too generous for himself.

When a man displays too many positive qualities, he should be aware that something is not right with him.

Leadership: Do you prove the existence of a reason for rejecting the recognition of a value that some people take advantage of, without turning yourself into a "dummy" magnet?

During cold season, especially winter, when human body is weaker, possibly with a vitamin deficiency, viruses find an open door in the body's immune system.

A person who has nothing to offer to the company is a waste of money. He is like a virus that finds an open door in the immune system of the company's leader. Do you leave a door open for viruses?

Would you allow for such "viruses and parasites" to exist in your company? What remedies should you use to prevent them?

In order to grow, a company needs serious people, able to produce profits, not losses. If an employee does not prove total seriousness, especially after having invested so much money and time in his training and improvement, he must be removed immediately from the company because he represents an expensive ballast.

The only value that some people can take advantage of in your confrontation with the time you give them is the respect you do not deserve because of the goodwill you always show to them.

Conclusion: A company cannot reach a high level of development unless it comprises valuable people, but it can only lose if it has irresponsible and speculative employees. Therefore, as a manager, you should hire very good people, who have potential and are able to do a great job, and get rid as quickly as possible of those unnecessary in the company.

Learn to perceive the highest qualities of a man (especially his negative qualities), without getting lost in his own world – otherwise, you will only lose.

Eliot's Sacrifice

On April 22, 2009

Exercise your influence wisely, inducing other people that state through which they reveal the true essence of their character.

Have you seen the movie "Brotherhood of the Rose (1989)"? Romulus, the undercover CIA agent, manages to infiltrate into the Abelard shelter. He put his life in danger because he had a single doubt: Why did Chris, his brother, have to die? The guilty one was, undoubtedly, Eliot, their step-father, head of CIA. He had to get the answer from him directly at any price.

- Tell me something, Eliot. How could you sacrifice someone you love for a noble cause? What cause could be so great, as to justify that you took another 18 orphan boys and turned them into killing machines? Who the hell do you think you are, Eliot? God? With your army of criminal robots? I did everything to earn your love and respect, but you always betrayed me !

Leadership: Can the results of image processing that other people present to you identify a cause that could lead to a change in a decision that you describe as incorrect and even abusive?

What do you prefer: a spotlight or a lantern? Imagine that you are in a dark cave, and there are two light sources: a small spotlight, with an intense, but narrow power to illuminate, and a tornado lantern, which scatters a blurry, diffused light. Which one would you use to see where you are?

The lantern gives you a much clearer picture of where you are, compared to the spotlight, which would reveal only small details that you could barely fit them. Basically, the lantern renders the image of other personalities who knowingly resist the reality of your spiritual, moral, visionary essence, and often these personalities can illuminate a nuance of concern that betrays the hidden intention to disarm the opponent (which must be calmed or reduced in silence).

In order to change people, you must start to "hunt" their essence, that quality that makes them more significant. For this, you must form a clearer picture of their being, you must find out where they are in relation with you and the rest of the world, and concentrate on them that diffused, warm and beneficial light of your understanding and beliefs, whose power would be able to change their internal structure.

The sad, but firm tone, with which Romulus had addressed those questions to his father and which showed that genuine love and compassion for his brother, determined Eliot to be as honest as possible. For the first time, he dared to tell the truth and reveal all the dirty games and criminal acts that he alone built and executed without any problem or remorse, in order to meet all his aspirations. Thus, Romulus' words had crossed all the paths of wisdom, arriving directly at Eliot, deeply striking into his mind like the ray of a lantern.

Leadership: Do you need to take a step back and observe what is there for you, to be ready to face what you feel makes sense to resist the course of events that follow?

Do you know how to relate to other people so as to win their heart, causing them to be honest with you? Do you have the power to change the temperament and attitude "fastened with nails" of difficult people? The extent to which you manage to obtain the truth from people depends solely on your ability to report to them, tackling them in a different way, making appeal to feelings.

You must be smart, creative and flexible, according to the circumstances in which you find yourself. And if they change, you must also respond in different ways – to use your spirit of initiative, to assume risks and make appropriate questions. But, above all, you must reach their conscience.

Face to face with the truth he told his father, Romulus knew he would have to face what he felt made sense to oppose the course of events: he had to assume the possibility of being reduced to victim status. This is what happens when you are face to face with a formidable opponent: you have to take a step back, to be sure that you do not reach the fatal arm of truth, more precisely the consequence of accepting the truth. As an idea, putting the cards on the table does not mean that you necessarily increase your chances of winning the game, but that you indulge in a momentary experience like a butterfly that gets too close to a lantern.

Truth is an adjustment of your Ego to the inherent qualities of a situation that may harm your right, credibility, or even fulfillment.

Just as montage represents a laborious construction of film sequences, so the skills you need to recognize in other people require a laborious search among their existing thoughts and beliefs. Do you overlook their good traits of character or do you only focus on their flaws? Remember that feelings become easily contagious – they are transmitted from one person to another and cause actions.

Leadership is your resistance to the course of events that you encounter with that sense of being untouched by the effects of truths that you cannot change, but you can accept as if they were on your side.

Eliot's Sacrifice shows the emotional change that occurs even in "iron" people, who are apparently short of extraordinary depth. What kind of qualities must you develop in order to be able to awaken that eagerness in their emotional state? Do you have the power to determine them to be honest and reveal their true moral qualities?

Conclusion: For a leader, actions "in force" don't bring any benefit, but rather stir up aversion, discontent and rebellion. Persuasion, positive psychological stimulus and bilateral communication give much better results, but require an intelligent and permanent exercise of a positive influence on others.

"Change" is a rather slow and long process, but it is better than overnight change of behavior and human thinking, which is rather superficial evidence of change and of surface, not deep changes.

The Emeritus Master of Arts

On October 15, 2010

Make the first step towards the true performance by honestly and in truth expressing your intention to direct yourself to an unsurpassed mastery.

The great Romanian painter Theodor Pallady remains undoubtedly one of the most prestigious modern artists, keeping the whole ambition to be a painter "of all times". At the anniversary of 85 years, in 1956, he received the title of "The Emeritus Master of Arts", being organized the retrospective exhibition "Theodor Pallady". Soon after, on 16 August 1956, he passed into the world to come.

However, shortly before he died, he stated something very important, which has stimulated all the professional artists after him, who followed his example:

"Up to 50 years old, painting was the one that held me up, after I turned 50, I managed to submit it, and since then I was the one who mastered it."

Leadership: Do you have to give people suggestions from the content of your experience, so that the performances of your individuality can be passed by them through the filter of information that can favor the development of their creation?

Will you be able to realize a leadership that through which quality to convince and enthuse? Will you succeed it, as well as Pallady did, to subdue and master the art to which you devote your whole life?

The thing that plays such an important role in leadership it is exactly this complexity that characterizes an artist, the accurate positioning of the quality of his own activities in relation to his high ideals and values - along his own way towards greatness, respectively towards success.

Just as in football, a defender closely marks his opponent found in his area of action - and so you, in order to stand among those "artists" of leadership that influence enormously, which manage to impress with their creations and to make themselves accepted by others, you must mark well the boundaries of your own skills and to invest your knowledge in something concrete that would have a special meaning, which would help you promote your "art".

Your opponent number one is the lack of perseverance and passion, and orientation in a direction unfavorable to your vision and goals. For your leadership to gain stability and strength, so that it could prove to be fertile and substantial in everything that expresses, you must serve with a consistency and a total abnegation your own ideas and concepts, just as a painter makes use of brush and paints in order to accomplish his works.

To place yourself emotionally on the horizon of a soul in need of help, you must be able to come out of your inner self and expose yourself to an emotion that forces you to action !

On the office walls of the great American industrialist, Andrew Carnegie, stood all the mottos which inspired him, revealing his strong desire to become the greatest philanthropist. One of them sounds like this: "You should be afraid of your own reproaches."

Do you feel attracted by leadership? Or it is just a manifestation of a feeling to something? Is it a way to find you and to exceed yourself in order to grow in the hierarchy? Or, it is a form of putting yourself in the service of others?

No matter how would you see things, one thing is certain: if you do not really express with sincerity and truth the intention to devote yourself body and soul to a very complex and difficult art, if you do not confront your own reproaches in the face of any failure, then you will not be able to master the art to which you devote your whole life, it will not ever be open to you the way for true performance, to your own greatness.

Mastery in leadership sums up the result of the experience you have gained and the decisions you have made, in a context where the degree of emotion is very high due to the importance you attach to the applied and unique character of your creation.

The Emeritus Master of Art can be any individual who aspires to leadership status, on condition to find the means required to successfully complete his intentions. You could not ever ingratiate yourself with the ones that have chosen you to lead them, if you do not loyally serve your high ideals, if you are not consistent in always enhancing your leadership quality.

Make the first step towards the true performance by honestly and in truth expressing your intention to direct yourself to an unsurpassed mastery.

Afterwards, continue to refine your leadership, until you will transform it into a work of value, which would merit, in the first instance, your appreciation, and then of others.

Conclusion: Obtaining the title of "The Emeritus Master of Arts" is the first step towards obtaining the general recognition at the national or international level, of someone's values and the contribution that someone has brought in an area of activity.

In leadership does not yet exist such distinctions, but the general recognition of a leader's value it is obtained from repeated evaluations of the results that should be significantly higher, compared with that of others and, in comparison with some well-defined standards.

For any aspirant to the general recognition in leadership, it is essential the competitive, fair and objective self-evaluation. When, as an aspirant, you have something to reproach to yourself, means that you still have to work hard, means that you stand somewhere between the kitsch and art.

Empedocle's Glass Bell

On December 29, 2008

Bring people to the brink of approaching a new truth, exalting yourself above the ordinary thinking that fails to affirm itself.

The Greek thinkers did not have at hand the results of the precise observations and experiences that could have been made much later; they did not have the material facts and observations on which the discovery of the laws of nature was established in the 16th and 17th centuries; until today. But they were trying to explain their nature on the basis of observations made on their journeys, in craftsmen's workshops, in me, in the living process of production. Some even underwent experiences in order to prove the truth of their support.

Thus, for example, Anaxagoras and Empedocles have proven by experience the material nature of the air. Empedocles experimented with a glass bell, showing that water can enter a vessel only when the air is removed.

Sicilian philosopher Empedocles (490-430 BC) claimed that the "roots" of the world, the roots of matter are: earth, water, air and fire, which is a solid, a liquid, a gas and a substance rarer than gas. And here is how this theory is demonstrated. If, for example, a green wood burns, you see the fire, which appears to the eye by its own light. The smoke disappears in the air. At the ends of the wood there is water, and the remaining ash has all the attributes of the earth.

*Empedocles held that by uniting the four elements in different proportions one can explain all the endless variety of substances known to man, as crafted by the combination of four colors you can get all possible shades. From here to the primitive atomistic theory, there was only one step.

Leadership: Is serving a science that expands your consciousness and the ability to experience new thinking patterns a way of expressing what you care to become part of you, something unclear, to be discovered and activated?

Can you run from the obligation to find new answering options to some questions that apparently have no answer? How deep is the interpretation that you give to the unknowns that gravitate around a single point of view? What connotations does your knowledge get when you take into consideration the apparition of ambiguities?

What happens to leadership resulted from a real, deep, objective knowledge of reality that in its rush for the sensational, it manages to overcome the understanding and acceptance power of other people? Oh well, it reaches a win-loss situation, in which you win, and the others lose. Science is what you discover through thinking and research, but with whom the rest of the world does not necessarily agree.

What you need to discover and activate in yourself by expanding science and thinking is the attempt to have an echo among others, it is the way to bring yourself into the future, to make known your aspiration of positioning in an increasingly competitive space of creation necessary for the development of the world.

Coming up with a new point of view in science it's like you'd impose for the people around you some fake and strange values that lack substance and contradict each other. Obviously, they will compare to your science and to their own existential condition, but in a fake way. They will see each other in a light that doesn't represent them, thinking of whether they're "broken" or not when it comes to their qualities. Because profiling yourself as a science means to place yourself above the narrow minds of the time.

Full of observations, the useful resource productions and the necessary efforts for promoting own science that proliferates on the stem of some advanced conceptions and mentalities, on the evolution stages of society, they really dominate when it comes to the degree of closeness or estrangement towards the rest of people. And the raw matter on which own science is established, regenerates and assemblies into solutions or in a multitude of absolute truths, that in turn are lost in the darkness of time if they're not generally accepted – even by the laymen.

Can the unique virtues of your science be implemented in front of the origin borders of leadership?

No matter how well-perceived your science about leadership is, selecting and including it in an ample thinking reconstruction context of other people that need to basically detach from the way in which they're integrated in the harmony of defining elements of a certain type of thinking, it can be achieved after drives close to your will, and not after a wise depth of your conscience, as it should be normal.

The unique virtues of your science can't be implemented outside the origin borders of leadership if their fruits ripe quicker than other people can collect. All that wonderful Eureka feeling when you discover something new is in vain, if it doesn't have any major impact on growing their performance level.

Virtues such as intelligence, vision, understanding, creativity, objectivity, and perseverance are not intended for divine confirmation through man, that is, they are not elevated to the level of God in the midst of the world, but are intended for a self-existence that takes place objectively in space and time. You have to be the spirit of challenge that reflects this design of the past and present in the future.

Science must be seen as a gesture of faith in a miracle you expect from God, not just as a gesture of openness to new experiences of creation and discovery.

If the science that you practice presents a huge resistance among the others, it means it's full of subtleties that must be reshaped, interpreted and shared in a conventional style, easier.

In consequence, the success of leadership depends on how well it complies with the requirements of people with a medium amount of knowledge. On this account, accepting a viable development potential through the interventions of a chosen science is decided by others. Taking into consideration, mainly the functional criteria (for example, how well can it apply to their existence), and not the creativity or superiority criteria.

The boundaries of leadership origin, meaning links to your previous actions and achievements, must be updated with the sense of supreme significance attributed to their own value in helping humanity not only through discoveries and creation, but by signaling the readiness to feel complete in what you are experiencing momentarily. Be yourself in your own universe, be authentic, you do not have to copy what someone else was doing in the same situation.

Leadership is the note of merit that science gains in struggling with a present that has no patience to become the past, and is required to know through a strategy of embracing events, facts and their consequences in an accessible and attractive form for all people.

Empedocles' Glass Bell highlights that work of thought and creation that results in a result ready to be attributed to "faith in faith" or on the basis of a knowledge that at the same time offers the necessity and the novelty of demonstrating a unique point of view on certain phenomena or personal experiences.

Emphasis Given In Leadership

Learn to contribute to the creation of an event that gives a broad picture of human evolution, if the course of events would continue to follow rules other than conscious facts.

Allow me to introduce you to a strange invention. You were talking to me about the safety of tomorrow. If someone were to come to you, just you, and they would tell you that he has revealed the mysteries of the future world – I'm not referring to life in heaven, but to the one we experience. And this man would convince you that he is not a carnival charlatan and that the discovery is real, based on a secret study of mathematics, science, astrology, whatever you want. Then he would tell you about the future world, what will happen tomorrow, a month from now, next year, a hundred, a thousand years from now. Everything, as in a story. Tell me – would you take to the streets and tell everyone about it, or would you not say a single word?

- Come on, sir. Since we reached this auspicious moment, didn't you laugh a few days ago at superstitions? You talk as if fate is against you.

- Chance is not superstition, Lacy.

- Maybe a roll of the dice. But you can throw one more time.

- Can the Rubicon pass twice? *

Leadership: Can you create the condition of an existence to transform into destiny by raising the hazard to the rank of principle of creation?

Leadership means being prepared to stand out in a situation where all other people seem to be at a standstill, related to an experience or vision that they lack and that only you can formulate by raising the hazard to the rank of an irreplaceable principle in the doctrine of the "New Man". The true masterpiece of which you must be proud is the awareness of a certain power that you are capable of demonstrating, constructively, in a territory that many are not interested in or whose end is not seen.
